Peace, National Progress Urged as New Year Goal

Deferred Raises Due 4 Million

A near record number of workers—more than 4 million—are scheduled to receive deferred wage increases under major contracts in 1966 because of union settlements negotiated in prior years, the Dept. of Labor has reported.

The total will be the greatest since 1957, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said in a report by Economist George Ruben appearing in the Monthly Labor Review for December.

Nearly a million additional workers are covered by major contracts due to expire in 1966, according to another study by Cordelia T. Ward of the BLS Div. of Industrial & Labor Relations appearing in the same issue.

The latter report dealt with 306 major agreements of which only 93 are due to expire in the coming year. But all but 12 of the remainder provide for possible wage adjustments in 1966 either in the form of deferred increases, escalator clauses or wage reopenings.

Major negotiations are scheduled in electrical products, telephone and Pacific Coast longshoring. Wage reopenings are possible, the Ward study observed, in contracts held by the railroad operating unions and in bituminous and anthracite coal mines.

Two Fields Studied

Ruben's study was limited to settlements involving 1,000 workers or more in all industries except the service trades, finance and government. The Ward survey dealt with agreements covering 5,000 or more workers each over a five-year period.

The breakdown on the number of workers due for deferred increases in 1966 includes 2 million in manufacturing, 750,000 in construction, and 1.3 million in other industries.

The study did not include 55,000 skilled workers scheduled for deferred increases averaging 14.6 cents under the Steelworkers' settlement with basic steel, nor

Court Scores 15-Year Lag On Backpay

New York—A delay of seven to 15 years in backpay for 69 Carpenters wrongfully fired in 1950 "significantly undermines" the usefulness of present backpay procedures in "fulfilling the public policy of promoting full production and employment," a three-judge federal court has warned.

Remedial action must be speedy in order to be effective, the 2d U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals declared in ordering enforcement of a 1960 National Labor Relations Board backpay award against the Mastro Plastics Corp. and a successor firm, Mastro Industries, Inc.

The court, ordering the New York City corporation to pay $164,000 to the fired workers, noted that some delays in the case were

As Payroll Tax Rises:

Social Security Adds Big Benefit Package

That extra deduction in the pay envelopes of America's wage-earners this year will help pay for the biggest package of benefits ever added to the social security system.

Matched by an increase in the social security tax paid by employers, the added revenue will finance:

- Bigger retirement benefits for workers and their families. The longer a worker pays at the higher rate, the bigger his pension on retirement.
- Higher insurance benefits for widows and children of workers who die either before or after retirement.
- Payment for hospital and nursing home care for workers and their families at age 65. And assurance that younger families will be free from the fear of budget-crushing medical bills resulting from the illness of parents and other elderly relatives.
- A 7 percent increase in cash benefits for persons on the social security rolls—already in effect for a year.
- Easier qualification for disability benefits and liberalization of many other provisions, including continuation of survivorship benefits to children over 18 who are in school.

This year's increase in social security taxes amounts to only pennies a week for lower-paid workers and a moderate increase for those in the higher brackets.

The increase is less than it appears at first glance because even without the changes, the rate was

'Twin Obligations' Stressed by Meany

The "legendary confidence of America has been restored" in the past five years and our people can proceed "with this old confidence, newly restored, toward the year ahead," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a New Year's Day message.

"Those who cry 'guns or butter' have lost touch with reality," the federation president declared.

"Perhaps the twin obligations of war abroad and progress at home will cost more money; but to abandon progress in the name of war would subvert the cause itself," he continued.

"The United States must move forward. The unfinished business must ever be attacked. For only as America is true to itself can the cause of America prevail and the light of freedom shine out to the world."

The war in Viet Nam, a "grim struggle against Communist conquest," is the "overriding concern of the American labor movement and the American people as a whole," Meany said.

Freedom the Issue

It is "already exacting a heavy toll in lives; looming above and behind it is the far grimmer threat of total holocaust," he pointed out. But the issue in Viet Nam—this country's sole "war aim"—is "not victory in the classic sense, but rather the right of every people to freedom and independence."

"America has learned that freedom is indivisible and that the appetite of the aggressor is never slaked," the federation president said.

"We in the AFL-CIO have no doubt that the American people

Study Cites Long Effect Of Layoffs

Mineola, N. Y.—Twenty-one percent of the 10,000 workers laid off by the Republic Aviation Corp. of Farmingdale between November 1963 and December 1964 because of a lack of defense orders were still jobless three to 16 months later, a survey by the New York State Dept. of Labor's Division of Employment has disclosed.

The study was based on questionnaires sent to the former Republic workers last March. It was conducted under a contract with the Defense Dept. and the U.S. Arms Control & Disarmament Agency, and its findings tended to strengthen the bargaining arguments of defense industry unions that the Defense Dept. has a responsibility to avoid disrupting workers' lives when it cancels contracts and layoffs occur as a result.

Major Shift in Employment Service Urged to Meet Manpower Needs

A blue-ribbon task force has proposed transforming the federal-state employment service from an annex of the "unemployment office" into a "comprehensive manpower service agency" for the nation.

The 15-member group, drawn from public, management and labor leaders, submitted a unanimous report to Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz. He made it public, declaring that the report "may well prove to be the most important development in this area" since the 1933 Wagner-Peyser Act which set up the employment service.

The report strongly recommended:

- Complete separation of the employment service from the unemployment compensation program, even to the point of moving local offices to separate buildings.
- A major upgrading of the staff of the employment service, with higher professional standards and salaries to match.
- No arbitrary limits on the types of jobs handled through the service. The task force found the employment service handicapped by a "public image" affecting both job-seekers and employers that only lesser-qualified workers use it to seek jobs.
- A major emphasis on collecting and disseminating information on labor market conditions and job opportunities in all parts of the nation. As an example, the task force said, the service "should work closely with employers, especially defense contractors, to obtain specific information on their job openings and to obtain advance notice of

Legislative Surge Marks Labor's Year

First Decade of Merger Ends With Spirit of Unity Swelling

By Harry Conn

Organized labor chalked up more successes in 1965—although mixed with some frustrations—than for a a long, long time.

A review of the year from the files of Press Associates, Inc., shows that activity reached into many areas with these highlights:

- Record welfare legislation passed by the first session of the 89th Congress included medicare and education bills. But there was disappointment in failure to repeal Section 14(b) or to pass other labor-supported measures.
- An atmosphere of unity accentuated in 10th year of AFL-CIO merger.
- Union membership reversed trend—now on the upswing.
- Increased economic gains scored at the collective bargaining tables.

'Great, But You Missed a Few Spots'

NLRB Hits Unfair Practices:

Third Vote Ordered At Grossinger Hotel

The National Labor Relations Board has ordered Grossinger's resort hotel in the Catskills to take down some of the barriers it has built around the Grossinger "family" of 600 employes.

A unanimous five-member board ruled that management of the storied "borscht circuit" hotel enforced a rigid "keep out" rule on union supporters while making strongly anti-union speeches to captive audiences on company time and property.

The policy Grossinger's used in smashing two union organizing attempts is "invalid and unlawful" and unfair to employes, the board ruled in ordering a third election at the resort in Liberty, N. Y.

The NLRB, citing Supreme Court rulings and previous board findings on "free speech," ordered management to stop ejecting Hotel & Restaurant Employes organizers from the grounds and instead to allow them "reasonable" access to resident workers and opportunity to reply to anti-union speeches on company time and property.

Repeated Violations

The board found management guilty of repeated unfair labor practices — promising future benefits, making veiled threats, hinting that union meetings were spied on and soliciting workers to withdraw from the union.

Local 343 of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes started an organizing attempt at Grossinger's in 1962. It reported that it could not communicate with employes because organizers were ejected from three taverns in the nearby town, handbillers were given the "bum's rush" from the hotel, telephone calls went unanswered and mail was returned "unclaimed and undelivered."

The local charged that at meetings in the hotel's main dining room employes were subjected to frequent "brainwashings" and appeals to be "loyal" to the Grossinger "family." They subsequently voted against the union, 367-82 on Dec. 14, 1963, and 338-122 on May 2, 1964.

The NLRB declared that the "opportunity to organize without employer interference" is a fundamental right, pointed out by the Supreme Court "long ago" in the Republic Aviation case. It ruled that Grossinger's policy of "absolute exclusion of organizers from company premises, including the private residences of employes, is unvalid and unlawful."

By preventing organizers from visiting the homes of many workers, Grossinger's "seriously impaired the employes' ability to learn the advantages of self-organization," the board said.

The employer argued that the union had other ways to reach the workers than by seeking them out at the resort but the board, upholding Examiner Samuel M. Singer, ruled that distributing handbills or mailing letters is "clearly not an adequate alternate channel" to neutralize the employer's anti-labor campaign.

Testimony revealed that the resort has 50 buildings in a 468-acre tract surrounded by natural barriers and some fences. The main entrance is guarded 24 hours a day "to make sure people who don't have any business on the premises are not there." Organizers said they were denied admittance at the gate and had to climb fences to get in briefly.

Court Hits 15-Year Lag In Enforcing Backpay

due to a shortage of qualified NLRB personnel between 1956 and 1960.

"We can only hope," the judges said, "that those in the executive and legislative branches" of the government "will note the unfortunate and protracted delays which bedeviled these proceedings so that such delays can be avoided in other cases."

Reviewing the facts, the court recalled that 70 workers were fired discriminatorily on Nov. 11, 1950; most of them were reinstated in 1956, and the others had been offered their jobs back by late 1958.

"Thus the backpay here awarded," the judges wrote, "has been due for at least seven and in part up to 15 years." They added:

"It is regrettable that the enforcement of fairly standard remedies, in a case which . . . involved no unusual circumstances, should be fraught with such delays.

"To the discriminatees, a delay of this magnitude must render the backpay award a wholly inadequate and unsatisfactory remedy for their wrongful discharge."

The decision, written by Chief Judge J. Edward Lumbard with Judges Sterry R. Waterman and Paul R. Hays concurring, pinpointed the case as one in which the NLRB has not intentionally dragged its feet, but rather "the delay has stemmed from the inherently time-consuming nature of the backpay remedy, complicated by a serious and protracted shortage of board personnel capable of preparing the (backpay) specification."

It was Mar. 13, 1953, when the NLRB issued its first order upholding charges by Carpenters Local 3127 and directing Mastro to reinstate 70 fired workers with backpay.

Then followed 12 years of legal battling including hearings, briefs, arguments, answers, amended answers, orders, decisions, four appeals to the Court of Appeals and one to the Supreme Court. The corporation lost every round, but the fired workers still have not received their backpay.

Unionists Named Advisers on Aged

Charles E. Odell, director of the Auto Workers Older & Retired Workers Dept., and James C. O'Brien, executive director of the Steelworkers Committee on Older & Retired Workers, have been appointed by Pres. Johnson to the Advisory Committee on Older Americans.

The committee was established by the Older Americans Act of 1965 and will advise the secretary of health, education and welfare on national policies and programs to improve the status and well-being of older people.

Also named to membership was Zalmen Lichtenstein, executive director of the Golden Ring Council of Senior Citizens of New York City, which is largely made up of retired union members.

Rehabilitation Organizations Cite Hollander

New York—Twin honors for outstanding work in rehabilitation were paid Vice Pres. Louis Hollander of the Clothing Workers at a luncheon here.

He was presented with the 1965 distinguished service award by the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped and a citation from the National Institutes on Rehabilitation & Health Services, a non-profit organization that designs and conducts rehabilitation research and demonstration programs.

Hollander is president of the Sidney Hillman Health Center, which has just completed a successful pioneering rehabilitation test program for blue collar workers. Conducted over a three-year period, it has been advanced as a model for unions and other community groups. The center is still working on a companion mental health rehabilitation project.

The President's Committee award was presented by the committee chairman, Harold Russell, who himself is disabled. Dr. Lorin E. Kerr, NIRHS chairman, presented the institutes' citation. Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey sent a laudatory telegram.

Hollander insisted that the awards be shared by the staff of the project and particularly by Hyman Weiner, project director, and Dr. Morris Brand, director of the health center.

"The field of rehabilitation is making great strides," Hollander said. "The handicapped are beginning to be able to take their places freely in the economy of the nation. We are no longer ignorant of their abilities, or of their employability. And we at the ACWA are proud to be counted in the ranks of those who have pioneered."

Saltonstall Bars New Senate Term

Boston—Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R) announced Dec. 29 that he would not seek a fourth full six-year term. He is 73 years old and ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Gov. John A. Volpe and Atty. Gen. Edward W. Brooke, both Republicans, have indicated interest in running for the vacated Senate seat. Among Democratic possibilities are former Gov. Endicott Peabody and former Atty. Gen. Edward McCormack.

Deferred Pay Hikes Due 4 Million in '66

an unspecified number who won increases late in 1965 or at earlier unreported dates.

The 1966 total of scheduled increases is 400,000 larger than in 1965, due primarily to recent settlements in the aerospace, rubber, shipbuilding, glass container and can industries, according to the survey.

"Part of the rise results from the hiring of additional workers in expanding industries, such as automobiles, where deferred increases were scheduled for both years," Ruben reported.

"Other industries in which workers were to receive increases in both years were automotive parts, farm and construction equipment, meat packing, trucking, and railroads (non-operating employes)."

The deferred increases will amount to 10 to 11 cents an hour for 35 percent of the affected workers. Excluding the building trades, this contrasts with the 1965 concentration of 32 percent in the 7-8 cent area.

Forty-three percent of all workers to be affected in 1966 will receive at least 10 cents an hour, compared with 17 percent in 1965. A somewhat larger proportion will be raised 3-3.5 percent of their straight-time average hourly earnings because of deferred settlements.

The largest affected group is in autos where, in September, about 600,000 workers will receive an increase of 2.8 percent of base rates (excluding the cost-of-living supplement)—with a minimum increase of 7 cents—plus 2 cents.

Almost 450,000 railroad nonoperating employes, the report said, will get increases averaging 9 to 10 cents. Others who will benefit include 85,000 workers in meat packing, 200,000 in the aerospace industry, 30,000 in the can industry, 50,000 in shipbuilding and another 50,000 in Atlantic and Gulf Coast longshoring.

Lasting Impact Found From Republic Layoffs

most had been idle for 26 weeks or longer.

Other findings included:

- Some 65 percent of those furloughed had found new jobs, 6 percent had left the labor market when they were laid off, and 8 percent had relocated.
- About 90 percent of those with new jobs found them outside the aircraft industry and 70 percent were working outside manufacturing—mainly in the service industries and in wholesale and retail trade. Their new pay averaged $101 weekly, a cut of 25 percent from the $135 they had received at Republic.
- The median age of those surveyed was 40 years; about 86 percent headed families; 60 percent had at least a high school education and 7 percent were college graduates. About one-third had been in skilled occupations, another third in semi-skilled, about 15 percent in professional and managerial posts, and the rest in unskilled and clerical jobs.
- Younger workers were most successful at finding new jobs: only 14 percent of those under 25 years were still unemployed in March, but 54 percent of those over 55 years were still jobless.

The division claimed the study helped it to provide the displaced workers with more effective and realistic job counseling and placement service. A spokesman added that it yielded "the clearest picture yet of how defense workers fare after layoffs."

"Intensive job solicitation" on Long Island and elsewhere, the division said, revealed job openings which were filled by Republic workers who had been unable to find work on their own. It estimated that by August at least half of those who had been still unemployed in March were back at work.

Others were referred to training courses under the Manpower Development & Training Act after the study disclosed that 285 of the 1,155 different jobs found in the aircraft industry required skills that could be used in non-defense industries with comparatively little or no training.

The full study will be made public early in 1966.

1966 Election Challenge

THE 1966 congressional elections will put to the test once again the question of mobilizing labor and liberal strength to prevent losses in a non-presidential election year.

History and tradition, the AFL-CIO sixth convention pointed out recently, "are not on our side." Only once in this century—1934—has the party in power in the White House been able to prevent a loss in the mid-term balloting. This is the challenge in 1966.

The 1964 Johnson landslide brought liberal gains in the 89th Congress—gains that were instrumental in helping pass the measures that made the first session of the 89th the most productive in the nation's history.

This year 51 labor-backed freshmen congressmen must stand for election along with the entire membership of the House. Of the 34 members of the Senate whose seats are up, there are a number of outstanding labor-supported liberals.

And in the 35 states where governorships are at stake in addition, labor's programs are closely identified with battles both for the statehouses and the legislatures.

THE TREMENDOUS legislative gains of 1965 and the promise that the second session of the 89th Congress will clean up the major unfinished business of the first session are involved. If labor-liberal strength is not maintained, or possibly expanded, the progress and vitality of the past five years will taper off into the stagnation that marked the 1950s.

The election campaigns are already under way; candidates are emerging, political organizations are being put together or reinvigorated, funds are being solicited. The freshmen congressmen elected in 1964 are prime targets of the conservative coalition that suffered a major setback in the crushing Goldwater defeat.

The payoff will be on Nov. 8 in terms of how many eligible voters get to the polls. That's labor's job in the next 10 months; to see that every union member and his family are registered, know the candidates and the issues and cast ballots on Election Day.

The basis for labor political action was spelled out sharply and succinctly by the AFL-CIO's recent convention when it adopted a resolution declaring:

"The involvement of union members in the political life of our nation is accepted as a legitimate and essential function of trade unionism. In the narrowest sense, every contract agreed upon through the process of collective bargaining is affected by laws and the officials who administer them. In the broad sense, the lives of our members and their families are affected daily by federal, state and local laws and administrative decisions.

"As American citizens first and trade unionists second, we take it to be our solemn responsibility to engage to the fullest extent and at every level of government in support of those programs which will strengthen the democratic process, benefit our nation at home and abroad and permit all Americans to live in dignity and self-respect."

Bracero-less Farming Proves Agricultural, Financial Success

WHEN THE 89TH CONGRESS ended the bracero program a chorus came from growers, charging that fresh fruits and vegetables would rot in the fields and those products that did reach the market would zoom in prices at the retail outlets.

Among the spokesmen in Congress for the growers was freshman Sen. George Murphy (R-Calif.), who campaigned to make Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz look like a man who was bound and determined to wreck American agriculture.

What Murphy and others sought was congressional action to restore the bracero program so that the growers could return to their low-wage paradise.

Now there is solid evidence that not only has the ending of the bracero program proven to be a sound move for agriculture but it has been good for the economy as a whole, providing thousands of jobs for the unemployed. In only a few instances did Wirtz feel that the need of foreign labor was justified.

The Agriculture Dept. has just released its annual summary for 1965 on acreage, production and value of principal commercial crops. This should settle, for a long time to come, the debate over the need of braceros.

It shows that production of the 27 principal fresh market vegetables and melons in 1965 at 220 million hundredweight (CWT) was 4 percent more than last year and 3 percent above average. Moneywise, the value of such crops was 5 percent above last year.

CALIFORNIA was the heaviest user of braceros while the program was in force. Last April Wirtz appointed the California Farm Labor Panel, charging it to assist him in carrying out his objectives and to make recommendations in the entire area of farm labor. The panel, after extensive hearings and studies, concluded that:

"Although there have been localized difficulties, 1965 has been an excellent year for California agriculture. The crops have been brought in with much less recourse to braceros than last year, and at the same time, grower gross revenues have generally been higher."

The objective of Wirtz and of organized labor is to make agriculture a wholly domestic operation without the need of any foreign workers who are frequently exploited, helping to depress the entire wage structure in the industry.

In only two crops in California was there some loss due to labor shortages, strawberries and asparagus. Wages paid in both crops were the lowest in the state and well below the average for all crops. Despite the losses, however, California strawberry growers grossed 5 percent more than the 1959-64 average and asparagus growers grossed nearly $1 million more than in 1964 but slightly below the 1959-64 average.

Gov. Pat Brown has estimated that California agricultural income will be about $3.6 billion in 1965—slightly higher than in 1964. At the same time, prices consumers have paid for agricultural products have, for the most part, remained fairly steady. Some have gone up, others have dropped.

'Shiftless' Charges Refuted by NLRB

The National Labor Relations Board has rejected an employer's argument that Kentucky mountain people are not entitled to backpay because they love their native hills too much to leave them and look for another job—in effect that they are shiftless.

The board approved Trial Examiner Thomas S. Wilson's findings against Charles T. Reynolds, Sr., doing business in Hamilton, O., as the Charles T. Reynolds Box Co. and Reynolds Pallet & Box Co.

Three years ago the board found Reynolds had unlawfully fired 30 employes who supported the Carpenters and ordered $110,000 in backpay for the time they were laid off, plus interest but minus other earnings. The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals enforced the order and later the employer filed written objections to paying the money.

The "mass exodus" of the fired workers from Hamilton to "various rural, depressed areas," the employer argued, led to the conclusion that the men "willfully and intentionally removed themselves from any opportunity for employment" and wanted "to go home and enjoy a 26-week vacation" on unemployment compensation.

The examiner, however, found that fired Kentuckians who stayed in Ohio had no greater success in finding new jobs than those who returned to the hills. One discriminatee, he noted, had to drive 1,198 miles to find another job.

'The Anti-Leadership Vaccine' Poses a New National Problem

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

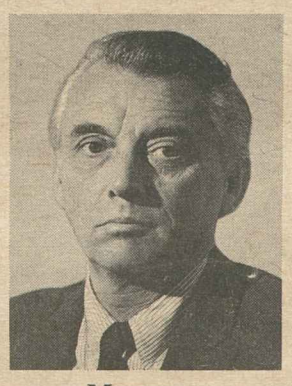
NEW YORK—A constant, continuing dilemma of the open society is how to produce leaders of sufficient dynamism and breadth of vision to keep society open and not make it a closed arena for their own selfish ambitions.

In its recently released annual report on its philanthropic and educational activities, the Carnegie Corp. published an essay entitled "The Anti-leadership Vaccine" which was remarkable on two counts, its perceptive content and its authorship. It was written by John W. Gardner before he took leave of the firm's presidency to become Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare. His sensitive analysis of the problem deserves wide attention.



Morgan

Our concept of and training for leadership, Gardner argues, must be enlarged. "The sad truth is," he wrote, "that a great many of our organizations are badly managed or badly led." One reason: the reluctance to face the responsibility of making tough decisions, the tendency, in an age of technology and specialization, to rely on polls, "elaborate statistical systems, cost-accounting systems, information-processing systems" and the like to provide the answer.

Not that facts are unimportant but "rarely do the facts provide unqualified guidance." To support the point that more than data are necessary he cited the case of the school girl who said she was going to draw a picture of God. "But, Mary," the teacher exclaimed, "no one knows what God looks like." And Mary replied, "They will when I get through."

Gardner's picture of the ideal American leader is neither a "Man of Destiny" nor a "Nervous Nelly," but a citizen of balance. This commodity is in short supply. This he blames in part on the academic world, "which appears to be approaching a point at which everyone will want to educate the technical expert who advises the leader, or the intellectual who stands off and criticizes the leader, but no one will want to educate the leader himself."

He maintains that "we are in danger of falling under the leadership of men who lack the confidence to lead. And we are in danger of destroying the effectiveness of those who have a natural gift for leadership." How? Why? In American colleges and universities, he argues, "the best students are carefully schooled to avoid leadership responsibilities." And the ones who go on to graduate school are "powerfully indoctrinated" in a set of attitudes appropriate to their calling, pointedly specialized, perhaps, but damagingly detached from the broader needs of an increasingly complex society.

"Very few of our most prominent people," his essay goes on, "take a really large view of the leadership assignment. Most of them are simply tending the machinery of that part of society to which they belong. . . . (They) may tend it very well indeed, but they are not pursuing a vision of what the total society needs. . . .

"Yet it is doubtful that we can any longer afford such widespread inattention to the largest questions facing us. We achieved greatness in an era when changes came more slowly than now. The problems facing the society took shape at a stately pace. We could afford to be slow in recognizing them, slow in coping with them. Today, problems of enormous import hit us swiftly. Great social changes emerge with frightening speed. We can no longer afford to respond in a leisurely fashion."

TO THOSE CRITICAL of "big government," Gardner counsels that one of the vital ways to keep a problem from being passed on to Washington is to make nongovernmental leadership groups more capable of handling them on lower levels by creating better channels of communication among them.

What is Gardner talking about? The cutting edge of his advice seems clearly to be that no longer can specific segments of society shirk their larger responsibilities to society as a whole. Nor is it enough simply for the businessman, the labor leader, the technician, the scientist to contribute to the Community Chest, attend PTA meetings and vote in elections.

Industry, trade unions and others must consider their requirements and demands, their policies and goals, in terms of their impact on the community and the country. This is going to take some doing, some stretching of narrow preparations, some loosening of tight, selfish concepts.

"So much of our energy has been devoted to tending the machinery of our complex society," Gardner reemphasizes in conclusion, "that we have neglected the (moral) element in leadership." By "moral" he referred to the "shared values that must undergird any functioning society. . . . When leaders lose their credibility or their moral authority, then the society begins to disintegrate."

It is almost redundant to emphasize that citizens with the leadership dimensions of John Gardner are scarce, but it is reassuring that both the private and the public sectors of our society have been given the benefits of his own wisdom and talents.

More Than 100 Areas:

Fulltime Labor Staffs Spur Aid To Voluntary Welfare Agencies

FULLTIME AFL-CIO staff members are now helping organize and coordinate union community service efforts in more than 100 areas throughout the country, the head of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities said.

Besides spurring aid to voluntary health and welfare agencies, disaster relief and local civic projects, special stress is being laid on consumer counseling, the fight against poverty and constructive use of leisure time, CSA Dir. Leo Perlis reported.

Consumer counseling is especially important to workers to assure that gains made at the bargaining table are not "lost across the store counters," Perlis said on the weekly public service radio interview, Labor News Conference.

He noted that there are also some 75,000 union counselors across the country who work in the shop and are trained to give guidance and advice on problems ranging from health and housing to education and alcoholism. He added that union community service is geared to help "the total community," not just union members.

"The AFL-CIO is not a class conscious organization," he emphasized; "it is a community conscious organization."

THE FEDERATION and its affiliated unions are making special efforts to bolster U.S. policy in Viet Nam—particularly through the Red Cross, USO, CARE, Seamen's Service and other agencies, he reported.

"The American labor movement is four-square behind U.S. efforts in Viet Nam . . . our troops . . . the South Vietnamese people and their independence," Perlis declared.

Reporters questioning him on the AFL-CIO produced program, broadcast nationwide over the Mutual network, were Sam Sharkey, labor reporter for the Newhouse Newspapers, and Harry Conn, editor of Press Associates, Inc.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

AN ADMINISTRATION proposal to reform the electoral college system is scheduled for hearings in February before the subcommittee headed by Sen. Birch Bayh (D-Ind.). Despite the backing of the President, the proposed constitutional amendment is likely to fail, because the electoral college system has been a national hairshirt since it was invented.

The theory of the constitution-writers was that the people could not be trusted to select their own President and that their choice, therefore, should be once-removed by allowing them to vote only for "electors" who in turn would cast ballots that would be canvassed by Congress to determine a majority, if any, for any candidate.

The theory of the constitution-writers—that a group of "electors" was more greatly to be trusted than the people—went out the window early in our national history. For most of the 19th century and all of the first half of the 20th century, our political parties nominated slates of electors pledged—and pledged in all honor—to vote for specific presidential candidates.

It was not until within the last score of years that a reversion occurred to the system wherein an individual elector would consider himself entitled, morally and legally, to vote against a candidate to whom he was publicly pledged in advance.

"There lurks in the electoral college system the ever-present possibility that electors may substitute their own will for the will of the people," Mr. Johnson wrote to Congress last Jan. 28. "I believe that possibility should be foreclosed."

The Bayh amendment, paralleled in the House by a proposal sponsored by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) of the Judiciary Committee, would maintain the electoral college system intact—that is, each state would have a vote equal to its total number of Senate and House members—but the office of elector would be abolished.

The popular vote of each state would be certified to Congress, and the canvass would be made by Congress, on the basis of the popular vote.

"Our present system of computing and awarding votes by states is an essential counterpart of our federal system and the provisions of the constitution which recognize and maintain our nation as a union of states," wrote Mr. Johnson. "It supports the two-party system which has served our nation well. . . . But it is imperative that the electoral votes of a state be cast for those persons who receive the greatest number of votes for President and Vice President—and for no one else."

THIS PROPOSITION is so common-sensical that the Johnson-Bayh-Celler amendment should have clear sailing. The only realistic substitute is an amendment by Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R-Me.) for direct election of the President by popular vote.

But every time electoral college reform is discussed, the gremlins get into the game. They have two principal ideas—one for splitting up a state's electoral college vote proportionately, the other for splitting it up by congressional districts.

The President is our only national officer chosen nationally, or by anything approaching a national vote, and he is quite properly looked on by our people as the responsible Chief Executive.

The only purpose of the split-the-vote substitutes offered for the Johnson-Bayh-Celler proposal is to make possible the election of a minority President. The congressional district substitute is particularly reprehensible; the House already has enormous powers, and the districts should not be given additional potential powers to choose the nation's President.

The opponents of the Johnson-Bayh-Celler proposal nevertheless appear to have enough committee votes to block it. And this in defiance of the fact that an "independent" elector is an anachronism and the validity of Mr. Johnson's statement that the popular vote of each state should be awarded in the canvass to those candidates for President and Vice President "who receive the greatest number of votes—and no one else."

COMMUNITY SERVICE efforts in more than 100 areas now have the help of full-time AFL-CIO staff members, Leo Perlis (center), director of Community Service Activities for the federation, told Harry Conn (left) of Press Associates, Inc., and Sam Sharkey of the Newhouse Newspapers on the nationwide radio interview, Labor News Conference.

Consumer Education Attacked By Business Association Aides

By Sidney Margolius

THE ADVERTISING Federation of America has launched another attack on consumer education. This time the attack is aimed at consumer courses in the public schools, which actually are rare, and specifically at one given at Lincoln High School in Mount Vernon, N. Y., in cooperation with Consumers Union.

This program introduced consumer education into several courses. For example, some of the science classes studied the chemistry of medicines and cosmetics; in economics, protection of the consumer by private and government agencies, purchasing, renting or buying a home, etc.; in home economics, budgeting. Some math classes studied how to tell the true annual interest rate various lenders and sellers charge. One session, with the help of a local car dealer, showed what to look for in buying a used car.

This is all useful information, which these youngsters will need when they get out of school and establish families and homes, and it also helps teach them to think for themselves.

The attack of the Advertising Federation was exaggerated to the point of wildness. The federation claimed that consumer-education programs "unfairly influence our school children's thinking and create doubt and suspicion in their minds as to the integrity and dependability of the country's business firms and their advertising practices." It further charged that the "latest" campaign is spearheaded by Consumers Union, "aided and encouraged by the same people who have been active consumer agitators in recent years. . . . Unquestionably this program will bode ill for our business systems if it is allowed to spread across the country."

The federation also suggested that the program amounted to "invading the curriculum for the purpose of spreading propaganda and thereby distracting the students from the serious purpose of gaining a meaningful, proper education."

Often such attacks do not come from businessmen themselves but are started by business association officials. This was noticeable in the attacks by business organizations on the consumer-business conferences sponsored in four cities last year by Esther Peterson, the President's consumer assistant. Prior to the first conference in St. Louis, the National Association of Manufacturers and the American Retail Association sent representatives to try to dissuade local businessmen from participating. To their credit, the local businessmen did participate under the leadership of the local Better Business Bureau.

One St. Louis business representative told this writer that the "drum beaters" from the national associations who tried to stir up "fear and resentment" against the conferences did this "to maintain or gain stature in the eyes of their own supporters."

IN THE CASE of the attack on the consumer education course, again there seems evidence that it is not the members of the association as much as the federation officials who are raising unnecessary alarm. In a telephone interview with a spokesman for the federation, which soon reached the shouting level on his part, we tried to find out if there were any actual objections from members of the federation. The federation is composed of ad agencies, advertisers, public relations men and local ad clubs.

There were "several" complaints, the official said. He refused to say who, or how many complaints out of his 800 members—just several.

Since the federation had condemned consumer "programs," in the plural, we asked what other schools had given them. He could cite only one other, in St. Paul, Minn., at which, he shouted, "not a single representative of business was there nor were any invited." He said he objected to school children being used as "pawns."

When asked about the large amount of business materials being used by teachers in the schools, he did not know, for example, that finance-company associations distributed to public schools hundreds of thousands of pamphlets tending to encourage installment buying, and concealing the true costs.

Consumer courses are useful not only because they teach students how to make the most of their money, but because the children bring this information home. Parents should encourage such courses, as did the Lincoln High School PTA.

Teachers and government agencies need not fear the wrath of businessmen if they do provide consumer education. As these incidents show, local businessmen usually cooperate and any attacks from associations may reflect their officials' attitudes more than that of most of their members.

Labor's Role Spelled Out In Drive Against Poverty

The background of the anti-poverty campaign and organized labor's role in prosecuting it to successful conclusion are outlined in a new AFL-CIO pamphlet, "Labor's Goal—To End Poverty in Our Time."

The illustrated publication recalls that labor has fought poverty for nearly two centuries and has helped, through collective bargaining and support of social legislation, millions of Americans to escape deprivation and penury.

"Organized labor is determined that the purposes of the Economic Opportunities Act will be carried out and expanded," it says. "To this goal, labor has enlisted the same zeal it gave to the achievement of civil rights, economic gains and social progress."

Though the war on poverty "is an historic undertaking that promises historic gains," it continues, labor will press its efforts to secure additional "poverty-defeating legislation," such as extension of Fair Labor Standards Act coverage and a $2 an hour minimum wage.

The pamphlet gives brief descriptions of the forces used in the war on poverty—the Community Action Program, Project Headstart, the Job Corps, Neighborhood Youth Corps, VISTA Volunteers, Work-Study Program, Work Experience Program, and others.

It suggests that for full information on any part of the program, inquiry be made of the AFL-CIO Anti-Poverty Office, Miles C. Stanley, Assistant to the President, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. Copies of the pamphlet, No. 137, may be had from the AFL-CIO at 10 cents each, $7.50 per 100 copies.

New Law Extends Defense Education

RECEIVING little attention to date is a provision of the Higher Education Act of 1965, an amendment to the National Defense Education Act (NDEA), which extends the benefits of NDEA to all students from kindergarten through graduate school.

The whole scope of the NDEA has been broadened to encompass programs that buttress the entire educational structure. These include strengthening instruction in science, mathematics, foreign languages, civics, history, geography, English, economics and reading.

It also covers expansion of guidance, counseling and testing, technical education, improvement of communications media for instructional purposes, teacher-training institutes and improvement of educational statistical services.

The total cost of the program, through June 1965, has been $1.2 billion. A report recently prepared by the U.S. Office of Education reviews its accomplishments over the past seven years.

Here are the achievements as listed by the Office of Education:

Student Loans—Approximately 750,000 students have borrowed about $619 million at 1,630 institutions of higher learning. The federal contribution to the fund at each school is normally 90 percent with the institution contributing the rest.

The average loan is $511, slightly over half the maximum permitted in any one year. Graduate students, under the new amendment, may now borrow up to $2,500.

Graduate Fellowships—For the current academic year, 3,000 fellowships are provided. This number will increase to 6,000 in 1966-67 and to 7,500 in 1967-68.

About $130 million has been obligated so far for stipends, allowances and support of participating graduate schools.

Science, Mathematics and Foreign Languages—More than $300 million has been paid to states and territories, on a 50-50 matching basis, for strengthening these subjects in both public elementary and high schools.

History, civics, geography, English, reading and economics were added by amendments in 1964 and 1965. Language laboratories in public high schools have increased from 46 in 1958 to at least 8,000. More than 306,000 local public school projects have been approved for acquisition or for remodeling of equipment and materials for instruction in these subjects.

A broad program of foreign language development in higher education has been authorized, too.

Guidance, Counseling and Testing—Grants to states of over $98 million have helped bring the number of full-time secondary school counselors from 12,000 to 31,000. Each year there were, in addition, 2,000 counselors working in elementary Grades 7 and 8 in public schools and Grades 7 through 12 in public institutions such as schools for the deaf, blind and handicapped.

Technical Education—About 63,000 new technicians have completed preparatory training in electronics, drafting and design, instrumentation, chemical and similar occupational fields.

About 250,000 youths and adults were enrolled in the school year 1964-65 under the program.

Teacher-Training Institutes—The first year of this program, the summer of 1965, about 20,400 elementary and secondary school teachers participated in institutes for advanced study in history, geography, English, reading institutes for school library personnel, communications media and institutes for teachers of disadvantaged youths. (PAI)

Task Force Unanimous:

Major Shift Urged In U.S. Job Service

mass layoffs in order to facilitate workers' job adjustments."

● A coordinated job recruitment system crossing labor market and state lines so that information on manpower shortages or surpluses in one area will be promptly available in other areas. The task force suggested a pilot project testing the practicality of using automatic data processing in inter-area recruitment.

● Financing the employment service from general revenue as well as from the federal unemployment tax, which now supports the combined unemployment insurance and U.S. Employment Service operation.

Dean George Shultz of the University of Chicago Graduate School of Business served as chairman of the task force. Labor members were Pres. John H. Lyons of the Iron Workers and Auto Workers Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock.

Wirtz told newsmen the report had initially been intended for his private guidance. But he found it "of such moment and significance" and was so impressed by the unanimity achieved in a "controversial" area that he decided to make it public.

It is "high time," he said, that consideration be given to revising the basic mandate of the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Wirtz said he has asked Stanley Ruttenberg, the Labor Dept.'s manpower administrator, to advise him "as quickly as possible about the changes that can be made administratively on the basis of these recommendations."

● A "central" theme of the report, Wirtz noted, was the need to develop better working relationships between the employment service and private employers. He cited the pattern in Western European nations where private firms advise the employment service in advance of any expected major job developments.

Wirtz stressed that the employment service should "go more than half way" to find and place hundreds of thousands of out-of-school youngsters "who have given up looking for work."

Private Agency Role

The report in effect rejected the contention of private, fee-charging employment agencies that the government should stop "competing" with them. But it held out an olive branch with the suggestion that the federal-state network of agencies make job market information available to private groups, including employment agencies, unions and other interested organizations.

The task force did not deal directly with the issue of transforming the federal-state employment service into a solely federal operation—a step urged by the AFL-CIO in a convention resolution.

Its thrust, however, was towards closer coordination of the 2,000 local offices with vastly stronger federal standards for staffing and training, coupled with mobility allowing employes to move back and forth between state and federal payrolls.

Deadline Near In New York Transit Talks

New York—The Transport Workers and the Amalgamated Transit Union intensified their efforts to reach contract agreement with the city's Transit Authority here before a Jan. 1 deadline.

The TWU and ATU contracts covering 36,000 subway and bus workers were due to expire at 12:01 a.m., Jan. 1, but union negotiators agreed to hold off any necessary group action until 5 a.m. so that holiday celebrants might reach home by subway or bus.

A three-member panel of mediators has been working with the parties to help reach agreement, and Mayor-elect John V. Lindsay, who takes office Jan. 1, named a seven-man committee to develop emergency plans for use in the event of a shutdown. The mediators are Nathan P. Feinsinger, Theodore W. Kheel and Sylvester Garrett. Deputy Mayor-designate Timothy W. Costello heads the Lindsay committee.

At a joint bargaining session called by the mediators, TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill and his committee presented arguments for a 32-hour workweek, a substantial wage boost and other improvements. Transit officials said they don't have the money and spoke of getting a court order restraining a strike.

The ATU and TWU have been negotiating jointly.

Building Trades Press Viet Nam Film Showing

The AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. took the first step in activating its convention decision "to bring a full understanding of the United States' participation in Viet Nam" to members by showing the Defense Dept. film, "Why Viet Nam?" to officers and representatives of 18 affiliates.

The preview in the AFL-CIO headquarters building was to acquaint union officials with the film so they can arrange to have it shown in the field.

The San Francisco convention resolution called for action through the department's 525 councils and 8,000 local unions to build broad support for the Johnson Administration's course in Viet Nam. Its passage brought telegrams of thanks from Pres. Johnson and Sec. of State Dean Rusk.

The 16-millimeter, black-and-white film opens with Johnson telling the world why the U.S. is in Viet Nam as he did in an address last July 25, and elaborates on the basic points he made.

Scenes show the armed forces in action in Viet Nam and the activities of medical and construction units. Maps and still photos illustrate the words the President, Rusk and Sec. of Defense Robert S. McNamara used in describing the danger that could spread if Viet Nam were to fall to the Communists. The three make it clear that the U.S. does not seek a wider war and does seek peace that will permit South Viet Nam to develop in peace.

Wirtz Presses Full Employment, Hits 'Groundless' Inflation Fear

The United States should not permit its progress toward full employment to be slowed by a groundless fear of inflation, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz declared.

"It is not necessary," he told an end-of-the-year news conference, "to choose between inflation and unemployment."

Replying to questions, Wirtz stressed that he is "completely satisfied" with the nation's ability to employ every single person who wants to work and who is able to work without the development of inflationary danger."

The push toward full employment, he said, should continue "on the deep conviction that the economy now knows enough about its own workings so that it will meet any threatened problem of inflation."

He predicted a continued decline in unemployment over the year, but made no estimate of what the jobless figure would be at year's end. The full employment goal, he suggested, would be largely reached when the unemployment rate dropped to 3 percent. With normal job changes and seasonal factors, he said, "you can't get much below that figure."

The secretary reiterated his warning that a rise in interest rates "would have a somewhat delaying effect on the expansion of the economy."

Asked about the effect of a federal budget increase on unemployment, Wirtz commented: "The best answer to unemployment and to poverty is a vast expanding economy and more jobs. Now that would come from an increase in spending."

He views "the rapidly developing good sense" of negotiators on both sides of the bargaining table as the best safeguard against inflationary wage-price spirals, pointing out that over the past five years "unit labor costs have stayed almost level" despite the absence of government controls.

In other areas Wirtz said:

● Minimum wage legislation is "high" on the Administration's "must list" for the 1966 session of Congress. The Administration has not yet decided on the amount of increase in the minimum wage it is prepared to support. As for extension of coverage, Wirtz expects the figure to fall somewhere between the 4.5 million recommended by the Administration last year and the 7-to-8 million in the House Labor Committee bill.

● Apart from repeal of Section 14(b) and enactment of the situs picketing bill, the Administration has no immediate proposals for basic labor law.

● The "fastest possible degree of technological development," in Wirtz' view, will contribute to full employment. At the same time, "the higher the degree of automation, the more important it is that we have an employment service which will take care of the person who is replaced by a machine . . . and has to be moved, perhaps to a different area."

● Emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act should be used to compel suspension of a strike only when "a determination is made that both the parties are not going to be able to face up to both their private and public responsibilities."

AFL-CIO Employe Frank Wilson Dies

Frank P. Wilson, in charge of night security in the AFL-CIO headquarters building, died suddenly on Dec. 24 in his home in suburban Adelphi, Md. He was 62.

A member of Firemen & Oilers Washington Local 63, he joined the former AFL building maintenance staff in 1953 and continued in that capacity, following the merger, until his appointment to the security post.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Helen L. Wilson; a son, F. P. Wilson; a stepson, Forney Cluner; two grandchildren, three brothers and two sisters.

'Breakthrough' Scored In Computer Plant Vote

Los Angeles—A major breakthrough in the non-aerospace electronics industry here came as the AFL-CIO's pilot organizing drive prepared to wind up the old year.

The victory came at the Scientific Data Systems plant, one of the largest computer firms in America, where the Machinists won bargaining rights for nearly 900 workers in a National Labor Relations Board election.

William Gilbert, AFL-CIO drive director, predicted that the victory by IAM District Lodge 1578 would pave the way for organizing thousands of other non-union electronics workers in the area.

Outside of aerospace, the electronics industry is one of the largest in the area, but has remained largely non-union for years.

The NLRB vote tally was 412 to 348. IAM Dist. Organizer Roy E. Dodson credited a committee of 12 IAM men and women with "invaluable assistance" in overcoming what he said was a 3 to 1 in-plant deficit in pro-union feeling to achieve the victory.

Dodson said the union won despite the company's launching of a profit-sharing plan one week before the election and a general wage increase a week after the IAM petition was filed. The SDS complex, one of the major space age "babies," has skyrocketed from 30 employes in 1962 to 2,500 today. It has worldwide sales and is developing a 26-acre site in El Segundo, a union spokesman reported.

The Scientific Data Systems victory, plus another major NLRB win at the Dixie Cup plant in Orange County, brought the total organized here since the coordinated AFL-CIO drive began well over the 70,000 mark and gave new impetus to the drive as it headed into another two years of operations under the authority of the national AFL-CIO.

In the Dixie Cup election, the Printing Pressmen's specialty division won bargaining rights for some 200 workers. The NLRB vote was 121 for the union and 67 against.

Meanwhile, an earlier victory by the Brick and Clay Workers as part of the joint AFL-CIO drive has resulted in an initial contract for some 500 employes of Pharmaseal Lab. Inc., in Irwindale. Intl. Rep. James Cruz announced signing of an agreement that provides a package increase of 23 cents across the board. The firm manufactures disposable hospital supplies.

'Twin Obligations':

Meany Cites Goals Of Peace, Progress

will willingly pay whatever the price of the struggle may be, as long as the obligation is shared equitably by all."

"The quest for a more perfect society in the United States" also must go on, "while we defend freedom half a world away," Meany said.

"It must go on because it is right; because it is essential to the strength the nation needs to defend the cause of freedom, and because the world's most powerful free society, the examplar of freedom's rewards, must be a truly good and great society for all."

"Long strides toward that goal" have been made since 1961, he remarked, citing expansion of the national economy, reduction in unemployment that remains, however, "too high," and the establishment of equal and unlimited educational opportunity as "the public policy of the United States."

He cited also the strengthening of the social security system and its broadening to protect the aged against the costs of illness and the restoration of areas "stricken by economic misfortune."

"Racial discrimination in any form or in any place is at long last a statutory as well as a moral offense," he continued, "though the tive. be fully effec-

"The extermination of poverty is a national purpose, so declared by Congress."

The same spirit of advance must animate the future," Meany said.

The "enormous legislative progress" of the five years has been "paralleled by scientific progress on the same scale," he observed. Unless this unprecedented productive power "is fully used, and its boundless output absorbed by a well-paid, poverty-free people, the reward of man's genius will be the bitter ashes of depression."

"The unfinished business of the last year must be promptly completed," he said.

"Full freedom of collective bargaining must be made nationwide by repeal of Section 14(b). The minimum wage must be substantially increased and the law's coverage broadened. The unemployment insurance system must be strengthened by a system of federal standards.

"Consumers must be better protected against deception and usury.

"All this and much more must be done, and each year will bring a new set of goals. The search for perfection in a changing society is endless."

Social Dividends for All

The experience of the past five years proved that "economic expansion and social progress are natural partners; that investment in America pays dividends to stockholders as well as to those who are the direct beneficiaries," Meany remarked.

"Higher public investment [illegible] lower tax rates [illegible] add up to a better budgetary balance—confounding the bookkeeping pessimists of the past."

Young Americans may be forced to fight in Viet Nam in 1966 and on other fronts, "now unforseen," in the future, and the sacrifices asked of them are "tragic," he said. "They are essential to the survival of human freedom."

"Equally essential," he emphasized, 'is continued progress toward realization of the American ideal."

Factory Injury Rate Increases Seasonally

The work-injury rate for factories, following the seasonal pattern, climbed 6 percent in the third quarter to 13.4 disabling injuries per 1 million man-hours, preliminary data compiled by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has revealed.

YOUTH CITIZENSHIP CONFERENCE held last summer by the Texas AFL-CIO drew about 100 young men and 50 girls, most of them in the high school senior category, for two weeks' intensive study of a program centered on the theme, "Building Citizenship." Here Francisco (Pancho) Medrano, a member of the Auto Workers, talks about civil rights and its tie-in to the full spectrum of history, economics and politics.

State Councils Urged to Emulate Texas Youth Citizenship Parley

A unique experiment in education, sponsored by the Texas AFL-CIO with the intention of making better and more knowledgeable Americans out of young people, is described in the current issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist and pronounced a success.

Called the Texas AFL-CIO Summer Youth Citizenship Conference, it was held at St. Edward's College, Austin, and attracted about 100 young men and half that number of girls—most in the high school senior category, but a few of them collegians. The article, a Labor Education News & Views feature of the Federationist, says they "probably learned more than they were aware of at the time."

"For, as unique as was such a course, the real test of citizenship is in living it in the real world," [illegible] what these very special youngsters were beginning to do."

The subjects, the speakers and the discussions, the article declares, "would never be found in any conventional curriculum," geared as it was to "building citizenship."

"The subject matter ranged over history, economics and politics," it says. "The interrelationship of these subjects emerged through the discussion of such specific topics as the labor movement, the civil rights movement, political action and the 'coalition idea.' "

Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) and Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez (D-Tex.) spoke on the emergence of a Texas liberal movement based on a coalition of labor, Latin Americans, Negroes and already existing [illegible] groups. The article notes that the idea was of particular interest to the more politically-minded students because of the fact that the state's Latin Americans and Negroes have not "really begun" to participate in political life.

"Another popular subject," the feature adds, "was the role of organized labor in the national war on poverty. The students discussed the problems involved and the ways in which they might assist low-income neighborhoods in their communities in securing federal programs.

"The speakers and discussion leaders, many with national reputations in their fields, proved stimulating and inspiring. The visiting guests included university professors, civil rights leaders, church officials and union officers of every rank. Experts offered the benefit of their experience in social action, politics, organizing, political education, the war on poverty and international affairs."

The conference was under the direction of two Texas AFL-CIO officials—Henry Munoz, Jr., director of equal opportunity, and Education Dir. Harold Tate.

The recent AFL-CIO convention urged all state central bodies to emulate the Texas program and instructed the federation to provide assistance and encouragement.

Boost in Social Security Benefits Financed by Payroll Tax Increase

scheduled to go up in 1966 to pay for improvements made in previous years.

There will be further step-ups until, by 1987, workers and employers each pay 4.85 percent of the first $6,600 of earnings for basic social security benefits and eight-tenths of 1 percent for hospital insurance. For 1966, the rate is 3.85 percent for social security and 35 one-hundredths of 1 percent for hospital care.

More significant than the minor adjustment in the tax rate is the higher amount of earnings subject to the social security tax. The immediate effect is a bigger bite out of current pay checks since the tax will be computed on earnings up to $6,600 instead of $4,800. The eventual effect will be social security retirement incomes up to $168 instead of $127 for an individual and $252 instead of $190.-50 for a couple, with a maximum family survivorship benefits of $368 instead of $254.

In dollars and cents terms, here is how the payroll deductions affect the worker making the average manufacturing wage of $109.30 a week—or $5,683.60 a year:

In 1965, he paid $174 in social security taxes—the amount paid by all workers earning more than $4,800 a year.

During 1966, he will pay a total of $238.71. Of this, $19.89 will be the hospital insurance deduction.

The new year also marks the start of social security taxes and credits on tips received by service workers.

Retired workers with earnings from part-time or temporary work will gain by provisions of the new law which permit greater outside earnings than previously without loss of benefits.

Eeveryone over 65 will be eligible for basic hospital insurance starting July 1, 1966, and for nursing home benefits starting Jan. 1, 1967. The payroll deduction for the program begins this month.

There is no payroll deduction for the voluntary medicare program, which covers doctor bills and most health expenses not included in the hospital insurance. That program goes into effect July 1, financed by $3-a-month premiums paid by persons over 65 matched by an equal amount paid by the government.

There has been some concern that some elderly people will, through misunderstanding, pass up the opportunity to enroll in the program by the Mar. 31 deadline. Premiums will not be due until the program is actually under way, but those over 65 who do not sign up will have to wait until the fall of 1967 and then pay a higher premium.

The AFL-CIO convention, while urging that the government drop the $3 premium charge and make the coverage free and universal, stressed that it represents "an excellent buy" and recommended it to all persons over 65.

IUD Names Lesser As General Counsel

Leonard Lesser, since 1963 assistant to the president of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., has been named general counsel of the department by Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

A graduate of Harvard Law School, Lesser held a series of federal government legal posts before joining the staff of the Auto Workers in 1949 as counsel to its Social Security Dept. He later became director of the IUD's social security activities. In his new post he will continue as an assistant to Reuther.

Lesser has served on the Public Welfare Advisory Council, the Advisory Council on Education for the Health Professions, the Welfare & Pension Disclosure Advisory Committee, and the Employment Security Advisory Committee.

New Pension Plan Starts in Canada

Ottawa, Ont. — Canada's labor-backed national pension plan went into effect Jan. 1 and in another year will begin to pay benefits ranging up to $104.17 a month, depending on previous earnings, at age 65.

The benefits will be in addition to the $75 a month that goes to all Canadians over 70 years, with eligibility being reduced to 65 by 1970. Thus when the plan is fully operative beneficiaries will receive $179.17 monthly.

For the first year, the federal Revenue Dept. will collect 3.6 percent of wages or salaries between $600 and $5,000 a year earned by all Canadians 18 years or older. Half will be deducted from paychecks by employers, who themselves will contribute the remaining half.

Jodoin Cites CLC Program For New Year

Ottawa, Ont.—The Canadian Labor Congress will press at every opportunity in 1966 for a "more realistic approach" to job security, wage increases and other economic problems, Pres. Claude Jodoin said in his New Year's statement.

Organized labor in Canada will seek increased activity by the Economic Council of Canada so as to involve all sections of society in the planning "that is so badly needed," he said, and will work for improvements in social security and "other forms of legislation, with top priority being given to a truly comprehensive health insurance program."

"We have been encouraged, during the past year, to see a marked trend toward increased support for the collective bargaining process and for the organized labor movement," Jodoin added.

"A large number of people in occupations and professions which had previously shown little active interest in the labor movement are now recognizing the advantages and the need for placing their relationship with their employers on the formalized basis that is the foundation of collective bargaining."

Fight for 14(b) Repeal Vote Tops Issues Facing Senate

COMMUNICATIONS WORKERS Local 3104 of Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., bought advertising space on this bench the Junior Chamber of Commerce placed in front of the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. building as part of a citywide project. But it wasn't long before the company got the message, too, and told the Jaycees to haul it away. The local, some of whose members are shown around the now-vanished bench, has appealed to the company to bring it back.

Labor Reaffirms 'Unalterable' Goal

By David L. Perlman

The Senate's "right to vote" on repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act rates as the hottest domestic issue facing the 1966 session of Congress when it convenes Jan. 10.

Friends and foes alike agree that the House-passed repeal bill will be approved by the Senate—if it gets to a vote. A clear majority of senators is pledged for repeal of the Taft-Hartley provision which allows states to exempt themselves from national labor policy and outlaw the union shop.

The big fight will be over whether the Senate shall have the opportunity to vote.

When the opening gavel falls, the 14(b) repeal bill will be on the Senate calendar—the legislative agenda of bills sent to the floor by Senate committees. It has been on the calendar since last September, carrying a ringing 12-3 endorsement from the Senate Labor Committee. And a conservative coalition, put together by Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), is determined that it will stay there until it dies with the adjournment of the 89th Congress.

Dirksen mounted an end-of-the-session filibuster to keep the Senate from considering the bill during the 1965 session. He has already served notice that he will resort to the same filibuster tactics this year. Dirksen chose what AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called "a most appropriate and appreciative audience" to announce his intent—a meeting of the National Association of Manufacturers.

The AFL-CIO has termed a vote on repeal of 14(b) labor's "first and unalterable objective" in the 1966 session of Congress. The federation's recent convention urged the Senate to take up the repeal bill early in the session.

"We propose to fight in the Sen-

Congress to Reconvene On Jan. 10

The 89th Congress will face the growing demands of the Viet Nam war and the unfinished business of the Administration's domestic program when it returns on Jan. 10.

Pres. Johnson's State of the Union message, his budget proposals and economic report will spell out the Administration's program for the second session of a Congress whose first session was hailed as the most productive in history. The messages are scheduled for this month.

House Speaker John W. McCormick told newsmen he sees no need to cut back domestic programs to finance operations in Viet Nam.

On specific bills before the House, the Speaker predicted:

- Expansion of the minimum wage law—"both an increase in the rate and an extension of coverage."
- Unemployment compensation legislation "bringing this program up to date."
- A new "GI Bill of Rights" for servicemen, including a college aid program comparable to that

In First Three Months:

Early Auto Pensions Open 10,000 Jobs

Detroit—A total of 10,200 members of the Auto Workers have taken advantage of the union-negotiated early retirement program during its first three months and cleared the path to an equal number of new jobs for younger workers.

"Each month that total rises," according to an article in the January issue of the UAW's official publication, Solidarity, by Staff Member Howard Lipton.

"It is also being boosted by retirees from about a dozen parts and supplier companies where the retirement incentive program went into effect last month and this.

"By creating sorely-needed jobs in such heavy numbers—the average so far has been better than 3,000 a month—the pace-setting program, on the basis of today's figures, would be furnishing new employment every 12 months for a work force equal to the size of an employer as big as the Allis-Chalmers Co., one of the farm implement industry's giants."

The special retirement program for workers 60 to 65 years old went into effect in September and the figures are for that month, October and November, the last for which data are available.

Under it, the retiree with 10 years or more of service receives the normal pension, reduced actuarially, plus a supplemental amount

Firemen Press Pay Proposals On Railroads

Cleveland, O.—The Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen have served proposals for a 25 percent wage increase and other major contract improvements on the nation's railroads, Pres. H. E. Gilbert announced here.

Powder Plant Strike Ended By New Pact

East Alton, Ill.—Trade union unity won long-sought contract improvements for 4,400 members of AFL-CIO unions here after a month's strike at the military small arms ammunition plant of the Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp., only one of its kind in the country.

Four unions struck early in December because of dissatisfaction with management contract offers—the Machinists, Intl. Brotherhood of Electric Workers, Chemical Workers and the Western Employes Trade Council, representing several crafts.

The last picket line was removed Jan. 3 after contract ratification by IAM Lodge 660, IBEW Local 649 and the Trade Council. Chemical Workers Local 6 ratified new terms Dec. 23 but stayed out until the final settlement. Plumbers Local 553, still negotiating for 70 Olin employes, did not vote a strike but respected the picket lines.

The flow of ammunition to U.S. forces in Viet Nam was not curtailed at any time because of the strike, IAM Vice Pres. Eugene D. Glover said.

For IAM members, the new pact means wages increased by at least

Vast Training Program Proposed for Unskilled

A plan to break the hard core of employment through a vast expansion of public services has been unveiled by the Democratic Study Group, made up of 180 liberal congressmen.

It calls for training 1 million persons for new jobs with cities, counties, states and non-profit organizations—in hospitals, nursing homes, schools, playgrounds, libraries, parks and similar fields. The federal government would finance the training and then pay 90 percent of wages after employment.

The proposal was drafted by the DSG's Full Employment Steering Committee, headed by Rep. James H. Scheuer (N. Y.).

Basis for the plan is the committee's belief that even reduction of the unemployment rate to 3 percent—a figure frequently used as a national goal—would leave "many among the poor who lack the opportunity to assume a productive place in society."

Besides providing both job training and jobs, the program envisioned by the committee would result in "better nursing homes and

Census Bureau To Make Area Job Surveys

A series of household surveys to help the Labor Dept. improve its techniques for estimating unemployment at the state and area levels will be conducted by the Bureau of the Census under a contract calling for a start later this month.

Representatives of the bureau will interview householders in 18 metropolitan areas in 14 states in an attempt to develop data concerning the interrelationships between the components of joblessness, such as insured and uncovered unemployment and migration of the jobless into various kinds of areas, and to provide an additional check on the accuracy of local employment estimates made by the states.

Plans call for interviewing two categories of households—those with persons eligible for and claiming unemployment compensation benefits, and those drawn at random from the population.

The study will combine the use of state source material with the Census Bureau's regular sampling methods. The bureau's data will provide base information with which the Labor Dept. can compare future state estimates of joblessness.

State employment security agencies will cooperate in Arizona, California, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Michigan, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas and West Virginia.

The survey project grew out of a 1962 recommendation by the President's Committee to Appraise Employment & Unemployment Statistics, on which labor was represented by Manpower Administrator Stanley H. Ruttenberg, then AFL-CIO research director.

Strikers Press Boycott Against Tyson Poultry

Springdale, Ark.—Seventy workers marching on a picket line at the Tyson Poultry plant here have said they are relying on a consumer boycott as a key weapon in their long dispute with Tyson, one of the nation's largest poultry processors.

The strikers' union, Food Handlers' Local 425 of the Meat Cutters, regards its "Don't buy Tyson" appeal to labor families as critical because, it said, "under the Arkansas 'right to work' law it is a simple matter to recruit strikebreakers."

For many years, the local reported, the Tyson firm resisted union organization. In so doing it was found guilty of numerous violations of the National Labor Relations Act. Two NLRB elections were set aside, the union said, "because of the company's program of coercion and threats," but Local 425 finally was certified as bargaining representative after a third election last May.

Months of bargaining failed to achieve a contract and Tyson workers went on strike Aug. 27 with the full support of their local and international union.

The union said Tyson poultry can be identified by USDA inspection numbers P-481 or P-607 on these brands of chickens and eggs: Tyson's Pride, Dover Cornish, Dover Roasters, Old American Roasters, Patti Jean Cornish or Roasters, Manor House (Safeway), Ocoma Foods or Wishbone (Kroger).

Poultry sold through Washington Creamery, New York, also are unfair Tyson products, the strikers said.

Issues in the dispute, according to the local, include Tyson's refusal to pay wages and classifications negotiated with other Arkansas poultry processors, its demand for "absolute control" over employes including the right to discharge any worker engaged in a strike, and its demand for inferior working conditions in the contract.

10% Package Accepted By Millinery Workers

New York—A three-year contract giving some 8,000 Millinery Workers a 10 percent package increase in wages and other benefits, and geared especially to the needs of the lowest-paid workers, has been ratified by members of five locals affiliated with the union's New York Joint Board.

The agreement applies in more than 400 factories operated by members of the Eastern Women's Headwear Association and the Hat Frame Manufacturers Association. Union spokesmen said it is expected to serve as a model for settlements in the industry in other parts of the country.

wage increases—3 percent Jan. 1 and 2 percent effective each of the next two years. A minimum wage of $2 an hour was established and according to Nathaniel Spector, general manager of the Joint Board, wages will increase an average of $6 to $7 weekly.

Pay ranged from $64 to $127 weekly for weekly workers under the old agreement, and piece workers earned from $1.75 to $3.75 an hour.

Employer payments into the general health and welfare fund were increased by 1 percent, with a similar rise in pension fund payments. For the final two years of the agreement the last 1 percent will be used to boost to 2 percent of payroll funds used for the promotion of sales of women's hats.

The agreement was negotiated by Spector, who has been Joint Board manager since 1915, and A. Mendelowitz, the co-manager. Spector called the settlement "modest and reasonable." The emphasis on increasing the earnings of the lowest-paid workers, he said, reflects the union's effort "to make millinery as good an industry to work in as it used to be."

A total of 7 percent goes in

Viet Nam Unionist Wins Scholarship

Boston—Gen. Sec. Nguyen Tho-Khanh of the South Vietnamese Petroleum & Chemical Workers Union was named winner of the first James P. Mitchell Scholarship at the 38th graduation exercises of the Harvard University Trade Union Program.

The award was established at Harvard for Trade Union Program participants by the Fund for Intl., Social & Economic Education, and honors the late secretary of labor in the Eisenhower Administration. Tho-Khanh was chosen from a class made up of 27 American union leaders and nine others from overseas countries.

The principal commencement speaker was Dean Donald K. Price of the Harvard Graduate School of Public Administration. Dean George P. Baker of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration presented the certificates, and John T. Dunlop, chairman of the university's economics department, also spoke.

Speaking on behalf of the graduates was Education Dir. Harold Tate of the Texas AFL-CIO.

Rail Firemen Seek Major Pay Gains

wage proposals on the industry, which showed improvement in every category but passenger traffic in 1965. Net income was up 12 percent from 1964, according to the Association of American Railroads, and net profits were estimated at a booming $775 million by Barrons, the weekly financial publication.

The wage and other proposals were served on the railroads under an agreement signed Dec. 2, 1964, which yielded pay hikes totaling 18 cents an hour, retroactive to the previous Jan. 15, and barred new wage negotiations before Jan. 1, 1966. Present rates for locomotive helpers, or firemen, range typically from $20.53 to $24.50 a day, depending on class of service, and for BLFE-represented engineers from $22.88 to $28.52. The rate for hostlers is $24.77.

12-Point Program

The BLFE presented the railroads with a 12-point bargaining program that called for the 25 percent pay hike for engineers, helpers and hostler helpers, with the same rise in miscellaneous rates and special allowances; a cost-of-living adjustment clause; a $5 hike in the daily minimum in all road service; daily and monthly work guarantees, and a night shift differential of 20 cents an hour for time on duty between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m.

In addition, the union wants double time or double mileage when employes are held in service beyond monthly maximum mileage; improved lodging and meal allowances; five days' written notice of abolition of any regular assignment; payment for time lost because of a death in the immediate family, and a noncontributory supplemental pension plan providing benefits of $6 monthly for each year of service up to a maximum of 30 years.

The wage improvements sought from 190 railroads would be effective Feb. 2 under the BLFE proposal. They would affect about 30,000 members and also would apply, Gilbert said, to jobs which were temporarily eliminated under a two-year federal arbitration decision that expires Mar. 31. The union is negotiating for the restoration of these jobs. Under the Railway Labor Act bargaining must start within 30 days on the wage issue.

"Railroad transportation employes have not adequately shared in the great prosperity of the industry," Gilbert said, "but 1966 will alter that situation."

Other operating unions are expected to present comparable proposals. J. E. Wolfe, chief negotiator for the railroads, charged that they are "so completely out of line" that "any counter-proposal is completely academic because the railroads are not going to pay them."

Some 400,000 members of eight non-operating rail unions started off 1966 with wage increases of 9 cents an hour, the last of three steps that raised pay by a total of 27 cents. Members of three shopcraft unions received 3.5 percent increases at the same time.

Both groups will be able to press for further increases this year, but any won by the shopcrafts will not become effective until Jan. 1, 1967, under the terms of the last agreement. Shopcraft unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO Railroad Employes Dept. have set a conference of general chairmen for the LaSalle Hotel, Chicago, on Jan. 27 and 28 at which "aims for the coming year" will be reviewed.

ConEd Local Approves Pact In Second Vote

New York—In a second secret ballot vote within a month, members of Utility Workers Local 1-2 reversed a previous decision by agreeing to accept terms of a new three-year agreement with the Consolidated Edison Co.

Both votes were conducted by the American Arbitration Association. The second vote, on whether or not to reject contract terms and go on strike, was 11,008 for acceptance, 5,654 for a strike. The earlier vote was 8,591-6,897 against acceptance.

The new three-year pact provides wage hikes averaging 35.7 cents an hour; additional "progression" raises of $3 a week in January and July of each year; reclassifications valued at 3.3 cents an hour; and improvements in health, retirement and vacation plans.

Business Mgr. Michael Sampson headed local negotiators who had recommended contract approval. UWUA Pres. William J. Pachler assisted the bargainers.

Union Unity Wins Pact In Powder Plant Strike

30 cents an hour, with better overtime, pension, seniority and health provisions.

These contract improvements were won by the IBEW, with similar gains reported for the others:

- Wage increases of 4 percent in the first and third years of a three-year pact, 10 cents an hour in the second year.
- A 7-cent additional raise, effective at once for first-class journeymen, to remove a long-standing inequity for half the unit of maintenance electricians and electronics technicians.
- Night shift differentials increased from 5 cents to 7 cents in the first year, 10 cents in the second and 12 cents in the third.
- A fifth week of paid vacation after 25 years of service.

Wage and fringe improvements valued at 44.1 cents over three years also included pension changes, reduction in employe contributions to Blue Cross and Blue Shield, better job assignment language and improved seniority provisions.

IAM Lodge 660, representing about 3,700 workers, rejected four management offers to end a walkout that began Dec. 1. The final vote on the fifth offer was 1,599-1,543, union sources said, with one recount because of the closeness.

Army spokesmen said the plant here is the only current producer of ammunition powder used in the M-16 lightweight rifle, in tracers for the standard M-14 rifle, in M-60 machine guns and 20-mm. rounds.

Quill Collapses After Jailing:

Transit Strike Talks Pushed in New York

New York—Bargaining and mediation efforts to solve a strike of 36,000 bus and subway workers were intensified here as the walkout ended its first week.

Mayor John V. Lindsay sat in on contract talks for several hours with three special mediators, headed by Dr. Nathan Feinsinger, and negotiators for transit management and the two unions involved, the Transport Workers and the Amalgamated Transit Union.

The strike that began with contract expirations Jan. 1 halted the movement of practically all subway and bus service. It was the first strike ever called by TWU against the Transit Authority, union spokesmen said.

A "standby" team of union leaders took over negotiations when TWU Pres. Michael Quill and eight other TWU and ATU leaders were jailed on charges of violating court orders to call off the strike. Quill, who is 60, collapsed in the city's Civic Jail, and was taken to Bellevue Hospital for intensive care and rest. He had suffered two heart attacks previously.

The jailings angered the New York labor movement, which has repeatedly urged revision or revocation of the Condon-Wadlin Act imposing harsh penalties against use of the strike weapon by public employes.

Emergency Meeting

The New York City Central Labor Council called an emergency meeting of its executive board as the AFL-CIO News went to press to discuss the transit strike and the jailing of union leaders who included TWU Sec.-Treas. Matthew Guinan, the council's first vice president. Besides Quill and Guinan, the jailed union officials included Frank Sheehan, Daniel Gilmartin, Ellis Van Riper and Mark Cavanagh of TWU, and John Rowland, William Mangus and Frank Kleess of ATU.

In negotiations that began Nov. 4 the unions have been asking for wages on a par with those of comparable New York City employes; a shorter workweek, and other improvements.

The case for improved contracts was made in an 81-page study presented to the mediators and the city Dec. 20 by Leon H. Keyserling, consulting economist for the TWU who headed Pres. Truman's Council of Economic Advisers.

The Keyserling study laid heavy stress on wage inequities.

The Transit Authority, it noted, pays $3.46¼ an hour to TWU and ATU members in contrast to $3.95 for Hudson Tubes motormen employed by the Port Authority and $4.80 for auto mechanics and $4.49 for welders employed by the city.

Quill before his illness summed up the union case by saying "a garbage man gets better pay" than a subway motorman—$3.59 an hour.

Transit managements' only contract offer before the walkout came just a few hours before the strike deadline. The proposal, the unions said, amounted to about 60 percent of the final settlement two years ago on the contract that just expired. After the strike began, the managements made a slightly larger offer and the union pared its proposals in an attempt to settle the dispute.

TAXI DRIVERS in Washington, D.C., members of Machinists Local 814, are joined by other union members in the nation's capital in a demonstration against substandard earnings. The taxi union, organized by the IAM in cooperation with the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., is asking elimination of a 40-cent zone rate on a ride which often takes 20 minutes or longer. The picket line is in front of the District Building, Washington's equivalent of City Hall.

Priests, Lay Professors Picket As Faculty Strikes at St. John's

New York—Lay professors and priests marched side by side as the United Federation of College Teachers picketed St. John's University in the country's first faculty strike against an institution of higher learning.

The UFCT is a unit of the American Federation of Teachers. St. John's is the largest Catholic college in the world with 13,000 students divided between campuses in Brooklyn and Jamaica, Queens.

The strike was the outgrowth of the firing of 31 teachers, with no reasons being given. Most of them were members of the UFCT and many were participants in a growing faculty movement protesting an alleged lack of academic freedom. Dr. Israel Kugler, UFCT president, said at least 200 of the 651 faculty members had joined the walkout, which has the strong support of the rest of organized labor.

Picket lines of teachers and sympathizing students were joined by delegations from the Communications Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Drug & Hospital Workers and Taxi Drivers Organizing Committee.

In a pre-strike peace move the union had offered to call off the walkout upon rehiring of all dismissed faculty members; the institution of contractual job tenure; establishment of academic freedom; the establishment of grievance procedures and a promise of no reprisals against the strikers and their supporters.

Several days later the Very Rev. Joseph T. Cahill, president of the institution, announced the establishment of a University Senate. He said the faculty will make up two-thirds of its membership and will have a voice in establishing university policy subject to approval of the trustees.

Father Cahill, who has refused to recognize the union, also rejected four offers of mediation, made over two weeks, the last from Mayor John V. Lindsay. Earlier he had declined to meet with a committee from the New York City AFL-CIO and rejected its request that he reinstate the ousted teachers. He refused to meet with Acting City Labor Commissioner James T. McFadden, or to meet with AFL-CIO officials and McFadden.

The city AFL-CIO called the situation "dangerous" in that faculty members were discharged "because they had the courage to organize into a union of their own choosing and for their stand for academic freedom."

"Should these unjust dismissals be permitted to stand," the local labor council said, "a situation will be created that will discredit the city and state."

Father Cahill, in a telegram to McFadden, said that since the dispute is concerned with academic matters, "it is the judgment of the university that any action within the framework of labor relations procedures . . . would not be appropriate."

Union Quotes Pope

Kugler and the Rev. Peter O'Reilly, chairman of the St. John's UFCT chapter, issued a statement pointing to concepts in the Christmas message of Pope Paul VI which they said were applicable to the situation at the university.

" 'Cease fire' can very well apply to the firing of 31 professors without a proper hearing, presentation of specific charges or any other aspect of due process," they said.

"The other concept was that no side should be so stubborn as to refuse to negotiate. This also is applicable to St. John's where the UFCT has time and again offered to resolve this dispute without having to engage in a strike."

The university at first refused to give reasons for the dismissals because they involved matters of policy. Father Cahill later said some were ousted because of "unprofessional conduct;" the use of "libelous and slanderous" statements; advertisements in newspapers and magazines "serving to discredit" St. John's; the use of classrooms for "propaganda purposes;" the dissemination of "false and misleading information;" efforts to "impugn the credibility" of the Vincentian Order, which runs the school; unauthorized demonstrations; alleged efforts to subvert the responsibility of university officials, and "constant" challenging of the trustees' policy-making role.

In a television interview he said the only way to temper the discharges would be for individual professors to request reviews of their dismissals.

"He's talking nonsense," said Father O'Reilly, an ousted associate professor of philosophy. "If he thinks that anybody will submit to a hearing under his conditions, he's simply out of touch with reality."

GE Hit for Penalizing Labor Board Witnesses

The General Electric Co., which defeated a 1964 union organizing attempt in its electric blanket plant at Asheboro, N. C., has been found guilty by the National Labor Relations Board of unlawfully penalizing four employes who testified at an NLRB hearing growing out of that attempt.

The board upheld a trial examiner's ruling that GE was guilty of coercion in reprimanding four women workers who testified in support of charges filed against GE by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The four were penalized for allegedly breaking a GE rule against "excessive talking" during working hours but actually were punished for appearing as adverse witnesses, the NLRB found.

The board, disagreeing with the examiner, dismissed a charge that the company unlawfully gave a week's disciplinary layoff to another union witness, a male maintenance worker who had been previously warned about "visiting" other departments.

The board said it agreed with the finding that GE broke the law by reprimanding and taking disciplinary action against the four women in December 1964 "because they gave testimony at the first board hearing" in the case.

The NLRB members also upheld the examiner's finding that the placing of "contact slips" in employe files was part of GE's disciplinary procedure, and that the action was taken because the employes testified at the board hearing.

It ordered GE not to reprimand, take disciplinary action against, or otherwise penalize employes because they gave testimony in any NLRB proceeding, and not to restrain or coerce employes in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by the National Labor Relations Act.

The union began organizing activities at Asheboro in 1963, lost an election in March 1964 but participated in a later hearing on charges brought before the election. In that case the board ruled that two supervisors engaged in unlawful surveillance of a union meeting and two others unlawfully questioned employes about their union activities.

Charles Caldwell Joins COPE Staff

Appointment of Charles Caldwell as director of COPE Area 2 has been announced by National COPE Dir. Alexander E. Barkan.

Caldwell, staff assistant to Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) for the past eight year, is a member of both the Newspaper Guild and the Government Employes. He was in the leadership of Yarborough's successful campaigns for the Senate in 1958 and 1964, and has aided other labor-endorsed candidates.

He succeeds Walter L. Davis, recently named assistant national COPE director. The area consists of Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Wast Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Court Upholds Restraint On Fake Labor Paper

New York—Supreme Court Justice George Tilzer has refused to dissolve an injunction enjoining the promoter of a publication who masqueraded as the publisher of a union newspaper and solicited advertisements from business firms on the basis that they would appear in a labor paper.

The injunction was obtained in July by Atty. Gen. Louis J. Lefkowitz of New York State and prohibited Irving Lobel, Forest Hills, N. Y., from soliciting advertisements by representing that he publishes a union newspaper, that he is endorsed by a union, that he has "influence" with unions and that he can help advertisers with union or labor problems.

The Intl. Labor Press Association worked closely with Lefkowitz's office, particularly Assistant Atty. Gen. Jerome O. Glucksman, in detailing the case against Lobel.

Glucksman filed an affidavit in which he said that Lobel also has used the names of Barney Lobel, Barney Lobello and Barney Lobella. Judge Tilzer noted in his decision that in selling ads, "the defendant used his own name or, depending upon the nationality of the person to whom he was talking, a name similar to his own."

Lobel persuaded a small union to sponsor his paper, which he called the "Labor Union News," but the agreement was disavowed when his method of operating was called to the local's attention.

Glucksman said in his affidavit that Lobel represented to prospective buyers of space that he was seeking ads for a labor publication which was designed to improve labor-management relations, and that he had influence with unions, "which was not the fact."

Informing the Public:

When They Ask About 14(b), What Do You Tell Them?

Repeal of Section 14(b) has been a public issue for months and it will be more so in the weeks to come. Here are some of the questions raised and the AFL-CIO's position:

What is 14(b), anyway?

Section 14(b) is a part of the Taft-Hartley Act —the basic labor relations law. It allows the states to pass laws that forbid unions and employers from bargaining over union security, called the union shop.

What's so important about the union shop?

A union shop—which requires every worker who is protected by the union contract to be a member of the union—protects the union from being undermined by the employer; assures it of enough income to do its job; and helps it to be strong enough to live up to the terms of the contract.

That sounds all right for the union as an organization, but what do the workers get out of it?

First of all, the workers get better representation from a stronger, more secure union. And they have the satisfaction of knowing that everyone in the work-place is paying his fair share toward the costs of the union.

Why can't unions just depend on workers to join because the union does a good job in the plant?

There are many reasons. Lots of employers, where there is no union shop, actively discourage workers from joining. In anti-union communities, as in the South, some workers who vote for the union in a secret ballot do not join because they are afraid, or because they are currying favor with the boss. In all areas, some workers don't join because they think it's smart to get something for nothing.

But isn't it un-American to force a worker to join a union if he doesn't want to?

It isn't any more un-American than taxes. A home-owner may be opposed to a plan to build a new fire house in town. But if he is out-voted, he still has to pay his share of the cost in taxes.

That's all right for government; but why should a union have that kind of authority?

Because the government has assigned a specific obligation to unions which they are legally bound to fulfill. A union that is the established bargaining agent for workers in a factory or other place of employment must provide equal protection to all workers, even those who are against the union. This obligation can be enforced through the labor board and the courts. Therefore, it is fair and reasonable for a union to seek a contract that similarly requires all workers to assume their share of the responsibility—which is all that a union shop requires.

If there's a union shop, doesn't the worker lose the power to protest against union policies he doesn't like, because he can't resign from the union?

It is simply not true that they lose the power to protest. They can fight for their point of view within the union itself—something that goes on every day. They can petition for a labor board vote de-authorizing the union shop, while leaving the rest of the contract alone. They can petition for a vote to decertify their present union as bargaining agent. These remedies are not only adequate; they are far more in keeping with democratic principles than quitting in a huff.

How about my neighbor, whose church tells him he can't join any other organization of any kind?

Most unions have met this problem sympathetically on a local and individual basis. Moreover, the Senate repeal bill as it now stands sets up a procedure for exempting genuine legitimate religious objectors.

Isn't a lot of dues money spent on politics and other activities, besides just union affairs?

No. By far the greatest share of the dues dollar is spent on direct trade union activities—negotiations, administration, grievance procedure, organizing the unorganized, training local officers and staff, preparing necessary economic data—the bread-and-butter operations. But beyond this, the labor movement has realized for more than 30 years that it cannot live apart from the rest of the country. Education, social security, medicare, minimum wages, unemployment insurance, housing, hospitals, highways—all these and more are as important to the well-being of workers as the terms of their contract. So politics and legislation are also "union affairs." Finally, no dues money at all is contributed to political candidates in federal elections; the law forbids it. Only voluntary COPE dollars can be used for that purpose.

Just the same, won't repeal of 14(b) force millions of workers into unions they don't want, and give unions a dangerous amount of power?

Not at all. The only union shops that will go into effect automatically will be in companies where union and management had earlier agreed that they would have a union shop as soon as the law allowed it. Elsewhere in the 19 states that now have compulsory open-shop laws the issue will be the same as it is in the rest of the country—a matter of negotiation and agreement between the employer and the union. The only increase in "union power" will be, in some cases, an increase in a union's ability to protect its members—a goal which Congress has said is in the best interests of the nation.

How about those public opinion polls that show most people are in favor of keeping 14(b)?

All of these poll questions, by nature, have to be stated in simple terms. The 14(b) question, by nature, is complicated. Therefore the polls cannot reflect true opinion. It is more instructive to look at the results of seven state referendums since 1958 (labor won six), and the national elections of 1960 and 1964, when the party positions were totally opposed and the pro-repeal party won.

If Section 14(b) is harmful and most people favor its repeal, then who actually wants it kept in the federal law?

Support comes primarily from the selfish interests who have utilized "right-to-work" laws as a means of keeping unions weak, wages and social conditions poor and as a lure to bring industry into their areas. These same persons who claim to seek "freedom" for the worker are, for the most part, the same groups and individuals who have opposed civil rights legislation, one man—one vote, higher minimum wages, medicare and all forward-looking legislation in the United States.

There are more questions, and more answers. The AFL-CIO hopes that these few will contribute to a public dialogue on 14(b) as it is, rather than what it is said to be.

'Fight to Win' Pledged In Humphrey Speech

The Administration's views on repeal of Section 14(b) were sharply and clearly stated by Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey at the recent AFL-CIO convention. Here is what he said:

This Administration is determined to fight, and this Administration and its leadership from the President on down is determined to fight and win—I repeat, to fight and win the repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Law.

Pres. Meany, I want to thank you for making it crystal clear here that you are not angling around for any bargains. We are going to see that this part of the law is repealed, because it ought to be. And we are also going to see that the people of the United States have the proper representation. You don't have to bargain off anything. We will win these fights on the fair and square.

The "right to work"—if there ever was a misnomer—is "the open shop." What it really means is an open shop where the door is open for the union man to be turned out. Now, some people claim that the repeal of 14(b) is a narrow, selfish, parochial concern for labor, just organized labor, that is all. But I want to set the record straight. I say the repeal of this section is everybody's concern.

These so-called "right to work" laws help no one. They attract low wage employers, who in turn make it difficult for high wage and decent employers, and they bring about low wages and poor working conditions. They undermine industry that is willing to pay a decent wage. It is unfair competition. They work against progressive and social legislation.

Renewed 14(b) Battle Confronts Senate

'Right to Vote' Seen Top Domestic Issue

ate until this issue is won or fairly lost," Meany told the convention.

Church and civil rights groups, which testified at congressional hearings for repeal of Section 14(b), will again be allied with the labor movement in fighting for the right of the Senate to vote on the issue.

Pres. Johnson said he will renew his plea to Congress for a 14(b) repealer and told the AFL-CIO convention: "With your help, we will pass it."

Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey reiterated the Administration's determination "to fight and win" on the issue. He predicted that repeal "will lift the standard of living for millions of workers and it will be the major victory in the war on poverty."

The tide had been running heavily against the union-busting "right-to-work" laws until Dirksen launched his filibuster.

Bait for Runaways

The 1947 Taft-Hartley Act brought a rash of state laws barring the union shop. But these touched only the fringes of industrial America, primarily the South and rural West. "Work" laws became another form of bait for runaway industry, along with low wages, promises of "tame" workers, and lucrative tax and construction subsidies.

Behind the "right-to-work" drive were professional promoters, financed by the right wing of American business and industry, linked in many cases to extremist groups such as the John Birch Society.

Except for Indiana — which passed a "work" law in 1957 and repealed it last year—proposals to ban the union shop were heavily defeated in every industrial state. The 1964 rejection of "right-to-work" in an Oklahoma referendum was a jarring setback to the "work" law promoters.

Last year, there was Indiana's overwhelming repeal of its law and passage of repeal bills by the lower houses of the Wyoming and Iowa legislatures. The only serious effort to enact a union shop ban in a "free" state was soundly defeated in New Mexico.

The massive Democratic victory in the 1964 congresisonal election—on a party platform pledging repeal of Section 14(b)—set the stage for what all observers then considered to be the showdown battle, the vote in the House of Representatives.

A change in the House rules made it possible for the repeal bill, HR 77, to bypass the Rules Committee and be brought to the floor by direction of the House Education & Labor Committee. With Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.) calling the strategy signals, it passed every test vote and was approved intact, 221-203.

The road to Senate approval appeared clear. To reinforce the anticipated majority for the bill and to accommodate questions raised about the union shop obligations of members of a few religious sects, an amendment was added by the Senate Labor Committee. It would allow persons whose religious convictions barred payment of dues to a secular organization to contribute an equal amount to charity.

But not long after the House vote for 14(b) repeal, there was a Senate vote which many congressional observers consider directly related to the stalling of the repeal bill.

The Senate failed, by a five-vote margin, to pass the constitutional amendment long sought by Dirksen to allow states to escape the one man, one vote apportionment of legislatures ordered by the Supreme Court. And labor was instrumental in lining up votes against Dirksen's amendment.

Dirksen threatened—and carried out his threat—to filibuster not just passage of the repeal bill, but against the normally routine motion of the majority leader to make the committee-approved bill the pending order of business.

With the session running late into the year the filibuster was hardly more than a skirmish. For a week, there was a desultory debate, little of it on the motion to bring the repeal bill to the floor. Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) complained that Dirksen had made a "hugger-mugger . . . a disorderly jumble" of the Senate procedure. When a test vote made it clear that the two-thirds vote needed to limit debate would not be soon forthcoming, Mansfield dropped the fight for the session.

Meany, in his keynote speech to the AFL-CIO convention in San Francisco last month, expressed labor's "resentment and outrage at the shabby tactics that have obstructed repeal of 14(b)." But he added pointedly:

"I find it hard to believe that a really determined majority can not, if it has the will and leadership, overcome any tactics that a minority might pursue."

'Work' Law Forces Ready New Drive

If 14(b) repeal is blocked, open shop supporters plan to mount a new anti-union push.

Reed Larson, head of the National Right to Work Committee, served notice that defeat of the repeal bill "will set the stage for numerous new state drives for 'right-to-work' laws."

He told a Harvard Business School group: "We have moved much nearer the day when serious consideration will be given to a national ban" on the union shop.

AMMUNITION for labor's campaign to repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act can be found in these three new pamphlets. Requests for copies of any or all of the pamphlets should be addressed to Room 606, AFL-CIO Building, 815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

Labor Spurns 'Back Door' Bid For Deal on One Man, One Vote

Senate GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen's filibuster against Section 14(b) repeal is "a cynical invitation to a deal" in the opinion of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Meany described the tactic to the AFL-CIO convention as a "back door" invitation to "give up your opposition to the reapportionment amendment and you can have 14(b) repeal."

To this, the AFL-CIO president replied bluntly:

"As badly as I want 14(b) repealed, I do not want it that badly. And the Senate minority leader and all his anti-labor stooges can filibuster until hell freezes over before I will agree to sell the people short for that kind of a deal."

Meany referred to Dirksen's proposal for a constitutional amendment to allow states to escape the one man, one vote apportionment decision of the Supreme Court. With labor opposed, the amendment failed to win the needed two-thirds vote in the Senate last year. But it was put back on the calendar "without recommendation" for possible action this year in exchange for an agreement by Dirksen to drop delaying tactics against the immigration reform bill.

Meany also made it clear that labor will not sacrifice its other legislative objectives or retreat in petulance from the political action field.

Side by side with labor's campaign for 14(b) repeal will be the AFL-CIO's drive for its other major legislative goals—including a higher minimum wage covering additional millions of workers, an updated unemployment compensation law, the job site picketing bill, consumer legislation and other priority items.

Labor, Meany said, will not abandon its efforts to help "millions and millions of people in this country who have jobs and do back-breaking work, but who are not paid enough to properly feed, house, clothe and educate their families . . . They are, for the most part, not our members, but they are our brothers and our responsibility."

Dirksen's drive to halt one man, one vote apportionment of legislatures, Meany charged, is "a bitter, rear-guard action against the relentless advance of the 20th Century." He added:

"The trade union movement strongly supports the one man, one vote principle and is the most constant and effective advocate of the measures required to provide for the general welfare of the people . . . Therefore the Senate minority leader must assail the trade union movement and place his forces in our path.

"The issue of 14(b) repeal and the issue of reapportionment in particular and progress in general are solidly and inescapably intertwined. There is no illusion about that either in our minds or the mind of the Senate minority leader."

'You're Out of Order!'

'I Got the Ball and I Ain't Playing!'

An Abuse of Power

ONE OF THE MOST cherished safeguards in the unique system of democratic government is the power of the Senate to delay.

The purpose is to insure full debate—to give the minority time to pull together its forces and its arguments, for all concerned to take a sober second look at what a majority proposes.

The instrument of delay is the filibuster, which has most often been used to frustrate progress, particularly in civil rights. Yet it should be recognized that reasonable power to delay what might be hasty and hysterical action by a runaway majority is both proper and important.

It is not reasonable power to which we object; it is to the abuse of that power, as exemplified by Sen. Dirksen on repeal of Section 14(b).

Repeal of 14(b) was not and is not a novel or hastily conceived proposal. It has been debated in every state for 18 years. Since 1958 there have been seven statewide referendums on the matter. In both 1960 and 1964 the two political parties took opposite positions on the issue. In six of the seven state referendums, and in both national contests, the union security position was upheld.

Therefore we in the AFL-CIO feel we are wholly justified in insisting that the Senate has a right and an obligation to vote on the repeal of Section 14(b)—to vote the repeal bill up or down, but at least to vote.

Yet Sen. Dirksen would prevent this. He prevented it in the first session of the 89th Congress, and he has publicly declared his intention of preventing it in the second.

He intends to filibuster, not only against the bill itself, but against any effort to bring the bill to the floor—even though it was favorably reported by a heavy majority of the Senate committee. This is truly a perversion of the democratic process.

Let the Senate vote—that is our basic goal, far more important to the ultimate national interest than the outcome. For if the deliberate, well-considered will of the people can be frustrated by a legislative maneuver designed to serve worthier purposes, then the very concepts of the American system of government are in danger.

SECTION 14(b) offends practically every serious student of constitutional law. It flies in the face of the Constitution that makes federal law superior to state law. Obviously Congress would not allow the states to establish lower minimum wage rates than the federal standard.

Moreover, 14(b) encourages regressive competition among the states based upon low wages and freedom from union organization. This is contrary to the public interest by any measurement.

Workers themselves want the union shop. For almost four years the law required a secret-ballot, labor board vote before a union shop; the results were so embarrassing (97 percent of the elections won, 91 percent of the votes cast) that the sponsors of the requirement also sponsored its repeal.

Repeal of Section 14(b) would eliminate one aspect of destructive interstate competition—luring industry by low wages and weak unions.

There is no apology we have to make or need to make on the substance of 14(b) repeal. And we have an absolute right to a vote on the issue.

The Lean Years:

Record of States Since 1958 Rebuffs 'Right-to-Work' Forces

PROMOTERS of "right-to-vote" laws, now fighting congressional repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, haven't had much to cheer about in the lean years since 1958.

They've been turned back in virtually every state they entered, scorned by legislatures, rejected by voters in elections and held at a long arm's length by politicians they sought to embrace.

Before they finished applauding the addition of sparsely-settled Wyoming to the list of states which prohibit the union shop, populous Indiana, the only industrial state on the "right-to-work" list, repealed its union shop ban.

The anti-union momentum of the Taft-Hartley Act proved short-lived. Rural-dominated southern legislatures, in the 1947-48 period, had been quick to pass "right-to-work" laws as presumed inducements to low-wage, anti-union employers. A few farm states in other areas followed suit.

Most Americans, it turned out, support the principles of collective bargaining, including the right of unions and employers to negotiate union shop agreements.

There were signs of this even before 1958, such as Louisiana's repeal of its sweeping "work" law and rejection of "right-to-work" in several legislatures and in state referendums from Massachusetts to New Mexico.

It was in November 1958, however, that the roof really fell in on the "right-to-work" promoters. Proposals to outlaw the union shop had been petitioned to referendum in six states: California, Ohio, Colorado, Washington, Kansas and Idaho.

It was a bold frontal attack on unions and the results were devastating to "right-to-work" sponsors and Republican officeholders who embraced their cause.

California and Ohio voters rejected "right-to-work" by massive million-vote pluralities. Down to crushing defeat went such nationally-known Republicans as Sen. William F. Knowland, who campaigned for governor of California as a "right-to-work" supporter; and veteran GOP Sen. John W. Bricker and Gov. William O'Neill in Ohio. Part of the reputation for political acumen which led to the selection of Ohio's Ray Bliss as Republican national chairman stems from his early unheeded-at-the-time warning that Ohio Republican officeholders were courting disaster by embracing "right-to-work."

Washington and Colorado voters also turned down "right-to-work" by big margins that year and even agricultural Idaho. Only Kansas joined the list of "work" states and by a narrow margin.

"Right-to-work" legislation was defeated in state legislatures, whether offered as a separate bill or, in a growing number of cases, as a "sleeper" amendment to civil rights bills and other unrelated legislation. In most states, "work" bills were buried in committee.

Bipartisan majorities rejected "work" proposals in Maine, Vermont, Connecticut and Oregon.

Efforts to stir up local support for a union shop ban were made, and abandoned, in Montana and Delaware.

Louisiana refused to reenact its "work" law despite a strong campaign.

"Right-to-work" committees were active in Kentucky and Pennsylvania and several Kentucky communities enacted local "work" laws which were subsequently invalidated by the courts. The capture of Wyoming's Republican Party by right-wingers and a GOP election victory in 1962 marked the only advance for the "work" forces.

Every session of the New Mexico Legislature faced a "right-to-work" battle. But although some votes were close, the union-busting attempt fell short of passage. In February 1965 another well-financed drive was repelled in the Senate by an 18-14 vote.

THE BIGGEST, hardest-fought campaign since 1958 took place in Oklahoma, a state almost surrounded by "right-to-work" neighbors, where local leaders of the radical right had powerful support from both the National Right to Work Committee and a newly-formed Committee for Voluntary Unionism of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

After the legislature twice rejected bills to ban the union shop, paid solicitors collected petitions to force the issue to referendum. The court battle over allegations of fraud in the petitions raged for several years, but finally the referendum was scheduled for a vote in the May 1964 primary election.

Labor worked as never before, formed a strong alliance with Negro groups, the Farmers Union and committees of educators, churchmen, civic, professional and business leaders.

When the votes were tallied, "right-to-work" was again defeated.

Industry Beginning to Realize That Beauty Can Show a Profit

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

CHICAGO—Theodore Dreiser would be flabbergasted. Lincoln Steffens would be goggle-eyed. Upton Sinclair—who is still living—hasn't tipped his hand but he, too, must be more than mildly astonished. These men, among others, courageous muckrakers in the medium of fact and fiction, exposed the heartlessness of industry, the shame of the cities, the lusts of the monopolies, the ugliness of factory sweatshops around the turn of the century. And what is happening today?

Morgan

Ruthlessness has not been banished from the corridors of competition and industry in the middle Sixties has not calmed all doubts about the beneficent qualities of its heart and soul—but it is discovering that it is good business to develop a taste for beauty and let us hope that it will become profitable enough to be a joy forever.

The Wall Street Journal front-paged a dispatch from Chicago the other day which began, "the Nineteenth Century ugly school of factory design is finally dying out."

The report said Lady Bird Johnson's insistence that we pretty up the face of the nation, coupled with new interest from local communities, was nudging more companies to pay more attention to their looks.

It went on to cite some examples:

● A big new steel mill being laid out on the Indiana shore of Lake Michigan amid a landscaping job of shrubs, trees and grass which makes it look more like a college campus than a factory.

● A steel strapping plant in an elegant Chicago suburb whose residents are so pleased with its appearance that they are urging the firm to expand into a neighboring tract to block a developer from erecting cheaper houses on it.

● A cement company which made a veritable oasis of its plant in the Mojave Desert in California by planting $150,000 worth of flower gardens, plum, olive, Chinese elm and peach trees around it.

And what are some of the results of these artistic touches?

"In the pretty plants," the Wall Street Journal reported, "labor productivity is above average, absenteeism is down and workers with hard-to-find skills are more easily recruited . . ."

Beauty, you might say, is inclined to subdue the beastliness in people, presumably having similar effects on the far-sighted company executive and the employes on his payroll. There are seeds here for what may burgeon into a revolutionary pageant of productivity set in the gardens of American industry—in place of the smoking, choking hideosities that most of the country's manufacturing districts have been allowed to become.

IF THIS SOUNDS silly don't forget that the idea was given major attention by the Wall Street Journal, an excellent newspaper which is not inclined to be frivolous. The more one dwells on the concept the easier it is to see where the silliness, indeed the utter folly, really lies: in our carelessness and greed which have raped our natural resources and needlessly reduced vast tracts of the city and countryside to virtual ruin—when all the time it would have been sounder national policy and better business to plan industrial and other growth with beauty and conservation in mind.

The Journal quotes the Container Corp. of America's chief architect, Torwald Torgensen, as saying that good architecture "absolutely and unequivocally doesn't cost more" than the "run-of-the-mill brand" and he testified furthermore that good design leads to increased productivity.

The executives of that Mojave Desert cement plant said that absenteeism and turnover became "significantly lower" after they invested in their oasis. The superintendent of a gracefully executed factory near Chicago said he landed two obviously difficult-to-find turret lathe operators because the plant's appearance "indicated concern on management's part for their welfare."

This correspondent happens to know a distinguished interior designer on the West Coast whose bold, modernistic, color-drenched concepts have helped to double, even triple the volume of business for such widely different enterprises as motels, hotels, banks and bars. Perhaps it is time that the social psychologist join forces with the architect and the interior designer to explain and encourage the attractive fact that people are more stimulated by beauty than ugliness.

On second thought, however, common sense should make this truth vividly clear. A fresh flower is more attractive than a dead branch. A tidy neighborhood is more inviting than a garbage dump. Clear water has more sparkle than a river polluted with sewage and factory refuse. Pure is somehow more breathable than carbon monoxide and smog.

What a wonderful, nay beautiful irony it would be to have one of the most avaricious and irresponsible pressure groups in the country, the real estate lobby, brought to book by enlightened minds in manufacturing who discovered that it is smarter and in the end easier to make a buck by respecting the importance of beauty than by bulldozing a hillside to make a quick-sell middle-class slum.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

MR. JOHNSON returned to Washington to face a sea of uncertainties with the new session of Congress that were not so readily apparent last October, when the first session adjourned—a potential conflict between Viet Nam war spending and Great Society welfare programs, a challenge on the war itself, the impact of next November's elections in the Congress that follows.

The $100 billion budget line—for so long a sacrosanct figure—is certain to be broken. The military spending in Viet Nam makes it a necessity, and if the welfare programs—schools, poverty, urban renewal, mass transit systems—are not to be starved, the Bureau of the Budget may find itself unhappy over the final figures it transmits.

The $100 billion administrative budget has been fiction rather than fact, however, for a number of years. It has not represented realistically what the government takes in from citizens and pays out to them, in turn, in such things as social security transactions, for example.

The Gross National Product has jumped to something approximating $700 billion. The money the country needs to finance domestic investment programs as well as to finance the Viet Nam operation is available. The national debt is far less, proportionately, than it was 20 years ago when our economy and productive power were much smaller.

THE PRESIDENT faces a certain amount of trouble over Viet Nam from his own Democratic camp, including some of the senators who have been touring the world's capitals in recent weeks. He has countered it, or sought to counter it, by sending Administration spokesmen on journeys to test the possibilities of obtaining a simple cease-fire from the North Vietnamese in Hanoi.

The political danger to Mr. Johnson, however, comes from the Republicans, who clearly are whetting their weapons to use Viet Nam against him as the GOP used Korea in 1952 in labeling it "Truman's war."

The Republican technique has been to express approval of the President's policies in Viet Nam, so much so as almost to kill him with kindness, but to add a caveat that he isn't waging the war hard enough.

This is a theme on which infinite variations can be played.

The Republican Coordinating Committee, for example, complained that the North Vietnamese were being heavily supplied by cargoes moving into the port of Haiphong. The committee did not say that we should bomb the port; it merely called for a "Kennedy-type" naval blockade to obstruct the traffic.

Former Vice Pres. Nixon took the tougher line: the President should order the bombing of both Haiphong, the port, and Hanoi, the northern capital, he said. The GOP has the advantage of having stated both positions in the "harder war" encampment.

THESE ARE ISSUES, obviously, that will be raised in Congress, along with all the others about repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act and improvements in the minimum wage law and unemployment compensation system.

There will be other issues that emerge during the new session, but Viet Nam and the budget can clearly become overriding to Republican orators.

Their objective will be to snatch away from the Democrats the handful who made the balance of power in the House of Representatives after the 1964 election. It is not widely understood how slender that margin was on some issues, such as motions to recommit bills.

The Democrats have waged a major program to establish their new members firmly in the districts they won from the GOP last year. The effectiveness of this program as well as the record Congress writes in the second session will play a part in the election results.

Assures Fair Wages:

New Service Contracts Law Climaxes Long Fight by Labor

A NEW FEDERAL LAW climaxes organized labor's seven-year fight to assure that firms providing services to the federal government pay fair wages, an AFL-CIO spokesman has said.

Employers bidding for federal contracts for custodial, laundry and other services must hereafter do so on the basis of the prevailing area wage or the federal minimum wage, whichever is higher, said Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes, an AFL-CIO vice president. The new law requires that fringe benefits be included in the prevailing wage determination.

The new safeguards mean "greater economic justice to workers in the low-paying jobs" and "guarantees that responsible contractors" can compete favorably in the bidding for government work, Sullivan said. His statements came on Labor News Conference, the weekly AFL-CIO public service production aired nationwide over the Mutual radio network.

Sullivan recalled that the prevailing wage principle for service contracts won wide support in both Congress and the Executive branch when it became clear that some federal contractors were forcing their employes to work for extremely low wages.

SULLIVAN SAID that repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act would be a great help to service trades workers and others in the lower wage levels. Wages for such workers are now especially low in the states with so-called "right-to-work" laws encouraged by 14(b), he pointed out.

"We all talk about fair competition," he said, but the "work" laws permit employers in some states to pay low wages at the same time they compete with firms in states that maintain higher standards.

Reporters questioning him were Neil Gilbride, labor reporter for the Associated Press, and Alan Adams of Business Week magazine.

LABOR'S LONG FIGHT to assure that firms providing services to the federal government pay fair wages was climaxed by a new federal law spelling out the requirement, Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes (center) told Alan Adams (left) of Business Week magazine and Neil Gilbride of the Associated Press on Labor News Conference, weekly AFL-CIO public service radio program.

Labor, Consumer Groups Fight Out-Moded Harsh Credit Laws

By Sidney Margolius

WITH BANKRUPTCIES hitting new records and hundreds of thousands of garnishees filed against workers annually, consumer and labor groups are battling in many states to change the present laws which bring about these family financial tragedies.

For the thirteenth straight year, personal bankruptcies have hit another new high. For 1965, over 180,000 bankruptcies were filed. Of these, 163,400 were personal or "consumer" bankruptcies, (as distinct from business). In 1952, there were just 28,000.

There are no national figures for the number of garnishees filed each year. But the total probably runs into the actual millions. One moderate size city like Akron, O., had 12,000 garnishees in one recent year.

When credit was little used by moderate-income families, laws which took for granted the seller's right to repossess, hold the debtor liable for any deficiency, and garnishee, did not create as much havoc as they do now.

A landmark case for consumers occurred recently in the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. Justice Shelly Wright ruled that an unfair installment contract could not be enforced. More usually courts have held that once you have signed a contract, you are presumed to know its terms and must fulfill it.

Three changes in the credit laws of most states would help protect your family from some of the worst onslaughts of the more unscrupulous credit sellers and finance companies.

A cooling-off period has been sought in several states and Canadian provinces. Such a law would give you a chance to reconsider an installment contract your or a member of your family may have signed hastily or without full understanding, especially with door-to-door salesmen. The Rev. Robert McEwen, a member of the Massachusetts State Consumer Council, tells about a woman who signed a contract one night. She became worried, and called up the next morning to cancel it. The salesman said, "Lady, you're stuck."

The Massachusetts Council proposed a three-day cooling-off period. Final legislation does provide one day, which is some help.

Both in Michigan and the Province of Alberta, legislation has been proposed to provide cooling-off periods of several days. Similar bills lost out in Colorado and California. In Colorado, it is reported, some business firms fought the cooling-off proposal, including Colliers, one of the leading door-to-door encyclopedia sellers.

Father McEwen advises that even if your state does not provide such a cooling-off period, you should ask any salesman or dealer for such a cancellation period before you sign a contract.

Fairer garnishee laws: States which have harsh garnishee laws or other serious defects in credit regulations usuallly have most bankruptcies. The "bankruptcy capitals" of the U.S., according to figures collected by Colorado State Rep. Gerald Kopel, are, in order, Alabama, Tennessee, Oregon, Nevada and Colorado. They have, in proportion to population, the highest rate of straight bankruptcies and wage-earner plans (in which the debtor pays his debts over an extended period).

In the few states where garnishments are not permitted, bankruptcies are much lower. For example, while Colorado had about 4,300 bankruptcies in one recent year, there were only about 1,000 in Texas and 1,100 in Pennsylvania.

Other states which do not permit garnishees include Connecticut and North Carolina.

As this department has pointed out, the least protection any state ought to give its workers is to bar firings by employers because of garnishees.

Bills to end such firings have been introduced in New Jersey and New York. The New York State AFL-CIO recently told legislators that the use of garnishees "has become a racket in many industrial areas" and that "a credit sale is often made with no thought but to slap a garnishment on the debtor if he misses a payment."

The New York City Hotel Workers Council also is urging that state law be amended to permit a buyer to tell in court about verbal promises or claims made by a seller.

Repossession or garnishee: California, the only state with a fulltime Consumer Council to represent consumer interests, now has a law which allows a creditor either to sue for the balance, or repossess the goods, but not both.

Quarterly Survey Shows:

Consumer Confident Of Prosperous 1966

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—The American consumer is confident that 1966 will be a prosperous year, according to findings by the Survey Research Center of the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research.

Unlike some experts who are greatly concerned about inflation or the balance of payments, most consumers do not see dark clouds on the horizon. They are intent upon carrying out a variety of major expenditure plans, among which plans to buy automobiles play a large role.

The latest SRC quarterly survey of consumer attitudes and inclinations to buy suggests that optimism about the short-term economic outlook is based on three developments of which many people are aware. These are:

1. The war in Viet Nam: This worries many people and yet is believed to stimulate business at home. Although only a minority of Americans thinks that the situation will improve during the next few months, unfavorable military or political appraisals are not translated into a pessimistic view of economic prospects. The war is thought to have favorable effects domestically.

2. Recent favorable economic trends: In November 1965 more people than at most other times since World War II said that the business situation improved during the prior 12 months. In a particularly significant change, the majority of respondents now said that unemployment had decreased and would decrease further. Recession was thought unlikely.

3. Income increases: In 1964 and again in 1965, about one-half of all family units experienced an increase in their incomes. This proportion is larger than in any year since the war.

Economists George Katona and Eva L. Mueller, who direct the surveys of consumer attitudes, report that the favorable economic news has not been balanced by bad news.

They say that while consumers are aware that prices have been going up, there is no widespread fear of inflation. Increases in wages, salaries, profits, etc., are felt to represent real gains in purchasing power.

The economists predict that barring major adverse developments, consumer demand will continue to grow during the next few months.

The survey found that 54 percent of all respondents and 67 percent of upper income respondents said that current business conditions are better than those of a year ago—"a more favorable evaluation of business trends than ever obtained before."

When asked whether they expected better or worse business conditions a year hence, consumer response was more modest. About one-half of those perceiving an improvement in the recent past believe that conditions will improve still further in the near future, while most of the others think that conditions will remain as they are.

The proportion of family units expressing an intention to buy a new car in the next 12 months was somewhat higher than a year ago and was the highest ever obtained by SRC interviewers.

The survey reveals only one durable good, other than automobiles, regarding which buying intentions are higher now than a year ago. These are television sets. The market for other durable goods, and one-family houses as well, appears stable.

People Fall into Two Factions When It Comes to Raising Kids

By Jane Goodsell

ON THE SUBJECT of child-rearing, people are divided into two sharply opposed factions. To determine which group you belong to, check the statements which best express your philosophy.

A. A 10-year-old child should go to bed every night at a regular time, which should be no later than 8:30 on school nights.

B. Children, themselves, are the best judges of how much sleep they need.

A. Report cards are a reliable gauge of a child's academic progress, and a child who gets a poor report card requires strong parental supervision to help him acquire better study habits.

B. Too much importance is attached to grades, which are often an inaccurate and capricious estimate of a child's achievements. A poor report card may not reflect real progress, but merely a personality conflict between teacher and child.

A. Eating between meals should be discouraged because pickup snacks do not provide adequate nutrition, and they spoil the appetite for regular, well-balanced meals.

B. Children should be allowed to eat when hungry.

A. In establishing dating rules for a 16-year-old girl, parents should not allow themselves to be swayed by what other, over-permissive parents allow their children to do.

B. It is unrealistic to expect a girl to get home from a dance at midnight when the other members of her group are allowed to stay out until 1:30.

A. PARENTS' MAIN JOB is firm, consistent discipline and careful supervision to help their children grow up to be diligent, responsible, self-controlled, sober, industrious citizens.

B. Rigid discipline and constant parental criticism have a harmful, inhibiting effect on children. Childhood should be a happy, carefree, relaxed time of life.

Have you marked your choices? Good. Now let's see where you stand. If you have all A answers, congratulations! You are a sensible, conscientious, level-headed parent, who takes your job seriously. If you have all B answers, good for you! You are a perfectly normal child.

Board Orders Bargaining:

Local CofC Rapped On Anti-Union Drive

An employer's failure to repudiate an unfair "vote no union" campaign conducted among his workers by other businessmen amounted to ratification of the drive, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled in setting aside an election lost by the Clothing Workers and ordering the firm to bargain with the union.

The decision against the Hamburg Shirt Corp. was in line with the NLRB's "Bernel Foam" rule that an employer may not benefit from his own unfair labor practices.

Board documents related that the businessmen of Hamburg, Ark., comprising the Chamber of Commerce, devised a plan to give the town its first industrial plant and contacted the State Industrial Development Corp. which was "seeking to bring industry to Arkansas."

Town leaders in 1963-64 formed the Hamburg Industrial Development Corp., induced Bernstein & Son Shirt Corp., New York City, to open a plant there, and raised money to pay for a site and an employe training program, according to NLRB testimony.

Bernstein & Son formed the Hamburg Shirt Corp. and signed a contract with Ashley County under which it occupied an old building on the county fairgrounds and negotiated a lease for a new plant.

The rental for the new building, the NLRB said, "was fixed at a sum which would retire the bonds issued by the county at the end of 20 years. The bonds were secured by an increase in taxes on real estate in the county."

Hamburg Shirt moved into the new plant on May 11, 1964, but did not officially accept it because of such defects as water dripping from a ceiling. At that point the union notified management that 13 workers had formed an organizing committee and listed their names.

By June 5 the ACWA had signed 92 of 123 eligible employes and requested recognition. Management refused, and town businessmen, fearing they would lose their investment if Hamburg Shirt pulled out, began urging the workers to get their cards back and vote no union.

The NLRB upheld an examiner's ruling that the company had no real good faith doubt of the union's majority, and did not reassure the employes that it would not close the plant if the union won, as the businessmen were claiming.

The firm was ordered to bargain with the union, reinstate seven members it fired or laid off, and stop interfering with workers' union rights.

COMMUNITY SERVICES AWARD of the Greater New Orleans AFL-CIO was presented to Nash C. Roberts (center), a member of the State Board of Education, for his efforts to raise Louisiana's adult literacy level. Presenting it are Pres. A. P. # Sheet Metal Pact Caps Long Drive

Roxboro, N.C.—Successful completion of a 31-month campaign to organize the Crown Aluminum Corp. plant here will signal a step-up in North Carolina organizing activities in 1966, the Sheet Metal Workers have announced.

Capping a drive begun in May 1963, the union won bargaining rights after two elections followed by a first contract it calls one of the best in the state.

Edward J. Carlough, director of organization for the union, said the new two-year pact will give 300 formerly unorganized employes wage boosts averaging more than 21 cents an hour, seven paid holidays, strong grievance procedure, unlimited arbitration of all disputed issues, medical and hospital insurance, seniority as the sole governing factor in layoffs and an irrevocable dues deduction clause.

The employes' long fight for union representation was termed by Carlough "a case study in employer opposition to union organizing" in the South. It included an election loss in 1963, a new election because of employer interference, and certification of the union after an 89-87 election victory. The firm began bargaining only after being ordered to do so by the National Labor Relations Board and two federal courts—a District Court and the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Carlough said.

Jobless Aid Granted 'Replaced' Strikers

Harrisburg, Pa. — The "labor dispute" disqualification in the state's unemployment compensation legislation is removed when an employer notifies a striking worker that he has been permanently replaced, the Pennsylvania Superior Court ruled.

The court held that such a worker becomes eligible for benefits upon receipt of the notification. The decision upheld a ruling by the State Unemployment Compensation Board of Review that 34 members of Machinists Local 1971, Scranton, on strike against Sprague & Henwood, Inc., were entitled to benefits "due to a severance of the employer-employe relationship by the employer."

The strike started Apr. 8, 1963, when negotiations for a new contract broke down. The plant remained open, and some strikers returned when the company announced that normal operations were being carried on and work was available.

Workers who remained on strike received letters from the firm, dated between June 20 and Aug. 30, telling them they had been permanently replaced.

The majority opinion pointed out that a worker cannot wipe out the "labor dispute" disqualification merely by going to work for another employer; he also must end his connection with the employer against whom he is striking "so that clearly he would no longer be interested in the outcome of the labor dispute."

In the Sprague & Henwood case, the opinion went on, "the employer severed the employment relationship by its letter to the claimants, with the same result to the relationship as if the employe had accomplished it by resignation." It continued:

"The letter, in so many words, advised the employe that he had been permanently replaced. . . . From the time of this notice he was not only removed from actual labor because of the strike but the employment relationship was severed by the employer. The reasoning [in a previous case] that determined that an employe must sever the employment relationship to take him out of the disqualification of the law also applies to the situation when the employer by his action severed the employment relationship in this case."

Cartoons Hitting Raise Held Protected Activity

Posting sarcastic cartoons in a workshop commenting on a 2-cent-an-hour pay raise is a form of protected activity and insufficient cause for dismissal, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

A panel of three board members ordered the Indiana Gear Works, a division of the Buehler Corp. in Indianapolis, to restore Jerry W. Packard to the job from which he was fired and to make up his pay losses to Nov. 14, 1964, the date of firing.

The facts showed that employes of the firm's gear department had complained they were getting a wage increase of only two cents an hour while other departments would get up to 16 cents. Packard, an inspector in the "gear lab," announced his own "displeasure" with the 2-cent raise and, while working on the night shift Nov. 13, 1964, taped a number of cartoons to a lamp shade suspended over a workbench in the gear department.

"This was not an uncommon form of communication among the employes," said the board, noting that the pasted cartoons contained such added expressions as "My God, John" and "I'll tell you where you can stick your 2 cents an hour."

The plant superintendent saw the cartoons, took them to the office of the personnel director, and Packard was fired. His plant committeeman made no protest, and an NLRB trial examiner ruled that posting cartoons was not a legally protected activity. The firm, he observed, had good reason to fire Packard because he left sarcastic notes for the day shift and was "disobedient" of orders on the parking lot.

Not too Offensive

"We do not agree," said the board, "that Packard's activity was unprotected" or that the cartoons were so offensive as to merit his discharge. It added:

"These cartoons could not reasonably be construed as anything more than an expression of the employes' dissatisfaction by pointing up the disparity between (company) Pres. John Buehler's professed love for his employes and the alleged meagerness of the wage increase."

As to the "stick" reference, board members said "we do not approve of vulgarity" but "factory and foundry employes do not always employ the language used in polite formal society while at work."

Besides, they observed, Packard was not the only worker responsible for the cartoon collection; the other reasons given for his firing were "pretextual" and Packard's conduct rose out of a grievance; thus it was "protected concerted activity" under the law.

Labor Dept. Issues Welfare Plan Study

Hospitalization is the most common benefit provided in the nation's 163,500 private welfare and pension plans on file with the Labor Dept. under the Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act, according to a study recently issued by the department.

Surgical and medical benefits come next, the study showed, followed by life insurance, accidental death and dismemberment, etc. Dental coverage has increased one-fifth since 1961, and most of the more than 34,000 pension plans surveyed contain provisos for disability retirement and special benefits in case of death.

Copies of the study, "Characteristics of 163,500 Plans," may be had free on request of the U.S. Labor Dept., Washington, D.C. 20210.

NLRB Approves Kohler Settlement

The National Labor Relations Board has approved a settlement of all unresolved issues arising out of the Auto Workers 1954-1960 strike against the Kohler Co.

Union and management agreed Dec. 17 that the plumbing wares firm will pay $3 million to some 1,000 strikers and about $1.5 million into the UAW Local 833 pension fund if the courts dismiss a pending contempt of court action against Kohler.

Clear Labeling Urged On Electronic Imports

Protection of consumers through more and tighter regulations concerning clear and precise labeling of imported electronic products used in the radio-television-phonograph industry was proposed by a spokesman for the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in testimony during a Federal Trade Commission hearing on import labeling.

David Lasser, assistant to IUE Pres. Paul Jennings for economics and collective bargaining, told the FTC commissioners:

"In the absence of adequate regulations, the company that sets out to get a competitive advantage by buying a majority of its parts or sets abroad, and hiding disclosure of that practice, makes other companies feel they have to follow suit. The ensuing competitive rush negates regulations already inadequate."

Citing such labels as "some components have been made in Japan" as an example of misleading labeling, Lasser said such a practice makes it impossible for the consumer to know just what components were referred to—a speaker, or a transistor, or what. He suggested a three-point method to regulate labeling practices:

- Adequate enforcement of the present regulations concerning the marking of country of origin on imported electronic products.
- Extending the rule of disclosure of origin of imports on completed sets to include advertising, particularly where nationally-known names are involved.
- Disclosure of foreign origin of imported components.

Lasser emphasized that various benefits would result from better enforcement and tighter regulations, including assisting a consumer to "move up" to higher quality products, once the consumer could depend on the label telling him the facts clearly. Such a "move up" could also result in stabilizing the job security of the American industry, he said.

ACWA Unit Sets Up Fund For Tuition Aid

Chicago—The Clothing Workers' Chicago Joint Board has set up an educational fund to help provide college or technical school educations for the children of members with at least 13 years in the union, Mgr. Murray Finley announced at a press conference in the City Hall office of Mayor Richard Daley.

The plan, believed the first of its kind in the country, will provide up to $600 a year toward tuition in any accredited college or university. Where the tuition is less than that amount, the difference will be given the student for living expenses.

The Joint Board represents more than 10,000 ACWA members who work in Joliet, Ill.; Racine, Wis., and Gary and Rochester, Ind., as well as in Chicago. The pioneering goes into effect next September, but students may apply now, said Finley. He estimated the cost at $60,000 the first year, with substantial increases each following year.

Finley emphasized that the fund is not intended to help just top grade students, but "to make certain that the children of all our members receive as much education as they need and can absorb." A high school diploma is not necessary, he added, so long as the student meets the entry requirements of the educational institution he selects.

care for the aged . . . home helpers for chronically ill and large families . . . open schools, libraries, museums and playgrounds on evenings and weekends and during summer."

The report said the nation's record in meeting the goals of the Employment Act of 1946 "is not good."

In only five of the past 20 years has unemployment averaged 4 percent or less and in only three years has the average dropped to 3 percent.

The report termed low interest rates "essential to a full employment economy." And it warned that the recent action of the Federal Reserve Board in raising its discount rate to the highest level in 35 years "may impede our advance to full employment."

It declared that "the time has come when we must begin to provide a minimum income for everyone." The report suggested consideration of both "a negative tax on income" and improved social insurance programs as means of achieving this goal.

It urged business-labor cooperation in avoiding inflation, suggesting that both industry and labor participate in the development of voluntary wage-price guidelines.

"Employment at a living wage plus basic education and training are needed by most of those now living in poverty," the committee declared. "Full participation in American life and escape from poverty, discrimination and ghetto living require opportunities for jobs, education and training far beyond those now being provided."

It warned that job-training programs "may have negative effects if there are no jobs for those who have qualified themselves."

For that reason, the committee recommended, training for the jobs in public employment should be done by the hiring institutions themselves wherever possible.

The education, work discipline and work experience acquired in the program, the report suggested, will enable many persons to move on to better jobs in private industry.

It gave this two-point "philosophy" for the public employment proposal:

- "The work to be performed is both useful and needed, and
- "There is, among the poor, a tremendous reservoir of latent potential which can and must be tapped—for as a nation we cannot afford to forego the fruits of their labor."

It likened the program to the help given servicemen after World War II, enabling them to make "a substantial contribution to themselves and their society."

Woodworkers' Aide Honored by Florida

Tallahassee, Fla.—Regional Rep. James A. Craven of the Woodworkers has been presented with a citation signed by Gov. Haydon Burns in recognition of his efforts to promote, assist and encourage the maintenance of mutually satisfactory employer-employe relations in Florida.

Dir. Richard W. Youngman of the Florida Mediation and Conciliation Service, who made the presentation, hailed Craven as a "dedicated representative of his members" and as "an outstanding example of responsible labor leadership in Florida."

FULL EMPLOYMENT proposals issued by the Democratic Study Group of the House of Representatives are presented to Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey by Rep. James H. Scheuer (N. # NLRB Order Scores Tactics Of Taxi Firm

A New York taxicab firm has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board to stop harassing drivers because they joined the AFL-CIO Taxi Drivers Organizing Committee.

The board ruled that the committee is a bona fide labor organization and directed the A & A Maintenance Corp., which provides cabs and drivers for 20 fleets, to cease the following actions:

- Coercively interrogating employes about their union activities.
- Threatening to discharge or take other reprisals against union members.
- Harassing employes to discourage their union membership.

Four drivers testified that corporation Pres. Stanley Wissak inspected their cabs more frequently after they signed union cards and warned each to "watch yourself" and not get a scratch on the cab "or he would be finished."

The board affirmed Examiner Paul Bisgyer's finding that Wissak committed unfair labor practices. The drivers' testimony "had the ring of truth," Bisgyer ruled, but Wissak's "contradictory testimony appeared to be lacking in candor," especially his pretended "complete indifference" to the organizing drive.

The committee wound up its drive recently by winning bargaining rights for 79 groups of drivers and inside workers. It has asked employers to start contract talks early in January, AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Michael Mann said.

Early Auto Pensions Create 10,000 Jobs

from the company that ceases when he reaches 65 years and becomes eligible for social security. The maximum benefit is $400 a month.

The plan also enables a worker between 55 and 60 to retire if he has 85 "points"—his age plus his years of service. He also gets a basic pension actuarially reduced plus the supplement.

A breakdown given in the Solidarity article shows that 9,200 auto plant workers went on early pension during the three-month period compared with 241 in the same months of 1964. A total of 5,280 retired at General Motors compared with 120 in the same period of 1964, and 1,931 at Ford, compared with 45 in 1964.

An estimated 1,020 UAW members retired at farm implement firms where the program is in effect—Intl. Harvester, John Deere and Caterpillar. The last company does not have the supplement, but has a higher basic benefit that lifts retirement income for all recipients.

The creation of jobs for younger workers is called in the article "a practical and vigorous energizer for the economy."

Realistic Attack

"It is a realistically mounted attack against the paralyzing effects of a high, steady unemployment which numbs hopes and spreads despair, especially for younger workers looking unsuccessfully day after day for steady jobs at decent pay," Lipton continued.

Individual case histories of early pensioners are cited that show the chance of opening up a job for an idle worker was in many instances as significant a factor in the decision to retire as the more attractive benefits in the union plan.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther is quoted as saying "there's no question that the number of early retirees closely reflects the number of jobs opened up as a result of UAW early retirement gains."

When a worker retires from a job putting a windshield on a car," he says, "the plant he works in isn't going to begin turning out vehicles with no windshields. . . .

"To a considerable extent, therefore, early retirement not only satisfies the need to create job opportunities for the unemployed, the under-employed and the young people entering the work force—and with a national unemployment rate of 4.2 percent we need those job openings.

"It also serves to free older workers from the pressures imposed by typical auto industry jobs."

$2 Million Fund Held For 7,000 Musicians

New York—Some 7,000 Musicians due to share in a back-wages pot of more than $2 million are being sought by their union as the result of a final judgment in a long legal fight.

Fifty percent of the money is due them, under a court-approved settlement, for making non-symphonic phonograph records between Jan. 1, 1956, and Dec. 31, 1958. The AFM claims they were covered by the Phonograph Record Labor Agreement, signed in 1954 and effective Jan. 1, 1956, under which a sum equal to 21 percent of the wages earned by recording this type of music was to be paid by the recording companies into the Music Performance Trust Funds.

When the time came to effectuate the agreement, the union said, the recording companies backed down and attacked its legality in the courts. Additional suits were undertaken seeking to secure the 21 percent for the recording musicians.

With litigation pending in New York and California state courts, major companies deposited the disputed 21 percent with the Crocker Citizens National Bank of Los Angeles as receiver under a preliminary injunction, building the account until the $2 million mark was reached.

Other firms sent the money to the trustee for the trust funds, who forwarded it to the receiver. Still others reported to the trustee, but withheld payment. A final group made neither reports nor payments.

AFM Pres. Herman D. Kenin, said that Cecil F. Read, claims agent for the receiver, has sent written demands to hundreds of recording firms allegedly responsible for payments due under the recent court decisions.

The union is notifying possible claimants through AFM and local union publications and by advertisements in metropolitan newspapers telling those eligible, or their survivors, how to procure claim forms and how to file them with the receiver.

Kenin also announced cancellation of the recording license of Crest Records (Golden Crest Records, Inc.), of New York, for refusal to comply with the court's directive to pay what the AFM claims is $8,000 in default under the 1954 agreement.

Read has advised some 150 other companies which owe $500 or more to pay up or have their AFM recording licenses cancelled.

Chronic Ailments Affect 7.3% of Labor Force

Chronic disability affected the working capacity of 7.3 percent of the country's labor force during the two years ended June 30, 1963, according to the Health, Education & Welfare Dept.

The finding was turned up in a survey by the department's National Center for Health Statistics in cooperation with the Bureau of the Census.

Rates of chronic disability were lowest among white collar workers and became progressively higher among blue collar, service and farm workers. The leading causes of chronic limitation of working ability, the report showed, were heart conditions, arthritis or rheumatism, and orthopedic conditions.

The study also showed that the labor force—including persons 17 or older who were working, looking for work or on layoff during the two weeks preceding survey interviews—suffered 118.5 million acute conditions per year, a rate of 1,658.2 per 1,000 workers compared to a rate of 1,753 for the total population over 17.

About 52.4 percent of the work force had at least one chronic condition, H-E-W said in a summary of the survey.

"Injuries occurred at an annual rate of 266.4 persons per 1,000 labor force members," it continued. "The injury rate for the non-labor force population aged 17 and over was 242.9."

Days of Illness

Members of the labor force spent an average of 4.4 days in bed because of illness conditions, and underwent an additional 12.4 days of "restricted activity."

For every 1,000 people in the labor force there were 84.2 hospital discharges per year, or a total of about 6 million a year.

Workers who were hospitalized had hospital insurance in 76.4 percent of the cases and surgical insurance in 71 percent. Expenditures—both medical and dental and including insurance—came to about $142 a year on the average, compared with $164 for all persons 17 or over.

The survey disclosed that both acute and chronic disabilities were more frequent among older persons than younger, and that except for dental costs, "all types of health expenses increased with advancing age."

Union-Labeled Rods Angle for Anglers

Park Falls, Wis. — The Papermakers & Paperworkers make no guarantee of sure catches to the angler—but any fish that wants to die happy can now do so with the help of a union-label fishing rod. The rod itself, however, does carry a 10-year guarantee.

UPP Local 883 and the St. Croix Corp, have signed an agreement under which the firm will use the UPP union label on its world-famous rods and other products, which include fiber-glass billiard cues. The firm employs about 100 UPP members.

Selective Price Hike Cleared in Big Steel

A six-day running dispute between the Administration and major steel firms over the inflationary impact of a steel price hike was resolved when the White House termed acceptable a "selective" increase by U.S. Steel.

Gardner Ackley, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said U.S. Steel's "price adjustments, some up, some down, indicate an effort to meet the nation's problem of price stability."

He said the company's action "is generally consistent with the price-wage guideposts," and that the net gain in revenue appeared to be less than one-tenth of 1 percent.

U.S. Steel said the increase averaged about $2.75 a ton on certain types of structural steel, not including the heavier types used for road building and public works. The company said also it was reducing the price of cold-rolled sheets at its Pittsburg, Calif., plant by $9 a ton.

Others Follow

Immediately following the U.S. Steel announcement, Bethlehem Steel and Inland Steel said that they would cut back their previously announced $5 a ton price boosts in structural steel to the level of the U.S. Steel increase. Ackley in his statement had expressed the hope for this action "to meet and thus well serve the national interest."

The Bethlehem move which triggered the dispute came on Dec. 31 and touched off a sharp reaction from the Administration. Ackley termed it "inflationary" and said it was unjustified in terms of the company's excellent profit position in 1965 and the prospects for continued high earnings in 1966. He took the same position on the Inland action.

Pres. Johnson declared in a statement "this is certainly no time for unwarranted price increases which can lead to inflation. It is time to consider the larger national interest, to weigh the impact of unnecessary price action against the sacrifices of our men in Viet Nam and to act accordingly."

Bethlehem and Inland maintained their position that the increase was justified until U.S. Steel acted.

Prior to the U.S. Steel announcement, the Administration ordered government purchases of structural steel to be shifted to companies that had not increased prices.

Candidates Step Forth In New Political Season

A television special in California, a surprise retirement notice by a Florida senator, a political comeback bid in Ohio and a senatorial race in Massachusetts opened the 1966 political season with a flourish.

The half-hour filmed TV program, blanketing California from 16 key stations, starred Ronald Reagan, the movie and television actor, as candidate for the Republican nomination for governor.

Reagan campaigned actively for Barry Goldwater in 1964. Like Sen. George Murphy (R-Calif.), who won an upset victory in '64, Reagan is a film industry name making his first bid for public office.

He used his TV time to attack "paternalistic government," to denounce "free loading" welfare recipients and to warn against "social tinkering." At one point, he waved a ketchup bottle and blamed "social tinkering" for reducing the output of ketchup and causing the layoff of 200 workers.

His chief contender for the GOP nomination is George Christopher, former San Francisco mayor, who is regarded as the candidate of the party's moderate wing. Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown is considered certain to run for re-election.

Smathers to Retire

Florida politicians were given advance notice of a 1968 opening in the United States Senate. Sen. George A. Smathers (D-Fla.) told newsmen he will retire on doctors' orders when his term expires at the end of 1968. Smathers, 52, was elected to the Senate in 1950, unseating Claude Pepper, now a congressman. He said he has a "serious, complex but not incurable" ailment which will prevent him from actively campaigning.

In Ohio, Robert Taft, Jr., bid for the Republican nomination for Congress from the 1st District in Cincinnati. The Democratic incumbent is freshman Rep. John J. Gilligan, who won an upset victory in a normally Republican district. Taft, son of the late Ohio senator, served a term as congressman-at-large and in 1964 lost a close race for the Senate to Democrat Stephen M. Young.

Just a day after Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.) announced that he will not seek re-election in 1966, Massachusetts Attorney Gen. Edward W. Brooke said he will seek the GOP nomination. Brooke, a Negro and a proven vote-getter, is regarded as the front-runner for the Republican nomination. A number of prominent Democrats have been mentioned as potential candidates.

'Won't You Come In?'

SEVENTY-FIVE union members were graduated at commencement exercises of a three-month Tidewater Labor Institute sponsored by the Norfolk, Va., AFL-CIO. The students ended the course by writing an essay on what the institute meant to them. The winner was Silas Fletcher (right) of Iron Workers Local 79, shown receiving his diploma from Pres. A. L. Redfern (left) of the local AFL-CIO, as Virginia AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Julian Carper (second from left) and AFL-CIO Assistant Education Dir. George Guernsey wait to congratulate him.

Prices, Factory Pay Rise to New Peaks

The Labor Dept.'s Consumer Price Index, under the pressure of higher costs for nearly all major categories of goods and services, rose by two-tenths of 1 percent in November to a new high of 110.6, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

A BLS spokesman predicted that December figures will show a further increase of one-tenth to two-tenths of 1 percent. BLS Deputy Commissioner Robert J. Myers said the November rise was "about in line" with what was expected and "nothing to be apprehensive about." He added that he was "reasonably optimistic that price increases can be held at a moderate level."

Between October and November, the report showed, housing costs went up again largely because of a four-tenths of 1 percent rise in ownership expenses. Transportation and apparel costs each rose by three-tenths of 1 percent, and new car prices increased 1 percent as a result of the continuing shift to 1966 models, on which dealers are offering smaller discounts than on remaining 1965 models.

Automobile operating expenses and health and recreation costs also showed rises, but food prices remained unchanged for the second consecutive month as increases in fresh vegetable prices were offset by decreases for fresh fruits and meats.

The index was 1.7 percent higher than in November 1964, with higher prices for services and food the major contributors to the over-the-year rise, and with "significant declines" found in new autos, household durables and toilet goods—reflecting in part the excise tax slash—and also in used cars.

The November CPI reading meant wage raises for about 200,000 workers—38,000 in aerospace getting 1 cent an hour and 80,000—mostly in aerospace—2 cents, based on the quarterly change, and 86,000 in meat packing 3 cents based on the semi-annual change. In Battle Creek, Mich., 4,300 workers got 2 cents based on the quarterly change in the Detroit index, and in Washington, D.C., 3,000 transit workers got 2.5 cents based on the quarterly change for that city.

In a separate report, the BLS said factory workers' net spendable earnings rose to a record $2.64 in November as the result of a 1-cent rise in average hourly earnings. Take-home pay averaged $98.26 for a worker with three dependents and $90.50 for a single worker, a rise of about 35 cents over the month and approximately $5 more than in November 1964.

Real earnings rose less than net spendable earnings because of the rise in the CPI, advancing by about 15 cents to new record levels of $88.84 for the worker with three dependents and $81.33 for the single worker, in terms of 1957-59 dollars.

Thomas Di Lauro Of ACWA Dies

Philadelphia—Vice Pres. Thomas Di Lauro of the Clothing Workers, manager of the union's Philadelphia Joint Board, died suddenly at his office here. He was 57.

A South Philadelphia native, he left school after the eighth grade and by the time he was 15 was at work in the garment industry. He was active in the city wide organizing drive that led to unionization of the Philadelphia clothing market in 1929 and while continuing his education on his own, he became increasingly active in union and civic affairs. He had been joint board manager since 1959 and ACWA vice president since 1960.

provided for veterans of World War II and Korea. The Senate passed a labor-supported GI bill last year.

Before the Senate, of course, is the House-passed 14(b) repeal bill—and the threat of a renewed filibuster by Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen.

A full-scale discussion of the Viet Nam crisis, either in the course of considering a supplemental money bill or in terms of the President's messages, is anticipated in the Senate.

There will be a few major committee changes in the new session. Chairman Oren Harris (D-Ark.) of the House Interstate & Foreign Commerce Committee has been named to a federal judgeship and is expected to resign from Congress early in February. Moving up to the committee chairmanship will be Rep. Harley O. Staggers (D-W. Va.). The death of Rep. Herbert C. Bonner (D-N.C.) makes Maryland Democrat Edward A. Garmatz chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee.

In the Senate, Russell B. Long of Louisiana, the Democratic whip, is in line for chairmanship of the powerful Finance Committee. Its chairman, Virginia's Harry Flood Byrd, resigned recently and his son was named to succeed him.

The party division in the Senate remains 68 Democrats and 32 Republicans. In the House, there will be 293 Democrats and 140 Republicans with vacancies in the seats formerly held by Bonner and by John V. Lindsay (R), now mayor of New York.

Board Affirms Right to End Joint Talks

Seven New York newspaper firms have been directed by the National Labor Relations Board to bargain separately on contract terms with Typographical Union Local 6.

The NLRB found the employers guilty of refusal to bargain when in 1964 they rejected a request by the local for separate negotiations rather than citywide talks.

Two board members said the facts were identical with those in the Detroit News case, where the NLRB said unions should have the same right as employers to withdraw from a multi-employer unit if they give timely notice. Local 6 served notice June 26, 1964, that it desired to negotiate separate contracts for the period beginning Mar. 30, 1965, paper by paper.

The employers, through the Publishers' Association of New York City, refused to agree.

Council Opposes Cutbacks In Great Society Programs

President Firm on Viet Nam

By Willard Shelton

This country "is mighty enough, its people are strong enough," to "continue the Great Society" while fighting back aggression in South Viet Nam, Pres. Johnson told Congress in laying down a program and policy for the second session.

In his third State of the Union message, the President handed Congress a huge package of new and older proposals ranging from civil rights to a federal Dept. of Transportation and a "creative federalism" involving an improved relationship "between city, state, nation and its citizens."

Somberly he recounted our "more than 300 private talks" with more than 100 governments in a search for means to end or reduce the fighting in Viet Nam in what he said may prove, nevertheless, "a long, hard combat."

"We have received no response to prove either success or failure," he commented, although for "20 days now we and our Vietnamese allies have dropped no bombs in North Viet Nam."

In the domestic field, the President renewed his request that Congress "improve unemployment insurance, expand minimum wage benefits" and repeal the Taft-Hartley Act's Section

THE AFL-CIO's LEGISLATIVE program for 1966 is discussed by Pres. George Meany at a press conference following a special one-day meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council in Washington. The council strongly opposed proposals to cut back or suspend Great Society programs.

Reaffirms Legislative Objectives

By Saul Miller

America's social and economic progress is the nation's "major bulwark against Communist expansion and should be strengthened, not undermined, as part of our war effort," the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

At a special one-day meeting in Washington the council strongly rejected suspension of Great Society programs, declaring "such a suspension could be the costliest penalty of all." (Text on Page 4)

Pres. George Meany told a press conference after the meeting that in an exchange of letters with the White House on this matter, the President had assured him he was "determined to press ahead in building the Great Society" and that he was confident of "maintaining our forward movement" on the social and economic front.

Meany said he did not expect programs such as the war on poverty, aid to education and others to be cut back and that he was quite sure the funds to fight the war in Viet Nam and continue forward progress in the nation would be available.

The council statement acknowledged that the primary concern of the nation is the "shooting war in Viet Nam," and praised Pres. Johnson for his "unprecedented efforts . . . to bring the issues from the battlefield to the conference table." It added:

"We profoundly hope these efforts will succeed. But if they are rejected, the aggressors must be defeated and we pledge our full sup-

Jobless Rate Drops To 4.1% at Year End

By David L. Perlman

The nation moved a step closer to its elusive full employment goal, closing 1965 with the lowest percentage of joblessness in nearly nine years.

Labor Dept. statistics put the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for December at 4.1 percent, down from 4.2 percent in November and 5 percent a year ago. In December of both 1963 and 1962, the rate had been stuck at 5.5 percent.

The number of nonfarm workers rose by 400,000 over the month —and by 2.5 million over the year —to 69.1 million.

Unemployment, at 2.9 million, was 600,000 below the same month in 1964. Almost all the decline was among persons seeking full-time jobs. The full-time unemployment rate, which averaged 4.5 percent in the first half of 1965, began to move down sharply in the summer and reached 3.5 percent in December.

As overtime pushed up the workweek, average weekly factory work-

Syracuse, N.Y.—Operating Engineers Local 545 and the New York State Employment Service are looking for 60 unemployed young men willing to tackle a rigorous training program as the first step to a lifetime of work at good pay.

The opportunity is sponsored by the local in cooperation with the State Dept. of Public Works and the Neighborhood Youth Corps as part of the war on poverty and is open to youths not scared off by the union's offer of "real men's work in the outdoors —sometimes it's wet, sometimes it's cold, but it's always interesting and the pay is good."

State AFL-CIO Body Launched in Hawaii

Honolulu—Hawaii's AFL-CIO unions have formed their first state federation, pledging the full power of their 46 organizations in the fight for better working conditions in the 50th state and on the mainland.

Miles Stanley, assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, presented the charter of the newly formed Hawaii State Federation of Labor to Carl J. Guntert, senior business representative of the Machinists, after Guntert was sworn in as the first president. The new organization brings to 51 the number of AFL-CIO state central bodies, which also includes the Puerto Rico federation.

The oath of office was administered to Guntert and 13 vice presidents, representing four islands, by Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes.

Guntert was elected to the presidency over Jack Reynolds, business agent of the Building & Construction Trades Council. But despite strong competition for the top posts, a spirit of unity dominated the proceedings. After election, Reynolds praised the new slate of officers and pledged his full cooperation.

Vice presidents representing unions on Oahu, the most populous island, are Elmo Samson, Laborers; Akito Fujikawa, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 1186; Susan Marshall, Variety Artists; Ivanhoe Naiwi, Meat Cutters;

ILA Helping to Unclog Jammed Viet Nam Ports

New York—Vietnamese dockworkers who have been unloading ships their way "for a thousand years" are learning—from U.S. union longshoremen—how to do it the modern way.

The result: mountain-size tieups of food, supplies and ammunition are being cut to manageable size, Pres. Thomas W. Gleason of the Longshoremen reported here after a three-week trip to Saigon.

To help unclog the ports and free U.S. vessels, Gleason left four veteran stevedores behind for a six-month tour of duty at union expense—$50,000 to $60,000. They will help install a new cargo-handling system, suggested by Gleason on a previous visit in November, to cut ship "turnaround" time from weeks to days or hours.

The ILA also has agreed to pay all the costs to bring several Vietnamese dockworkers here for on-the-job training.

"It'll be worth the money," said

U.S. Labor Story Carried To Brazilians

The Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Intl. Labor Affairs has opened in Rio de Janeiro the nation's first major international exhibit devoted to the worker of the United States and his trade union movement.

It includes colorful audio-visual presentations of many of the elements of the American labor movement, among them a fashion show of garments made by union workers in New York and California.

The exhibit was organized and directed by the bureau and is being presented in cooperation with the U.S. Information Service of Brazil as part of the U.S. Information Agency's Special Intl. Exhibits Program.

The U.S. labor movement is represented by Gualberto M. Silva, Bristol, R.I., a member of the Rubber Workers, and Ferdinand J. Sylvia, Providence, R.I., who belongs to the Textile Workers Union of America. Both speak Portuguese fluently.

The display fills about 6,000 square feet in downtown Rio de Janeiro and is staffed by Portuguese-speaking narrators who tell how American workers live and describe their participation in local and national life, and their trade union activities.

The exhibit will be removed to Sao Paulo for showing from Feb. 12 through Feb. 27.

'65 Graduates Review Union Leadership Study

Sixteen 1965 graduates of the Union Leadership Academy who spent much of their spare time taking college level courses over a four-year period were warmly praised for their determination and willingness to sacrifice by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler at a luncheon in Washington.

Schnitzler also lauded the patience and understanding of their teachers and their skill "in drawing out the best that is in you," emphasized the need for planning labor education programs "in accordance with the realities," and added:

"What happens to this program depends on your performance."

The graduates, officers or staff members of local unions or district councils in New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania, attended classes in their own communities given by Rutgers University or Pennsylvania State University with the cooperation of the labor-backed Union Leadership Academy and the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

Their studies included economics, sociology, psychology, labor history, current labor goals and other subjects intended to strengthen and broaden their capacity for leadership and enable them to serve their members better.

The one-day program in Washington included a review of the program and its meaning with AFL-CIO Assistant Education Dir. George Guernsey as discussion leader; a look at 1966 congressional possibilities; a talk on poverty programs for migrant workers by Ruth Graves of the Office of Economic Opportunity, and another on implementing Title VII of the Civil Rights Act by Deputy Exec. Dir. Walter Davis of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

In his luncheon speech Schnitzler recalled that in his early days in the labor movement the unions at first were indifferent to the surge of immigrants entering the country and the labor force, then undertook to help them become citizens and learn the language. He himself, with only a grade school education, taught a class in English, he recalled.

Today's labor movement, he said, must apply the same philosophy to the current effort to wipe out illiteracy among 11 million Americans, most of them white. Trade unionists must make sure, he added, that "they are taught as they should be taught, rather than in discriminatory fashion."

Al Loewenthal, academy director and executive assistant to the president of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, gave a brief review of the institute's growth since its foundation shortly after the AFL-CIO merger in 1955.

Marine Unions Set Up School for Engineers

New York—Two seagoing unions have launched their own program to supply more licensed engineers for American-flag ships overseas.

Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers and Executive Vice Pres. Raymond T. McKay of the Marine Engineers announced the signing of joint agreements to establish the School for Marine Engineering, aimed at producing 250 more licensed engineers within a year.

Spurred by the failure of other means to reduce a growing shortage of engineroom personnel on ships sailing to Viet Nam, the two unions concluded several months of talks by agreeing to launch their own program without government aid.

Classes at the school, operated in Brooklyn by MEBA District 2 and a staff of professional instructors, will start Feb. 1. It will enroll engineers who want to upgrade their current licenses, and unlicensed engineroom personnel who want licenses.

Unlicensed personnel who are 19 or older and have three years of engineroom watch-standing time are qualified to apply for training. SIU students will be provided with meals and lodging, plus subsistence payments of $110 a week while in training.

After training of 30 to 90 days, students will take license examinations and, when licensed, can apply for jobs as engineers aboard ships under contract to MEBA District 2.

Tuition costs are free to MEBA members who enroll to upgrade their licenses.

Pension Credits Assured

A unique feature of the program is an arrangement for a "portable" pension programs for SIU trainees. The two unions agreed that unlicensed men will receive full credit and complete protection for all of their accumulated pension and welfare credits during their training period, and while sailing as engineers.

McKay and Hall said this is the first joint training program of its kind, and expressed hope it could serve as a pattern for similar agreements by other unions of licensed and unlicensed men.

Hall said surveys of SIU members showed the training program will benefit many men with engineers' licenses who are sailing in unlicensed jobs to protect their current pension credits.

McKay said his union is waiving its initiation fee for all men who begin sailing as licensed engineers under the joint program during the Viet Nam crisis.

MEBA Pres. Jesse M. Calhoon has proposed that the Maritime Administration authorize a speedup of merchant marine trainees and that other agencies cooperate to end a shortage that may be critical by midsummer.

Factory Turnover Reflects Stability

Increasing strength in manufacturing employment was demonstrated in November as accession and quit rates declined less than usual over the month with layoff rates, which usually rise at this time of year, remaining stable, according to the Labor Dept.'s monthly report on factory labor turnover.

Hirings fell from 45 to 39 per 1,000 workers, substantially less than the anticipated drop; the quit rate also declined less than seasonally, from 2.2 in October to 1.7, and layoffs were unchanged at 14, although a minor seasonal change is normal.

The report, prepared by the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics, showed that hirings actually rose in primary metals, machinery and leather, instead of dropping, and that the better-than seasonal mark in layoffs was concentrated in the durable goods industries.

Dock Union Helps Ease Saigon Jam

Gleason, "if we can get food to the people, supplies to the troops and American ships back in service."

Union know-how was called into the Vietnamese port snafu by George P. Delaney, former AFL-CIO representative and U.S. worker delegate to the Intl. Labor Organization who serves now as a special assistant on international labor matters for Sec. of State Dean Rusk.

Delaney appealed to Gleason and the ILA interviewed 35 men it thought qualified for the port-unclogging assignment before choosing four—John Byrne of Riverdale, N.Y., stevedore for U.S. Lines; Thomas O'Rourke of the Bronx, French Lines' head stevedore; Natale Arcamona of Brooklyn, all-around machinist, and Albert Colalillo of Duluth, Minn., dispatcher and hiring hall expert who heads ILA Local 1366 at the head of the Great Lakes.

The American dockers flew to Saigon Dec. 16 and worked nearly every day, including Christmas, to get the ships unloaded and on the way back for a new shipment.

"It's an old port," Gleason told newsmen there. "They've been operating it lazy for a thousand years or so.

"When you try to change old customs you're not too entirely welcome. But we're getting through to them."

Recommendations Spelled Out

The ILA head on his return made written recommendations on the need for more ship docking space, methods of speedy loading and unloading, ways to "shape up" those who report for work, the degree of supervision and kind of machinery needed, a port register, and a hiring hall with food and sanitary facilities.

He recommended the purchase of 15 tractors and 300 flatbed trucks to pull out cargoes; the acquisition of 20 flat-topped wooden lighters, and the construction of 10,000 wooden pallets for unloading cargo.

In a parallel development, the ILA agreed to supply nine union members who will spend two years training East African longshoremen in the rapidly developing port of Mombasa, Kenya.

The volunteers met at ILA headquarters for a briefing on their new duties by Newman Jeffrey of the Agency for Intl. Development.

Jeffrey said the East African Railways & Harbors Administration had asked the AID for help in breaking a traffic bottleneck at Mombasa, where an "enormous" increase of goods for Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania has been experienced.

Expressing thanks for union cooperation, Jeffrey said the two-year training project would cost up to $500,000. Salaries of the ILA members will be paid, he said, by the three governments cooperating with AID and the Porter Intl. Co., under contract as project managers.

Gleason said the ILA's intention is to get ships "turned around" at Mombasa within a week, instead of the current three weeks or more at a cost of about $3,000 for every idle day.

NMU Officers Work on Viet 'Bottlenecks'

New York—The National Maritime Union has sent two top officers to Viet Nam at the request of the Navy to help ease shipping bottlenecks, and called on Pres. Johnson to come to the aid of merchant seamen affected by ship tieups.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran wired the President that the union is sending Vice Pres. Mel Barisic and Contract Enforcement Officer T. J. Walker to South Vietnamese ports at its own expense.

The President's help is needed, Curran said, in getting recreation and mail delivery facilities for merchant seamen at Cam Ranh Bay, Qui Nhon Bay and other ports where crews have been aboard ship for 40 to 50 days without mail delivery.

Curran also urged favorable consideration of requests for draft exemption by seamen to ease the shortage of men for key unlicensed jobs.

The union, Curran said, will do everything possible to help the nation in the Viet Nam emergency, but needs U.S. aid in relieving some of the problems faced by crews when they get there.

Scotto to Attend ILO Conference

Vice Pres. Anthony Scotto of the Longshoremen has been named by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to represent the federation at a cargo-weight conference called by the Intl. Labor Organization for Jan. 25-Feb. 4 in Geneva, Switzerland. Scotto is president of ILA Local 1814 in Brooklyn, N. Y.

CO-SPONSORED by the Auto Workers Recreation Dept. and the University of Detroit Chess Club, the seventh annual Motor City Open Chess Tournament in Detroit attracted 150 entrants—and more spectators. UAW regional directors in the area have asked John D'Agostino of the Recreation Dept. to form a Southeastern Michigan UAW Chess Council because the game has become so popular with their members.

Three-Step Increase:

Mediators' Proposal Ends Transit Strike

New York—This city's first major transit strike ended in the pre-dawn hours of its 12th day as two unions and the New York Transit Authority accepted a settlement proposed by a three-man team of mediators.

For subway and bus workers—33,000 members of the Transport Workers and 3,000 in the Amalgamated Transit Union—the settlement will mean a three-step wage increase, totaling 15 percent, in a two-year contract.

They will receive an immediate 4 percent raise, an additional 4 percent Jan. 1, 1967, and a 7 percent raise on July 1, 1967. For a $3.22-an-hour bus driver, it will mean raises to $3.35, $3.48, and finally to $3.73-an-hour.

It will bring them closer to their goal of wage parity with other city workers with comparable skills.

The contract also gives transit workers an additional $500 a year if they retire during the contract period—added on top of their regular city pensions. The Transit Authority also earmarked funds for higher costs of health benefits and to improve working conditions.

For the nation's largest city, the strike's end will mean a return to normalcy. During the shutdown, millions walked many miles to their jobs, drove or hitch-hiked along traffic-clogged streets, or stayed home during the shutdown.

In accordance with the settlement, nine union leaders including TWU Pres. Michael Quill were released from jail, where they had been interned on civil charges of violating a court order to halt the strike. Quill had been hospitalized after his collapse in jail.

The Transit Authority also dropped its suit against the unions for $322,000 in damages for each day of the strike—the amount it said it lost through the walkout. The mediation panel has recommended that the settlement be made "without recriminations or reprisals."

Douglas L. MacMahon, who headed the TWU bargaining team during Quill's absence, praised the three mediators—Nathan P. Feinsinger, Sylvester Garrett and Theodore W. Kheel. The strike, he said, "could not have been settled without the help of the mediators."

After days of around-the-clock negotiations and mediations, Mayor John V. Lindsay asked the mediators to submit in writing their proposals for an equitable settlement of the dispute. By late afternoon of Jan. 12, the recommendations were given to the unions and the Transit Authority—the autonomous body which operates the city's public transportation system.

In the early hours of the morning, the proposal was accepted, the strike was over, and soon afterwards the first buses began to run and subway trains were readied for service.

At a news conference in Washington before the strike's end, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said the TWU had not asked for any assistance. He said he would be willing to serve in any way possible if the parties involved asked his aid to resolve the dispute.

In reply to questions, he said he was "quite sure that the transit workers have a grievance," that the strike would not affect the AFL-CIO legislative program, that it was "deplorable" that public employes have to strike to win decent wages and working conditions, that the Condon-Wadlin Act forbidding strikes by public employes was bad legislation aggravating the strike, and that Lindsay was trying hard and sincerely to bring about a settlement.

The final agreement was more than double the amount the Transit Authority had proposed in a last-minute offer on the eve of the strike.

In newspaper accounts dealing with millions of dollars involved in negotiations, the stake of the transit worker was little noted. A rare exception was a letter in the New York Times from Sidney Margolius, the consumer expert. He pointed out that the average transit wage is $400 a year less than the Labor Dept.'s "modest but adequate" budget for a family of four in New York, and some $1,400 less than needed for a family with three young children. That, he suggested, is the "villain" in the dispute.

Union Chosen by 3,000 In Horn & Hardart Chain

New York—Local 302 of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes breached one of the area's major non-union strongholds by winning recognition for 3,000 automat, cafeteria and restaurant workers in the Horn & Hardart chain on the basis of a card check.

The recognition applies to the firm's operations in Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx. It covers cashiers, retail store employes and office and clerical help as well as employes handling food—both regular full-time and regular part-time.

The company's agreement to bargain was the outgrowth of a National Labor Relations Board election last May which the union lost. An organization drive was started almost immediately and proved so successful that a majority of eligible employes were signed up within a few months.

Union representatives persuaded the firm to agree to a check of signed authorization cards by the American Arbitration Association. After the check, the AAA certified that a "substantial majority" of the workers had formally designated Local 302 as their bargaining representative.

The victory was described as a major breakthrough in the area's chain cafeterias by AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann, with the organization campaign to be extended soon to another target. The Horn & Hardart drive had the solid support of Mann's office and of the New York City AFL-CIO, and its outcome, Mann said, reflected "much hard work and sincere effort" by the union.

Unionization of Horn & Hardart operations has been a goal of organized labor for many years, and much time and money has been invested in what in the past were unsuccessful drives. Local 302's accomplishment, Mann said, should be a "shot in the arm" for further cafeteria and restaurant organizing.

The start of bargaining for a first contract has been delayed by the transit strike, union leaders reported. A membership meeting to approve demands and elect a contract committee will be scheduled as soon as it proves practicable, the union said.

SIXTY YOUNG MEN from three New York State areas will receive training as rod and chainmen under a Neighborhood Youth Corps program sponsored by Operating Engineers Local 545, Syracuse, and supported by the State Dept. of Public Works. Going over some of the details are (left to right) Business Mgr. Jess Webb of Local 545; State Industrial Commissioner M. P. Catherwood; IUOE Reg. Dir. Howard Dalton; J. Burch McMorran, DPW superintendent, and Daniel McGraw, Jr., IUOE assistant regional director.

Union Workers Aid Record Fund Effort

Harrisburg, Pa.—A total of 287 volunteers from the labor movement helped 1965 united fund and community chest campaigns in Pennsylvania to obtain a record-breaking $50.2 million in pledges, according to a survey by the Pennsylvania United Fund.

Funds in 41 communities which responded to a questionnaire distributed by George B. Kelly, PUF labor participation director, reported that in four cases the drives were led by labor representatives; in three others union representatives served as vice chairmen. State AFL-CIO Pres. Harry Boyer is a vice president of the PUF.

Expansion of Anti-Poverty Drive Urged

Expansion of the war on poverty so it can "fulfill the hope of America's poor and preserve the dignity and decency of all Americans" was urged on Pres. Johnson in a wire from the Citizens' Crusade Against Poverty which also hailed the President's leadership in the fight against need.

"Only such an enlarged effort would be consonant with the high moral principles and sound economic objectives to which you have given concerned and compassionate leadership," the telegram said. "To do less, we believe, would shatter the hopes of millions of Americans for whom the anti-poverty program has raised high expectations."

The organization expressed confidence that the country's expanded economic effort and the substantial increase in the gross national product will enable the nation to "meet its international responsibilities and still appropriate adequate resources to ensure that the anti-poverty program will move forward."

Signers of the wire included two AFL-CIO vice presidents—Walter P. Reuther, crusade chairman and president of the Auto Workers, and Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters.

Union Program Trains Youth for 'Men's Work'

be chosen from the Erie County (Buffalo), Onondaga County (Syracuse) and Essex County (Elizabethtown) areas and will be given 21 weeks' training as surveyors' aides to prepare them for work in the construction industry under union agreements with contractors.

During the training period they will work 32 hours a week and receive $1.25 an hour, and will be covered under all statutory insurance and the Operating Engineers Welfare Fund.

"The training they receive will include instruction and on-the-job experience as entry level surveyors," said Business Mgr. Jess Webb of Local 545. "Upon successful completion of their training they will be fully qualified rod and chainmen, and will have had considerable experience as instrument men.

"Wage rates for rod and chainmen under our collective bargaining contracts vary from $2.175 to $2.65 per hour. We expect that the construction industry will be able to absorb all of these trainees shortly after they complete their course."

The training will be given under the direction of highly-skilled chiefs-of-party who belong to IUOE Local 545-D and are qualified instructors, Webb said. It will include use of the transit as well as instruction in the duties of a rod and chainman.

The project has a $100,000 Neighborhood Youth Corps grant of which the State Dept. of Public Works is providing 10 percent "in kind" by assigning equipment and tools to the trainees and giving them space in DPW garages out of which they can work as they move from one construction site to another.

Qualifications Listed

Potential trainees are being sought through the combined efforts of the union and the Employment Service with the cooperation of community and church groups. Applicants must be between the ages of 18 and 21, come from families whose 1965 income was no more than $3,100, be in good health and have an interest in mathematics.

The project has the hearty approval of the IUOE international office and Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R). Commissioner of Labor & Industry Martin P. Catherwood and Deputy Commissioner Nicholas Valentine arranged to have employment counselors assigned to the program in all three areas. The Employment Service is screening the applicants for basic qualifications, with qualified surveyors making the final selections.

"We feel this is a meaningful and positive step in the war on poverty," said Webb. "The real way to beat poverty is to put people to work at good wages. Our three projects across New York State will give 60 young men the chance to get started on a lifetime career in a well-paying job.

"Our local union and its members are happy to be able to join with the state and federal governments in this effort to break the poverty cycle, while at the same time providing our contractors with qualified survey party members."

Jobless Benefit Tax Base Held Far Outdated

Kalamazoo, Mich.—Unemployment insurance taxes should be levied on a much higher wage base than the $3,000-a-year ceiling used by most states, according to a study by the W. E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research.

The institute noted that about two-thirds of the states still use the wage base established more than 25 years ago, when only a handful of workers earned more than $3,000.

Growing Gap

Over the years, the report said, there has developed "an increasing gap between taxable wages, upon which tax rates are levied, and total wages, from which employe jobless benefits develop."

It said the effect has been the depletion of reserves in some state unemployment insurance funds and inequitable taxation of employers in other states where tax rates, but not the tax base, have been raised.

One solution, the report suggested, is a provision of the Administration's unemployment insurance bill, now before the House Ways & Means Committee. This would raise the federal base to $5,600 next year and to $6,600 in 1971. Under state law, the report said, about 30 states will automatically move to the higher base if it is adopted by Congress.

The report was written by Eugene C. McKean.

Peace and Progress

OLD GUARD political leaders and their classical economist allies have dug deeply into their bag of discredited economic mythology to pose a new "great issue" for the nation—guns or butter.

All of the ancient shibboleths have been resurrected and dusted off as though nothing has changed in the last 20 years of high-level defense budgets keyed to a foreign policy of containment of Communist expansion and aggression.

The vigor and growth of the economy for the last five years, setting new records in real gains for nearly all Americans, are almost totally ignored in the conservatives' overriding concern with slashing away at programs designed to further strengthen the nation in social and economic terms.

There are at hand a set of pertinent facts that apply to the current discussion of the possible "overheating" of the economy and the danger of "runaway inflation."

At the present time the economy is not operating at full capacity. Industry is estimated to be running at about 90 percent of its potential. Management has a preferred operating rate of at least 92 percent.

Unemployment is running at slightly more than 4 percent of the labor force on a seasonally adjusted basis. The accepted figure for a full employment economy is no more than 3 percent of the labor force jobless.

However, the economy is operating at high levels and there are good prospects for further growth.

There is a wide consensus that in 1966 the total of all goods and services produced—the gross national product—will increase by about 5.2 percent, after adjustment for price increases, a very substantial growth rate.

Productivity for the nation as a whole is increasing at the rate of about 3 percent a year and will continue at that pace, at the minimum, for 1966.

The labor force will increase by 1.5 million in 1966, or about 2 percent.

The 1965 boom in capital goods is expected to carry over into 1966 with a probable increase in industrial capacity of about 7 percent.

All of these factors add up to a growing economy that can absorb without difficulty and without inflation or shortages the current pace of the Viet Nam war and the anticipated increase in the defense budget to nearly $60 billion for the 1967 fiscal year.

THE GUNS OR BUTTER proponents hark back also to the experience of the Korean war, ignoring the pertinent factors of the state of the economy in the early 1950s. The nation during those years was in a weakened economic condition, just emerging from the recession of 1949, lacking the size, vigor and sustained growth pattern of the 1960s.

In terms of economic policy the nation can sustain its growth and the President's Great Society programs as well as its efforts to halt Communist aggression in Viet Nam.

In terms of social and political policy there is no choice but to push forward in both areas, for the struggle for peace and freedom cannot be isolated from a strong and progressive America dedicated to the achievement of social, economic and political justice for all its people.

Struggle for Freedom Abroad Linked with Progress at Home

Statement on 1966 legislative goals adopted Jan. 11, 1966, by the AFL-CIO Executive Council:

THE SECOND SESSION of the 89th Congress has now begun. It is our hope and our expectation that in its own way it will be as historic as the first.

In some respects the challenges which this session must face are different. Today, the primary concern of the nation is the shooting war in Viet Nam—a grim and ugly war against Communist aggression, in which increasing numbers of American lives are being spent.

It should now be clear to the world that the United States did not want this war and is taking every possible step, short of surrender, to end it. We in the AFL-CIO are proud of the unprecedented efforts of Pres. Johnson to bring the issues from the battlefield to the conference table. Never before in recorded history has the most powerful nation on earth gone to such lengths to reach a peaceful settlement with a weaker antagonist.

We profoundly hope these efforts will succeed. But if they are rejected, the aggressors must be defeated and we pledge our full support to that end. No price is too high in the defense of freedom, and that is the issue in Viet Nam.

But even as Americans die for peace and freedom half a world away, the nation must carry on the struggle to extend the blessings of a free society to all within its borders.

We reject the proposition that social and economic progress must be suspended because of the costs of war. Such a suspension could be the costliest penalty of all. For the strength of American society, on which is based the spirit of the American people, is the nation's most powerful weapon on every front.

Certainly the burden of Viet Nam must be borne by the whole of society. The cost must not be at the expense of economic and social gains such as those pioneered by this Administration to end poverty and improve education. America's home-front strength is its major bulwark against Communist expansion. It should be strengthened, not undermined, as part of our war effort.

One inherent element in that strength is the American form of government itself—the system of representative government which insures that the will of the people will be reflected by those chosen by the people, and translated into law. It is on these grounds that we urge the Senate to make a vote on the bill to repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act one of its first orders of business.

We are intensely interested in this bill on its merits. But we are far more concerned that in the previous session, against the will of the people and of the Senate itself, an indefensible filibuster blocked its consideration. Let us have a vote on the issue—a vote up or down—but let us have a vote.

THERE ARE OTHER pressing items on the agenda. As we now judge the needs, this session of Congress must also increase the amount and broaden the coverage of the federal minimum wage—the most effective means of combating poverty.

It must modernize and strengthen the unemployment compensation system—the primary safeguard against catastrophic depression.

It must act on urgently-needed consumer legislation—vital to prevent consumer buying-power from being siphoned off by usurers and profiteers.

It must enact the situs picketing bill, endorsed by this Administration and its three predecessors.

It must grant true self-government to citizens of the District of Columbia—thus correcting an ancient injustice for which there is no possible excuse.

It must provide adequate protection and safeguards for those Americans seeking to achieve the civil rights guaranteed by the Constitution and spelled out in legislation in 1964 and 1965. The authorities in too many areas of this nation are unable or unwilling to protect civil rights advocates and the federal government must find the way to safeguard these men and women.

These now appear to be the major domestic needs. They will perfect a record which has already assured the 89th Congress a high place in the annals of the nation. And as it acts on these measures, the Congress must make sure that the giant strides taken by the first session—in education, in civil rights, in meeting urban problems, in the war on poverty and so many more—get the expanded support and the dedicated administration they need to achieve their goals.

Even as the fight against totalitarian aggression goes on, the fight for a more perfect society must be pressed with equal force. In order to be true to the ideals, the aspirations and the high principles for which America stands, such a society must become a reality for every American.

New FDA Commissioner Seen Improving Public Safeguards

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

THE WHITE HOUSE made an appointment that should add positive protection to the health of the American public where it has been neglected before—in the area of regulating the purity and effectiveness of food and drugs.

Pres. Johnson named Dr. James L. Goddard, a 42-year-old assistant surgeon general of the U.S. Public Health Service, to head one of the most vital bailiwicks of the sprawling Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, the Food & Drug Administration. This marks the first time in the 60-year history of FDA that a reach has been made beyond its own ranks to recruit its leadership. Furthermore, Goddard is not only an M.D., he is a scientist of renown in the field of public health. He has been with the Public Health Service since 1951 and is now director of the Communicable Disease Center in Atlanta. He succeeds Commissioner George P. Larrick, who resigned last month.

Morgan

An amiable man, Larrick has a record of 42 years of government service but his FDA stewardship had come increasingly under fire as being more and more inclined to serve the industries—food and pharmaceutical—that he and FDA were supposed to regulate.

Indeed, Goddard may run into a major controversy which Larrick left behind: the question of adequate warning to the public that certain sulfa drugs (known as the long-acting sulfonamides) in certain instances can kill and/or injure to a greater extent than the older, shorter-acting versions. The FDA not only did not take the former off the market but, fascinatingly enough, authorized a weak warning acceptable to the manufacturers of such drugs. Whether Goddard will change this action, or half-action, remains, of course, to be seen.

In point of odd bureaucratic or rather legislative fact, many of the laws affecting the FDA put the various powers of administration and enforcement not with the commissioner but in the hands of the Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare. Under the circumstances, some knowledgeable quarters in Washington were beginning to wonder whether the new secretary of HEW, John W. Gardner, was having trouble in implementing the ingredients of leadership he had so well defined in a widely-hailed essay on the subject recently.

Industry's reaction to the Goddard appointment is not likely to be a unanimous cheer, but it is heartening evidence that Gardner and the White House are determined to make bold if difficult steps in the further protection of the public's health and welfare.

The food and drug industries are not dominated by cutthroats. Their ethics and the quality of their products have gradually improved over the years. Still, the record of congressional investigations (leading on the whole to better laws) is studded with evidence of their resistance to reasonable regulation.

A KIND OF documentary of this pressure, and its effect on the FDA, is contained in a recent book, appropriately entitled "The Therapeutic Nightmare," by Morton Mintz, a science writer for the Washington Post. Harvard Economist John Kenneth Galbraith, once a Kennedy New Frontiersman, said he read it with "horror and fascination" and predicted that with the "more avaricious" drug manufacturers, the American Medical Association and the FDA's George Larrick, "this will be the most unpopular book of the decade."

Mintz pointedly laments the FDA's lack of crusading zeal (parenthetically an occupational disease of bureaucracy for which no cure has been found), and pays high tribute to such legislators as the late Estes Kefauver, Hubert Humphrey, Minnesota Rep. John Blatnik and Michigan Rep. John Dingell for their pioneering efforts in legislation to improve the standards of the drug industry and their constructive criticism of FDA.

"As would be expected in an agency dominated by former inspectors rather than scientists," writes Mintz, "the Food & Drug Administration is oriented toward secrecy."

So much so, if you can believe it, that it succeeded, with the help of a then official in HEW, in preventing access to its files on new heart drugs by the National Heart Institute, whose research is sustained by the same taxpayers who pay for the budget of FDA.

"FDA is so oriented . . .," Mintz continues, "toward not taking the scientific community and the public into its confidence, that if a manufacturer investigates a new chemical agent, finds it dangerous and so reports to FDA, the agency does not tell another manufacturer who, by sheer coincidence, may be interested in the same drug."

Goddard comes to FDA schooled in public health and public administration and aware of the agency's problems. But it seems of more than passing interest that in Puerto Rico, where he is attending a public health conference, he is using his spare time to read "The Therapeutic Nightmare," Morton Mintz's book.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE WAR IN VIET NAM may cost more in fiscal 1967 than the $5.8 billion the President estimated in his State of the Union message if there is increased penetration of North Vietnamese regulars and if there comes no response whatever to Mr. Johnson's clearly-expressed proffers of continued and possibly even progressive "de-escalation."

"I wish I could give you a blueprint," he told Congress and the people, but no such blueprint was possible.

"Let me be absolutely clear," he said in a blunt warning. "The days may become months, and the months may become years," even though our commitment to resist aggression is unshakable.

"We may have to face a long, hard combat or a long, hard conference, or even both at once."

A spokesman pointed out that in the business of resisting aggression, at least in Asia, it was perfectly possible to have fierce combat and a conference of the warring parties at the same time, and exactly that parallel process had in fact occurred in Korea in the '50s during protracted armistice negotiations.

No one could say that the President, in any case, was seeking to obscure unpleasant facts and at least potential dangers.

At the same time, he continued the recent U. S. "peace offensive" with phrases scattered through his own message.

He pointed out that for 20 days there had been no U. S. air attacks on North Viet Nam—although he did not promise non-resumption of attacks if he concluded they were required by circumstances.

He said, "We will strive to limit conflict"—a clear invitation to Hanoi to join an effort to "limit conflict" for the mutual and obvious advantage of avoiding the perils of "increased destruction" and "increased danger."

In a broader sense he spoke of efforts to find means "to control and reduce and eventually eliminate modern engines of destruction." He pledged to pursue existing proposals for arms reduction and ways of preventing the spread of nuclear weapons and said we would seek new proposals.

These might be deemed generalities, and so they are, but it is perfectly clear that major conversations are going on in which others too have an interest. There was one possibly significant interpolation in the President's message from the advance text—his comment that our spokesmen had conducted conversations with all nations with which we have diplomatic relations "and some with which we don't."

MR. JOHNSON also moved vigorously to counter-attack the conservative cry for less school aid, housing, poverty and other social spending.

His tax proposals were modest—no general increases required now, at least, even with special expenditures for the Viet Nam war.

Then he handed out an ultimatum to those who say we must "sacrifice" the implementation of new federal programs. To take away the federal funds needed for such programs would be letting policies approved by Congress be pared down by "those who fire on us in Viet Nam," he commented scornfully.

If we need more money, he said, let the "sacrifices" not be "wrung from the unfortunate" but paid by "those who live in the fullness" of our affluence.

In short, if critics want "sacrifice" to make themselves feel better, or cut down on programs they perhaps voted against personally, he invited them to come up with a tax program of their own, and supply the additional funds they say we don't have now.

It was not an attractive alternative he gave them, politically, and it was not intended to be an attractive alternative. It is perfectly clear that Republicans in Congress will not sponsor a tax rise. Of course, the Appropriations Committees are a different matter, and the President no doubt will have to labor energetically when he gets to specific budget requests.

Geographic Barriers Fall:

Common Market Cooperation Aids Worker Migration to Jobs

ECONOMIC COOPERATION among the Common Market countries is easing worker migration as well as the movement of goods and produce, an AFL-CIO spokesman has reported.

Many trade unions in Western Europe have active programs to assist workers moving from one country to another for employment, said Bert Seidman, AFL-CIO European economic representative.

"Definite hardships" still exist, Seidman noted, but "under the rules of the Common Market," workers have greater mobility than ever before. His statements came on Labor News Conference, the weekly public service interview aired over the Mutual Radio Network.

Near-full employment continues in the Common Market countries with the exception of Italy, Seidman said, and the new labor migration policies have made it possible for many Italian workers to fill jobs in Germany and France. In effect, both a single labor market and a single commercial market have been created, he observed.

Seidman said comparatively sharp price rises in Western Europe during recent years are not necessarily dangerous to the economy. "Where you have full employment" and "full utilization of industrial capacity, the pressures that develop make it easier for prices to rise," he noted.

"IT IS POSSIBLE to have a full employment economy without having an undue rate of price increase," Seidman declared, adding that a 5 percent unemployment rate poses a much greater economic danger than a 2 percent rate of price increase.

Attempts to regulate wage increases in Western Europe through "incomes policies" comparable to the wage guideposts in this country are failing, he reported. They "simply do not work in a full employment economy," he said, and urged a careful look at European experience "before we go too far down the road in trying to establish inflexible guideposts on wage increases in the United States."

Reporters questioning Seidman were Maarten C. Bolle, Washington correspondent for radio, television and newspapers in Belgium and the Netherlands, and Alex Uhl, editor of Press Associates, Inc.

BARRIERS that once restricted mobility of Western European workers have been lowered as a result of economic cooperation among the Common Market nations, Bert Seidman (center), AFL-CIO European economic representative, told Maarten C. Bolle (left), U. S. correspondent for radio, television and newspapers in Belgium and the Netherlands, and Alex Uhl, editor of Press Associates, Inc., on the AFL-CIO-produced radio program, Labor News Conference.

Reile, AFL-CIO representative in the Hawaii-Pacific area; COPE Reg. Dir. Walter F. Gray; Pres. Richard Dumancas of the Honolulu AFL-CIO; Miles C. Stanley, assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, and Exec. Sec.-Treas. Harry Boranian of the Honolulu AFL-CIO.

John Haleamau, Marine Firemen; John Cabral, Government Workers; Larry Shigeura, Carpenters; Charles O'Bevan, Typographers; Francis Kennedy, IBEW Local 1260; and James Chock, Hotel Workers.

Vice presidents from neighbor islands are Elmer Vierra, IBEW Local 1260, Hawaii division; Ralph Makanani, IBEW Local 1260, Kauai division; and Monte Carpenter, Hotel Workers, Maui Division.

A pre-recorded message of congratulations from Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey was played over the convention loudspeaker system at the Princess Kaiulani Hotel Meeting House.

Messages also were read from Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning, Rep. Patsy T. Mink (D-Hawaii) and James Dooley, former port agent for the Sailors Union of the Pacific in Honolulu, now in Portland, Ore.

At the closing session of the three-day convention, Jan. 7-9, Stanley praised the 157 delegates for "the kind of spirit which I have sensed and felt here." He predicted that while the new federation might experience some problems, it would "come out on top."

COPE Regional Dir. Walter F. Gray warned the convention that a number of the liberal congressmen who helped set the record of the first session of the 89th Congress face hard fights for re-election in 1966 because of off-year trends. He stressed that repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act remains the top AFL-CIO legislative goal.

In earlier speeches, Sen. Daniel K. Inouye and Rep. Spark M. Matsunaga, Hawaii Democrats, reaffirmed their support for repeal of 14(b).

Inouye called the opposition to repeal "one of the most important challenges of the continuation of not only union democracy, but the concept of democracy in general. . ."

"What they really want is no union activity at all," he said.

Matsunaga said that the record of Congress—though not the 89th in its first session—reveals "many attempts to restrict the rights of our trade unions, and the same is true of many of the state legislatures, though those conditions don't apply in our State of Hawaii."

He said a strong, united federation of all the unions in Hawaii "can and will make a real contribution not only to all union members, but also to our growing state and our nation in this difficult and changing era upon which we are now entering."

Honolulu Mayor Neal S. Blaisdell and Hawaii Gov. John A. Burns gave welcoming addresses.

Burns termed it "a momentous day, not only for organized labor but for all the working people of our islands and for our total society."

Union 'Maturity' Cited

Blaisdell said delegates to the founding convention were "expressing for all workers in Hawaii the essential maturity of our union movement."

Stanton E. Smith, AFL-CIO coordinator of state and local central bodies, served as temporary secretary of the convention, while Stanley was temporary chairman.

Resolutions considered by the delegates covered such areas as restrictive labor legislation including 14(b), organizing, union labels, community services, support for COPE, greater ownership of homes and land, establishment of an 8-hour day law, low-cost inter-island transportation, the lifting or easing of high taxes, passage of a disability compensation law providing compensation for those injured away from the job, support of Pres. Johnson and his Administration in the Viet Nam conflict, and support for congressional legislation on situs picketing.

Gov. Hatfield Enters Race For Senate

Republican Gov. Mark O. Hatfield of Oregon announced on Jan. 12, seventh anniversary of his state service, that he would seek election to the Senate in November to succeed incumbent Democrat Maurine Neuberger, who has announced she would not run for another term.

Hatfield's declaration followed announcement by Rep. Edith Green (D-Portland), that she had decided not to run for Mrs. Neuberger's Senate place, preferring to retain her six-term House seniority.

Hatfield, who has never lost an election, is rated a formidable Senate candidate. Keynote speaker at the GOP 1964 convention that nominated then Sen. Barry Goldwater, he was considered acceptable to Goldwater managers. He interpolated in his speech personal denunciations of "bigots" of the "Ku Klux Klan, the John Birch Society and the Communist Party"—a comment on extremist groups that Goldwater, in his acceptance address, pointedly rejected.

In Arkansas, Republican Winthrop Rockefeller announced he would run for governor. He lost by nearly 83,000 votes in 1964 to Democratic Gov. Orval Faubus.

In Texas, Rep. Jim Wright, who had been considering a Senate race, said he would seek House re-election instead. The incumbent is conservative GOP Sen. John G. Tower, who will run for another term.

On Free TV Time:

'Ole Miss' Students Push 14(b) Repeal

Jackson, Miss.—Two University of Mississippi students presented a citizens' case for repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act on television time obtained by the State AFL-CIO under the "fairness doctrine" of the Federal Communications Commission.

Both speakers are state officers of the Young Democrats—Ransom Jones of Pascagoula, a law student, and Bob Boyd of Gulfport, a journalism student.

They were introduced by Pres. Claude Ramsay of the Mississippi AFL-CIO, who asked equal time on television Station WLBT to reply to a program sponsored by a group called "Patriotic American Youth."

The station granted the time after Ramsay pointed out that both sides of the youth program's "debate" supported so-called "right-to-work" laws. The only issue, Ramsay noted, was whether this should be done through federal or state laws. The topic was: "Resolved, that the federal government should prohibit compulsory union membership as a condition of employment."

Jones described Mississippi's "right-to-work" law as a "right-to-freeload" law.

He pointed out that a union must prove that it represents a majority of workers before it is designated as their bargaining agent.

He read to the audience the section of federal law which requires a union to represent all employes in the bargaining unit, whether or not they belong to or pay dues.

"What this means," Jones said, "is that the people who are in the labor organization must process the grievances and bargain for the wages, conditions and hours of the people who are not in the labor organization, and they must do all this without charge to those who do not want to pay the dues."

He noted that Mississippi law, which bans the union shop, also requires all lawyers to be members of the State Bar Association, doctors to be members of the Medical Association, and teachers to be certified by the state's Education Association.

Issue Not States' Rights

Boyd said the issue is not "states' rights" but the ability "to bargain for a fair wage for a fair day's work."

He charged that "right-to-work" legislation "has had a hand in keeping Mississippi economically dependent and depressed." The average hourly wage for workers in manufacturing, he observed, is next to the lowest in the nation.

"It is no accident that Mississippi's greatest export is skilled laborers," he asserted.

He agreed that repeal of 14(b) won't "cure overnight all the ills that beset Mississippi." But, he added:

"If we fail to insure the work forces of this state the right to bargain for a fair wage and just working conditions, our efforts to become an industrial state will have been in vain. We must be able to attract a labor supply if we intend to attract industry."

Board Orders Utility To Bargain on Safety

An employer who in 1962 negotiated safety conditions with a union was guilty of refusing to bargain when he declined two years later to talk about safety in a renewal contract on the claim that it was a "managerial function not subject to negotiation," the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

The board ordered the Gulf Power Co. of Pensacola, Fla., to bargain with Locals 624 and 1055 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers on safe work practices or safety rules and if an understanding is reached to embody it in a signed contract.

The unions have been the collective bargaining representative of company employes in operating departments since 1956. The 1962 contract contained safety provisions and others were described in a company handbook, with discipline or discharge provided for violators.

But in 1964 the company refused union requests to negotiate safety provisions in a new contract "on the ground that safety was the exclusive responsibility" of the company and "therefore not a bargainable issue," the NLRB related.

Covered by Act

"We find," the board said, "that in requesting negotiations over safety rules, the union was seeking to bargain over a subject matter within the meaning of the phrase 'other terms and conditions of employment' " in the labor act.

Noting that the parties had previously negotiated safety provisions in prior agreements, the board took this as "indicating that each understood safety provisions to constitute a proper subject of bargaining."

"Moreover," it continued, "we note that failure to observe the safety rules promulgated by the employer can result in discipline or discharge of an offending employe."

The board quoted a Labor Dept. bulletin showing that, of more than 7 million workers covered by major union agreements in 1954, more than 1.7 million workers in 281 contracts were affected by joint safety committees of management and union members. In the public utility field alone, agreements covering 61,000 of 176,900 employes had such provisions.

Therefore "we find that safety provisions constitute an essential part of the employes' terms and conditions of employment and as such are a mandatory subject of bargaining," the NLRB ruled.

Welfare-Pension Forms Expanded

The Labor Dept. has given administrators of welfare and pension plans a year's notice that more detailed information will be required on annual financial reports.

As of Dec. 31, 1966, reports will be required to show:

- A more detailed breakdown of the insurance premium dollar.
- Actuarial data showing how premiums and benefit costs are arrived at.
- Expanded reporting of assets and liabilities, along with a changed method of reporting receipts and disbursements.

Copies of the revised Form D-2 are available from the department's Office of Labor-Management & Welfare-Pension Reports in Washington and at Labor Dept. field offices.

Ross Cites 'Mixed Picture':

New Drop Foreseen In Unemployment

Unemployment will continue to drop, a top Labor Dept. official predicted. But there is "no evidence" that the nation faces a general shortage of workers.

Commissioner Arthur M. Ross of the Bureau of Labor Statistics told newsmen that the unemployment rate—4.1 percent at latest count—should fall below 4 percent during the first quarter of 1966. The 4 percent level has been an interim goal of the Administration, but is considered still short of a full employment economy.

Ross said there have been only scattered shortages of some skilled workers and professionals—ranging from tool and die makers to engineers, mathematicians, doctors and nurses. He noted that "low-paying jobs in some industries are difficult to fill."

Geographically, the labor market in the Great Lakes area is considered "tight," with unemployment down to a low 2 to 2.5 percent in the area's industrial centers.

But Ross stressed that "job markets are considerably looser in many New England and West Coast areas." And he added that unemployment in many Negro "ghettos" such as Watts, Harlem and West Oakland "remains unacceptably and dangerously high."

Job Picture Mixed

The job market, he said, is a mixed picture of some emerging shortages combined with substantial manpower surpluses.

Defense demands, including an expansion in the size of the armed forces, could add to the area of manpower shortages, Ross indicated. But he noted that there were some 1.25 million unemployed men in December; 838,000 women out of work, with 80 percent hunting full time jobs, and some 800,000 jobless teen agers, with about 45 percent looking for full time work.

To forestall skill shortages, the government will stress more effective use of vocational training, on-the-job training, apprenticeship programs, employment service operations and worker relocation, Ross said. He suggested that some jobs will have to be redesigned and that "unnecessarily stringent hiring specifications with respect to education, age and experience will have to be relaxed."

He cited the need to improve transportation facilities in "metropolitan areas where low-income neighborhoods are quite distant from available jobs." Fair employment practices, he added, are "more essential than ever."

Ross said the war in Viet Nam was one of several factors which have tightened the employment market, but not the dominant cause. The "capital boom" is continuing, he said, consumer spending has been high, and several hundred thousand persons enrolled in government poverty and manpower programs are temporarily out of the labor market. The total Viet Nam program, he observed, involves a much smaller percentage of the nation's gross national product than did the Korean war.

Government statistics also indicate earlier retirement of men in the 55-and-older age group, he noted.

An anticipated 300,000 rise in the size of the armed forces this year will come close to matching the estimated 350,000 increase of men over 20 in the labor force, Ross added.

Warning against "exaggeration" of the scattered signs of labor shortages, he pointed out that there has been only a slight increase in overtime hours, and not the "dramatic increase" found in a scarce labor market.

Non-union firms, which generally pay lower wages than union concerns, have had to raise wages somewhat to compete for workers, Ross noted. But again the rise has been below Korean War precedents.

The government, he said, has not been able to associate any specific price increases with manpower shortages. Other supply and demand factors are more pertinent, he said, citing meat prices as an example.

Government-sponsored conferences will be held with representatives of several industries and unions in the near future, Ross said, to study manpower demands and problems.

TOLEDO LABOR backed up striking employes of the Boss Mfg. Co. with this colorful picket line urging consumers not to buy Boss gloves. Leading this march through Toledo's "miracle mile" are Pres. Fred Kunz of the local AFL-CIO council and Dorothy Matheny, a vice president of the Teachers. The Clothing Workers are conducting the three-state strike.

Jobless Rate Dips to 4.1 Percent, Lowest Level Since May 1957

er earnings advanced $1.21 from November to an all-time high of $110.92, before deductions. Average hourly earnings of factory workers edged up a penny to $2.66.

During the first quarter of 1965, joblessness averaged 4.8 percent. The average dipped to 4.7 in the second quarter, 4.5 in the third quarter and 4.2 in the final quarter.

The unemployment rate for the entire year averaged 4.56 percent, compared with 5.2 percent in 1964 and 5.7 percent in 1963.

Comparing December of 1965 with the same month in 1964, these are the key statistics:

- The unemployment rate for married men was down to 1.8 percent, the lowest since the government began tallying this figure in November 1954. A year ago, the rate was 2.6 percent.
- The jobless rate for adult men was down over the year from 3.5 to 2.6 percent; for adult women, the drop was from 4.7 percent at the close of 1964 to 3.9 percent.
- For white workers, the jobless rate over the year declined from 4.5 to 3.7 percent.
- The unemployment rate for non-whites remained nearly double that of whites, but the percentage fell from 8.9 percent at the end of 1964 to 7.3 percent At 600,000 in December, non-white unemployment was down 100,000 from a year earlier.
- The number of persons jobless 15 weeks or more was 600,000, an over-the-year drop of 200,000.
- The 1.6 million non-farm workers on part-time work who would prefer to work full time represented a drop of 350,000 from a year earlier and marked the lowest number for the month since the tally was begun in 1955.
- The rise in employment of teen-agers about matched the number of teen-age job seekers added to the workforce and their unemployment rate dipped only from 15.7 percent at the end of 1964 to 13.1 percent a year later. However less than half of the 800,000 unemployed teen agers in December were looking for full time work.
- The percentage of labor force time lost through unemployment and underemployment fell from 5.3 to 4.3 percent over the year.

Labor Force Grew

On the basis of annual averages, the total labor force expanded by 1.4 million from 1964 to 1965, about the gain expected.

The last time the unemployment rate had been as low as 4.1 percent was in May of 1957, the start of an upward climb marking the onset of the 1958 recession. By July of 1958, the jobless rate had reached 7.5 percent.

Despite fluctuations, the jobless index dipped below 5 percent only twice between November of 1957 and December of 1964. By contrast, it was below the 5 percent level every month of 1965 except February.

The factory workweek showed a normal December rise of three-tenths of an hour, bringing it to 41.7 hours, the highest for the month since 1944. The average overtime worked, four hours a week, was slightly above November levels and the highest since the information was first compiled, in 1956.

Over the year, average weekly factory earnings were up $3.85 and hourly earnings were 8 cents higher.

A Labor Dept. analysis of payroll data showed these highlights:

- Manufacturing, construction and trade all reflected substantial job gains on a seasonally-adjusted basis. The December construction gain, to a record 3.4 million jobs, was attributed partly to warm weather during the month.
- Manufacturing employment was up 105,000 from November and 850,000 higher than a year ago, with the biggest gains in durable goods production. At 13.7 million, the number of factory production workers was the highest since 1956, although 600,000 below the Korean war peak.
- Over the 12-month period, employment in service fields rose 400,000 and state and local government employment was up 450,000.

Anti-Poverty Spending Found 'Modest Effort'

Aid to impoverished citizens is costing the country about $15 billion a year and may grow at the rate of about $1 billion a year for the next four years, but this is just a "modest effort" that assumes the nation "will stop short of assigning top priority to the war on poverty," according to a study by the W. E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research.

The study, "Programs in Aid of the Poor," was made by Dr. Sar A. Levitan of the institute's Washington staff. It summarizes and appraises present anti-poverty programs and suggests new ones for the next four years.

Current and planned spending to rout poverty, Levitan asserts, indicates that the goal of reducing it "will remain one of several societal aspirations, competing for available limited resources."

"It represents only a modest effort in combating poverty and will result in little redistribution of income," he predicts.

It is not at all clear, Levitan feels, that such an approach will remain tenable "in the face of the widespread Negro unrest and the commitment of the Great Society to eliminate poverty."

Levitan says it would be "misleading" to measure the war on poverty only in terms of direct spending. Minimum wage legislation to which no cost factor can be assigned, he says, "may be a more significant tool in the war on poverty than the expenditure of billions under other programs."

Programs that require little or no financing "may bring the greatest returns" in fighting poverty, he continues, citing educational campaigns to cut or eliminate discrimination against minorities. The Voting Rights Act may turn out to be, he says, "a more important tool to secure equal rights for Negroes and thus to combat discrimination than other legislation involving huge expenditures."

The report's proposed new programs include broader education in planned parenthood; an increase in aid to dependent children so they may be helped to work themselves out of the ranks of poverty; creation of jobs "for which the poorly educated and unskilled would qualify" so as to get them off the relief rolls and at the same time to meet some of the nation's needs, and low-cost federal housing which private industry cannot provide at a profit—"a major instrument in 'breaking the chains of poverty.'"

Teachers' Unit to Probe Dismissals at St. John's

New York—The American Association of University Professors will investigate the dismissals of 31 faculty members which led to a strike at St. John's University, the first against an American college.

The association has some 76,000 members at all faculty levels and closely watches academic freedom, tenure and salaries. If the association, which has not taken a position on the strike, receives an unfavorable report at its convention in April, it could censure the university. The walkout was called Jan. 4 by the United Federation of College Teachers, a unit of the American Federation of Teachers.

The probe will be conducted by John A. Christie, associate professor of English at Vassar College; John T. Noonan, Jr., law professor at Notre Dame University, and Willard H. Pendrick, professor of law at Northwestern University.

The strike has the full support of the New York area labor movement and has had strong backing from students, about 500 of whom participated in an all-night "study-in" to demonstrate support of their teachers.

About 1,000 persons — mostly students—attended a noon rally at which Paul O'Dwyer, a 1929 St. John's Law School graduate and a former city councilman, urged greater community support of the walkout. The influential Columbia University chapter of the AAUP passed a resolution calling for reinstatement of the ousted St. John's professors and declaring college teachers have the right to unionize and to strike to protect academic freedom.

AAUP Probe Welcomed

Spokesmen for the UFCT said the union "welcomes" the AAUP probe and noted that many strikers belong to both organizations.

Union representatives also pointed out that the dismissals were made without charges or hearings, and reiterated the UFCT's willingness to accept any responsible mediation offer. College authorities have flatly rejected outside assistance in resolving the dispute.

Council Opposes Great Society Cutback

Affirms Labor Goals On New Legislation

port to that end. No price is too high in the defense of freedom, and that is the issue in Viet Nam."

The council reaffirmed the AFL-CIO's 1966 legislative goals with major emphasis on repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act. "We are intensely interested in this bill on its merits," the council said, "but we are far more concerned that in the previous session, against the will of the people and of the Senate itself, an indefensible filibuster blocked its consideration. Let us have a vote on the issue—a vote up or down—but let us have a vote."

Meany said that Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.) has told the AFL-CIO he will do everything he can to get a vote on repeal of 14(b).

Meany added that the question of whether the 14(b) fight might prevent the Senate from acting on other urgent matters rested with Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R-Ill.) who is leading the filibuster to prevent a vote on the issue.

Expressing the hope that the second session of the 89th Congress "will be as historic as the first," the council listed these other legislative goals for the year:

- An increase in the federal minimum wage and broadened coverage as "the most effective means of combatting poverty."
- A modernized and strengthened unemployment compensation system—"the primary safeguard against catastrophic depression."
- Adoption of urgently needed consumer legislation to prevent consumer buying power "from being siphoned off by usurers and profiteers."
- Enactment of the situs picketing bill "endorsed by this Administration and its three predecessors."
- "True self-government" for the citizens of the District of Columbia.
- Adequate protection and safeguards "for those Americans seeking to achieve the civil rights guaranteed by the Constitution and spelled out in legislation in 1964 and 1965."

"These now appear to be the major domestic needs," the council said." They will perfect a record which has already assured the 89th Congress a high place in the annals of the nation." The session, however, should assure also that the "giant strides" taken in the first session get expanded support "and dedicated administration they need to achieve their goals."

PRES. JOHNSON gives his State of the Union message to a joint session of the House and Senate, spelling out his program for the new legislative year. Packed galleries also listened as the President renewed an appeal for an end to aggression in Viet Nam but promised that U.S. forces "will stay until aggression has been stopped."

President Cites Nation's Strength To Pursue Both Peace, Progress

14(b) "to make the labor laws in all our states equal to the laws of the 31 states" that have refused to enact so-called "right-to-work" restrictions on union security.

He also urged the House to enact the District of Columbia home rule bill already passed by the Senate and "complete action" on two other Senate-approved measures, the Teachers Corps and rent-assistance programs.

He renewed his request for passage of a situs picketing bill, removing restrictions on peaceful picketing by building trades unions at multi-employer construction sites, and for "truth-in-lending" and "truth-in-packaging" legislation "to prevent the deception of the American consumer."

The war in Viet Nam can be financed with about $5.8 billion in the next fiscal year, he said, and with "stringent cost-conscious economies" in the operation of government departments, "all other" federal expenditures even for expanded programs of school-aid, health and anti-poverty would rise only $600 million.

Higher Revenues

The booming economy will produce greatly increased revenues without a tax rise, he said, and the prospective budget deficit is only $1.8 billion.

Time may require "further sacrifices," he said, but for those who ask "sacrifice" of newly-launched welfare programs, we must ask, "whom will they sacrifice—the children who seek learning, the sick who need care, the families who dwell in squalor, the beauty of our land, the hope of our poor?"

"We will not permit those who fire on us in Viet Nam to win a victory over the desires and intentions of the American people," he declared.

"We will not heed those" at home who ask "sacrifice" they would "wring from the hopes of the unfortunate here in a land of plenty."

In a pointed paragraph on demands from some Republicans for a welfare-program slowdown, he flung a challenge:

"I believe we can continue the Great Society while we fight in Viet Nam. But if some do not believe this then, in the name of justice, let them call for the contribution of those who live in the fullness of our blessing, rather than try to strip it from the hands of those in need."

The President thus gave endorsement to a viewpoint on welfare programs expressed by the AFL-CIO Executive Council on Jan. 11. In his many-facted message, he urged in one way or another all measures called for by the council in its special one-day meeting.

In addition to urging a new federal Dept. of Transportation, the President said he would ask Congress for:

- A new "honest elections" law, with "strong teeth and severe penalties" for violations.
- A new Highway Safety Act.
- A constitutional amendment raising the term of House members from two years to four.
- Funds "to rebuild completely —on a scale never before attempted —entire central and slum areas of several of our cities."
- Funds "to attack the degrading poisoning of our rivers," including an effort to "clean completely entire large river basins."

New civil rights legislation the President proposed included these measures:

- A law establishing "unavoidable requirements for non-discriminatory jury selection in federal and state courts," with enforcement power lodged with the attorney general. This would strike at the jury system in some southern communities effectively eliminating or limiting participation by Negroes.
- New federal court authority "to try those who murder, attack or intimidate either civil rights workers or others exercising their constitutional rights," and increased penalties for violations. This would expand post-Civil War civil rights laws, which have been of limited value.
- New laws to "prohibit racial discrimination in the sale or rental of housing," which Johnson said should rest on "the fullest constitutional authority of the federal government." This would allow attacks on de facto race segregation in many northern cities.

The President was extremely detailed in his report on U.S. efforts to pull down the scope of fighting in Viet Nam.

"I must be the one to order the guns to fire," he commented grimly, "against all the most inward pulls of my desire."

Since Christmas we have renewed our labors "to remove any barrier to a peaceful settlement," approaching "all the governments with which we have diplomatic relations—and some with which we don't."

"We have made it clear from Hanoi to New York" that the U.S. seeks no territory or bases in Viet Nam, no "economic domination or military alliance in Viet Nam," he said, adding that "we will meet at any conference table, discuss any proposals, consider the views of any group."

We want nothing in Viet Nam except that "the people of all Viet Nam should make a free decision on the great question of reunification" of the divided country, he declared.

"We will stay until aggression has stopped," still striving to limit and end the conflict, but giving our fighting man "every gun, every dollar and every decision" they need. Otherwise confidence in America would be weakened and the "appetite of the aggressor" whetted, and "we would have to fight in one land, and then another—or abandon much of Asia to the domination of Communists," he said.

The President also used his message to promise new efforts toward multilateral arms reduction and pledge that the foreign assistance program would be given "new directions" to launch a major attack on "hunger, disease and ignorance" in underdeveloped nations.

He said this nation would "dedicate" $1 billion for these purposes next year and called on "all who have the means to join this work."

His legislative program, he said, would include an "Intl. Education Act of 1966" to give children in other continents "the same head start we are trying to give our own" and an "Intl. Health Act of 1966" to strike at smallpox, malaria and other diseases.

Coalition Control Slips On Senate Finance Unit

Conservative control of the powerful Senate Finance Committee took a double slip as the second session of the 89th Congress got under way.

The slippage stemmed from the retirement of Virginia's Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Sr., who had served both as committee chairman and leader of the two-party conservative coalition which long-dominated the committee.

The Democratic Steering Committee named Montana's liberal Sen. Lee Metcalf to the committee vacancy. And the Senate's seniority system moved Louisiana's Russell Long, the Democratic whip, into the committee chairmanship.

Senate leaders, however, turned down a proposal by Pennsylvania's Sen. Joseph S. Clark which would have dealt a stronger blow at conservative influence. Clark wanted to enlarge the Finance Committee to 18 members to add another Democrat.

Smallest Ratio

With 11 Democrats and six Republicans, it is the only Senate committee that does not have at least a two-to-one Democratic majority —reportedly because Byrd wanted it that way.

Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr. (D-Va.), appointed to his father's seat, was named to the Armed Services and Space Committees. Sen. Joseph D. Tydings (D-Md.) moved from the Space Committee to a vacancy on the Public Works Committee left by Metcalf.

The Senate Democratic caucus created four new posts of "assistant whips" to aid the leadership in assuring attendance on key votes, taking head counts on legislation and keeping Senate Democrats informed on issues and strategy. Named to the posts were Senators Daniel B. Brewster (Md.), Philip A. Hart (Mich.), Daniel K. Inouye (Hawaii), and Edmund S. Muskie (Me.). Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) proposed the expanded whip system.

House Shifts

On the House side, Rep. Edward A. Garmatz (D-Md.) became chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee, succeeding the late Rep. Herbert C. Bonner (D-N.C.). Garmatz is considered a strong supporter of an expanded American-flag merchant marine and an opponent of the retrenchment program advocated by an Inter-Agency Task Force.

There will be another chairmanship shift in February, when Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.) leaves Congress for a federal judgeship and Rep. Harley O. Staggers (D-W. Va.) moves up to the chairmanship of the House Commerce Committee.

Two new congressmen were sworn in to fill House vacancies—Rep. Clarence J. Brown, Jr. (R-O.), elected to his late father's seat, and Rep. Thomas M. Rees (D-Calif.), who won a special election in a Los Angeles district. Rees succeeds James Roosevelt, who resigned to become a U.S. delegate to the United Nations.

William Phillips Takes Poverty Agency Post

William G. Phillips, staff director for the Democratic Study Group in the House and a veteran of 11 years' service on Capitol Hill, has resigned to become director of congressional relations with the Office of Economic Opportunity.

Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.), DSG chairman, announced the appointment of John T. Morgan, a staff member for the past year and a 1962-63 American Political Science fellow, as Phillips' successor.

New Senate Battle Builds For Vote on 14(b) Repeal

House Unit Opens Tax Hearings

Quick House action is expected on the Administration's proposal to speed tax collections and postpone two excise tax cuts.

The tax-writing House Ways & Means Committee opened hearings Jan. 19, with Treasury Sec. Henry H. Fowler as the leadoff witness.

Fowler outlined the Administration's goal of helping finance the Viet Nam war without putting an inflationary strain on the economy through these steps:

- About 16,000 big corporations with tax bills above $100,000-a-year would, by 1967, pay their estimated taxes in the year the money is earned. This would bring an additional $3.2 billion into the federal treasury in the 1967 fiscal year and about $1 billion more in the current year. Under present law, corporations would not be on a comparable pay-as-you-earn basis until 1970.

- Excise tax cuts on telephone calls and new automobiles which went into effect Jan. 1 would be temporarily rolled back. The telephone tax would rebound from 3 to 10 percent; the auto tax would revert from 6 to 7 percent. The cuts would be reinstated in 1969.

- The payroll withholding tax, now a flat 14 percent after allowance for dependent exemptions, would be put on a graduated basis. The rate of withholding would be less for those in the lowest brackets, higher for those with the biggest income. There would be no change in the amount of tax each person would owe. But the amount withheld would come closer to matching the end-of-the-year tax bill. The net effect would be to add $400 million to fiscal 1967 revenues.

The Administration also proposed making the social security tax for the self-employed due in quarterly installments instead of Apr. 15 of the following year. This would not affect the federal budget since the money goes into a separate trust fund.

Fowler predicted that during 1966 unemployment will fall "appreciably below" the Administration's "interim target of 4 percent."

Increased defense costs for Viet Nam, he declared, "come at a time when we are reaping the benefits of prior tax reductions in the form of higher levels of income and lower unemployment." The economic and financial situation, he declared, "calls for avoiding additional stimulus to demand."

4-Year House Term:

LBJ Spells Out Plan On Election Reform

Pres. Johnson in a special message to Congress spelled out his reasons for urging constitutional amendments to reform the Electoral College and to raise the existing two-year term of members of the House to four years.

It is generally agreed today, as it was during the constitutional convention of 1787, that one branch of Congress should have an "immediate dependence on, and an intimate sympathy with the people," he said. But he pointed out that the two-year term for House members was a compromise between those who preferred only a one-year term and others who urged a three-year term.

He quoted the Federalist Papers as specifying that the "degree of frequency" desirable in House elections cannot be calculated precisely and must depend on "a variety of circumstances."

The "circumstances" today are very different from those existing when we were an agricultural nation with few foreign responsibilities, Johnson wrote.

Only 142 bills were introduced in the 1st Congress, resulting in 108 public laws, but the 88th Congress received 15,299 bills and passed 666 public laws, he pointed out.

This "flood of legislation," he said, is generated by "increasingly complex problems" of population growth, urbanization, welfare and education requirements and foreign responsibilities.

Sessions of Congress have become longer, he emphasized. Whereas from 1904 through 1910, Congress was able to adjourn no later than June during election years, adjournment was not possible until August in 1958, September in 1960, October in 1962 and October in 1964.

Stiffer Penalties Urged For NLRB Repeaters

New and "stiffer" remedies for employers who repeatedly violate their workers' rights were urged by the Textile Workers Union of America in the wake of another finding that J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., still is carrying on an unlawful union-smashing campaign in eight plants in the "right-to-work" states of North and South Carolina.

The ruling, by Trial Examiner Horace A. Ruckel of the National Labor Relations Board, was that the firm, the second largest textile company in the United States, was guilty of a "continued, systematic determination" to "destroy the union root and branch by discharging its most active members on any pretext which might come to hand, or could be invented."

Finding that 19 Stevens employes had been unlawfully fired during or since NLRB hearings on previous charges of illegal conduct, Ruckel directed their reinstatement and an end to further law violations by the family-owned firm, whose president is Robert T. Stevens, secretary of the Army in the Eisenhower Administration.

No other conclusion can be drawn from the testimony of numerous witnesses, Ruckel said, than that the company has "largely succeeded in its purpose" of driving out the union. He added:

"In view of my findings that respondent's anti-union activities . . . constitute a pattern and a

Dirksen Maintains Filibuster Barrier

By David L. Perlman

The Senate's Democratic Policy Committee defied a Republican filibuster threat and scheduled a new effort to call up and pass the bill to repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act—the "right-to-work" clause which allows states to ban the union shop.

Majority Leader Mike Mansfield will touch off the battle—probably on Jan. 24—by moving to begin consideration of the bill.

Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen is determined that the Senate will never get the chance to vote on Mansfield's motion. He blocked a vote late in the last session by organizing a conservative filibuster and he told newsmen he is immovable on the issue. "No amicable compromise" is possible, he proclaimed.

The bill passed the House last year, won overwhelming endorsement from the Senate Labor Committee, and has been repeatedly urged by Pres. Johnson—most recently in his State of the Union message when he asked Congress "to make the labor laws of all our states equal to the laws of the 31 states" which permit union shop contracts.

Dirksen's announcement was greeted happily by the National Right to Work Committee, which declared it was ready to "take the offensive" with drives for "10 to 15" new state "work" laws. A committee spokesman told a news conference that Dirksen's effort would "hasten the day" when the union shop on the railroads—specifically authorized by the Railway Labor Act—would be eliminated.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce jumped into the picture too, designating Feb. 1 as "14(b) Day," when businessmen would make "conference calls" to their senators opposing 14(b) repeal.

Both Mansfield and AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller stressed that a majority of the Senate supports 14(b) repeal and that the fight is over the Senate's right to vote on the issue.

Medicare Enrollment Stressed

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged the entire labor movement to do everything in its power to make sure that all union members 65 or over and their families enroll for medical benefits under social security before the end of March.

Unlike hospitalization coverage, he pointed out, the Medicare coverage of doctors' bills and other medical costs is not automatic. Each individual must sign up for it and pay a premium of $3 monthly which is matched by the government.

2-Year Wait

Those who fail to sign up by Mar. 31, Meany noted, cannot join until October 1967 and then will have to pay more than the current $3 monthly charge.

"No other insurance policy could provide the comprehensive coverage this policy offers except at a vastly greater cost," he declared. "Yet there is a serious danger that many older Americans will let the opportunity slip past, simply for lack of proper information."

The Social Security Administration has mailed out 14.8 million cards to social security beneficiaries alone—not counting those receiving railroad retirement or fed-

Unions Do Twice as Well In States Without 'R-T-W'

Unions have done twice as well in organizing in states which do not have "right-to-work" laws banning the union shop, according to a Labor Dept. survey.

The department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said the proportion of organized workers in the non-farm work force averaged 34 percent in the 31 states without "work" laws and only 15 percent in the 19 "right-to-work" states.

Five states have more than 1 million union members, the survey showed, topped by New York with 2.5 million. The others are California, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Ohio.

The report put total union membership in the United States at nearly 17.2 million, with 14.1 million in unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO.

Nationwide, about 30 percent of employes were organized, ranging from a high of 43 percent in Washington State to less than 7 percent in "right-to-work" North Carolina.

Panel Presses Enactment of Consumer Bills

A resolution calling on Congress to enact the consumer protection legislation Pres. Johnson urged in his State of the Union message was passed by the Consumer Advisory Council as the highlight of a two-day meeting in Washington.

It was sponsored by the chairman, Richard Holton, professor of economics and business administration at the University of California, who cited the unprecedented high priority the President gave the package and declared that "it is now up to Congress to act."

The resolution said that enactment of fair packaging and labeling bills and truth-in-lending legislation, which the President supported, would improve "the ability of the consumer to choose the best buy and to exert a strong influence in holding down the price line."

The council also pressed Congress to "buttress the consumer's right to safety" by swift passage of omnibus amendments to the Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act, and "to assure minimum tire safety standards and legislation to require new cars to incorporate other prescribed safety features."

Holton pointed out that congressional action can give the consumer the information he needs "so he will know exactly what packaged goods and loans are costing him."

"The consumer will then be able to make price comparisions that are meaningful," he added, "and he will be able to buy at the lowest price if he wants. And if he wants to pay more to get higher quality, he will know how much more he is paying."

Sidney Margolius, whose consumer column appears in the AFL-CIO News, is a member of the council.

Musicians' Locals Merge in Chicago

Chicago—The two Chicago locals of the Musicians were merged here in a major step toward effectuating the union policy of uniting ethnic locals into single units.

The unification of Locals 10 and 208 was carried out in Musicians Hall, with Mayor Richard Daley attending. It was accomplished under the guidance and supervision of Hal C. Davis, trustee named by the international executive board to monitor the merger, and Lester Asher, counsel for the international.

Bernard F. Richards, president of the new local, called the unity action "significant" for "the economic welfare of each individual musician" in the city, and "an eloquent testimonial to the vitality of the American labor movement."

Other officers include William E. Samuels, administrative vice president, who formerly was secretary-treasurer of the old Local 208.

STATUETTE OF WHOOPING CRANE is presented by Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson to State Rep. John F. Laudadio, Sr., Jeannette, Pa., an executive board member of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Local 601, in recognition of his being named conservation legislator of the year by the National Wildlife Federation. The honor, which included $1,000, was given him for steering a landmark strip mining law and a clean streams act through the Pennsylvania Legislature.

Rail Clerks, Firemen Seek Early Bargaining

Two rail unions have taken actions designed to speed up their 1966 collective bargaining process. The Locomotive Firemen have served notices on six major railroads calling for negotiating on the rehiring of several thousand laid-off firemen. The Railway Clerks announced they will seek an early start on union requests for contract improvements on major roads.

BLFE Pres. T. E. Gilbert announced at a Washington, D.C., news conference that he has asked presidents of six railroads to abandon the "crisis and compulsion" tactics of the national management conference and has also requested the National Mediation Board to assign mediators to help settle negotiations over the use of firemen-helpers on diesel freight and yard locomotives.

The move, Gilbert said, is "designed to get the bargaining process moving, not to single out any group for crisis pressure." The union intends to press for a "peaceful and lasting settlement" of the fireman issue and will not "sit back and wait for the railroads to set off a nationwide strike," he declared.

The BLFE will center its bargaining efforts on these railroads: Chesapeake & Ohio-Baltimore & Ohio; Norfolk & Western; Atlantic Coast Line; Louisville & Nashville; the Santa Fe, and the Pacific Lines division of the Southern Pacific.

Gilbert's union fought for years to prevent the layoffs of diesel firemen but in 1964 an arbitration panel created by Congress ruled that railroads could lay off firemen on freight and yard engines. The award expires Mar. 31 and the BLFE has voiced its opinion that the agreement formerly existing between the union and 160 to 170 U.S. railroads will be in "full force and effect" again on that date unless the parties agree to changes.

Of some 17,000 firemen laid off under the 1964 award, job restoration will be asked by the BLFE for "more than half," Gilbert estimated.

Clerks List Demands

Railway Clerks' Pres. C. L. Dennis announced that his brotherhood is "determined to bring the next wage movement to a final determination date before the expiration date of the current wage agreement"—next Dec. 31.

Before the end of January, Dennis said, the BRC will propose a wage increase of 18 percent an hour, double time for overtime, shift differentials of from 17.5 to 22.5 cents an hour and longevity pay up to 20 cents an hour; vacations of 10 to 30 consecutive workdays—the latter after 15 years' service; and 12 paid holidays.

The union began talks Jan. 10 with rail managements on a supplemental pension plan providing additional benefits for retirees. On Jan. 11 it began negotiations in New York City on guaranteed annual pay, wage increases and rules revisions for 35,000 employes of the Railway Express Agency for whom it recently won exclusive bargaining rights by defeating the expelled Teamsters.

Requests for contract improvements also have been made by the BLFE, and other rail unions are expected to make similar bargaining requests on their own managements.

Lasting Damage to Nation Seen in 14(b) Filibuster

"Filibuster" is the title of the latest AFL-CIO pamphlet—a call on "all citizens of conscience" to speak up for the right of the Senate to vote.

It deals with the attempt of a minority of the Senate to prevent repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act by using unlimited debate and other delaying tactics to thwart the majority. And it warns that "irreparable damage" will be done to America's democratic institutions if the filibuster is allowed to succeed.

Included are quotations from Republican and Democratic leaders who, over the years, have denounced the filibuster as the negation of majority rule.

Requests for copies of "Filibuster" should be addressed to Room 606, AFL-CIO Building, 815 Sixteenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. 20006.

Nationwide Campaign:

Kingsport Boycott Carried to Schools

The AFL-CIO has launched a nationwide boycott campaign against books produced at the Kingsport Press as part of an all-out effort to win a three-year-old strike by five unions at the Tennessee plant.

Acting in accordance with a resolution unanimously adopted at the San Francisco convention, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wrote to the officers of national and international unions, and to state and local central bodies, calling for a sweeping drive to halt the purchase of Kingsport-produced books by public school systems. Textbooks encyclopedias and related educational volumes comprise the bulk of the struck firm's output.

Meany described the Kingsport struggle as a "new challenge" that will "require the full effort of every segment of the labor movement."

"The issues and principles involved in this matter are so important that we simply must not fail," he said.

Meany's first letter was followed promptly by a "program of action" for implementing the boycott. It stresses the point that tax dollars—so many of which are contributed by union members—should not be spent on books produced by strikebreakers. The editorial content of the books is not involved, since Kingsport's function is purely mechanical. A key aspect of the boycott is an effort to include publishers of otherwise admirable works to have them produced elsewhere until the strike is settled.

The Union Label & Service Trades Dept. is playing a major role in the campaign and additional materials are available on request.

Except for the product involved, the Kingsport strike has followed a pattern familiar in textiles and other southern industries. The 1,200 workers—members of the Typographical Union, Stereotypers & Electrotypers, Machinists, Bookbinders and Printing Pressmen—walked out in March 1963 after months of desperate attempts to negotiate a reasonable settlement.

The workers were not trying to get wages and job benefits equal to those provided in other major printing firms. They were just trying not to fall farther behind, as they had in 1962 when their top wage hike was 5 cents an hour, or half the pattern for the book industry.

The company's offer in 1963, on a "take it or leave it" basis, was again 5 cents—and only in the highest brackets. Nothing at all was offered on other issues, such as arbitration of grievances. At Kingsport, the final grievance step has always been a management decision.

Strike or Servitude

The workers had to choose between a strike and continued servitude. They struck.

The company combed the area for miles around to recruit strikebreakers. Because Kingsport is in a low-wage area of chronic underemployment, recruits were found. Though they were unskilled, they could keep production limping along.

Kingsport Press now maintains that these strikebreakers are "permanent" employes, who will not be let go even if the strike is settled. Thus a settlement, Kingsport style, would offer jobs to only a handful of strikers.

Since the strike started a number of publishers have sent much or all of their work elsewhere. More must do so; but this, Meany stressed, depends upon the earnest efforts of union members everywhere—especially parents.

ILG Wins Major Victory At Sears Apparel Plant

Little Rock, Ark.—The Ladies' Garment Workers triumphed over bitter management opposition to win a 666 to 564 victory in a National Labor Relations Board election at the Ottenheimer Brothers Manufacturing Co., which has more employes under a single roof than any plant but one in Arkansas.

A total of 1,235 workers out of 1,400 who were eligible marked ballots in the election.

The plant is a division of the Kellwood Co., a Chicago-based affiliate of Sears Roebuck & Co. which operates 30 apparel sewing plants, all of them non-union. It produces blouses, dresses and lounge wear.

ILGWU Vice Pres. Frederick Siems, who was in charge of the drive, charged that management prior to the vote vainly attempted to intimidate and coerce union members, especially the plan organizing committee, and harassed them at every turn. Workers were threatened with layoffs and loss of work if the plant were organized, and huge anti-union signs were posted on plant walls, Siems reported.

Committee members, he said, were cut off from the better type of work and given unusually difficult jobs or transferred to unfamiliar machines in order to curtail their earnings. They were kept under constant watch, frequently reprimanded in the presence of their coworkers for trivial reasons, and finally suspended from their jobs shortly before the election, he said.

Mgr. Jerry Perlstein of the union's Southern Missouri-Arkansas District Council headed day-to-day organizing operations. He was aided by Staff Representatives Eva Chambers, Jerry Sue Jackson, George Lambert, Helen Phipps, Lula Spellman, David Turner and Lew Webster.

ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky in a telegram of congratulation and welcome to union ranks pledged "full support in your efforts to win a truly American standard of living" when negotiations for a first contract get under way.

Strike Activity Matches '64 Level

Strike activity last year was at about the same level as in 1964, according to the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics—more walkouts, fewer workers involved and about the same amount of lost time.

Preliminary estimates list about 3,860 stoppages involving 1.4 million workers who lost 23.1 million man-days of work, compared to 3,655 strikes in 1964 involving 1.6 million workers who were idle for 22.9 million man-days. Lost time accounted for 18 one-hundredths of 1 percent of total estimated working time, the same as in 1964, the report disclosed.

practice . . . which have thwarted the attempts of its employes to organize . . . and that [it] has pursued this practice with a calculated disregard" of the law, and because the conventional recommendations do not fit the situation and "will not adequately restore the status quo, I recommend to the board that it consider such other and further remedies which it may deem appropriate" to carry out the purposes of the law.

Ruckel did not specify the remedies. TWUA Pres. William Pollock said his decision "clearly demonstrates that in every situation . . . where Stevens workers have sought to form a union, the company has been guilty of violating the law."

"Incredible as it seems," Pollock said, "with two rounds of hearings completed, the company still continues to flout the law by discharging and intimidating workers in defiance of the NLRB. The situation clearly calls for new and stiffer remedies to bring J. P. Stevens & Co. in compliance with the labor laws of the land."

Earlier Firings Cited

After a 1964 hearing into similar charges of Stevens Co. misconduct, the same examiner recommended the reinstatement of 69 workers also fired for union activity during an organizing campaign started in 1963, and still continuing, by the TWUA and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

In his latest decision, Ruckel directed that Stevens be compelled by the NLRB to reinstate 19 fired union members with backpay plus interest, and to compensate another worker for overtime he was discriminatorily deprived of.

Nine of the discharged employes had been witnesses at hearings Ruckel conducted in 1964, his report disclosed.

He recommended that the firm also be ordered to cease and desist from:

- Discharging, forcing the termination of, refusing overtime work to or otherwise discriminating against employes to discourage their union membership.
- Discharging, forcing the termination of or otherwise discriminating against employes for giving testimony as NLRB witnesses.
- Interrogating workers as to union activities or threatening them with discharge or other reprisals if they assist the union.
- Altering working conditions, intimidating employes into withdrawing from the union, or encouraging antiunion activity while prohibiting union activity by Stevens workers.

Civil Rights Link Helps Union Win

Augusta, Ga.—The Painters won a resounding victory in a representation election among the 550 employes of Merry Brothers, manufacturers of brick products here, as the outgrowth of cooperation with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The organization drive was explained at a series of meetings with local NAACP leaders and Negro ministers which were arranged by AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Don Slaiman and Al Kehrer, the department's southern representative, at the request of Painters' Pres. Frank Raftery.

The sessions led to a close relationship that resulted in broad support for the union in the Negro community which was an important factor in winning the election. Organizing Dir. Jack Cox of the union hailed Slaiman and his staff for making "an outstanding contribution to bring this about."

Shriver Steps Down From Peace Corps

R. Sargent Shriver, founder and director of the Peace Corps, has stepped down from that post to work "double time" in his second job, director of the anti-poverty program, Pres. Johnson announced.

The President also announced that the new Peace Corps director would be Jack Vaughn, recently assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, and an expert on Latin America.

Contract Preparation Urged for Automation

The lack of adequate preparation in labor-management relations for the coming surge of automation was emphasized by Sam Zagoria, National Labor Relations Board member, at a luncheon during an Intl. Labor Press Association executive board meeting in Washington.

Zagoria told of a search through Labor Dept. records which yielded little or nothing in the way of sample contract clauses governing notice of job-destroying technological changes, training or retraining programs, relocation and similar factors.

Whether automation comes as rapidly as some think or as slowly as others believe, he said, "there should be some preparation and clauses written into contracts to make the adjustments easier in terms of human relations."

"Industry is largely accustomed to planning for the future," he said. "Why should it not plan also for dealing with its human resources?"

Zagoria paid tribute to his fellow NLRB members as men who "sit around the table trying to find out the right thing to do . . .[and] try very hard to do the best they can." Most of the time, despite their different backgrounds, they agree, he added.

He said he views the board as an administrative agency charged with administering basic federal labor law, rather than as a labor court bound by precedents. For that reason, he said, he feels it has an obligation "to take the broad look at things and do a little improvising."

Zagoria as a Washington Post reporter was president of the Washington Newspaper Guild. He went to the NLRB from a post as administrative assistant to Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.).

Leon Stein, editor of the Ladies' Garment Workers' publication Justice and ILPA president for the past two years, bowed out at the luncheon and was succeeded by Ray Davidson, editor of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Union News. Stein was presented with a plaque in appreciation of his services and with a gift of luggage.

Hall Urges U.S.-Japanese Cooperation

Tokyo—Japanese and American labor should work together to build a world of peace and freedom and to defeat Communist aggression, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Paul Hall said here.

"The world needs peace more than anything else," Hall told delegates to the Japanese Confederation of Labor's second national convention, "but we must have a just peace."

In his speech to the Domei convention, the president of the Seafarers brought greetings from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and U. S. labor.

Despite difficulties, "we must be realistic and responsible in our approach" to peace, Hall said, because "emotional slogans and shouting in the street do not help."

"Lasting peace can be achieved by effective international inspection and suspension, not only of nuclear weapons but also all other weapons of mass destruction," he suggested. Such an approach, he stressed, is vital to the attainment of "real and total disarmament . . . our common objective."

"Let us work together for this great goal," Hall said.

He urged that Japanese and U. S. friendship "be deepened and strengthened" as a guarantee of the "strength of the democratic idea" in the cause of human freedom.

Jerome Brooks Named Detroit NLRB Chief

Jerome H. Brooks, 48, has been named director of the National Labor Relations Board's Detroit Mich., region succeeding Thomas Roumell, new Michigan State Labor Dept. director. Brooks has been Detroit regional attorney and served for 21 months as acting regional director. Bernard Gottfried, assistant regional attorney, will take Brooks' former post.

Lockout Case Returned For Study by NLRB

The Supreme Court has vacated a decision of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in a case hinging on whether an employer has the right to lock out employes in single-unit bargaining before an impasse has been reached.

The high court, approving a request by the National Labor Relations Board for an opportunity for further study, instructed the 6th Circuit to remand to the board the case of newspaper drivers who were locked out by the Detroit News when their union went on strike against the Detroit Free Press.

The board told the high court in a memorandum that its decision in the Detroit case, finding the News guilty of an unlawful lockout, was made before the Supreme Court issued rulings upholding lockouts in cases involving the American Ship Building Co. and another firm. The appeals judges reversed the NLRB but now must let the board reconsider the facts in the light of the American Ship Building decision.

Whether the absence of an impasse in Detroit News negotiations and separate bargaining by the unaffiliated Teamsters with the publishers would warrant a result different from the American Ship Building ruling are "difficult problems of law and policy which should be passed on" by the board, it said.

In another union case the Supreme Court reversed a 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals decision that the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers cannot intervene in the NLRB's refusal-to-bargain case against the General Electric Co. The high court ordered further consideration in the light of its "Scofield" decision permitting the Auto Workers to intervene in a suit brought against the company by employes.

The 2nd Circuit judges had ruled that the IUE could take part in the lawsuit as a "friend of the court" but not as an intervenor. The union wanted to appeal parts of the NLRB order against GE that in the IUE's opinion did not go far enough.

Grapes Still on Vines In Delano Strike Area

Delano, Calif.—Grapes which ripened last fall are hanging on the vines in January to testify to the effectiveness of the four-month old strike by 3,500 farm workers in this rich agricultural area.

Members of the AFL-CIO Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee walked out Sept. 8 at vineyards in a 400-square mile San Joaquin Valley area in protest at wages less than the $1.40 per hour required to be paid by employers of imported Mexican bracero labor.

Now, says AWOC Dir. C. Al Green, the strike is more solid than ever. And AWOC has extended organizing efforts into the citrus ranches in neighboring Tulare County, where two mass meetings have been held, Green said.

Nationwide labor support, including financial contributions by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., has played a part in the continuing strength of the strike—longest and largest in California since the bitter struggles in the Grapes of Wrath days of the 1930s.

The AFL-CIO endorsed the strike in a strongly worded resolution at its San Francisco convention.

Following the convention, IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther visited Delano and publicly pledged a $5,000 a month contribution for strike support.

Financial aid also has come from plant gate contributions in northern and southern California. Waterfront workers have respected farm worker informational picket lines at the docks, preventing shipment of grapes picked by strikebreakers.

AWOC was joined last fall by members of the independent National Farm Workers Association and the Mexican-American Unity Council in the strike.

Grower attempts to pick the 1965 harvest were far from successful as pickets roved the vineyard area and were able in many cases to persuade imported strikebreakers to leave the fields.

Growers have been no more successful in getting their vines pruned this winter to ensure a good 1966 yield, Green said. He reported that skilled pruners are among the Delano pickets or are working in the Coachella Valley of southern California where AWOC won a $1.40 per hour scale plus 25 cents a box piece rates in a strike last year.

Labor and the Great Society

IN STRIVING TO REALIZE its concept of a great society, the labor movement has sought to enhance the quality of life while increasing its quantity for all working families. Indeed, there is a close link.

Through collective bargaining, union members learned that better wages and working conditions, though spoken of as "goals," really provided the basis or means for a better life at home and dignity on the job.

In broader fashion, organized labor has operated in the pursuit of legislative and political goals to improve the lives of people.

The 1965 AFL-CIO convention demonstrated this role of labor again. Some "goals" won last year are now to be implemented—medicare, education, civil rights, housing. Other "goals" were set for this year—repeal of 14(b), minimum wage expansion, a modernized jobless pay system, consumer protection.

Future goals took shape with no less a sense of determination to bring them to fruition.

An end to poverty—"labor's historic goal"—was again at the top of labor's list. With some 35 to 50 million people in poverty, the AFL-CIO proposed a broad program. Since over half of all poor families are headed by a low-paid worker or a jobless worker, half the problem was viewed as a case of a lack of decent-paying jobs. Income maintenance and a variety of other aid were proposed for poor families headed by aged and disabled persons.

The convention's omnibus resolution on poverty made clear that helping the poor and defenseless become full participants in society is central to labor's cause. At the same time, other strong threads must be woven into the social fabric to bring about a truly great society.

A retirement benefit increase of at least 50 percent is necessary "to permit older people to participate in the increased standard of living they have helped to make possible."

The federal government should lead in "a massive effort to rebuild our cities." The new Dept. of Housing & Urban Development can create productive intergovernmental links with metropolitan areas. Housing construction should be greatly increased to at least 2.5 million units a year. Low-rent public housing should rise to a least 125,000 units a year in the period ahead.

THERE IS A NEED FOR "devising and promoting a medically advanced and economically sound national health care program—a public program which will replace our fragmented, costly, inefficient and inadequate arrangements for health care with an acceptable nationwide program of comprehensive, high-quality health services which is accessible to all Americans."

The nation must seriously begin to consider financing beyond high school the education of all its young people. Removing the economic barrier to higher education might run as high as $15 billion a year. It would mean, as in the GI bills, paying educational and subsistence costs to enable each person to develop to his fullest potential.

The government must shoulder its responsibility of protecting the nation's resources against exploitation and monopoly and developing them "for the good of all Americans." A coherent resources policy and the peaceful application of atomic energy should be integrated with economic policy in moving towards a full employment economy.

State of the Union Message:

Johnson Bids Congress Assure 'Most Urgent Decencies' to All

I HAVE NOT COME HERE tonight to ask for pleasant luxuries or for idle pleasures. I have come here to recommend that you—the representatives of the richest nation on earth—you the elected servants of the people who live in abundance unmatched on this globe—you bring the most urgent decencies of life to all of your fellow Americans.

There are men who cry out: We must sacrifice. Well, let us rather ask them: Who will they sacrifice? Are they going to sacrifice the children who seek the learning, or the sick who need medical care, or the families who dwell in squalor that are now brightened by the hope of home? Will they sacrifice opportunity for the distressed—the beauty of our land, the hope of our poor?

Time may require further sacrifices. And if it does, then we will make them.

But we will not heed those who wring it from the hopes of the unfortunate here in a land of plenty.

I believe that we can continue the Great Society while we fight in Viet Nam. But if there are some who do not believe this, then, in the name of justice, let them call for the contribution of those who live in the fullness of our blessing, rather than try to strip it from the hands of those that are most in need.

And let no one think that the unfortunate and the oppressed of this land sit stifled and alone in their hope tonight. Hundreds of their servants and their protectors sit before me tonight here in this great chamber.

Until peace comes, or if it does not come, our course is clear. We will act as we must to help protect the independence of the valiant people of South Viet Nam. We will strive to limit the conflict, for we wish neither increased destruction nor do we want to invite increased danger.

But we will give our fighting men what they must have: Every gun and every dollar, and every decision—whatever the cost or whatever the challenge.

And we will continue to help the people of South Viet Nam care for those that are ravaged by battle, create progress in the villages and carry forward the healing hopes of peace as best they can amidst the uncertain terrors of war.

Let me be absolutely clear. The days may become months and the months may become years, but we will stay as long as aggression commands us to battle.

The people of Viet Nam, North and South, seek the same thing. The shared needs of man, the needs for food and shelter and education, the chance to build and work and till the soil free from the arbitrary horrors of battle, the desire to walk in the dignity of those who master their own destiny.

To all of those caught up in this conflict, we therefore say again tonight: Let us choose peace, and with it the wondrous works of peace, and beyond that, the time when hope reaches toward consummation, and life is the servant of life.

In this work, we plan to discharge our duty to the people whom we serve.

THIS IS the State of the Union.

But over it all—wealth, the promise and expectation—lies our troubling awareness of American men at war tonight.

How many men who listen to me tonight have served their nation in other wars? How very many are not here to listen? The war in Viet Nam is not like these other wars. Yet, finally, war is always the same. It is young men dying in the fullness of their promise. It is trying to kill a man that you do not even know well enough to hate.

Therefore, to know war is to know that there is still madness in this world. Many of you share the burden of this knowledge tonight with me. But there is a difference.

For, finally, I must be the one to order our guns to fire against the—against all the most inward pulls of my desire. For we have children to teach, as we have sick to be cured, and we have men to be freed. There are poor to be lifted up and there are cities to be built and there's a world to be helped.

Yet, we do what we must.

I am hopeful, and I will try as best I can with everything I've got to end this battle and to return our sons to their desires.

Yet, as long as others will challenge America's security, and test the dearness of our beliefs with fire and steel, then we must stand, or see the promise of two centuries tremble.

Morgan Says:

'Ev and Gerry' TV Message Betrays Extent of GOP Woes

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

IF THE REPUBLICAN answer to the President's State of the Union message is any measure of the party's plight—and it is—the plaint of card-carrying Republicans might be expressed as follows: "Take us to our leader." The question is, where is he? The party which does not control the White House is invariably handicapped, but the utter leaderlessness of the GOP and the lack of a rallying point were perhaps never more poignantly portrayed than during the half-hour "Ev and Gerry" show carried from coast to coast on both radio and television.

Morgan

At least one network took exception initially to the Republican request for prime time to give the party's rebuttal to the President's annual report to Congress, on the sensible grounds that a State of the Union message, required by the Constitution, does not obligate the broadcasting industry to carry the opposition's response under the so-called fairness doctrine chaperoned by the Federal Communications Commission. As it turned out all major networks did carry the program.

They would have done the Republican Party a favor if they had not. There was hardly a thought that Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois and House Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan uttered that they had not uttered before. Indeed, their more or less spontaneous assessment before radio and TV film microphones right after the President's message last Wednesday night made fresher copy.

The dramatically unruly locks of that wonderful legislative thespian, Sen. Dirksen, waved in front of his face like kelp from the Sargasso Sea as he faltered through a somewhat equivocal endorsement of Administration policy in Viet Nam. The fresher, younger, trimmer Ford, a former All-American football player from Michigan, probed the Johnson line in vain for a productive opening. After watching the program in disbelief, a key man on Lyndon Johnson's staff turned to his wife and said, more in sadness than in jubilation, that if this was all the drama and dynamism the loyal opposition could muster, the two-party system was really in trouble.

As Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson rallied decisive Democratic support to Pres. Eisenhower on vital measures of foreign policy, so Minority Leader Dirksen has delivered necessary Republican votes to Pres. Johnson, not only involving matters in Viet Nam but on such major domestic measures as the voting rights bill.

White House Press Sec. Bill Moyers shrewdly took note of this, saying the President was "very grateful" for Dirksen's call for a "policy of reason" in Viet Nam. With somewhat wryly reversed English, he went on to express happiness that Rep. Ford had come out in support of education, the war on poverty and other programs which the President had been pursuing with such "vigor and thoroughness" for so long.

REPUBLICAN WOES are legion. The congressional wing is in divisive turmoil. Not only is the party still in the process of picking itself out of the rubble left by the Johnson avalanche at the polls in 1964, the President used his 2-to-1 majority in Congress to ram through a brilliant Great Society program last session and then had the temerity to ask for more this session. The President's public support, the pollsters say, remains strong. He is dogged by two serious dangers, the war in Asia and the threat of inflation. Either or both could do him serious damage in November's congressional elections. So far, however, the economic system is "go" and the Administration is puzzled but delighted that the Republicans, thus far, have failed to jump on the fact that every major prediction Defense Sec. McNamara has made about the crisis in Viet Nam since 1963 has proved wrong.

All this is not to say the Republicans won't pick up seats in November. The "outs" invariably do in an off year. Nor is it to say that the party is bereft of talent. Oregon's Gov. Hatfield is likely to win a Senate seat. In Illinois, businessman Charles Percy will be a strong challenger to that veteran Democratic liberal, Sen. Paul Douglas. Michigan's Gov. Romney is being measured for his presidential possibilities.

California is another story. For if actor Ronald Reagan should win the governorship, or even the GOP nomination, it will intensify the national split between Republican moderates and their right wing. This would make it even more difficult to exploit the legitimate issues that do exist.

Passing laws is one thing. Performance on them is another. The war on poverty is a case in point. Republicans have been sniping at it but in such a way that they seem to be aiming more at the poor than at maladministration of programs. All this is more than too bad. Even the Johnson regime is not perfect and for its own good and the country's it needs an effective opposition to point up its weaknesses.

Biggest Setback in Decade:

Failure of Indonesian Coup Major Defeat for Communism

THE FAILURE of the Communist attempt to take over the government of Indonesia was "the biggest setback world communism generally and Communist China specifically have suffered in this decade."

Harry Goldberg of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs offered this estimate of the situation on his return from a survey tour of the Far East. Goldberg formerly was in Indonesia for the AFL-CIO.

Interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service program, As We See It, scheduled for broadcast over the ABC national radio network at noon Jan. 24, Goldberg also predicted that Pres. Sukarno will not continue long as head of state in Indonesia.

Goldberg charged that Sukarno was involved in the attempted coup.

"Remember that Sukarno kept quiet for the first few days and people wondered whether he was in prison, whether he was alive, or not," he said. "He kept quiet during the first stages of the attempted coup, in which he, Col. Untung, head of the palace guard, and Gen. Dani, head of the Air Force, were involved. They were together at this time at the Halim air base, to which the Chinese Communists had secretly shipped arms and ammunition."

After that, recalled the AFL-CIO representative, Sukarno claimed that the Communists were not involved, and had still to be considered part of the government.

"THE ARMY has pretended to go along, but has been doing the very opposite of what Sukarno wants," Goldberg reported. "They have retained Sukarno because he still is a charismatic leader with a certain degree of influence over the masses. However it is only a matter of time before Sukarno disappears from the historical stage by reason of his health, which is very bad, or because the army shunts him aside."

The future of Indonesia, according to the AFL-CIO observer, depends on whether the army meets the social, political and economic needs of the country.

"There is a question as to whether the army will have enough social vision to meet the desperate economic needs of the people and enough political wisdom to end the military dictatorship," Goldberg declared. "Also they will need help in rebuilding the country."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

YOU COULDN'T call the Republican reply to Mr. Johnson's State of the Union message a highly inspiring event, although it was nice of the three television networks to make free time available to the GOP spokesmen, Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen and Rep. Gerald R. Ford, the House leader.

Dirksen, who largely confined his remarks to Viet Nam, found almost nothing in Pres. Johnson's handling of the situation there to criticize. He did not echo the Republican Coordinating Committee's demand for further "escalation" of the conflict by either a naval blockade or the actual bombing of North Vietnamese ports and cities. He endorsed Mr. Johnson's current—and intense—"peace offensive." He merely said that the scope of the war should be expanded, if that becomes necessary, "as sound military judgment dictates."

Gerry Ford, handling the domestic field, said he was against repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley law and in favor of Dirksen's proposed constitutional amendment to upset the effect of the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" decisions.

He's against federal standards in unemployment compensation, too, and in favor of a "searching examination" of the President's budget proposals when the specific recommendations are sent up. He said there ought to be another commission, such as the old Hoover commission, on reorganization of the executive branch of the government, and a new GI Bill of Rights, and better housing and other benefits for servicemen. He's in favor of increasing both jobs and output "without inflation" and thinks we ought to see how the recent civil rights laws are working and tighten them if necessary, he said.

That's not exactly a Charley Halleck type of speech, it must be acknowledged, but neither does it carry much punch as an affirmative program for a major political party.

In contrast to Mr. Johnson's highly detailed and sweeping proposals for new legislation in many fields, it all seemed pretty pallid.

And the question naturally arises: Why does Mr. Ford, who comes from the heavily industrialized state of Michigan, want to block 14(b) repeal and federal minimum standards of unemployment insurance? The only states that benefit from 14(b) and low benefits for the jobless are the low-wage states that spend a good deal of energy trying to pirate industry away from Michigan and other northern states.

Mr. Johnson went on the air in prime television time before a joint session of Congress, and he spoke for nearly an hour. The networks had no obligation whatever to give the GOP free time for an "answer," and although all three networks did grant the free time eventually, it was for half an hour only, the program was taped, and it was presented at various times ranging from 9:30 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. EST.

The President also gave an object lesson on how the White House could be used to dominate the news, no matter what the minority was doing. He announced the resignation of Sargent Shriver from the Peace Corps. He advanced his usual Tuesday morning meeting with Democratic congressional leaders to Monday afternoon, and Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara met with them. White House Press Sec. Bill D. Moyers hotly disputed a report that the President had set a "time limit' on the "peace offensive" seeking to end the war in Viet Nam, and the U. S. Army announced a 78-hour cease-fire on the fields of battle.

The competition Dirksen and Ford faced, in short, was pretty rough. And when they didn't have much to say anyway, the contrast was remarkable.

FAILURE of the Communist coup in Indonesia was a major defeat for world communism, Harry Goldberg (left) of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs declared in an interview with Harry W. Flannery. Goldberg, just returned from a tour of the Far East, was interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service program, As We See It, heard on the ABC radio network.

ADMINISTRATION AND CONGRESSIONAL leaders joined the American Federation of Government Employes in marking the 83rd anniversary of the civil service merit system—and the fourth anniversary of the Executive Order on union recognition. Shown at a Washington, D. C., banquet attended by 1,000 AFGE members are, from left: Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.), ranking majority member, and Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla.), chairman of the Post Office & Civil Service Committee, with AFGE Pres. John F. Griner.

Public Worker Strikes Laid to Pay Grievances

The problem of strikes by public workers will not be entirely solved "so long as there are underpaid public employes whose grievances are unsettled and who have no adequate mechanism for redress of those grievances," Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes said.

He warned in a statement that there are no panaceas, short cuts or hastily-drawn laws that can solve the problem and urged a responsible approach by both sides in terms of the public interest.

He specifically urged that when negotiations falter, "the process of fact-finding can greatly assist in achieving a settlement." He recommended selection of fact-finding commissions by management and labor with a mutually-chosen third party to help produce reasonable settlements.

"The effort to eliminate disagreement by fiat," he warned, "is both dictatorial and impractical. If it is used against employes in the public service, it will most certainly be used in the hazy gray areas between the public and private sectors of the economy and ultimately it will be used against all workers."

The SCME president's statement pointed out that certain government employes, "policemen, fire fighters, prison guards and other similar categories, should not and cannot strike." He noted that the Fire Fighters' union constitution specifically prohibits strikes. In all of the above cases, he said, there is a "clear and present danger to the community" that makes use of the strike weapon impossible.

'Considerable Confusion'

Beyond that, he added, there is "considerable confusion" about the whole issue of collective bargaining and strikes in the public service. Noting the New York City transit strike, Wurf said the issue that concerned New Yorkers was not that the subway and bus workers were public employes but that the strike caused public inconvenience.

He noted that in many cities where transportation lines are operated by private companies a strike may cause inconvenience "but it does not concern governmental labor-management relations."

Good labor-management relations in the public and private sectors must be concerned with fundamental problems. State and local officials must deal with the problems of their employes, "not sweep them under the rug."

Wurf said collective bargaining has proven itself in the public service and must be protected and strengthened to eliminate substandard conditions and grievances, "and thus promote good government."

Leaders Join To Back LBJ On Viet Funds

House Democratic and Republican leaders predicted strong bipartisan support for Pres. Johnson's request for an additional $12.7 billion to support the war effort in Viet Nam.

The President's request included $12.3 billion for the Defense Dept. and $415 million for the Agency for Intl. Development. The AID money would be used for supplies for the civilian population of Viet Nam, rural construction, port expansion and refugee relief.

"We are engaged in a major effort to open a road to a peaceful settlement," the President wrote House Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.), and "we will continue to press on every door."

Nevertheless, the President stressed, "until the aggression ends, we must do all that is necessary to support our allies and our own fighting forces in Viet Nam.

The House also received from the Senate the first major bill acted on this year—to set up a "wild rivers" system and preserve undammed and in their natural state seven free-flowing streams. Seventeen other rivers were listed for study to determine whether they should be added to the list.

The measure passed the Senate with ease—71 to 1. But the Administration-backed bill apparently faces a harder fight in the House. Chairman Wayne N. Aspinall (D-Colo.) of the House Interior Committee said his committee would be too busy to consider the bill.

Bargaining in Civil Service Proves Value

Collective bargaining in the federal civil service has been good for the government and the public as well as unions, Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy declared.

In the four years since Pres. Kennedy's Executive Order on union recognition, hundreds and thousands of federal workers have voted for union representation and are covered by union contracts, he noted.

Maturity Growing

Union-management relations are not without problems, he said, but these are being handled with "growing maturity."

Macy spoke at a dinner attended by more than 1,000 members of the American Federation of Government Employes marking the 83rd anniversary of the signing of the Civil Service Act.

Chairman A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla.) of the Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee told the AFGE gathering that 1966 will be "a bigger and better year for federal employes" in terms of legislative gains.

Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.), ranking majority member of the committee, spelled out some of the goals in a major speech.

During 1966, he predicted, Congress will "put teeth into the comparability principle" that federal salaries keep pace with comparable jobs in private industry.

"Just because there was a raise last year does not mean that there should not be another raise this year—or next year," he said. "Until this comparability gap is closed, government employes must continue to have their pay raised, and I will support them in that effort."

State Body Offers 16 Scholarships

San Francisco—The California AFL-CIO is offering 16 scholarships worth $500 each to this year's seniors in public and private high schools throughout the state.

Awards will be made on the basis of two-hour examinations on Apr. 15 in each high school where applicants have filed. The aim is to evaluate the student's knowledge and understanding of labor, business, industrial and governmental problems and his ability to present what he knows.

Labor Pledges Fight For Domestic Budget

Labor will "fight in every way we know how" to prevent budget slashes in health, welfare, education and anti-poverty programs, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller declared.

Conservatives in Congress may try to use the Viet Nam war as an excuse for slashing these programs and for putting off action on needed domestic legislation, Biemiller said. But he stressed that "the American economy is quite capable of supporting both the war in Viet Nam and a full-fledged Great Society program."

Biemiller was interviewed on Labor News Conference, broadcast over the Mutual Radio Network.

Repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act remains "at the top of our list" of legislative goals, the federation spokesman said. "We are going to lend every bit of energy we have to try to get repeal of 14(b) to a vote" in the Senate, he declared.

If the Senate is blocked by a filibuster from acting on the repeal bill, Biemiller warned, it would reflect " a serious breakdown of the Amercan representative form of government."

Other major legislation of special interest to labor, he said:

- The AFL-CIO is "very desirous" of enactment of a higher minimum wage extended to additional millions of workers.
- Labor "will be putting a lot of effort" into passage of federal standards on unemployment compensation benefits—"a bill for which we have fought for many, many years."
- The jobsite picketing bill, "'recommended for passage by Presidents Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson . . . should be passed."
- Labor is "anxious" to get "truth-in-packaging" and "truth-in-lending" bills "out of committee and to the floor for action."
- It is "high time" that Congress approved self-government for the District of Columbia.
- The AFL-CIO favors "legislation that would give greater protection to civil rights workers."

Despite the continued improvement in the economy, Biemiller said, the AFL-CIO won't be satisfied until unemployment is down to an "irreducible minimum" of "between 2.5 and 3 percent."

The federation's legislative director was interviewed by Richard L. Strout of the Christian Science Monitor and Hobart Rowen of the Washington Post.

Rubber Union Ends Lee Tire Boycott

Akron, O.—The Rubber Workers announced the lifting of a boycott of the Lee Tire Co., Conshohocken, Pa., following purchase of the plant by the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. and the signing of an agreement with URW Local 227.

The "don't buy" campaign was inaugurated Mar. 18, 1965, when the former management, headed by Maurice Clairmont, handed the union an ultimatum whose nine points included a 20 percent wage cut and "complete emasculation" of fringe benefits. Since the purchase the URW has won a National Labor Relations Board election by a 209-4 vote, secured the re-hiring of many former Lee workers and negotiated a contract that follows the Goodyear national pattern.

Strike Penalties Stayed In N.Y. Transit Walkout

New York—Condon-Wadlin Act strike penalties against 36,000 transit workers were stayed by a court here as negotiators for the Transit Authority and two unions continued to work out the exact language of a contract based on their strike settlement of Jan. 13.

A 12-day tieup of busses and subway trains ended in an agreement giving members of the Transport Workers and the Amalgamated Transit Union improved benefits that will bring them closer to their objective of wage parity with other city workers, according to union spokesmen.

When final details are agreed to, transit employes will get wage hikes of 4 percent, retroactive to Jan. 1; another 4 percent next Jan. 1, and an additional 7 percent on July 7, 1967, to achieve a rate of $4 an hour in mid-1967 for skilled workers now at $3.4625. The pact also calls for working condition improvements, health and welfare gains and increased pension benefits.

Chairman Nathan P. Feinsinger of the three-man panel that mediated the settlement said all the money items involved are "clearly within the guidelines" recommended by the President's Council of Economic Advisers. Mayor John V. Lindsay, who took office the day the strike started, said he agrees with Feinsinger.

In an analysis written for union and management bargainers, Feinsinger said that the national economic stabilization program is designed to regulate wages and prices, but not to freeze them. It is clear, he observed, that the guideposts contemplate correction of inequities.

The case for correction of such inequities rests primarily on the belief that certain Transit Authority employes are paid substantially less than city employes in comparable jobs, he wrote.

Still resting in a hospital was TWU Pres. Michael Quill, who collapsed in the city Civil Jail before the settlement and is reported considerably improved. During the absence of Quill and eight other jailed union leaders, TWU's Douglas L. MacMahon headed the labor negotiators. At its end he praised the mediators for their help—Feinsinger, Sylvester Garrett and Theodore W. Kheel.

Still to be settled is the applicability of the Condon-Wadlin Act to the transit strike. The act penalizes public employes who stage a walkout.

Samuel to Rejoin Clothing Union Staff

New York—Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers has announced that Howard D. Samuel, who left the union staff a year ago to become vice president of the New School for Social Research, will return to the ACWA in his former capacity.

He will be executive director of the Sidney Hillman Foundation as well as director of the ACWA Union Label Dept. and head of the union's political education and legislative activities.

Weaver Joins Cabinet As Urban Dept. Chief

Robert C. Weaver took office as the nation's first secretary of Housing & Urban Development to a chorus of good wishes and praise.

Weaver's appointment was confirmed by the Senate unanimously and with near-record speed. The first Negro to achieve Cabinet rank was hailed for his fairness and ability by Democrats and Republicans alike—and by southern senators who five years earlier had opposed his confirmation as housing administrator.

At a White House swearing-in ceremony, Pres. Johnson assigned the new department the responsibility "to make our cities livable" and to deal with the "human needs" of 135 mililon city-dwellers "as well as bricks and mortar."

Cooperation Stressed

Labor looks forward "to a close and constructive working cooperation," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wrote Weaver.

Meany expressed labor's gratification that the President "has enlisted an administrator with your experience, knowledge and understanding. We know that the working people of the nation and all Americans will benefit from your leadership in the national effort to guide urban America toward better living for all."

To fill the second post in the department, the President picked Prof. Robert C. Wood of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who directed a presidential study on the organization of the new department.

Weaver had also been the announced choice of Pres. Kennedy for the Cabinet post. But Congress twice rebuffed Kennedy's efforts to set up the new department, by legislation and by executive order. The bill authorizing the department was finally approved last year.

The nucleus of the new department is the Housing & Home Finance Agency, which Weaver had headed since 1961.

Real 'Right-to-Work' Bill Offered Congress

A Texas congressman has introduced a "real right to work bill" which would oblige the government to provide jobs for persons unable to find employment in private industry.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez (D) said he hopes his bill will restore the phrase "right to work" to its "original and true meaning."

He termed use of the phrase to describe legislation banning the union shop "one of the most flagrant deceptions visited upon Americans in recent years." It is used, he charged, by those who "mock" the workingman.

Gonzalez said his bill would set a 3 percent ceiling on unemployment and obligate the federal government to provide jobs in either public or private employment for each person "able, ready and willing to work."

Low-Income Housing Goal Of D.C. Unit

The Housing Development Corp., a broadly-representative community organization devoted to making housing available to low-income groups, has been set up in Washington with labor participation.

The board of directors includes Pres. Jay C. Turner of the Greater Washington AFL-CIO; Boris Shishkin, secretary of the AFL-CIO Housing Committee, and Exec. Dir. Jack Conway of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

The new body is submitting a request for a demonstration grant of $3.5 million to the Office of Economic Opportunity. Most of the money, if granted, would go into a revolving fund to be used for the construction, rehabilitation or leasing of private housing for low-income tenants.

If the request is approved it would be the largest sum ever given by the OEO. The United Planning Organization, which coordinates the war on poverty in the Washington area, and its advisory board, the Metropolitan Citizens Advisory Council, have approved the program.

A 27-page prospectus accompanying the application for federal funds notes that 1960 census figures showed 98,336 substandard housing units in the Washington area; 58,288 described as overcrowded; 38,110 that were deteriorated and 9,814 found dilapidated.

Existing public and private agencies, the prospectus says, have been "utterly unable" to solve the low-income housing crisis dramatized by the census figures.

AFL-CIO Aide Denies Economy 'Overheating'

Pittsburgh—Organized labor sees no "overheating" of the economy and believes economic growth should be continued along with social and economic programs to strengthen American society, a labor spokesman told the Economic Club of Pittsburgh.

If the Viet Nam situation worsens, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger told the city's top business executives, and a rise in military expenditures becomes necessary, then a 2-point increase in the tax on corporate profits may be needed.

It would be wrong, unwise and probably dangerous to cut back or freeze such government programs as the anti-poverty effort, aid to education and aid to metropolitan areas, Goldfinger added.

The present slack in the use of manpower and plant and the expansion in productive potential provide ample room for substantial increases in consumer demand without the danger of inflationary shortages, he explained.

Goldfinger said the improved performance of the past two years —in rising output and reduced unemployment—is evidence of the importance of federal fiscal policies in managing the economy.

Nevertheless, he added, the nation is still some distance from the full employment of its manpower and productive capacity. The challenge of sustained economic growth is still to be met and social problems remain unsolved, he noted.

And yet, there have been warnings that the economy is becoming "overheated" and proposals to put on the brakes and suggestions to cut back economic and social programs.

Labor sees no evidence at present of any general "overheating" of the economy, he declared.

Goldfinger said there are still many unemployed and under employed, with joblessness high among such groups as Negroes and teenagers. Industry generally is operating at about 90 percent of capacity, a level below the preferred operating rates of most firms, he added.

Moreover, he stressed, there has been a rapid growth in the productive potential of the economy. Productivity is rising rapidly and business investment in new plant and equipment has risen by 6 percent in 1965 and is slated to rise by 7 percent this year.

The labor force also is growing rapidly, he said.

All these factors permit ample room for "substantial increases" of demand without widespread inflationary shortages, Goldfinger asserted. He said the economy can absorb the rise in real total national production of about 5 to 5.25 percent as implied in Pres. Johnson's State of the Union message.

Former Unionist Fills VISTA Post

Thomas P. Powers, formerly a State, County & Municipal Employes business representative in Washington, has been named director of recruitment for the VISTA Volunteers.

Powers has been a VISTA staff member since last April, developing and administering volunteer training programs. A veteran of five years with the Internal Revenue Service, in his new post he will direct a drive to recruit between 2,000 and 3,000 persons to work for a year among the poor and underprivileged in urban slums and Appalachian and migrant farm labor communities, and on Indian reservations.

Dirksen Blocks Action:

Senate Renews Fight On 14(b) Repeal Vote

Biemiller, interviewed on the Mutual Network program Capital Assignment, pointed out that the filibuster itself is evidence that Dirksen and his allies know the Senate would vote for repeal.

Public opinion, he noted, has been tested in eight state referendums since 1958, "seven of which we won by overwhelming votes."

While "it is not strictly a party issue" since "some Republicans have been on our side all along," it was an issue in the 1960 and 1964 presidential campaigns, Biemiller pointed out.

Dirksen's Strategy

He reiterated labor's belief that "the reason Sen. Dirksen has taken such a leading role in this fight is that he has been very anxious to pass a constitutional amendement to undo the one man, one vote ruling of the United States Supreme Court."

The AFL-CIO, Biemiller noted, "has fought him on this matter every way we know how" and has made it clear that labor is not willing to make a "deal" to let the reapportionment amendment pass in return for 14(b) repeal.

He said the Senate's cloture rule — requiring a two-thirds vote to limit debate—will be of no immediate help in breaking a filibuster.

But after prolonged debate—running a number of weeks—"you may find the pressures getting so strong that senators will either use Rule 22 [the cloture provision] or will find other ways of persuading Sen. Dirksen that there should be a vote, up or down, on the question of the repeal of 14(b)," he said.

Once the motion is made to take up the repeal bill, the Senate will recess instead of adjourning at the end of each day providing repeal supporters keep a quorum on hand.

The reason for this lies in the Senate rules on debate. While a vote cannot be forced—short of cloture—so long as any senator wishes and is qualified to speak, there is this limitation:

No senator can claim the floor to speak on the same bill or amendment more than twice in any legislative day.

Even with sundry other delaying tactics, the time must eventually come when all senators participating in a filibuster exhaust their two speeches. However lack of a quorum—51 of the 100 senators—can force an adjournment. This ends the legislative day and opens up a new round of two speeches each.

In a full-scale filibuster, the minority often leaves only two senators on the floor—one speaking and the other to protect parliamentary rights and give the speaker a rest by intervening with lengthy comments. The majority then must have 49 senators near at hand to answer quorum calls. It puts a serious crimp on out-of-town speaking engagements for the majority and necessitates an effective "whip" system whereby the leadership knows at all times where each friendly senator can be reached.

Normally a filibuster does not begin until a bill is actually before the Senate. Dirksen's tactic—the first time that a party leader has led a filibuster—is in effect a double filibuster. If he loses on the first round, and the repeal bill becomes the "pending order of business" for the Senate, he will be able to repeat the filibuster in an effort to block final passage of the bill.

Mansfield said initially the Senate sessions would not begin "too early" or last "too late." Customarily, as a filibuster continues, the length of sessions is extended as a means of wearing down the filibuster.

Al Whitehouse Takes Kentucky Poverty Post

Frankfort, Ky.—Former Dir. Al Whitehouse of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., one-time director of Steelworkers District 25, has been appointed Kentucky coordinator of the Office of Economic Opportunity by Gov. Edward T. Breathitt.

NEW POSTMASTER GENERAL, Lawrence F. O'Brien, visited the headquarters of the Postal Clerks to meet with union officers. From left: Ira Kapenstein, assistant to the postmaster general; Sec.-Treas. Owen Schoon; Exec. Vice Pres. Don Dunn; O'Brien and Pres. E. C. Hallbeck.

Johnson Sends Election Plan To Congress

Washington and reduce their capacity both in campaigning for reelection and in legislating, the President wrote. An added burden is imposed by the "increasing costs of campaigning," which he said magnified the influence of "large contributors, pressure groups and special-interest lobbyists."

A four-year term of office, with elections in the same year that the President himself is chosen, would assure the widest participation of voters and strengthen the House as a partner in government, he urged.

State Action Slow

Under Johnson's recommendations, the four-year term would not take effect before the 1972 elections, at the earliest.

The President's proposed constitutional amendment on the Electoral College would eliminate the independence of unpledged electors, which might be "exploited" to throw an election into the House, he warned, and result in the eventual choice of a minority President.

It might also result in the choice of a President and Vice President from different parties, he pointed out, since the Senate selects the Vice President if the Electoral College fails to turn up a majority.

He said that "gaps" in existing law—the lack of provision for the death of candidates shortly before an election or either the President-elect or Vice President-elect after an election—should be filled in the interests of sound self-government.

Dirksen Opens New Drive on 1 Man, 1 Vote

Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen announced a new campaign—"a solid financial undertaking"—to drum up support for his constitutional amendment to escape one man, one vote apportionment.

Dirksen said he has accepted "at the request of my colleagues" the chairmanship of a new group to be called "A Committee for Government of the People."

The actual campaign—using radio, television and other media —will be handled by the California public relations firm of Whitaker & Baxter.

The Whitaker & Baxter firm, which has run a number of GOP campaigns in California, was employed by the American Medical Association to fight Pres. Truman's original health insurance plan.

eral pension benefits—reminding them of the medical care benefits and urging them to enroll. To date more than 10 million have replied of whom more than 8.5 million elected to take the medical care coverage.

"Ten percent—one in 10—have failed to do so," Meany noted with concern. "This is serious in itself. But even more serious is the problem of the other millions, including many who are not otherwise covered by social security but who are eligible for Medicare benefits.

"It would be a tragedy if the Medicare program, for which the AFL-CIO fought so long and so hard, should fall short of its objectives because its intended beneficiaries are unaware of the facts.

"At the very least we should make sure that our own members —not only the retirees and those who are 65 or older, but also those who have elderly persons in the family—realize the value of this insurance program and the need to meet the Mar. 31 deadline."

Meany made two more points:

- Everybody 65 or older should enroll, even if he is still working and plans to continue working.
- The undecided should enroll now even if they are not sure they can afford the $3. This, he pointed out, will protect their rights while they make up their minds; and if they decide they don't have $3 a month to spend for medical expenses, they can withdraw by July 1, 1966, without having paid anything.

"I strongly urge every international union and every state and local central body," Meany said in a final plea, "to spread the word through every available means. I can think of no greater community service the labor movement could perform during these next 2½ months than helping to bring about maximum participation in this program."

The hospitalization and nursing home benefits constitute Part A of Medicare and are more or less automatic, though those not receiving social security, railroad retirement or federal pension benefits or who have not worked in covered occupations should get in touch with their Social Security District Office immediately. The address can be obtained from local post offices or, in larger communities, in city directories or telephone books.

Part B of Medicare is the part that helps pay doctors' bills and some additional services not covered under Part A, and is voluntary. This is what Meany had in mind in urging the labor movement to help step up enrollments.

UAW Settles Suit With Studebaker

South Bend, Ind.—Some 3,000 retried employes of the Studebaker Co. will continue to receive health and life insurance coverage under a $900,000 settlement with the Auto Workers which has been approved by Judge Robert A. Grant in U.S. District Court here.

The company, a pioneer in the auto industry, has moved all of its operations to Canada and the contract requiring the health and life insurance protection for pensioners expired in October 1964.

The settlement stems from a suit the UAW filed shortly after the old contract expired.

to complete action on the tax legislation by Mar. 15.

He wrote Ways & Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) that failure to enact the legislation would force either additional government borrowing, an increase in corporate and personal income tax rates, or other new taxes.

Higher tax rates "are not clearly required at this time," the President said, adding that he "will not hesitate to request additional money if it is needed."

Johnson added that "if our efforts for peaceful resolution of the Viet Nam situation are successful —and those efforts will continue day and night—then your government's need for revenues will be sharply reduced, thus permitting downward tax revisions."

Testifying on the legislation, Treasury Sec. Fowler said the goal "is to avoid additional stimulus, diminish the inflationary potential in the economy, and raise federal revenues to a point where we can project a near balanced budget in a near full employment economy."

Wage Guide Shift Scored; LBJ Sees Inflation Threat

Dirksen Kicks Off Filibuster

A Senate majority committed to repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act probed for a way to get the House-passed bill to the Senate floor in the face of an all-out filibuster.

The issue was the Senate's right to vote.

Majority Leader Mike Mansfield opened the effort with an appeal to reason and fairness.

He asked Republican Leader Everett Dirksen to let senators consider the bill on its merits and permit them to vote for or against it "on the basis of their convictions." He asked that the Senate Labor Committee, which voted overwhelmingly to recommend the bill, be given "the simple courtesy" of having the legislation discussed.

Dirksen's reply, interspersed with assurances of "deep and abiding affection" for the majority leader, was a declaration that he will use "whatever weapons are available" under Senate rules "to prevent what I believe to be offensive legislation from coming to a vote."

The filibuster—and the effort to wear it down—began in earnest

Viet Nam Effect Felt:

Flexible Budget Ups Great Society Funds

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Johnson proposed to Congress a "flexible" $112.8 billion budget providing increased funds for Great Society health, education and poverty programs, with cuts elsewhere to help pay for Viet Nam war expenses.

The President said the additional $3.2 billion sought for high-priority domestic programs is "below what might have been proposed in less troubled times."

If an "honorable peace" can be achieved in Southeast Asia, he suggested, the $10.5 billion earmarked for the war effort could be shifted "to make even faster progress" towards a Great Society.

If more money is needed to meet military emergencies "or should unforeseen inflationary pressures develop," additional brakes might be put on the domestic economy, Johnson indicated. He described the budget's goal as "strong but non-inflationary economic growth."

Nearly 75 percent of the budget will go to defense-related costs, including interest on national debts incurred during past wars and veterans' benefits.

By every measure of income and expenditure, the fiscal 1967 budget comes close to balancing the amount of money the government will spend and the amount it will take in.

Federal spending is estimated at $112.8 billion, up $6.4 billion from this year. If the special costs of the Viet Nam war were excluded

President Asks for Restraint

By Saul Miller

Pres. Johnson coupled a prediction for continued economic growth in 1966 with a warning that voluntary acceptance of wage-price guidelines by business and labor is the key to preventing inflation.

Both the prediction and warning were contained in the President's annual Economic Report in which he said that while "our prosperity does not depend on our military effort," the new requirements of Viet Nam "make our task of maintaining price stability more difficult."

To maintain this stability, the President said, "it is vitally important that labor and industry follow" the wage-price guideposts created by the Kennedy Administration and reaffirmed and emphasized by the Johnson Administration.

The report of the President's Council of Economic Advisers stressed what it called the "increasing significance" of the guideposts since 1962 and recommended that the general guide for wage increases be retained at 3.2 percent a year, despite the fact that application of its own past measurements would increase the figure to 3.6 percent in 1966.

The council acknowledged that the application of its five-year average to productivity trends and re-

AFL-CIO Reaffirms Position

The AFL-CIO commended Pres. Johnson for his "efforts to strength American society" but reaffirmed its opposition to the Administration's wage-price guidelines, charging the latest change "undermines their very credibility."

Federation Pres. George Meany, in a statement on the President's Economic Report, stressed that the report contains no evidence for "downward pressures on wage increases" which would result from the changes determining the wage-price guidelines by the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

If the President, however, determines that a national emergency exists, Meany said, "we are prepared to sacrifice . . . so long as there is equality of sacrifice."

Meany noted that the President said in his message that unit labor costs "have barely moved, as gains in productivity have largely offset increases in hourly labor costs."

On the other hand, Meany emphasized, profits in 1965 increased 20 percent after taxes, "more than twice as fast as the rise of all wage and salary payments combined."

The AFL-CIO president praised Johnson for his policy of expanding Great Society programs while seeking an honorable settlement in Viet Nam and for the general improvement in economic conditions and the reduc-

President Renews Call For 14(b) Repeal Action

Pres. Johnson took advantage of three opportunities in recent days to reiterate the call for repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act which he made in his State of the Union message.

Two additional appeals for action were made in reports to Congress:

"Strong and responsible collective bargaining is an important instrument of a free and healthy economy," he declared in his economic report. "To improve its functioning and to make the national labor policy uniform throughout the country, I again urge Congress to repeal Section 14(b)."

He used his budget message also to urge repeal, even though the issue carries no dollar tag.

The President put a "priority" label on the repeal bill in a joint filmed appearance with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. In the film, addressed to COPE area conferences throughout the nation, Johnson declared:

"Repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act and a uniform national labor relations policy were part of the Democratic platform in 1960 and again in 1964.

"They shall be an important part of this Administration's effort in 1966. I urge Congress to act early and to act decisively."

Business Group Opens Attack on Jobless Pay

Business and industry have launched a campaign to block enactment of legislation—backed by three Administrations and the AFL-CIO—aimed at updating the unemployment compensation laws by setting up federal standards.

Unemployment Benefit Advisers, Inc., an employers' organization dedicated to keeping jobless benefits to a minimum, touched off the drive by mailing to its members advance reprints of an attack on the proposal scheduled for the February issue of Reader's Digest.

The article, "New Grab for Federal Power: Unemployment Benefits," by Earl and Anne Selby, calls the legislation pending in Congress an encroachment on states' rights by "a cabal of labor leaders and Washington bureaucrats" and describes it as a move to "bring us all a step nearer to the complete welfare state."

The reprints were distributed by UBA even before the magazine was on the news stands, with an extravagant endorsement by Stanley Rector, executive director.

"The 'facts and figures' will stand up under any attack," he

Citrus Plant Workers Pick Steel Union

Winter Park, Fla.—Bargaining rights for 1,397 workers at the Cyprus Gardens Citrus Products Co., called by management "the world's largest diversified citrus plant," have been won by the Steelworkers.

Overcoming an anti-labor campaign which included an anonymous threat to bomb Station WSIR here for carrying union-sponsored announcements, the USWA won a National Labor Relations Board election, 698-528, with 20 void or challenged ballots.

It had the aid of a plant committee and volunteer organizers from nearby can plants where the USWA has union contract conditions.

The plant is at Eloise, near here. Company employes pack, process and ship fresh and canned citrus fruit and fruit juices.

The USWA moved into this field in 1963 because many such plants use portable can lines and pay wages far below those in the organized can industry, the union said.

IT WAS JUST A COINCIDENCE, but Ben Martin (left), USIA labor information officer in Santiago, Chile, a former organizer for the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, was reading in the IUE News about the Peace Corps enlistment of Dick Steele (right), a member of IUE Local 210 in Lynn, Mass., when the latter walked in to take up his assignment.

Plant Cafeteria Prices Ruled Bargainable Issue

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that the prices charged in company cafeterias are conditions of employment subject to collective bargaining between management and labor.

The board, by a 3-2 vote, found that Westinghouse Electric Corp. had illegally refused to bargain over cafeteria price changes at its three plants in Baltimore, Md. It directed the company to negotiate the matter on request with an unaffiliated union representing employes.

The company, the majority said, was not obliged to bargain about every change in food prices because of the nature of the restaurant business—constant shifts in the cost of food, the large number of items sold and menu changes—but it could have satisfied the law by bargaining in good faith when requested to do so.

The two dissenting members—Howard Jenkins, Jr., and Sam Zagoria—said they agree that collective bargaining is good for labor-management health "but if bargaining over a penny-a-cup increase in coffee becomes mandatory . . . the result is liable to be acute indigestion."

The majority—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown—found the dissent unrealistic.

"The dispute is not limited to the price of coffee . . . but extends to all prices charged in the cafeterias," they noted. "Respondent has cafeterias on its premises because there are inadequate dining facilities within a reasonable distance.

An Inducement to Work

"If it did not have these facilities, it would not be able to attract the necessary number of employes to man its plants. In practical terms, on-site eating facilities are held out . . . as an inducement to work for respondent.

"They are thus conditions of employment. The problem is as simple as that."

It is no answer, the majority continued, to say that employes can bring their lunches if they do not like the prices. "We suppose that employes can also eat cake, if the cafeterias do not serve bread . . . or can go elsewhere," they added.

The dissenting members who spoke of leaving price increases "to the mercies of the voluntary action of the market place" overlook the fact, the majority said, that "there is no market place and no competition" in such cafeterias.

"Experience tells us," they said, "that disputes over plant conditions that may appear of minor significance . . . can lead to the disruption of operations. . . . It is therefore within the objective and meaning" of the law to "submit such controversies to the healing processes of collective bargaining."

Strike Aid Can't Be Cut From Back Pay Award

An employer may not deduct union strike benefits from backpay owed strikers whom he unlawfully fired, a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has ruled.

Neither should strikers be penalized for not responding to "help wanted" ads offering jobs in unrelated occupations at lower wages, Examiner Maurice S. Bush said.

Bush recommended that the Florence Printing Co., publisher of the Florence, S. C., Morning News, be ordered by the NLRB to pay more than $50,000 in wages due 13 strikers without deducting some $30,000 in strike benefits paid by the Typographical Union in 1962-64.

The company, through Publisher J. M. O'Dowd, contended that the strike benefits are deductible from backpay because the benefits are taxable as gross income under Internal Revenue Service rulings and therefore should be regarded as earned income. Bush ruled that strike benefits were not paid by the union for services rendered by the strikers and were not earned income.

The company also took the position that the strikers did not respond to the numerous help wanted ads in its newspaper offering jobs as clerks and managers at from $40 to $65 a week. The striking printers had earned at least $96 a week.

No showing was made that any striker ever was offered, or turned down, any of the advertised jobs, the examiner noted, adding "the strikers were not required to 'lower their sights' . . . by taking jobs which were not substantially equivalent" to their composing room jobs.

The examiner ruled that the advertised jobs were not "suitable to the background and experience of the 13 strikers as they were wholly unrelated to the typographical trades in which they worked."

Only one striker would be denied his full backpay, minus interim earnings, under the ruling. The examiner found that one individual refused to take a comparable job on another newspaper.

The strike, by members of Charleston, S. C., ITU Local 43, began Sept. 5, 1962. More than a year later the NLRB ordered reinstatement of the strikers and the publisher commenced rehiring on June 29, 1964, after being ordered to do so by the 4th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Meat Cutters Win Election At Heinz Unit

Burley, Ida.—The Meat Cutters scored an important organizing victory at a potato-processing plant here, one of the biggest in the Northwest.

With 1,482 workers eligible to vote at the Ore-Ida Frozen Food plant of the H. J. Heinz Co., the results in a National Labor Relations Board election were 663 for the union, 650 against and four void ballots.

A successful three-month campaign was headed by Meat Cutters' Vice Pres. Charles J. Mentrin of Seattle, Wash., with AFL-CIO Regional Dir. James J. Leary and his staff assisting.

Leary said the drive was won by a good in-plant committee, the cooperation of area unions and a campaign which made effective use of radio, television, handbills and house calls to counter local management's "vote no union" appeal. Helpful also, he said, was the action of the Grain Millers in withdrawing from a plant which had been an organizing objective.

Hotel Union Wins New Orleans Vote

New Orleans—The Hotel & Restaurant Employes won bargaining rights for more than 800 workers at a famous Deep South hotel here—the Roosevelt—after two closely-contested National Labor Relations Board elections.

Workers in the 900-room hostelry chose the union, 365 to 338 for no union, with 23 challenged ballots not sufficient to change the runoff result. The vote in an earlier election had been 340 for the union, 251 no union, 141 for the expelled Teamsters and one challenged ballot.

The long-unorganized hotel was sold by Seymour Weiss, former owner, during the organizing campaign. New owners, the Swig interests, staged a strong anti-union campaign whose edge was blunted with the aid of Hotel & Restaurant Employes representatives from other cities where the same management has union contracts.

Among them, Dir. of Organization Charles Paulsen said, was Pres. Joseph Belardi of the San Francisco AFL-CIO, who gave details of the contracts under which employes operate at two other Swig hotels—the Fairmont in San Francisco and the Mission Inn at Riverside, Calif.

Belardi spoke at several employe meetings here during the campaign. He heads the hotel union's San Francisco Joint Board.

Only two other local hotels had been organized before the vote at the Roosevelt — the Sheraton Charles and the Sheraton Delta, formerly the Claibourne Towers.

All Roosevelt departments are included in the bargaining unit—the housekeeping, front desk, food and beverage, laundry, maintenance and front office staffs. The Roosevelt has many Negro and white workers and, said Williams, "we organized them together." The workers will form one local union.

Paulsen said his organizers had the "fullest cooperation" of the AFL-CIO regional office staff headed by Dir. E. H. Williams.

Gypsum Pact Ends Walkout Of 168 Days

Fort Dodge, Ia.—A settlement called one of the best in the gypsum industry was won here after a 168-day strike by Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Local 6-503.

The strikers voted Jan. 16 to accept a three-year contract offer including wage hikes of 4.5, 3 and 3 percent in each year of the pact; a wage escalator tied to the cost-of-living index; and a pension plan effective in 1967.

The cost-of-living escalator clause was a major union objective in a plant where wages have long been substandard, OCAW Intl. Rep. Ernest J. Toth reported.

Other gains included a major medical plan, improved sickness and accident payments, life insurance, accelerated vacations and other benefits.

Assistance from the local labor movement and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. were called major factors in the strike's success.

BritishColumbiaPattern Settles OCAW Strikes

Toronto, Ont.—The Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers have won strike settlements in all but two refineries of the British American Oil Co. on the basis of the formula virtually imposed by Premier W. A. C. Bennett to head off a province-wide strike in British Columbia last November.

The union used the same pattern to reach new contracts covering Ontario operations of Texaco Canada, Ltd., and BP Canada, Ltd.

The union had struck BA refineries last September when the company refused any job security improvements despite the advance of automation in the industry. Bennett acted in late November when the British Columbia Federation of Labor urged a 48-hour strike by all affiliates as an expression of support for the OCAW.

ELECTED president of the Oakland (Calif.) Board of Port Commissioners is Joseph W. Chaudet, managing editor and general manager of the East Bay Labor Journal and a former president of Oakland Typographical Union Local 36.

The Premier proposed the creation of a committee on automation and technological change; six months' notice of technological change leading to layoffs; cooperation in training and re-training workers, and severance pay for laid-off employes equal to a week's pay for each year of service up to a 26-week maximum. In addition, Bennett suggested a three-step wage increase totaling 35 cents an hour on top of rates ranging from $2 to $3.26 and averaging about $2.75 an hour.

The BA settlements were reached at installations in Brandon, Man.; Port Moody and Kamloops, B. C., and Clarkson, Ont. Still on strike are BA refineries at Saskatoon and Moose Jaw, Sask.

The Port Moody settlement was held up by the company's initial insistence on splitting the province into three zones for seniority purposes. At Clarkson BA tried in vain to have employes bumped into lower grades returned to their old jobs at reduced rates.

Acceptance of last minute agreements based on the Bennett formula headed off OCAW strikes at the Texaco refinery in Port Credit and the BP Canada operation in Trafalgar Township.

Retirees Benefit:

CWA Pact Expands On Medicare Base

The Communications Workers have reached agreement with the Ohio Bell Telephone Co. integrating Blue Cross-Blue Shield benefits for retired employes with the social security Medicare program.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said that, as of next July 1, 4,600 Ohio Bell retirees will get the benefit of three significant changes in the company's private hospital and medical care program:

- Medicare becomes the basic health insurance for retirees aged 65 or over, and their dependents. The role of the private plan will be to supplement Medicare's provisions so that no gaps in protection will occur.
- Minimum payments of $100 to $500 before an insured could qualify for "extraordinary medical expense" benefits will be waived for those over 65 and coverage will apply to 80 percent of all extraordinary costs.
- Ohio Bell will no longer deduct $9.34 a month from pension checks of retirees to cover part of the Blue Cross-Blue Shield premium. Instead, management will pay the entire premium for retired employes and thus give their income a boost, the union said.

Retirees who want to be covered by full social security Medicare benefits must still enroll in the federal program by Mar. 31 and agree to pay $3 a month toward the cost of underwriting doctor's bills.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany recently urged the entire labor movement to make sure that all union members over 65, and those with dependents over 65, enroll for medical benefits.

Meany pointed out that, unlike the hospitalization benefits, the Medicare coverage of doctors' bills and other medical costs is not automatic. Each individual must sign for it and agree to pay a monthly premium to be matched by the government.

Those who fail to sign up by Mar. 31, Meany noted, cannot join until October 1967 and then will have to pay more than $3 a month.

Beirne said the Ohio Bell agreement is one of the first of its kind ever negotiated. He emphasized its "pattern" nature for other CWA bargaining units and in telegrams to presidents of other Bell System companies urged prompt negotiation of similar pacts.

Especially significant in the Ohio Bell settlement, Beirne said, was company assurance that the premiums it will pay for the new insurance program will, in tandem with Medicare, cover all benefits provided for pensioners.

In the past, he pointed out, the active employes have paid part of the cost of medical insurance for pensioners since the latter's claims have exceeded total premiums paid for their coverage.

With Medicare and Blue Cross-Blue Shield meeting all the costs in the future, he predicted a "more favorable experience rating for active workers and a reduction in the present premium cost."

Beirne called the new program "another step" in a continuing drive to obtain "100 percent company-paid health insurance."

Supreme Court to Hear FEC Work Rule Case

The Supreme Court has agreed to hear arguments on the government's claim that the Florida East Coast Railway had no right to change its work rules unilaterally during an employes' strike now in its fourth year.

The high court granted a motion by the Justice Dept. for hearings in the wage dispute that started Jan. 23, 1963, when the road refused to grant non-operating employes the same wage increases given by most other U.S. railroads.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals allowed the road to change crew complements and working conditions to keep operating during the strike. The government will ask the high court to forbid such changes until the FEC goes through the mediation processes of the Railway Labor Act.

Meanwhile mediation efforts continued in St. Augustine, Fla., on the FEC's notice that it intends to take away further employe protections. In Jacksonville, U.S. District Judge Bryan Simpson gave management until Jan. 29 to file answers to a union motion to lift an injunction that has blocked pickets from effective picketing at Jacksonville since 1963.

Financier Edward Ball, who runs the FEC, told newsmen in Jacksonville he had offered a 15 percent wage increase to his striking employes. Their unions made a counter-proposal accepting the 15 percent subject to union conditions.

At a negotiating session Jan. 21 FEC Vice Pres. R. W. Wyckoff flatly rejected the union counter-offer.

The FEC strike is the longest in rail history, the unions report.

A complete verification of accounts of all members of the AFL-CIO Employes Federal Credit Union was made as of Dec. 31, 1965. Members who do not receive statements by Jan. 31 are asked to notify the Chairman, Supervisory Committee, Room 711, 815 Sixteenth St., N. W., Washington, D. C. 20006.

Union Holds Film Shows For the Deaf

San Diego, Calif.—An increasingly popular program is being offered the deaf by Local 569 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers—monthly showings of movies especially adapted for the hard of hearing.

The films are those which not long before were first-run attractions in area theaters. Captions or dialogue which can be read have been added to the regular sound movies.

The union, which presents the program with the assistance of its Community Services Committee, has extended an invitation to attend to all deaf or hard of hearing persons in the county. As many as 250 have accepted, and the number is growing.

The films are obtained without cost through the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. Robert Knight, the San Diego County AFL-CIO's liaison man with the United Community Services Fund and other recreation and welfare projects, makes arrangements for projectors and volunteer operators.

Officials of welfare agencies and organizations for the hard of hearing have given the project their gratitude and enthusiastic cooperation.

Needs of Older Worker Studied by Conference

More staff and larger appropriations to permit the U.S. Employment Service to step up its services to workers in the upper age brackets were recommended in a panel report to the National Conference on Manpower Training & the Older Worker.

The conference, held in Washington, was told that USES services to older workers, particularly in the field of job recruiting, were "inadequate."

Another report suggested the establishment of teams of personnel counselors and training experts to move rapidly into a hard-hit community—such as South Bend, Ind., after the closing of the Studebaker Co. plant there—and give expert help in channeling idled workers into jobs they can fill.

The conference, sponsored by the National Council on the Aging in cooperation with the Labor Dept. and the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, was particularly concerned with the difficulties of the worker between the ages of 40 and 65.

Charles E. Odell, director of the Auto Workers Older & Retired Workers Dept. and chairman of the conference, said the problems can be eased only by continued financial support for training counseling personnel and by "designing and redesigning" new approaches as experience is gained.

Suggestions on instruction programs for older workers were made by Norman F. Piron, assistant director of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters Training Dept., on the basis of experience with veteran union members.

Courses should be practical, he said, and should be limited to two or three hours a week under competent instructors who have the confidence of the learner. Immediate and practical application of what has been taught Piron described as "the best incentive to learn," with visual aids coupled with demonstration and practice found helpful.

Rep. Clarence Long (D-Md.), active in a "do-it-yourself" job-finding program for older workers in Baltimore, told the conference he plans a bill establishing a Bureau of Older Workers in the Labor Dept. The bureau, he said, would be charged with doing research to "nail down these superstitions" about the competence of older workers, and convincing employers that hiring them pays off.

Exec. Dir. James Cuff O'Brien of the Steelworkers' Committee on Retired Workers was chairman of a panel that discussed efforts to overcome age restrictions in hiring. Research Dir. Vernon Jirikowic of the Machinists analyzed the older worker program of the USES.

Goldberg, Finletter Join Mrs. FDR Foundation

Pres. Johnson has appointed Arthur Goldberg, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, and Thomas Finletter, former U.S. representative to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, to vacancies on the board of trustees of the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation.

Goldberg will fill the unexpired portion of the term of the late Adlai Stevenson, which expires Apr. 22, 1969, while Finletter will serve until Apr. 22, 1971, when the term of the late Bernard Baruch expires.

Welfare Plans Study Impact Of Medicare

New York—The integration of Medicare hospital and medical benefits with those due older men and women under labor-management plans was analyzed at an all-day conference here.

The meeting was sponsored by the New York-Management Council of Health & Welfare Plans, Inc., which represents welfare plans protecting about 1 million workers in New York City. Some 400 trustees, administrators and attorneys representing more than 100 negotiated plans took part in the conference.

Experts from the council and Martin E. Segal & Co., consultants and actuaries to the council and to individual employe benefit plans, discussed Medicare legislation provisions, their broad social and economic effect, the questions they raise for privately-financed plans, and alternatives to duplicated benefits.

Speakers included Assistant Social Security Commissioner Alvin David; Dr. Jack C. Haldeman, president of the Hospital Review & Planning Council of Southern New York; Dr. Alonzo Yerby, city commissioner of hospitals, and Rep. Eugene J. Keogh (D-N.Y.), a member of the House Ways & Means Committee who discussed the legislative aspects of Medicare.

Public Debt as a Percent of GNP

Executive Office of the President . Bureau of the Budget

In Fiscal 1967 Budget:

Great Society Funds Boosted But Viet Nam Costs Are Felt

from both the 1966 and 1967 fiscal years, the total increase would be only $600 million.

Budget receipts are expected to reach $111 billion in fiscal 1967, up $11 billion from the previous year. If it were not for Viet Nam, the budget would show a substantial surplus; even with the war costs, the deficit of $1.8 billion would be $4.6 billion less than this year and the lowest in seven years.

The consolidated cash budget—which includes money taken in and paid out by trust funds such as the social security and highway aid funds—shows an estimated surplus of $500 million.

Figures Are Estimates

All these statistics, of course, are estimates. Congress normally cuts some Administration money requests, increases others.

Tax revenue fluctuates with the economy, and budget estimates represent the educated guess of the Administration's economic advisers. Last year the Administration underestimated its revenue by nearly $6 billion.

To bring the budget estimate for fiscal 1967 close to balance, the President and his aides hacked away at department and agency requests for $130 billion in new funds.

The cutting process is reflected in a stretchout of a number of programs launched last year as well as reductions in other areas.

Thus Great Society programs are budgeted for $3.2 billion more than this year's total of $10.8 billion. But the new budget is $2 billion less than Congress has already authorized for these programs in fiscal 1967.

The anti-poverty program is budgeted for nearly $1.7 billion—a 38 percent rise over this year. The biggest increases go to community action projects and Project Head Start for pre-school children.

Spending will rise sharply for aid to elementary, secondary and higher education programs enacted last year but barely reflected in this year's budget. The amount sought is less, however, than had been anticipated last spring when an elated Johnson signed the school aid bill and said: "This is just the beginning."

The President repeated his request to Congress to finance a Teachers Corps to serve in schools in poverty neighborhoods.

Impacted Areas Hit

Funds for the congressionally popular "impacted areas" program would be heavily cut under the President's budget, with many large cities disqualified for aid. This long-standing program is intended to compensate communities for costs of educating children of federal military and civilian personnel.

The federally-subsidized milk program would be limited to the needy in another budget cut.

Housing and urban renewal funds are increased, with a number of new items representing the start of programs expected to expand more rapidly in future years. One new program was described in the President's State of the Union message as demonstration projects to "rebuild completely, on a scale never before attempted, entire central and slum areas of several of our cities."

More money would be spent for health programs, ranging from research seeking cures for diseases to training of medical technicians to paying the cost of Medicare hospital benefits for elderly persons not covered by social security.

There were cuts in the space budget, in shipping construction subsidies and in Atomic Energy Commission spending.

Apart from program changes, the budget was affected on the income side by proposals for higher parcel post rates, increased "user charges"—fees and taxes designed to meet the cost of government services—including a new tax on heavy trucks. The Administration has already asked a speedup in tax collections and a rollback of some excise tax cuts. The budget also contemplates refinancing government loan programs through sale of "participation certificates" to private lenders at a higher interest rate.

One of the big added cost factors in the new budget is an anticipated $750 million increase in interest on the national debt—resulting from the higher interest rates touched off by the Federal Reserve Board.

The President used the budget message to declare for the first time his support for an increase in the minimum wage as well as expansion of coverage. The labor section of the budget message also stressed the need for improvements in unemployment compensation.

The President foresaw a continuation of "the unprecedented and uninterrupted economic growth of the past five years." He credited it in large part to what some have termed the Administration's "new economics"—tax cuts and budget deficits when employment, buying power and productive capacity are lagging.

"With proper policies," Johnson said, "this growth will extend through the current calendar year and beyond."

In the 1965 calendar year, Johnson said:

- Nearly 2.5 million additional jobs were created.
- Countless new and previously idle plants and machines were put to use.
- Consumer and business incomes reached record levels.
- Unemployment dropped to 4.1 percent.

He predicted that 1966 will see the nation's output of goods and services rise by $46 billion to $722 billion, "on the heels of last year's healthy growth, when the real gross national product advanced by 5.5 percent."

Despite heavy military costs, the President declared, the United States must not follow a "short-sighted policy of abandoning the war on poverty, ignorance, blight and disease."

Southern States Lead In Job Bias Complaints

Ten southern states provided more than two-thirds of the complaints of job discrimination filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission during its first six months which were deemed sound enough for possible action, Chairman Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., said in his first report.

A total of 3,263 charges was filed between July 2 and Dec. 31, 1965, the report showed, of which 1,384 were recommended for investigation, 429 were held for additional information and 295 were deferred for state or local FEPC action.

More "live" complaints were filed in North Carolina than in any other state—493, the report showed. Filings for other southern states were: Alabama 281, Tennessee 121, Texas and Virginia 93 each, Louisiana 90, South Carolina 87, Mississippi 61, Georgia 45 and Florida 24.

Ohio led states in the rest of the country with 98 complaints, followed by Pennsylvania with 93, New York with 69 and Illinois with 68.

The party charged in 1,822 cases was the employer and in 466 cases was a union. State employment services were named in 43 complaints and private agencies in 13 instances.

A breakdown in the type of discrimination charged showed that 1,492 complaints came from Negroes, 19 involved other specified races, 14 were based on unnamed race, 27 on national origin, 391 on sex, 25 on religion and 166 in which the nature of the discrimination was not specified.

Of the over-all total of 3,263 charges filed, 551 or about 17 percent were based on sex.

Roosevelt said the commission and its staff received "tremendous cooperation" from unions and employes in all parts of the country.

"Our investigators and conciliators have been received with courtesy wherever they have gone," he added. "We continue to find a very real desire on the part of many of those charged to go beyond merely complying with the law.

"Walls are literally coming down where segregated facilities once existed—often at considerable expense. Most employers are outreaching individual complaints to open up new opportunities for minorities in their plants and businesses. Good business and good conscience are going hand in hand and the spirit as well as the letter of the law is being applied with good will."

British Unions Reach New Membership Mark

London—A sharp increase of 138,000 recruits sent membership in British trade unions to an all-time high of 10,065,000 at the end of 1964, the Ministry of Labor reported.

Service Contract Pay Floor in Effect

Thousands of service employes working on government contracts were covered by a $1.25-an-hour minimum wage for the first time on Jan. 20, when the McNamara-O'Hara Service Contract Act became effective.

The legislation, passed last year, says service workers must be paid not less than the prevailing area wage, including fringe benefits, or the $1.25 federal minimum wage, whichever is higher. The administrator of the Labor Dept.'s Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Divisions will determine prevailing rates for each locality.

LBJ Sees Continued Economic Growth

Calls on Unions, Management To Combat Threat of Inflation

visions in economic data would have placed the wage guidepost at 3.4 percent in both 1964 and 1965.

But it said it would be "inappropriate" to raise the guidepost because the economy is approaching full employment and faces a "crucial test" in the cost-price area.

The President predicted that in 1966 the total output of goods and services—the gross national product—would increase by almost the same level as the record gain of 1965—$47 billion—and said the total is expected to reach about $722 billion.

At this record-shattering level, he added, he expected unemployment to shrink below 4 percent, "further good gains" in productivity and an extra $40 billion of spending and production for civilian needs.

Reviewing the record of 1965, the President declared "we have learned how to achieve prosperity. "The problems we face in 1966," he said, "are the welcome problems of prosperity" and the "price of our success."

The "economic cost" of Viet Nam, he asserted, "imposes no unbearable burden on our resources." He said production for Viet Nam "accounts for less than 1.5 percent" of the gross national product.

Food Prices Up

As for costs and prices in 1965, the President noted that the record of stability since 1958 was "blemished" last year by a "surge in agricultural and food prices." He emphasized that labor costs, "the most basic element in the structure of our costs—have barely moved as gains in productivity have largely offset moderate increases in hourly labor costs."

He declared that in terms of fiscal and monetary policy, the Administration's budget would help maintain price stability with continued growth, but added that he would ask for further fiscal restraints on private spending if circumstances change.

On wages and prices in 1966, the President had this to say:

"Labor must remember that growing employment and productivity are the foundation of higher wages, and business that an expanding economy is the basic source of profit gains. These foundations must not be jeopardized."

He pledged that "responsible actions of labor and management" would be supplemented by government policies in manpower, education and rehabilitation programs, use of government stockpiles, adjustment of procurement policies and keeping government pay increase and wage-hour legislation "consistent with the guideposts."

1966 Challenge

The President stressed the cost-price stability throughout his report and in his concluding paragraphs posed it as "our most serious economic challenge in 1966." The extent to which the government will move against inflationary pressures, he emphasized, will depend "directly on the restraint and moderation exercised by those who have power over wages and prices." He continued:

"I again ask every leader of labor and every businessman who has price or wage decisions to make in 1966 to remember that his decisions affect not alone wages of his members or the returns of his stockholders. Shortsighted pursuit of short-run interests fails in the longer run to advance the interests of either labor or management. And it surely does not advance the interests of the nation."

The message outlined a labor-management program in which the President reaffirmed the need to repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, modernize the unemployment compensation system and extend the Fair Labor Standards Act and increase the wage level.

The President, pointing to the recent New York transit strike, said he would ask Congress "to consider measures that, without improperly invading state and local authority, will enable us to deal effectively with strikes that may cause irreparable damage to the national interest."

New Programs

He said he would recommend legislative programs in a number of areas—transportation, consumer protection, financial institutions and tax reform—in line with his State of the Union message.

The Council of Economic Advisers, in its report, said that the unemployment rate is "projected to fall below 4 percent in 1966" and that the "economy can operate efficiently at lower unemployment rates" because of a steady improvement in the "quality" of the labor force.

It added that while achievement of the "interim" target of a 4 percent jobless rate is satisfying "it would be incorrect to identify this accomplishment with full attainment of the goal of an employment opportunity for every American willing and able to work."

On bargaining in 1965, the council said it was "characterized, by and large, by a relative moderation of gains in wages and fringe benefits" and that the "generally satisfactory record of 1965" has set the basic pattern for most key industries in 1966.

It set the increase in productivity for the entire private economy for the past five years at 3.6 percent and said these "large" gains had held the increase in average unit labor costs to only six-tenths of 1 percent a year.

In manufacturing, the productivity rate increase of 4 percent a year since 1960 and the 3.6 percent increase in hourly wages resulted in lower unit labor costs in 1965 than in 1960.

Last year in manufacturing, the council said, unit labor costs decreased by eight-tenths of 1 percent.

Reviewing the history of the guideposts since 1962, the council restated its view that "wages should increase no faster than the sustainable trend of productivity." It went on to explain that the five-year average used in past years "no longer gives a reasonable approximation of the true productivity trend" and that the 3.6 percent figure dictated by the average would not be an "accurate" measure.

The council recommended continuation of the 3.2 percent wage guidepost because of pressures in the economy, arguing that the productivity gain over the next few years is "not likely" to be above the trend, that the 3.2 figure has been consistent with the stability of industrial wholesale prices and "now is not the time to abandon that standard" and finally that the rise in employer taxes for social security raises labor costs be an average of two-thirds of a percent.

On price guideposts the council said only that "those companies with exceptionally favorable productivity gains must consider whether this is the time to seek to keep the gains in the form of still higher profits or whether to share them with consumers through lower prices."

FIRST MEDICARE CARD was presented by Pres. Johnson to former Pres. Truman, under whose presidency the campaign for legislation was started, at ceremonies in Independence, Mo., inaugurating the Truman Center for the Advancement of Peace. Here Johnson witnesses Truman's application for voluntary medical insurance under the Medicare program.

Chamber Scored on Bid For Wage Restraints

The demand of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and other business spokesmen to place limitations on wages as a means of assuring economic stability, has been sharply answered by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

"We do not believe that there is any immediate threat of inflation so serious as to warrant extraordinary measures," he said. "Although the level of economic activity generally is advancing and unemployment is fortunately, at last, declining, the nation has not yet neared the point of full employment or the ceiling on its vast productive ability. Moreover, rapid increases in the labor force and productivity are expanding the economy's capacity to produce."

Meany declared that wage rates are not a major factor in the economic picture.

"While exceptional instances can, no doubt, be singled out, the general level of wage increases has not been out of line with the trend of preceding years, nor have they overall kept pace with rising living costs and increases in productivity, or what is needed to overcome inequities and substandard conditions," he said.

"Throughout the nation generally, the persistent reality of inadequate, sub-poverty wages received by millions of workers in many occupations continues to be a far more serious and pressing national problem than the possibility of 'excessive' wages."

The AFL-CIO president noted that today 7.5 million workers make less than the federal minimum wage.

One-Sided

Labor already has restraints, he said. Non-union workers take what their employer gives them. Union workers must negotiate with employers.

"Where prices and profits are concerned, on the other hand," he said, "these restraints do not exist. We have seen how, in certain basic industries, prices respond in unison to the unilateral decisions and acquisitive instincts of a few individuals. Often they respond to the immediate state of demand and market opportunities, irrespective of cost factors."

Meany said that an indication of the "true inflationary forces" are in the record profits of corporations. Between 1961 and 1965 profits after taxes have zoomed up 65 percent.

Union Builds Fund to Spur Craft Training

New York — Members of the Lithographers & Photoengravers have begun payment of a 25-cent monthly tax created by referendum to finance a craft training program.

A fund estimated at $150,000 a year will be used in LPIU local unions to develop training courses for each craft in the lithographic and photoengraving industries, to pay a full-time educational director and to hold training seminars.

Courses will be revised, LPIU Pres. Kenneth J. Brown said, to meet technological changes. Within two years, craft training schools can be provided in 20 major cities of the U.S. and Canada, he anticipates.

The union fund, approved by members 18,850-12,137 after convention action last August, will be supplemented by employer contributions agreed to in negotiations. Such contracts already have been entered into in several cities, includinf Chicago, Philadelphia, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Cleveland, Los Angeles, Washington, D. C., and New York, the union said.

A training program is being prepared, according to Brown, which will maintain high standards of craftsmanship and also strengthen job security in an industry constantly going through numerous changes.

Labor Reaffirms Stand Against Pay Guideline

tion of unemployment last year.

But, he said, much more needs to be done and "we are a long way from our goal of full employment."

Meany pointed out the AFL-CIO's position that "we do not agree with the so-called guidelines for wage determination" and said the CEA discussion in the report "provides additional reason for opposition." He added:

"By changing the rules for the formulation of the wage guidelines, in a deliberate effort to reduce them, the Council of Economic Advisors undermines their very credibility."

The council adopted a 3.2 percent guideline for wage increases although admitting that the use of the five-year average for gains in productivity would have resulted in a 3.6 percent figure in 1966.

"How," Meany asked, "can union leaders, responsible to their members, be expected to accept such sudden and one-sided revision of the method of arriving at the wage guidelines? And how can the public accept the credibility of such shifting methods?"

Meany pledged the "complete, wholehearted support of the labor movement" if the President concludes there is "such a national emergency as to require extraordinary overall stabilization measures."

That would mean, he stressed, "all costs, prices, profits, corporate executive salaries, dividends and wages being equally restrained. All America, then, would be sharing equally the costs and the sacrifices of a national problem."

The AFL-CIO president noted that "there are a multitude of factors that go into prices and into the cost of living of every American. Wages are not the only cost factor. But they are the only income factor for most Americans.

"We are prepared to sacrifice—as much as anyone else, for as long as anyone else—so long as there is equality of sacrifice. But rigid 'guidelines' based on shifting methods are not the way to do it."

Meat Cutters' Pact Sets Portable Pensions

Chicago—A pension plan providing "portable" benefits for 6,000 retail members of the Meat Cutters was signed here by officers of eight local unions and 50 employers in mid-central states.

Starting Apr. 1, employers will contribute $26 a month per worker for a plan permitting workers to keep pension credits while changing jobs.

Bernard Cushman Named NLRB Aide

Bernard Cushman, former general counsel for the Amalgamated Transit Union, has been named a special assistant to Gen. Counsel Arnold Ordman of the National Labor Relations Board.

Cushman, who has practiced labor law for 25 years, formerly was an NLRB trial examiner; an attorney with the Labor Bureau of Middle West, Chicago; an assistant general counsel of the National War Labor Board and a section chief in the Office of the Solicitor, Dept. of Labor. He is a graduate of Dartmouth College and received his law degree from Harvard Law School.

A Destructive Role

REPUBLICAN SENATE LEADER Everett McKinley Dirksen has launched a new filibuster with the clear and simple objective of denying his colleagues the right to vote on the issue of repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act.

His opening "performance" on the Senate floor would probably win him high ratings on daytime television soap operas. But it is hardly in keeping with the role of the leader of a responsible political party—especially his candidly announced intention to disrupt orderly democratic procedure and prevent a vote on a basic issue of national labor policy.

The issue of the union shop and "right-to-work" laws has been before the public for 19 years. It has been tested in union shop election votes, statewide referendums and in national political contests. The verdict has been overwhelmingly against "right-to-work" laws, which led to the move to repeal the iniquitous section of the Taft-Hartley Act that permits them to exist.

The legislative history of the 14(b) repeal bill in the 89th Congress further underscores the fact that there has been full and ample discussion and study of the issue.

A House Labor subcommittee conducted extensive hearings in May 1965, and after all sides had been fully heard, approved the repeal bill. The full House Labor Committee examined the issue and reported out the repealer for House action.

The bill reached the floor on July 26 under the newly reinstituted 21-day rule after the House Rules Committee refused to report the measure to the floor. On July 28 it was passed 221-203.

The procedure for full study and discussion continued in the Senate with hearings before the Senate Labor Committee. The committee amended the House bill to provide an exemption for workers with genuine religious scruples against joining secular organizations, providing for charitable contributions in lieu of dues. With that change the committee reported the bill to the Senate.

In due course it was called up for action—a routine motion to take up the bill. Dirksen immediately launched a filibuster against the motion—an unprecedented action by a party leader. After a parliamentary maneuver designed to show the true will of the Senate on the issue failed, Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield filed a cloture petition on the question of taking up the bill. The cloture vote was lost 45-47.

It has been quite firmly established by sources such as Congressional Quarterly that "at least 52 senators favored repeal." The vote on cloture, which actually reflected a 50-50 division, was not indicative of the sentiment of the Senate on the issue of repeal. A number of senators opposed cloture under any circumstances.

Thus, the will of the Senate was frustrated last October, frustrated by the first filibuster in the history of the Senate led by a minority leader against the consideration of a bill duly reported by the proper Senate committee.

Now Dirksen is giving a repeat performance, refusing the Senate the simple right to vote "yes" or "no" on the issue of 14(b) repeal.

It is difficult to conceive of a more destructive role than the one Dirksen has chosen to play. For the issue is now no longer the simple one of repealing 14(b) but of the ability of the democratic process to function in an orderly and effective way.

'Fire? What Fire?'

Minority Blocking Vote:

Dirksen Filibuster Threatens Basic Democracy in Senate

TODAY ACROSS THE WORLD the legislative processes of democracy are under severe attack. Today across the world people are weighing democratic institutions against the claims of authoritarian systems.

And today in our own country one of our basic democratic institutions—the United States Senate—is being reduced to impotence through a filibuster.

This filibuster is designed to prevent the Senate from voting on the question of whether section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act should be repealed. The House of Representatives has voted "yes." By the most overwhelming majority in our nation's electoral history, the people of the United States have elected a President who says "yes." A large majority of the senators and representatives were elected on a party platform which said "yes."

But a minority—led by Senator Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois—says "no" and the Senate of the United States becomes an object of derision by the enemies of democracy around the world.

We believe the question of repealing 14(b) is important. We have debated the issue in all forums for the past 19 years and it has been subjected to all manner of referendums. We believe, however, that the proper functioning of our cherished democratic institutions is even more vital and that, in these years of crisis, irreparable damage will be done if the filibuster is allowed to succeed.

This—the right of the Senate to vote—is an issue that demands that all citizens of conscience unite. It demands that we speak up loudly and clearly for democracy.

Most citizens who participate in PTA meetings or union meetings or co-op meetings where democratic action is the method of operation, know about "the previous question."

When the feeling of the meeting, expressed in majority rule, is that debate has gone on long enough "the previous question" is moved and adopted and a vote is taken.

But the Senate of the United States doesn't operate that way. The only way "debate" can be ended is through cloture.

Cloture is the method under which the Senate can close debate on any measure, motion or other matter. A vote for cloture can be brought about by a motion signed by 16 senators.

Passage of a motion for cloture, however, requires the vote of two-thirds of all senators present and voting. One-third of the senators present and voting can thus stymie the will of a majority.

Once cloture is invoked—and it has succeeded in only six cases since the rule was adopted in 1917—senators can speak no more than one hour each on the motion involved before a vote is taken.

There are those who justify an embargo on a Senate vote on a bill that would repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act with the claim that the issue has not been adequately debated.

Organized labor has for 19 years—since the passage in 1947 of the Taft-Hartley Act—been informing voters and their representatives alike on the facts of the issue.

The issue has been decided by the votes of millions of Americans—yet a minority in the United States Senate barricades the measure from exposure to a vote by all senators.

TAFT-HARTLEY originally provided for secret ballot union shop elections. The union shop was the victor in 97 percent of 46,146 elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board. Workers voted 9-to-1 for the union shop. Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio made the motion that quietly repealed the requirement for union shop authorization elections.

Campaigns to implement 14(b) through enactment of so-called "right-to-work" laws reached a climax in 1958. Voters in California and Ohio, for example, turned down the compulsory open shop proposal by margins of more than 1 million votes. Voters have rejected "right-to-work" laws in six of seven states since 1958, with 6,850,000 casting votes in favor of the union shop and only 4,650,000 against.

Members of the House of Representatives in 1965 voted to repeal Section 14(b). Their wish is being quashed by minority rule in the Senate.

Rules of the Senate provide many safeguards against hasty action. Each senator has ample opportunity to express his views and argue his point of view.

Active democracy requires debate but active democracy also calls for action at the appropriate time.

Issues involved in the repeal of 14(b) have been debated by the Senate many times. They have been the subject of extended national debate.

The time for action has come.

Morgan Says:

Job Corps Woes Show Need Of New Ways to Fight Poverty

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

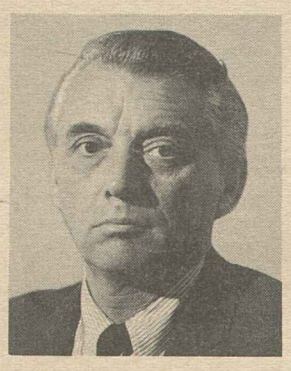
TROUBLE SEEMS to be breaking out all over in the Job Corps and if it isn't properly understood—and thus treated with understanding—there is a danger that the war on poverty may be lost.

Last Aug. 20 there was a serious riot in the Job Corps camp at Fort Breckenridge, Ky. There has been a running dispute for months at the Camp Kilmer Job Corps Center in Edison, N. J., between academicians and businessmen on how to run the camp.



Morgan

Last week it was revealed that the Office of Economic Opportunity, Sargent Shriver's GHQ in the war on poverty, was cancelling a $9 million contract with Southern Illinois University to run the Fort Breckenridge operation. The cancellation stemmed from the riot. Some industrial corporation will take over on July 1.

Another corporation, a subsidiary of Intl. Telephone & Telegraph called Federal Electric, has the Camp Kilmer contract to the tune of $11.5 million and nobody quite knows what the upshot will be to the argument between the company and Rutgers University professors, hired as consultants, over administrative policies. The Rutgers group and Job Corps teachers contend Federal Electric is trying to impress "business methods" on a sociological assignment—the preparation of poor youngsters, most of them school dropouts, for a productive role in society.

As if these difficulties weren't enough, the Job Corps share of the "poverty" pie has been cut from $310 million in the current budget to $228 million in the budget for the next fiscal year. The anti-poverty program will expand but more slowly than if Viet Nam were not draining dollars from domestic projects. This is too bad but not tragic—especially if everybody, including the politicians, the poverty experts and the public—will use the interval to take sharp but constructive looks into the methods used so far in waging this worthwhile but strange sociological revolution.

One fact sticks out. The desire to wage it is not enough. Take the camp at Fort Breckenridge. It added up to how not to train a Job Corps. There was good will here. But it slipped into a crevasse of misunderstanding widened by an almost utter failure of communication. The staff and the volunteers simply did not speak the same language. Some of the mistakes were so obvious that their commission seemed incredible. Most of the 750 volunteers came from big cities, like Chicago and Los Angeles. Many had never been beyond their city limits. Here were urban fish flung out of familiar waters, into a strange Kentucky countryside. The nearest town, Morganfield, was off limits; local custom was still segregated. So for infrequent leave the youths, black and white, had to take long bus rides to Evansville, Ind., where no proper preparations were made—no "hospitality center"—to receive them.

Inevitably there were incidents. Security patrols were put on the buses, the men were searched for knives and other weapons while their girl friends watched. They came quickly to regard Breckenridge as a prison, not a door to opportunity. Home leave was rigidly controlled, partly due to expense, but this was never adequately explained and even when parents sent money for fare, a pass might not be granted. Suspicions rose that the staff feared dropouts and a blot on their record.

FEW IN THE CAMP administration seemed to comprehend the low threshold of patience among their charges. When you live a life in which things are constantly denied you and then comes a glimmer of getting something, you want it now. Skeptical, suspicious in the first place, these recruits decided to see what the promises were. And what did they find? Chores of cutting grass for "discipline" because job training courses weren't ready when they arrived. Trips to Mammoth Cave to kill time—which were suspended when some, in the fury of frustration, misbehaved.

These reluctant, homesick migrants from city slums were sophisticated after their fashion and burned with resentment when the staff, from the director down, referred to them as "boy" or "son." "Treat me like a man," one youth said. "If you treat me like a man I'm gonna act like a man." With a self-image of virility their pride was outraged by clothing issues of ancient Navy bell-bottom trousers and khaki shirts.

Inextricable racial tension helped explode the riot but it undoubtedly was a mistake to bill it simply as a "racial incident." There were scores of other angry sparks—over inferior classrooms, lack of equipment, long waits in the chow line.

Nobody in his right mind would argue that these tough young charges be given a silver-spoon-and-Little-Lord-Fauntleroy treatment. But more adequate preparation, with some realization of their problem and how to communicate with them on their own terms, is vital. The old condescending social welfare approach is out. Nor can this experiment in social revolution be successful if the local community is uncooperative. One man who had a fat construction contract at Breckenridge ran a motel and bar in Morganfield that barred Negroes.

The nub of the problem—which the OEO seems belatedly beginning to realize—is this: if we're going to win the war on poverty we've got to train more cadres in new ways to fight it; the old ways simply aren't good enough.

Job-Site Picketing Legislation Aimed at Redressing a Wrong

ENACTMENT of the situs picketing bill now pending in Congress will restore to building trades unions basic rights denied them since 1949, a top union official has said.

The ban on job-site picketing by building tradesmen blocks effective action to correct substandard pay rates or working conditions maintained by a non-union contractor or subcontractor on a job involving several employers, said Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Noting that "all other unions . . . have the right to picket an employer at the prime site," Haggerty declared that the pending bill is the best way to correct "a wrong performed against the building trades unions." His statements came during the weekly network radio interview, Labor News Conference.

Haggerty reported that the legislation has wide bipartisan support in Congress and strong backing from Pres. Johnson. He noted that Presidents Truman, Eisenhower and Kennedy had also strongly recommended such a measure during their White House terms.

DIFFERENCES within the AFL-CIO that have delayed congressional action have been settled and the bill now has the support of "the entire labor movement," Haggerty said.

He predicted favorable action by the House of Representatives, once the bill is approved by the Rules Committee, where it has been awaiting clearance since last fall.

Reporters questioning him on the public service production of the AFL-CIO, aired nationwide over the Mutual Radio Network, were Neil Gilbride, labor correspondent for the Associated Press, and William Eaton, labor correspondent for United Press Intl.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

FORT MYERS, Fla.—This state faces a highly unusual election in November—in effect a special election under a constitutional amendment designed solely to protect Democratic candidates for state office from having to run in presidential years, when some of them are embarrassed by the party's liberal national nominees.

It is still largely a one-party state; the Republicans may not even be able to field a candidate for governor. Its congressional delegation, largest in the South except for Texas, is made up of 10 Democrats and only two Republicans, although some of the Democrats often vote like Republicans.

It is also a state torn by conflicting forces, as long entrenched conservatives are challenged by the rising tide of liberalism in populous southeast Florida and greatly increased registration among Negroes.

The entrenched conservatism of the "pork chop boys," who from the rural areas have controlled the legislature, is shown by their extreme reluctance to reapportion the districts under the Supreme Court's one man, one vote doctrine. The legislature passed one third-of-a-loaf reapportionment plan but the voters from metropolitan areas, feeling still cheated, defeated it in a referendum. The federal courts have not yet set a deadline for final, and equitable, action, but the inevitable obviously cannot be postponed much longer.

The race for governor among Democrats seems likely to be a replay of 1964, when Gov. Haydon Burns beat Mayor Robert King High of Miami in a runoff primary. The surprise element in that election was that High made it into the runoff in the first place. A liberal and modern-minded mayor, High was expected to trail behind in the multi-candidate first primary (the field is always large and is expected to be big again this year). But High picked up an unexpectedly large vote and took second place to make himself eligible for the runoff.

Burns, then mayor of Jacksonville, had been conspicuously ineffective in meeting issues of civil rights demonstrations, arrests and jailings, and some violence. The Negro vote, which even then was substantial, swung heavily to High. It is bigger now—and it assuredly will be hostile to Burns again.

PRES. JOHNSON carried the state narrowly in 1964, by less than 40,000 out of more than 1.8 million votes, and he was the first Democratic presidential candidate to win in Florida since Harry S. Truman in 1948. Burns, seeking the governorship at the same election, gave no help whatever to the national ticket, and predicted on the eve of the election that Sen. Goldwater, the GOP nominee, would win.

Once again Florida old-line politicians underestimated the impact of the Negro vote following Goldwater's opposition to the civil rights bill. Here in this southwestern Florida community (Lee County), a conservative area of truck farming and outrider real-estate developers, Johnson trailed Goldwater by a 10,000 to 12,000 tally, for example. But there is one almost totally Negro precinct of about a thousand voters that went practically unanimously for the President. There is no doubt that Negro votes throughout the state provided Johnson's margin of victory.

The 1964 constitutional amendment that calls for election of statewide officials this year cut the terms of office from four to two years for this one term only, thus throwing state elections into the non-presidential years.

Old-line Democrats often would not support Democratic presidential nominees, but neither did they relish the possibility that this record of non-support might eventually stimulate the growth of a really vigorous state Republican Party. The change, thus, was intended as a protective device for conservative Democrats. It may serve that purpose—but this depends on how swiftly the winds of change and urbanization blow.

RESTORATION of basic rights denied building trades unions since 1949 hinges on passage of the situs picketing bill pending in Congress, Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. declared on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by William Eaton (left) of United Press Intl. and Neil Gilbride of the Associated Press on the AFL-CIO produced weekly radio interview.

Federal Reserve's Rate Boost Actually Adds to Living Costs

By Sidney Margolius

THIS IS THE WINTER of our discontent with high living costs. Two main problems that moderate-income families have to reckon with are high food prices and the Federal Reserve Board's interest rate boost. The higher interest rates especially affect prices of cars and houses, but they also affect your property taxes. Local governments now have to pay higher rates on bond issues for schools and other needs.

Finance companies have raised rates to car dealers for financing their own inventories, from 5 to 5.25 percent. This boost alone can add as much as $25 to the price of a car. Second, you may have to pay higher finance rates on your own borrowings. A raise of 50 cents per $100 of debt, while it seems to be just one-half of 1 percent, actually is an increase of 10 percent in the number of dollars you have to pay in finance charges on a new car.

Similarly, mortgage interest rates have risen to a nationwide average of 5.8 percent on new homes and 5.9 percent on older ones. These are the highest mortgage rates since early 1964, the Federal Home Loan Board reports.

The FRB had explained that the hike in interest rates was necessary to restrain inflation. The evidence, however, is that the raise actually is adding to the inflation in the expenses of moderate-income families, small businessmen and farmers.

The only response working people can make is to curb their use of credit, and buy with care. One of the most useful ways to keep down costs is to time your buying to take advantage of sales.

The annual midwinter sales offer one of the best buying opportunities. The final clothing clearances reduce prices of coats and suits to their lowest point just before the new spring lines arrive at higher prices. February also is one of the best months to shop for furniture, rugs, bedding, curtains, housewares and china. Here are additional tips:

BATTERIES: Battery failures are the leading cause of service calls; according to the AAA they occur most often in midwinter. Sometimes the battery only needs recharging. In fact, one manufacturer reports, sometimes good batteries are replaced needlessly because car owners don't realize they can be recharged. It doesn't pay to delay recharging a weak battery as it will wear out faster than one kept fully charged. Home battery chargers are useful for keeping a battery fully charged.

Before you buy a new battery, have a competent serviceman check to make sure your ground connections and cables are satisfactory.

If you do need a new battery, it pays to buy at least a medium-duty grade, which is the equivalent of original-equipment quality. In fact, if you do much stop-and-go driving, much over-the-road driving (which results in overcharging) or live in a very cold area, a heavy-duty battery may be desirable.

The way to shop batteries is to compare the ampere-hour rating and the cold-start or "zero crank power" rating, as some sellers call it, of various brands. Thus, depending on the type of battery you need, a light-duty battery may have a 20-hour ampere rating of only 40; a medium-duty in the 50s, and heavy duty in the 60s.

HIGH-INTENSITY lamps: These are miniature lamps which use an ordinary 6 to 12-volt auto bulb and have a high-intensity unit to concentrate the light so it is the equivalent of a 100-watt ordinary bulb. These lamps are becoming widely used in homes, and many models are available ranging in price from $7 to $15.

Just make sure any high-intensity lamp is approved by Underwriters Laboratories—not only the cord, but the lamp itself. Some cheap imported models are on the market. However, it is not necessary to pay the highest prices commanded by some of the best-known brands which may charge a premium for their design.

Food buying: Food prices have reached record levels at both wholesale and retail levels. Pork prices especially are at their highest in the history of metropolitan markets departments, with pork chops, hams, and bacon getting close to the $1 a pound level, and in general, 25-35 cents higher per pound than a year ago. The price increase on canned hams and on smoked calis (pork shoulder) is less drastic.

While beef is relatively more abundant than pork, and the price increase over last year not quite as drastic, prices of popular cuts also have been pushed up by the big leap in pork costs. Veal is relatively reasonable this year.

With most families forced to reduce meat consumption, broilers have become a mainstay. Another help is the lower prices of eggs, which are starting to go down seasonally.

'46 Employment Act Filled National Need

THE GREAT DEPRESSION of the Thirties swept across the country plunging millions of Americans into the bitterest unemployment in the nation's history. Hoovervilles, the bonus marchers, the burning of the tents of the jobless demonstrators on Anacostia Flats in Washington, the apple sellers were the result.

Twenty years ago, at the end of World War II, the American people's "never again" took formal shape as "The Employment Act of 1946." Pres. Harry S. Truman, when he signed it on Feb. 20, 1946, said:

"Occasionally, as we pore through the pages of history, we are struck by the fact that some incident, little noted at the time, profoundly affects the whole subsequent course of events. I venture the prediction that history someday will so record the enactment of the Employment Act of 1946."

The act, as finally adopted by Congress, did not call for "full" employment as we use the term now—that is, an irreducible level of joblessness where every man and woman willing and able to work has the right to a job. Nor did it call on the federal government to provide enough federal investment and expenditures to assure such "full" employment. In fact, the word "full" was stricken from the bill and the role of the federal government in seeking "maximum" employment considerably reduced.

Yet the act, by a curious process of historical need, has come to be regarded as a true "full" Employment Act and has imposed on the federal government the moral responsibility for assuring the country that the terrible days of the Thirties will never return again.

IT SET UP two institutions that have had a powerful impact on the economic thinking of the American people.

The President's Council of Economic Advisers is charged with the job of reporting to the President the state of the nation's economy including proposals for keeping it healthy. This annual report not only serves as the basis for the President's recommendations to Congress, but serves as a powerful instrument for the education of the American people in economic matters.

It created the Congressional Joint Economic Committee which serves as a powerful educational instrument in Congress itself. This committee has been called "a graduate school for the republic" in economic matters. It has become a vital force in helping the American people and Congress itself understand the economic problems of our society.

The 20th anniversary of the passage of the Act is to be observed by the Joint Economic Committee on Feb. 23. An all-day symposium will be held by leading economists and government leaders concerned with the operations of the act. One purpose of the symposium is to review the working of the Employment Act over the past 20 years and to explore proposals for improving and strengthening it. (PAI)

IF your car is overdue for a lube job;
And you weigh five pounds more than it says on your driver's license;
And you haven't gotten around to balancing your checkbook this month;
And you're still writing 1965 instead of 1966;
And ask the waitress to wrap up the steak remnants so you can take them home to your dog when you fully intend to eat them yourself;

And you brush your teeth sideways rather than up and down as your dentist recommends;
And you haven't read the fine print on your insurance policies;

And you have a funny little pain—well, not a pain exactly, but more of a twinge—which you lie awake worrying about at 2 a.m. but which doesn't seem important enough the next day to merit a call to the doctor;

And you haven't read past the first two chapters of "War and Peace";
And your wallet is bulging with expired credit cards, old ticket stubs and claims checks for heaven-knows-what;
And you keep forgetting to pick up your suit at the cleaners, where you took it three weeks ago, at which time you made them promise to have it ready by the next afternoon;
And the ashtrays in your car are stuffed with gum wrappers and popsicle sticks. . . .

AND YOU haven't gotten around to throwing away the two rolls of wallpaper and three cans of paint left over from your time-before-last redecorating job;
And in the trunk of your car there is a box of empty pop bottles which you must remember to take back to the store for a refund;

And you can't remember where in the world you put the button that came off your green coat;

And you're absolutely convinced that nobody in the whole world is as disorganized as you are, Calm down. You're just like everybody else.

Rural Poverty Fight Proposed by LBJ

By Gervase N. Love

A broad-based attack on rural poverty through a federally-aided program of joint action by small cities and their hinterland areas has been proposed to Congress by Pres. Johnson.

The plan would give rural areas the same type of coordinated direction in fighting poverty that cities now have by supplementing, but not supplanting, the present efforts of local, state and federal governments and by helping the small community "avoid under-representation in decisions that affect its life," the President said in a special message.

"Our purpose," he said "is to demonstrate how a common effort can provide the needed district vocational school in one county, the hospital in another, the police training in a third, industry or an adequate library in a fourth—and how it can avoid the waste of duplication, or, worse still, the total lack of any such facilities or services in a wide area because of a failure to pool common resources."

The dimensions of a unified area, he said, "are likely to be already marked by the trading or commuting patterns that have been drawn by rural and city residents together—as they drive to work, to shop, to college, to visit and to recreational and cultural facilities."

In addition to the establishment of a number of the "community development districts" which would combine resources to improve "the quality of life" in small cities and rural areas, Johnson proposed:

- Federal planning grants to help such districts coordinate "a comprehensive attack" on rural poverty problems.
- Selection by the secretary of agriculture of pilot districts "to afford experience in a representative variety of geographic, economic and social conditions."
- Improvement of medical care for the rural poor, including a program of loans to help students from such families study medicine, and forgiveness of the amounts borrowed if the student practices medicine in a poor rural area.

Johnson notified Congress that he planned soon to appoint a Commission on Rural Poverty which within a year will make recommendations to him "on the most efficient and promising means of sharing America's abundance with those who too often have been her forgotten people."

He reminded Congress of the fact that nearly half of the nation's poor live in rural areas, that nearly one in every two rural families has a cash income under $3,000, and that rural families are short-changed on education and medical attention.

"These deficiencies persist in 1966," the President declared. "Their effect is as grievous on urban America—the recipient of millions of unskilled migrants from rural areas in the past two decades—as on the run-down farms and impoverished communities that still house 4.4 million poor rural families."

He reviewed some of the steps taken to improve life for impoverished non-city dwellers and added:

"Rural poverty has proved an almost intractable problem in past decades. Its abolition may require a journey of a thousand miles.

"But the first step in that journey is the pooling of the common resources of rural Americans—joining them in a common planning effort that will magnify the resources of each.

"In the program I propose, I ask the Congress to take that step with me."

Ad Agencies, AFM Reach New Pact

New York—The jingle that jangles into the nation's living rooms by way of radio and television commercials will produce a louder jingle of a different kind in the pockets of the musicians who make them under a new contract between their union and the principal advertising agencies.

Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the Musicians announced that the new agreement, "a great step forward in achieving recognition of the musicians' contributions to this area of broadcast activity," will give about 10 percent raises to instrumentalists, 15 percent to sideline musicians, and "substantial" increases to copyists and orchestrators.

The pact also continues a 5 percent employer pension contribution and provides for "more stringent" enforcement of residual payments.

CLOTHING WORKERS load truck at Los Angeles depot with clothing and canned goods for striking grape workers in the San Joaquin Valley vineyards. ACWA members in southern California, moved by the plight of the strikers, responded "warmly and enthusiastically," the union said, with truckload of supplies delivered at a meeting of 250 grape workers in Delano, Calif.

IUE Launches Fund to Aid Viet Refugees

Pres. Paul Jennings formally inaugurated the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers' campaign for refugee aid in Viet Nam on Tet, the country's lunar new year holiday.

The union's international executive board voted to ask its members to contribute $1 each to a fund for a refugee resettlement village.

In opening the drive Jennings expressed the hope that employers of IUE members would provide matching contributions and share responsibility "by serving on a committee to help us implement our program." The committee, he said, will be composed of outstanding citizens representing business, religion, government and labor "so that all segments of our society can participate."

The decision to seek funds for a refugee village was made after consultation with the Confederation of Vietnamese Labor (CVT). Envisioned, Jennings said, is a community in which displaced persons "can begin a new life, a permanent community of homes, farms, jobs, schools, health clinics . . . a village in which the voluntary contributions of IUE members combined with the knowledge and leadership of the CVT can help refugees to help and defend themselves."

Warning to Growers Cites Labor Needs

San Antonio, Tex. — The nation's growers will run into trouble recruiting farm workers unless they adopt modern personnel practices, Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning warned in a speech closing the three-day National Farm Labor Conference here.

Henning pointed out that the farm worker "knows not the goodness or the promise of the American economy" and is on "the front line of the war on poverty."

"The farm worker knows not the elementary social benefits of his industrial brother," he continued. "His right to join a union and bargain on the conditions and terms of employment is not recognized by law. He does not enjoy the subsistence wage protection of the federal minimum wage law; he is not protected by unemployment insurance or by social security, if seasonally employed."

He called farm labor housing "another deprivation" that too often is "a rotting rural slum," and he cited instances of workers and their families sleeping in box cars or on river banks "within walking distance of agricultural wealth."

"The housing scandal forbids the recruitment of a representative American labor force," he declared. "The absence of decent family housing, particularly, denies many communities the talents and hands of workers in the migrant stream.

"Perhaps more than any other element, the bleak and frequently wretched level of farm labor housing exemplifies what is in truth the artificial character of farm labor shortages. American workers will neither accept nor tolerate the primitive housing of a Tobacco Road civilization."

Blended Economy

In housing, wages and working conditions, Henning called for a "blending of private and public vigor to realize an economy which will benefit both grower and worker."

He reviewed the success of the farm labor program following the expiration of Public Law 78, which permitted the importation of workers from Mexico, and called the transitional difficulties "essentially minor."

He commended for their roles in making successful the state farm labor services: the grower, worker and Mexican-American communities in the Southwest, and the "religious and civic organizations which bent their energies to the shaping of an enlightened farm labor policy today," as well as governors' committees on migratory labor and the states that have never used foreign farm labor.

"Primarily the good economy is the result of the personal initiative of the private citizen," Henning concluded. "But it must be the moral commitment of government to assure the vigor of the economy to assure that its profits will fortify rather than weaken the economic and social structure of the nation. . . .

"A new and enlightened era of human relations awaits our dedication and our vision. Together, we of the federal and state governments, and we of the private and public sectors, can give America the kind of farm labor destiny it deserves.

"Surely the plague of farm labor poverty must not stain the American conscience. Not in the world of 1966."

The farm conference is sponsored by the National Council on Agricultural Life & Labor, with which the AFL-CIO, many international unions and a wide range of church groups are affiliated.

465 Unionists Enroll in Ohio Study Program

Columbus, O.—A total of 465 union officials have enrolled this year in the Union Leadership Program conducted by Ohio State University's Labor Education Research Service in 16 cities in all parts of the state.

The courses are offered during the evenings in Cincinnati, Youngstown, Mansfield, Dayton, Marietta, Kent, Cleveland-Columbus, Toledo, Defiance, Newark, Canton-Marion, Lima and Mt. Vernon-Portsmouth, and are given at four different year-levels.

Subjects covered include economics, sociology, collective bargaining, political science, union leadership, labor law, complex organizations, labor history and contemporary problems, and comparative economic systems.

The students represent 71 national, international or unaffiliated unions; most of them are stewards or grievance committee members.

The program at Marietta is sponsored jointly by the Southeastern Ohio AFL-CIO and the Central Ohio Valley AFL-CIO, and is given in alternate years in Marietta by the OSU Labor Education Research Service and in Parkersburg, W. Va., by the Institute for Labor Studies of the University of West Virginia.

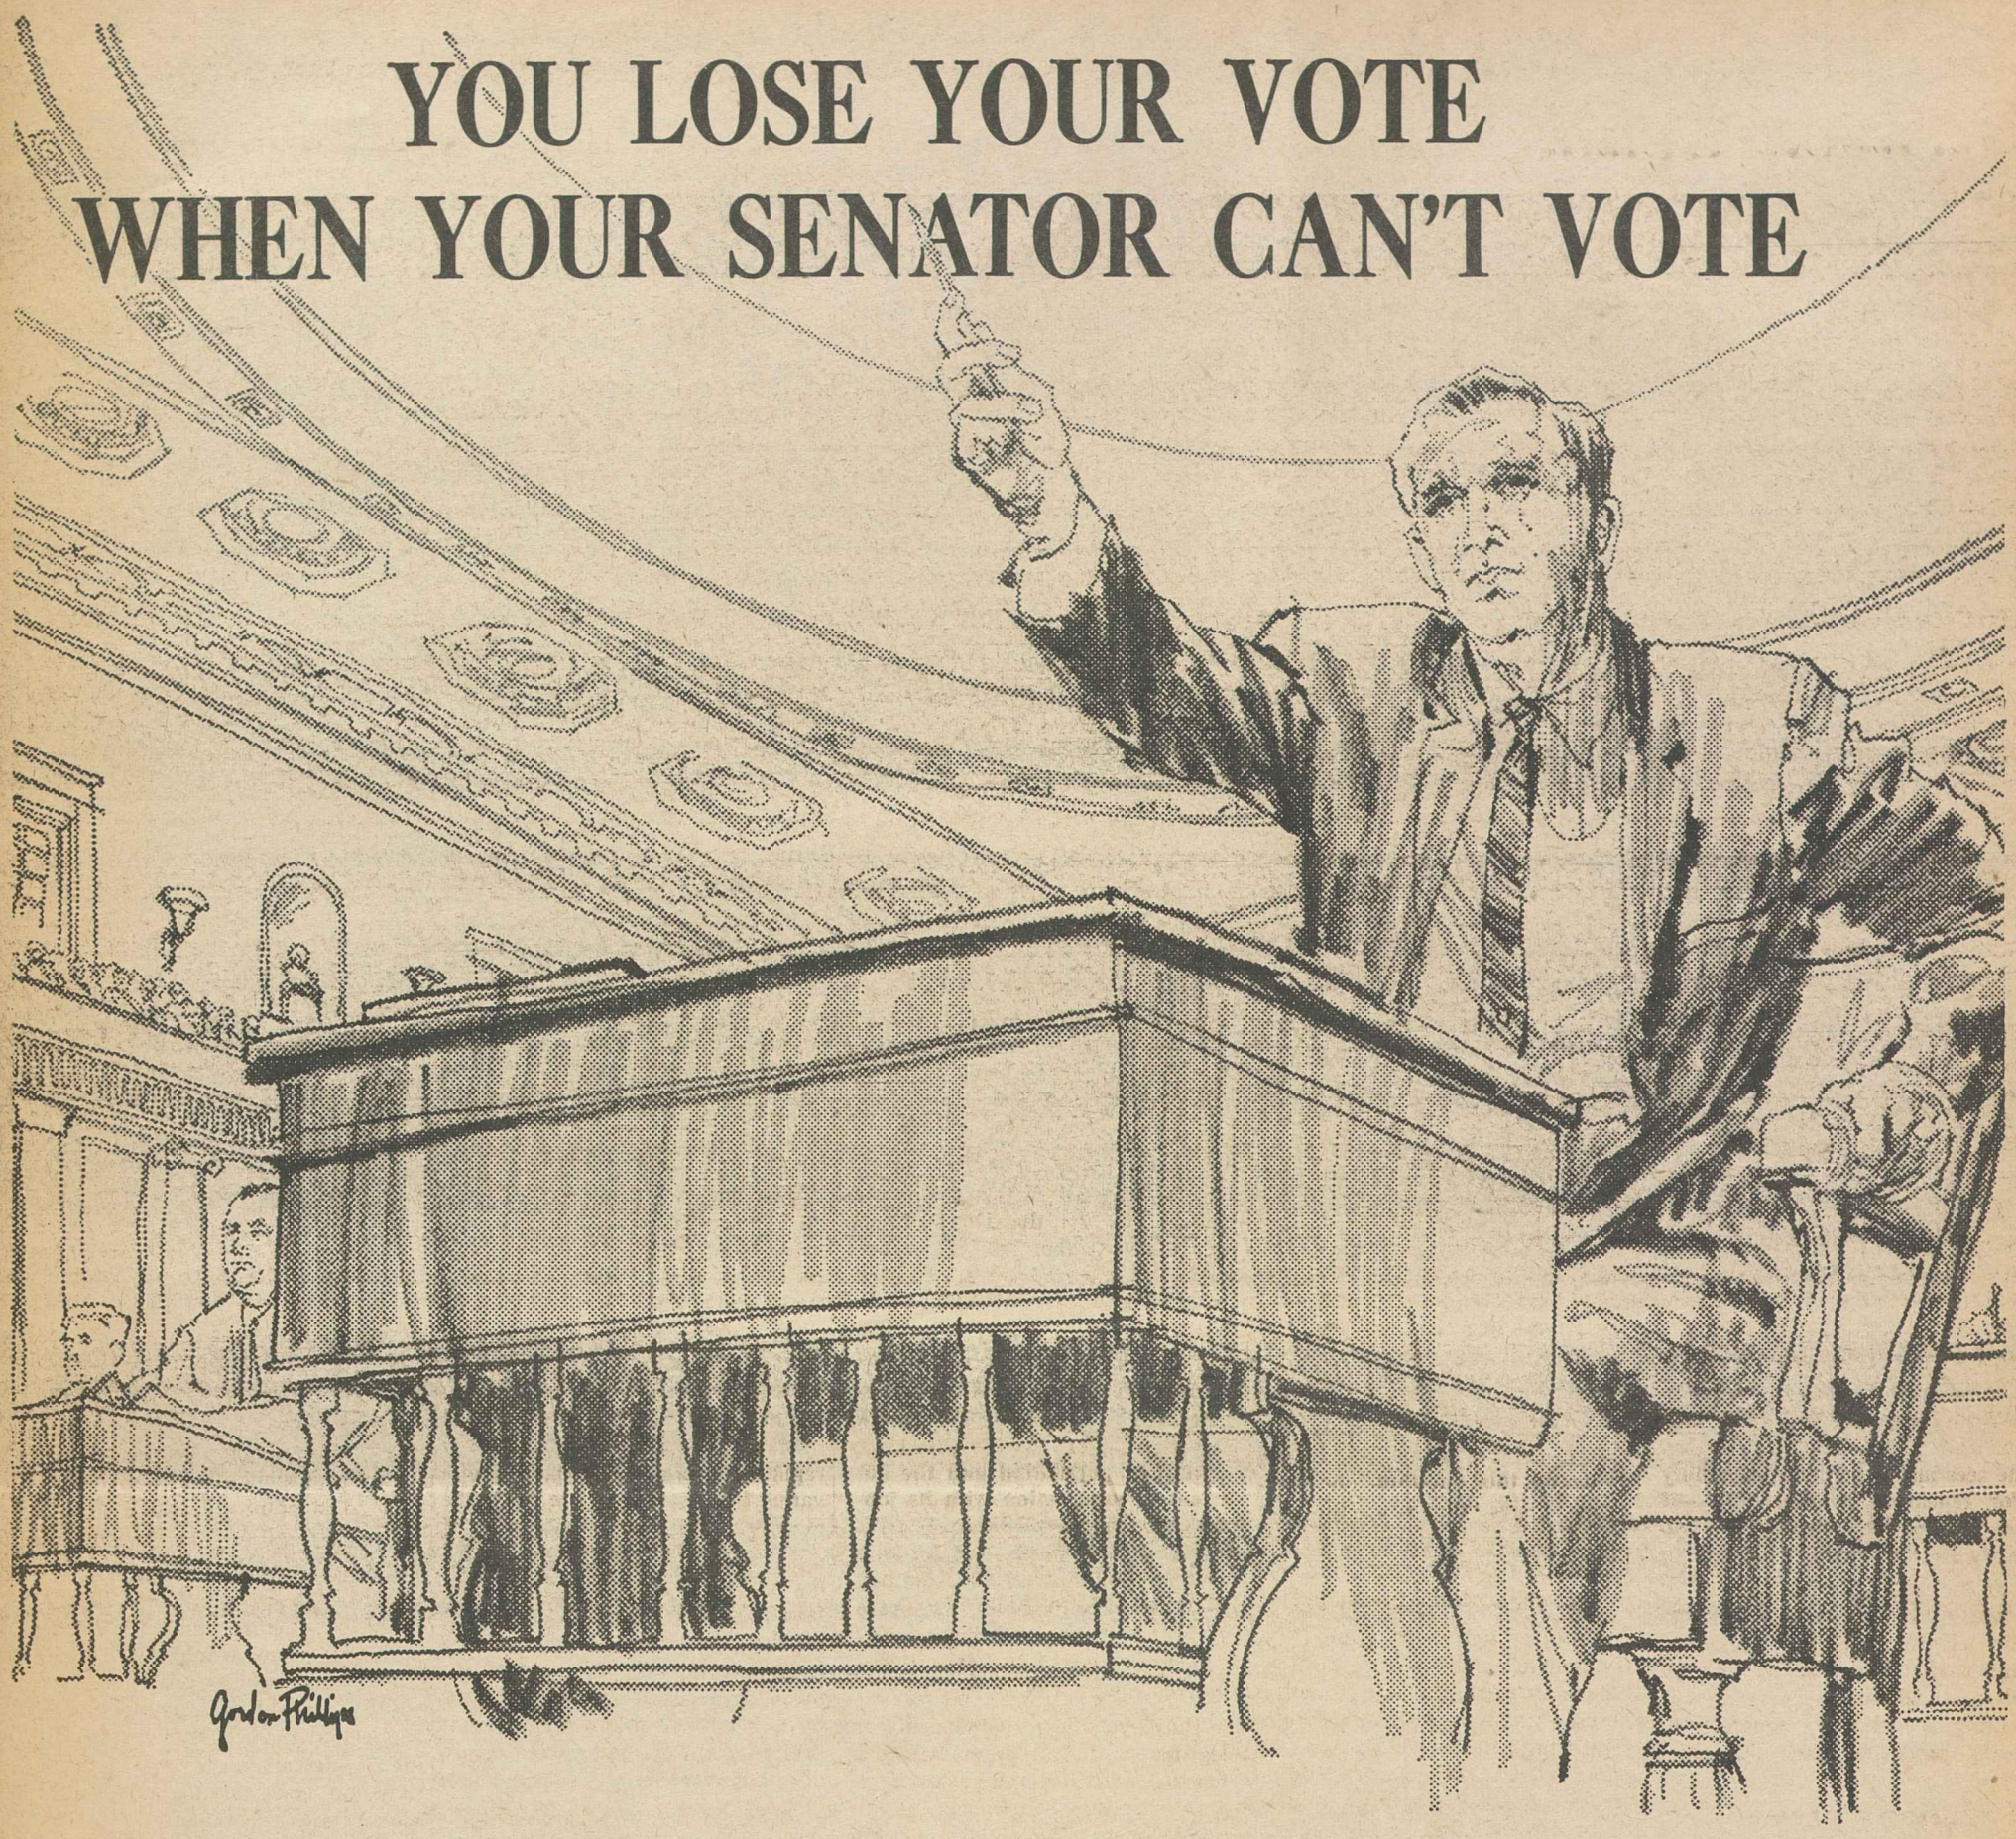
YOU LOSE YOUR VOTE WHEN YOUR SENATOR CAN'T VOTE



The right to vote is a precious thing . . . the keystone of our representative democracy.

With our votes we elect Senators and Representatives who, by their votes in Congress, determine national policy. That way the vote of each of us counts.

But today in the United States Senate this system of representative democracy is threatened by a filibuster that denies our Senators their right to vote on an issue that has been of great national concern for the past 19 years.

That issue is whether our nation's labor law should be changed to permit employers and unions in all 50 states to negotiate the kind of agreement under which people who benefit from the union help share the burden of running the union.

The House of Representatives has voted "yes." By the most overwhelming majority in our nation's electoral history, the people of the United States have elected a President who says "yes." A large majority of the Senators and Representatives were elected on a party platform which said "yes."

But your Senator can't vote on the issue because the Minority Leader in the Senate has been conducting a filibuster that prevents your Senator from voting.

It's the first time in the Senate's long and proud history that:

- a filibuster has been conducted by the leader of one of our great political parties
- a filibuster has been conducted against even considering a bill approved (by a vote of 12-3) by one of its committees.

We believe the proposed change in the labor law is important. We believe, however, that the proper functioning of our cherished democratic institutions is even more vital . . . and that, in these years of crisis, irreparable damage will be done to those institutions if the filibuster is allowed to succeed.

Our right to express our will . . . through the vote of our Senators . . . is an issue that demands that all citizens of conscience unite. It demands that we speak up loudly and clearly for our right to be represented.

Whether or not you agree with us on the merits of the bill, please write now to your Senators on behalf of your right to a vote by the Senate. Make your vote count.

Senate Majority Presses for 14(b) Vote

Dirksen Leads Foes With New Filibuster

after two days of parliamentary maneuvering.

One test vote was taken during the preliminary jockeying—a 42-37 victory for repeal supporters.

The opportunity for the show of strength came when Mansfield sought to call up the repeal bill during the Senate's "morning hour," the period before the start of legislative business when such a motion could be put to an immediate vote.

Dirksen and his allies stalled through the morning hour by demanding the reading of the Senate's official journal. On one occasion, when this did not use up the time, Sen. Sam J. Ervin (D-N.C.) moved to amend the journal to incorporate the text of the chaplain's opening prayer. He held the floor for 90 minutes, speaking on his motion.

When Ervin finished, the morning hour was past. But since his motion to amend the journal was still on the floor, Mansfield moved to table it—an undebatable motion which produced the first record vote in the 14(b) battle.

Test Vote

Mansfield said he viewed the tabling vote as "a test vote of sorts" on Senate sentiment and said he found "some signs of encouragement." He later scheduled a Saturday session, unusual for the Senate.

Earlier, in Portland, Ore., Sen. Wayne Morse (D) told a conference of state union leaders that he sees an 80 percent probability for repeal of Section 14(b)—if the bill reaches the Senate floor early in the session.

Morse said he anticipates efforts to use the bill as a vehicle for anti-labor legislation, but sees little danger that amendment attempts will be successful.

Long speeches by senators opposing repeal was the pattern of the filibuster. Although the "debate" was supposedly on Mansfield's motion to make the repeal bill the pending business, speeches ran all over the lot.

Dirksen's opening day effort, for example, included a description of the sailing vessel which brought his mother to America, his rise from poverty and the number of fish he caught on his vacation.

At one point he deplored the fact that AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany—"a nice fellow"—had referred to him as a "windbag." But, Dirksen assured the Senate, "there is enough of a charitable spirit in me to overlook that."

He then invited senators to "go out and get lunch" while he read a 34-page memorandum on 14(b).

Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (R-Utah) added his contribution by reading to the Senate the names of some 2,000 students he said had sent him a wire opposing repeal.

As the filibuster neared the close of its first week, the AFL-CIO sent to all senators a newly-issued pamphlet, "The History of 14(b) and What It Means," which it described as "an effort to promote discussion based upon realities rather than fabrications."

In a covering letter, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller noted that repeal opponents are conducting a campaign based on "wild charges that completely misrepresent the issue."

While the immediate concern is "that the Senate be allowed to vote on this question," he said, labor hopes "that when the vote is taken, it will be cast on the basis of the fullest possible understanding of the issue itself."

Petitions and letters supporting the Senate's right to vote on 14(b) repeal began reaching senators' desks, counteracting an active right-wing campaign. Some 3,000 persons from Minnesota, Wisconsin and Iowa, including a number of prominent civic leaders, took a unique way of demonstrating their support for a Senate vote. They paid for full-page newspaper advertisements in a Washington, D.C., newspaper, declaring:

"We believe we have a right under our representative government to have that vote taken."

wrote. "We know this article was 'researched' by the Digest organization with the full competence and capability of the resources it commands."

The present law, written by Congress in 1939, hasn't undergone a major revision since then despite a world war, a vast growth in the economy, a huge jump in population and the advent of automation with its job-destroying potentialities. The Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson Administrations all have pointed out that the taxable wage base hasn't been changed since enactment even though wages themselves have climbed steadily.

Employers have persuaded state legislatures to cut or curtail benefits for more and more idled workers. What was a good law in 1939 is no longer a good law in 1966, the AFL-CIO maintains.

The liberalizations in the existing law, supported by the Administration, were introduced in the House by Chairman Wilbur Mills (D-Ark.) of the Ways & Means Committee and in the Senate by Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) and 15 other members.

The bills set up minimum benefits which the states would be required to observe, intended to give most wage and salary workers who become unemployed half of their regular weekly earnings—in contrast to the one-fifth or one-fourth many of them now get.

They also establish uniform disqualification penalties which would replace the crazy-quilt pattern that varies from state to state, with the maximum period set at six weeks.

In addition, unemployed workers whose benefits are used up before they find jobs would be eligible for additional benefits from a federal fund—a plan geared to meet the needs of those whose jobs have been wiped out by automation or plant transfer, and for use during a recession.

The tax rate would be raised but 15 one-hundredths of 1 percent with the revenue, plus an equal amount from general revenues, earmarked to pay for the long-term adjustment benefits. The tax base, unchanged since 1939, would be raised to social security levels but at later dates—to $5,600 for 1966 through 1970, and to $6,600 beginning in 1971.

States with abnormally high benefit costs would be eligible for special grants, and the states would be allowed to adjust tax rates on the basis of experience rating or other methods.

Extend Coverage

In addition the pending bills would extend coverage to 5 million workers who currently are denied protection. Included would be employes of establishments with one or more workers; employes of non-profit institutions, such as hospitals and universities; workers on large farms, and other workers with a regular employe relationship. Even with these additions only about 85 percent of all wage and salary workers would be protected.

The House Ways & Means Committee is expected to complete its work on the pending bill within a few weeks. In April 1960, when the same committee was considering a similar labor-backed bill and the Senate Committee on Unemployment had just finished its work on the measure, the Digest ran an article entitled "The Scandal of Unemployment Compensation" which blasted the unemployed as "loafers, system beaters and dole grabbers."

The same note is carried into the current article. The "cabal of labor leaders and Washington bureaucrats," it charges, is trying to "ram through the greatest raid ever aimed at this country's unemployment compensation system."

It calls the bill, without a word on its provisions, "an open invitation to flagrant cheating" and a "surrender of state's provisional rights," and declared it would "skyrocket the amount of payroll taxes."

Actually, states and local employment offices would continue to administer eligibility provisions and could withhold benefits upon evidence that the worker was unwilling or unavailable for work. Decisions on disqualifying acts would remain with the states.

36 Standards

So far as the alleged infringement of state's rights is concerned, the states already must meet 36 specific requirements, though there is none regarding benefit levels.

Instead of the "billions of dollars" by which the article claims benefits would rise, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz has estimated the increase at 20 percent of the $2.2 billion paid out last year.

"Evidence" such as that cited in the Digest article has come also from the Illinois Chamber of Commerce and the right-wing American Enterprise Institute. Unemployment Benefit Advisers has among its directors executives from U.S. Steel, General Motors, Chrysler, Socony-Mobile, Allis-Chalmers, Goodyear and other large corporations which help support its lobbying activities.

Rector formerly was general counsel of the Wisconsin Unemployment Compensation Agency and is still influential in the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies, which is made up of state unemployment compensation directors.

$2.3 Billion Asked To Transform Cities

Pres. Johnson proposed to Congress a massive program of federal aid for an imaginative rebuilding of slum-ridden cities.

He asked a $2.3 billion program, spread over six years, to transform entire neighborhoods with new schools, parks, community centers and transit service, as well as housing.

"I propose that we focus all the techniques and talents within our society on the crisis of the American city," the President told Congress.

He coupled his request for a new "demonstration cities program" with a call for legislation "to bar racial discrimination in the sale or rental of housing." The "racial ghetto," Johnson said, "will become a thing of the past only when the Negro American can move his family wherever he can afford to do so."

Legislation to accomplish this will be sent to Congress "at an early date," the President promised.

Rent Supplements

He also asked a $30 million appropriation for the new rent supplement program, to enable low-income families to move into existing housing which they cannot now afford.

He reiterated his 1965 proposal for special federal mortgage insurance for planned suburban communities being built by private investment. And he asked an extension of the urban mass transit program for another year.

Johnson laid down exacting criteria for cities to qualify for large-scale federal aid.

Plans submitted should be large enough to encompass entire neighborhoods, to "make a substantial impact within the coming few years on the development of the entire city."

It should keep to a minimum relocation of families and businesses, encourage the participation of local residents and provide them with employment opportunity wherever possible.

It should use "modern cost-reducing technologies without reducing the quality of the work." The President specified that "neither the structure of real estate taxation, cumbersome building codes, nor inefficient building practices should deter rehabilitation or inflate project costs."

A single authority should be in charge of each project, he said, "with adequate powers to carry out and coordinate all phases of the program."

The choice, Johnson said, is to "make our cities livable for ourselves and our posterity" or else "by timidity and neglect damn them to fester and decay."

The President proposed also a parallel program of federal grants to stimulate metropolitan areas planning involving cooperation between cities and suburbs. He put a $6.5 million price tag on the program.

He said the new Dept. of Housing & Urban Development, under Sec. Robert C. Weaver, "now has the authority and the machinery for implementing the new programs I have asked for."

He called on Weaver to organize the department to meet today's needs "rather than fitting new programs into old and outworn patterns."

A rebirth of cities, the President said, would mean:

- "A more tolerable and a more helpful life for millions.
- "The possibility of retaining middle-income families in the city, and even attracting some to return.
- "Improving the cities' tax base.
- "Ultimately reducing welfare costs and avoiding waste of human resources.
- "Giving to both urban and suburban families the freedom to choose where they will live.
- "A clean room and a patch of sky for every person, a chance to live near an open space, and to reach it on a safe street."

In a separate comment on his legislative proposals, Johnson spoke of the "dream" of what cities can be, and declared:

"So let us begin—begin now, this year."

Douglas Sees Broad Impact In 1Man, 1Vote

American liberalism might have taken a different path if one man, one vote reapportionment of state legislatures had been achieved in an earlier generation, Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) suggested.

Douglas delivered two lectures at Howard University under sponsorship of the Clothing Workers' Sidney Hillman Foundation set up in memory of the union's founding president. His other topic was consumer credit.

In his broad-ranging discussion of reapportionment, Douglas noted that it is liberals—in modern times the advocates of national action to meet America's problems—who are seeking to revitalize state legislatures. And it is conservatives, long advocates of state supremacy, who are opposed to making state legislatures more responsive.

Gave Up Hope

Douglas told the Howard students that in his youth he and others like him "despaired of much effective action from the states" and turned to Washington.

"We saw no virtue in federal action for the mere sake of federal power," he said. "But the governmental actions which we advocated, and which we believed were supported by the great majority of the people, would not and could not be taken by the states. The legislatures simply did not represent the people."

With reapportionment under court order rapidly being completed, Douglas said, the nation will benefit through "the diversity of political experience in the states" and the new "sources of initiative and ideas."

He warned his audience, however, not to underestimate the "well-financed, national campaign to stop the reapportionment of legislatures" through the constitutional amendment proposed by Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen.

"They will leave no stone nor dollar nor slogan unturned in an attempt to raise public sentiment in the hope of reversing the votes of members of Congress who have defended the Supreme Court," he warned.

The one man, one vote principle must be defended. Douglas declared, because "equality in citizenship is an unalienable right."

Senate Vote Expands D.C. Pay Floor Bill

The Senate voted 60-10 to set a $1.25-an-hour minimum wage for the District of Columbia, with an automatic increase whenever the federal wage floor is raised.

In both amount and coverage, the Senate improved on the bill passed last year by the House. A House-Senate conference committee will try to reconcile the two measures.

Three hundred thousand workers whose jobs are not covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act would be given wage-hour protection under the Senate bill—about 50,000 more than would be covered by the House version.

A 1918 law applying only to women and children authorizes the District of Columbia commissioners to set minimum wages for certain industries on recommendation of tripartite wage boards.

The Senate bill continues the wage board system in addition to establishing a statutory minimum wage, and applies it to men as well as women workers. The Senate defeated, 42-28, a Republican amendment to prevent city wage boards from setting rates higher than the federal minimum.

The Senate bill, steered to passage by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), includes two groups of workers excluded from the House bill—domestics and employes of hospitals and nursing homes.

In contrast to the Senate bill, the House bill would set initial rates of $1 and $1.15, taking three years to reach the $1.25 wage floor for all workers. The House version lacks any tie to changes in the federal minimum wage.

Differences between the two bills reflect the long division between the Senate and House over matters affecting the District of Columbia. The Senate on several occasions passed minimum wage bills which died without action in the House. The bill passed by the House last year was the first minimum wage legislation ever brought out of the conservative-dominated House District Committee.

Survey Shows 4.1% Hike In Building Trades Pay

Union building trades workers in cities of 100,000 or more population received wage increases averaging 17 cents an hour, or 4.1 percent, in the year ending July 1, 1965, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

Year-end rates averaged $4.64 an hour for journeymen and $3.45 for helpers and laborers, the report showed, or a combined average of $4.42. Average journeymen's scales ranged from $4.20 an hour for paperhangers to $4.91 for plumbers; in the helper-laborer classifications, the range from $2.80 for composition roofers' helpers to $3.91 for terazzo workers' helpers, the study showed.

Grants Offered For Research By Teachers

Chicago — The Teachers will award research grants of $100 to $1,000 to professors, teachers and advanced students for original studies or articles in education, social or physical science, and labor-management relations.

The union wants research that, avoiding the "ivory tower" approach, will "help the classroom teacher, provoke the 'fat cats' in education and stir the layman to action," said Research Dir. Pete Schnaufer.

The AFT expects that more than 100 researchers will be awarded grants during the first year of the program.

A scanning committee includes AFT Pres. Charles Cogen, Vice Pres. Alfred J. Tapson and Schnaufer. A short summary of proposed articles, an idea as to approach and an indication of sources should be sent to Schnaufer at 716 N. Rush St., Chicago, Ill. 60611.

The grants are expected to result in the publication of two or more books a year. The original studies will be published in the new AFT professional journal, to begin publication in April, and in at least two monograph series.

Wirtz Calls for Boost in Wage Floor

Past Hikes Held Good For Nation

Past improvements in the wage-hour law have helped the economy and further "substantial" changes are now needed, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz told Congress.

Wirtz said the Labor Dept. has carefully surveyed the impact of 1961-65 increases in the wage floor and expansion of coverage to determine whether there were any adverse effects—either in loss of jobs or price inflation.

There weren't.

By every measurement, employment went up in the industries affected, profits rose and prices remained relatively stable.

The chief effect, the Labor Dept. found, was to raise the earnings of more than 3.5 million workers by approximately $1.2 billion a year.

As "a conservative estimate," Wirtz said, "this much additional consumer purchasing power results in the creation of 100,000 additional jobs in the economy to satisfy the enlarged demand for goods and services."

No Job Loss

Department investigators carefully tracked down all reports of loss of jobs resulting from the 1961 amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act. Here is what the department reported to Congress:

"Almost none have proved to be rooted in fact.

"A typical report received was of the closing down of the crab processing industry in North Carolina. Reportedly, 18 plants shut their doors on Sept. 3, 1965, because of the increased minimum wage, throwing 1,800 workers out of work. Investigation disclosed that 17 plants had actually closed; but that all except one of them had reopened within the month and the last one two weeks later."

The weakness in the FLSA, Wirtz said, is that it doesn't cover enough workers and sets a wage floor below the poverty level. His report showed:

- More than 17 million nonsupervisory workers are still excluded from wage-hour coverage. This group includes a high concentration of lower paid workers.
- Almost two-thirds of all white workers are covered by the law, but less than half of all non-white workers. Similarly about two-thirds of men workers are covered, only half of women workers.
- Full-time workers at the $1.25 minimum wage earn only $2,600

14(b) 'Distortions' Scored, Cloture Test Set in Senate

LEAFLET SERIES demanding a Senate vote on the 14(b) repeal bill urges letters protesting the filibuster led by Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R-Ill.). Leaflets are available on request from: Room 606, AFL-CIO Building, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006.

Sen. Morse Gives Case For Repeal

By David L. Perlman

A one-sided filibuster was transformed into a sharply-focused debate as senators supporting repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act angrily protested "distortion" of the union shop issue and tactics used to keep the bill from the Senate floor.

The heatening of the debate came as the Senate approached a major test vote on the issue. Majority Leader Mike Mansfield served notice of a cloture vote on limiting debate to be taken Feb. 8. If the vote to break the filibuster falls short of the required two-thirds of senators present and voting, a second cloture ballot will be taken two days later—on the eve of the Senate's scheduled recess for Lincoln Day GOP speechmaking.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) led off the case for 14(b) repeal, charging that the "real story" has been "distorted, misrepresented and lied about in the public press, on television and radio." (Partial text on Page 7.)

In equally strong language, Sen. Claiborne Pell (D-R.I.) warned that "under the surface" of the National Right to Work Committee's effort to block repeal "are the disrupting whispers of the ignorant and ill-informed, the bigots and the hatemongers."

Two weeks after Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen opened the filibuster against the routine motion to consider the House-passed repeal bill, the Senate was still immobilized. Dirksen sought to extend the paralysis further by objecting to committee meetings while the Senate was in session. If there are pressing matters that need action, he suggested, let the Administration drop the fight for 14(b) repeal.

'A Vital Vote'

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany made the following request to all union members:

"The first test vote on 14(b) repeal will come next Tuesday, Feb. 8, on a motion to stop the Dirksen filibuster. It is imperative that your senators hear from you at once.

"Urge them to stop the filibuster.

"This is a vital vote."

Automation Panel Proposes New Job, Income Programs

By Robert B. Cooney

A blue-ribbon commission on automation has recommended that Pres. Johnson and Congress launch twin multi-billion dollar programs to create millions of public service jobs for the hard-core unemployed and to build a minimum income floor for all families.

The National Commission on Technology, Automation & Economic Progress, established by Congress and appointed by the President, filed its report after a year-long study of the pace and impact of technological change and the outlook for the decade ahead.

"There is much to be done," declared the commission after finding enough of a step-up in the pace of change as to leave "no ground for complacency." The challenge of technical progress has not been met with complete success, the group said.

The three labor members and two others on the 14-member commission, while concurring in the report, nevertheless criticized it for lacking a "tone of urgency." This group—made up of Joseph A. Beirne, Albert J. Hayes, Walter P. Reuther, Anna Rosenberg Hoffman and Whitney M. Young, Jr.—expressed the hope the report would be taken as "an agenda for action."

They agreed that problems flowing from technological change in in the next decade "will not be insoluble economically," but added:

"The obstacles to their solution are essentially political. The fundamental political problem is the lack of a sense of urgency in many quarters in dealing with human problems—meeting individual and social needs and the improvement of the quality of life in our society—comparable to the sense of urgency that moves our nation to swift, determined and vigorous action when we face a military challenge."

The group expressed the "profound conviction that no person or family should suffer hardship that it is possible for us as a nation to avoid." The American Negro, it added, must wait no longer for the full equality that can be his under full employment.

The commission, in its 210-page report, offered a wide range of findings on the nature and pace of technological change and proposed steps to cope with it.

Job Goal Stressed

It urged that national economic policies aim "resolutely and watchfully" at reducing the general unemployment rate to 3.5 percent or below by the start of 1967. The group noted the rate was reduced from 5.1 percent to 4.1 percent during the term of its study.

Since policies promoting economic growth tend to open up job opportunities to the better qualified, an other possibility is "to begin at the rear of the line and create employment opportunities tailored to the abilities of those with serious com-

Johnson Asks Congress For Sharp Aid Revision

By Willard Shelton

Pres. Johnson in a series of special messages urged approval of a sharply revised foreign aid program in which economic and military assistance would be split into separate compartments, with $2.46 billion allotted to economic aid and $917 million to military assistance.

He warned that hunger, malnutrition, disease and poverty in the underdeveloped nations still "challenge our own security and threaten the future of the world," but proposed a sharp shift of emphasis to economic aid directed at helping "those nations determined to help themselves" in an attack on "the root causes of poverty."

The total economic and military program he requested for the fiscal year beginning July 1, at $3.4 billion, is well below the $4.1 billion authorized for current programs.

This reduction is deceptive, however, partly because the current programs were increased by supplemental authorizations during the year and partly because military aid to South Viet Nam for fiscal 1967 has been pulled

Hatters Union Will Continue To Run Plant

New York—The Hatters, concluding a two-month effort to find a buyer for the union-owned Merrimac Hat Co. in Amesbury, Mass., will continue to operate the factory under union auspices "for the benefit of the industry and the workers," Pres. Alex Rose announced here.

The union publicly offered the hat firm for sale Dec. 6 to anyone willing to guarantee that the factory would continue to serve the industry and preserve the jobs of Amesbury workers.

There were many inquiries but no would-be purchaser was willing to give those assurances. Therefore the union, through its majority stock holding, resumed manufacturing operations Feb. 1 after a seasonal lull and said it will continue its ownership role by necessity, not by desire.

The Merrimac Hat Co. was rescued from liquidation seven years ago by the Hatters, who raised $500,000 to buy the company's assets. The union retained the former management and for seven years has continued to show a profit each year, pay dividends to the investors and keep the employes on the payroll.

The Hatters, hoping to return the factory to private enterprise eventually, will keep things going until that day comes, Rose declared.

SupremeCourt Slates Review Of Hoffa Case

The Supreme Court agreed to review the conviction of James R. Hoffa in federal District Court in Chattanooga, Tenn., on charges of jury-tampering in an earlier trial.

The court limited its review to the single issue of whether Hoffa's constitutional rights had been violated by government use of a "secret informer" from the earlier trial, in Nashville, Tenn., in 1962, as a witness in the Chattanooga case.

Hoffa, president of the Teamsters, was sentenced to eight years in prison and a $10,000 fine following his Chattanooga conviction, which was upheld by the 6th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The Teamsters were expelled by the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt elements.

Hoffa's application for review, which the court accepted, involved testimony from a former associate, Edward G. Partin. His lawyers argued that Partin, although a member of the defense camp in the Nashville trial, was actually a "planted" agent of the government who reported to the Justice Dept. on alleged jury-tampering incidents. This was a violation of Hoffa's constitutional rights, his lawyers argued, against self-incrimination, the right to counsel, and guarantee against unreasonable search.

Review Limited

The court agreed to review the question of whether the alleged "placing" of Partin as an informer in the Nashville trial should not have required the suppression of his evidence "in a subsequent trial of the same defendant [Hoffa] on a different charge."

The Nashville trial, involving an indictment on charges of violating the Taft-Hartley Act, ended with a hung jury. The government subsequently obtained its indictment and Chattanooga conviction of Hoffa on charges of having tampered with that jury.

General Motors Profits Hit Record $2.1 Billion

Detroit—Net profits of General Motors Corp. in 1965 soared 23 percent above the company's previous all-time high of $1.7 billion in 1964. The 1965 figure for profits after taxes was $2.1 billion, the company disclosed.

Booming ahead with 53 percent of total automobile sales, GM had net earnings of $7.41 a share on its common stock, up from $6.05 per share in 1964, and boosted its dividend payments to 1.3 million stockholders from $4.45 a share to $5.25. Aggregate dividend payments totaled nearly $1.5 billion.

The company also used an additional $2.16 per share of earnings for reinvestment in its own facilities—up from $1.60 per share in 1964.

GM's 1965 profits were the largest ever reported by an American company for a single year—well ahead of the $1.8 billion reported by American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for the 12 months ended last Nov. 30.

The GM statement, issued by Board Chairman Frederic G. Donner and Pres. James E. Roche, said unit and dollar sales also set new records, as did worldwide employment and payroll levels.

It was the fourth straight year that GM sales and earnings figures set new records. Donner earlier this year predicted that 1966 auto sales would be about the same as in 1965.

Michael J. Quill Dies; Transport Union Leader

New York—Michael J. Quill, founding president of the Transport Workers, died of a heart attack in his apartment here less than a month after the union won wage and fringe benefit gains on New York City bus and subway lines following a strike.

"I am shocked at the news," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wired Mrs. Quill. "Mike was a good and old friend. My sincere sympathies go to you and all his fellow officers in the Transport Workers Union."

The TWU constitution provides that in case of the president's death the remainder of his term shall be filled by the executive vice president, Matthew Guinan. Guinan, also secretary-treasurer, will serve until the union's next convention, in 1969.

In Failing Health

In failing health for the past few years because of a heart condition, Quill suffered an attack of what was later described as congestive heart failure in City Jail shortly after he had been arrested for refusing to obey a court order to call off the strike. He spent the remainder of the walkout, and several days thereafter, in a hospital.

Quill was born 60 years ago in Gourtloughera, County Kerry, Ireland, and was a member of the Irish Republican Army during the Troubles of 1922-23. He landed in this country on St. Patrick's Day, 1926, worked as a laborer in the construction of a subway station here and the following year sold religious articles door-to-door in Western Pennsylvania mining towns.

He returned to New York in 1928 and got a job with the Interborough Rapid Transit system. He was naturalized in 1931 and the next year, upon his return from Vienna where he underwent surgery to correct a defective hip joint, found that the IRT's company union had agreed to a 10 percent wage cut to help the firm, which had gone into receivership.

Quill led a few other workers who began to work for a true union, and the TWU grew out of the organization they formed in 1934. Quill was elected full-time president the following year, holding the office until his death.

The union grew to 44,000 members soon after receiving a charter from the former Congress of Industrial Organizations in 1937 and quickly won contracts in major New York subway, trolley and bus operations.

It then expanded to other cities and to other areas of transportation.

Quill was elected to the New York City Council as an American Labor Party candidate in 1937 and again in 1943, serving until 1949. In 1948, he helped push through a TWUA convention resolution barring Communists or their sympathizers from holding office.

His widow, whom he married in 1962, is the former Shirley Garry. He is survived by a son, John Daniel Quill, by his first wife, the former Theresa Maria O'Neill, who died in 1959.

Msgr. Charles Owen Rice of Washington, Pa., said the funeral mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral. Burial was at Gate of Heaven Cemetery in Hawthorne, N.Y.

Meany Backs Step-up In Reserves' Training

Pres. George Meany has pledged AFL-CIO support to the Defense Dept.'s program of intensified military training for some reservists and national guardsmen.

He also asked the presidents of all national and international unions to cooperate "in this very important effort," and added:

"Members of reserve components will now be required to increase their training during evenings and over weekends. For the many among them who are hourly employes, changes in work schedules may be necessary. Arrangements also may be required to make sure that the earnings, seniority and other rights of reservists will not be jeopardized as a consequence of increased military duties."

In his letter, Meany restated the expressed hope of Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara that "management personnel, labor representatives and guard and reserve unit commanders will work together to assure that equitable arrangements are made so that reservists can perform their duties with a minimum impact on all concerned."

"I have assured the secretary of defense of complete AFL-CIO cooperation in this matter,' Meany continued. "Towards this end, it would be greatly appreciated if you would communicate the nature of this problem, and your own request for cooperation, to all appropriate representatives of your organization, perhaps including a copy of this letter."

In a letter to McNamara spelling out AFL-CIO cooperation in the program, Meany designated Research Dir. Nat Goldfinger to work with the Defense Dept. "to assist in implementing this effort."

The Defense Dept. designated for the stepped-up training program three divisions, six brigades and associated company and detachment-sized units from the national guard and reserve force, with a total strength of 150,000; nine tactical fighter squadrons, four tactical reconnaissance squadrons and one tactical control group of the Air National Guard, and 11 Air Force reserve transport squadrons totalling about 22,000 members.

The national guard and reserve force units have been scheduled for 72 training assemblies in 1966, compared with 48 drill periods formerly authorized. Some key individuals in the units, the department said, will be required to participate in 96 training periods.

'Meaningful Victory':

High Court Backs Full Crew Laws

The Supreme Court has ruled that state "full crew" laws were not voided by a 1963 federal law compelling arbitration of the size of train crews nor by awards of special emergency boards under the legislation.

Justice Hugo Black, writing for the seven-member court majority, said that when Congress ordered the arbitration to prevent a pending railroad strike, it "had no intention of superseding the state full crew laws" specifying the minimum number of workers for train crews. Justice William O. Douglas dissented and Justice Abe Fortas, newest member of the high court, did not participate.

The ruling, reversing a decision by a three-judge U.S. District Court panel in Arkansas, was hailed as a "meaningful victory" by a spokesman for the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, who said it "reinforces" full crew laws in six other states as well—New York, Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin, Washington and Oregon.

Pres. Charles Luna of the Railroad Trainmen said the ruling recognizes the clear intent of Congress, both in hearings and in debate on the compulsory arbitration law.

Sec.-Treas. Daniel W. Collins of the Switchmen said that "every full crew law in the United States hinged on" the outcome of the Arkansas case. His union, he said, will seek full enforcement of the law on a Buffalo, N.Y., line which notified the union it was cutting crew sizes.

Five operating unions and the state of Arkansas had challenged the ruling by the lower court on the Arkansas state full crew law. The others are the Trainmen and the unaffiliated Locomotive Engineers and Conductors.

The Supreme Court reversed the findings of the District Court and returned the case for consideration of three constitutional issues.

The case arose when a group of interstate railroads operating in Arkansas asked the U.S. District Court to declare two state full crew laws unconstitutional and to enjoin the state's attorney from attempting to enforce them.

The laws, one passed in 1907 and the other in 1913, require at least six men on lines of more than 50 miles in one case, more than 100 miles in the other. Rail management charged the laws were "arbitrary and capricious," needlessly increase costs, discriminate in favor of local commerce and "invade a field of legislation pre-empted by the federal government" in Public Law 88-108—the 1963 action requiring arbitration of the dispute over management demands for reduced crews.

The high court majority concluded that Congress did not need to preempt the state laws in settling the 1963 dispute and that examination of the legislative history of Public Law 88-108 "confirms our view that Congress had no intention of superseding" the state laws.

COPE Sounds Warning On '66 Rightist Drive

Right-wing extremists will be "playing for keeps" in the 1966 congressional elections, the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education warns.

A new COPE pamphlet reports that the John Birch Society and other radical right groups are raising multi-million dollar war chests to expand an already large-scale political and propaganda operation.

The Birch Society already has a staff of 250 paid workers and a network of 360 bookstores. It has an announced goal of recruiting 1,000 members in each of 325 congressional districts. And, COPE reports, "it will swing its sharpest hatchet in the 51 districts that switched in 1964 from conservative to liberal."

The goal of the Birchers, COPE declares, is "to take over Congress or, at the very least, destroy the present liberal majority."

Aiding their efforts will be the historical pattern that the party in control of the White House loses seats in off-year elections—and the pattern that the drop-off in voter turnout in non-presidential years is heaviest among working people and their families.

The Birchers aren't the only right-wing extremists mobilizing for the November election, the COPE pamphlet notes.

Old and new ultra-right groups have been stepping up their propaganda. Before the 1964 political campaign, some 6,000 extremist programs were carried on radio or television each week in more than 500 cities. Currently, says COPE, "more than 10,700 programs are broadcast each week in more than 1,000 communities."

Copies of the COPE pamphlet, "They're Playing for Keeps," are available free of charge. Request Publication No. 163C from AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, 815 16th Street, NW, Washington, D.C. 20006.

20-Point Summary:

Major Conclusions Of Automation Panel

The National Commission on Technology, Automation & Economic Progress arrived at the following major conclusions and recommendations, presented here in condensed form:

1. There has been "some increase" in the pace of technological change. The most useful yardstick for policy purposes is the annual growth of output per man-hour in the private economy. With 1947 as a dividing point, the trend rate of increase from 1909 to 1947 was 2 percent a year; from 1947 to 1964 it was 3.1 percent a year.

The labor members of the commission took issue on this point, criticizing the report for lacking a "tone of urgency." Agreeing the problems ahead can be solved economically, they said the obstacles to solution are essentially political. There is a lack of a sense of urgency in dealing with human problems which contrasts with that when the nation is threatened militarily, they said.

2. The excessive unemployment following the Korean War, only now beginning to abate, resulted from an economic growth rate too slow to offset the rise in productivity plus a growing labor force.

3. There will be a continuing need for aggressive fiscal and monetary policies to stimulate growth. A growth rate unprecedented in U.S. history is needed to match rising productivity and labor force increases.

4. Technological change is not the major determinant of the general level of unemployment, but it does displace particular persons in particular occupations, industries and locations.

5. Unemployment tends to be concentrated among workers with little education, not so much because technology changes the nature of jobs but because the less-educated are at the "back of the line" in the competition for jobs. This does not mean the process of education should be relied on to solve unemployment.

6. The outlook for employment and adjustment to change in the next decade depends on the policies followed. Recent patterns pose an important warning: unless Negroes and young people penetrate growing occupations and industries at a more rapid rate, their high jobless rates will continue or even rise.

7. Economic policy must continue, "watchfully but resolutely," to reduce the general unemployment rate. Fiscal policies should center on public investment expenditures.

8. Despite the best fiscal and monetary policies, some will be handicapped in the job competition by lack of education, skill, experience or because of discrimination. Public service employment can provide useful work for these "hard-core unemployed."

9. Economic security should be guaranteed by a floor under family income.

10. Educational opportunity should be available to all, including compensatory education for the disadvantaged, free schooling through junior college, elimination of financial obstacles to higher education and opportunities for education, training and retraining.

11. A national computerized job-man matching system should be created to provide information on jobs and available workers on local, regional and national scales.

12. The present federally-financed but state-administered public employment services should be made wholly federal.

13. The present programs of relocation aid for workers and their families in declining areas should be made permanent.

14. Since displacement, technological and otherwise, has been particularly painful to those barred from new opportunity by discrimination, all social barriers to employment should be eliminated and special programs devised.

15. Since technological and economic changes have different geographic impacts and require concerted regional responses, each Federal Reserve bank should provide economic development leadership in its area.

16. Federal, state and local governments were urged to conduct themselves as model employers in developing techniques of adjustment to change. But most adjustments must occur in private employment but here employers and unions can do much and with flexibility.

17. Technology enlarges the capacities of man and extends his control over his environment. Its benefits should be spread among higher living standards and increased leisure, an improved job environment, greater investment in human and community needs and aiding less-advantaged nations.

18. Among applications of new technologies to unmet human and community needs, improvements are needed in health care, transportation, control of air and water pollution and housing.

19. The commission recommended increased use of systems analysis in resolving social and environmental problems; use of federal procurement as a stimulus to technological innovation through purchasing by performance criteria rather than product specification; provision of federal funds to universities and organizations for improvement of research techniques and their experimental application to urban problems; formation of university institutes integrated with the educational function to serve as laboratories for urban problem analysis and resources for local communities; increased efforts to make results of government performed or funded research available for non-government use.

20. The commission recommends employer efforts to "humanize" the work environment by adapting work to human needs, making the life-span of work more flexible and ending the mode of payment distinction between hourly and salaried employes; exploration of a system of social accounts to enable assessment of costs and benefits of alternative policies; and continuous study of national goals and evaluation of national performance.

Broad Aid Programs Proposed To Create Jobs, Bolster Incomes

petitive disadvantages," the report said.

The Neighborhood Youth Corps and other anti-poverty programs do just this and should be expanded and made permanent, the commission recommended.

It also said the major financing would come from the federal government, with new job opportunities located mainly in the state and local public sectors. The jobs would meet real needs, wages would meet at least the federal minimum and employes would have the chance of promotion.

The commission estimated a total of 5.3 million jobs can be created to meet the huge backlog of public service needs. The job potentials were estimated as: 1.2 million in medical institutions and health services; 1.1 million in educational institutions; 1.3 million in national beautification; 700,000 in welfare and home care; 350,000 in public protection and 650,000 in urban renewal and sanitation.

The commission recommended that a five-year program be established. It would be launched with an initial $2 billion to provide about 500,000 additional full-time public service jobs for the hard-core unemployed. The job total would be expanded each year and serious studies would meanwhile seek to uncover the causes of hard-core joblessness.

Another major recommendation called on Congress to go beyond reform and develop an integrated and comprehensive system of social insurance and income maintenance. The group said it felt strongly this is both necessary and feasible at this point in U.S. history.

A "minimum income allowance" or "negative income tax" program could bring a gradual end to the means test used in public assistance programs, the report said, by providing a floor of adequate minimum incomes.

Concrete proposals already advanced would cost as little as $2 billion a year or more than $20 billion a year, depending on the income floor and enforcement care, the report noted.

Other major recommendations called for a national computerized job-man matching system to mesh job opportunities and jobseekers on a local, regional and national basis; a federalized public employment service to replace the present federal-state system; a vast overhaul of the nation's educational system and special programs to help Negroes overcome handicaps of discrimination.

Other proposals aim at improving public decision-making, at applying technology to community needs and at humanizing and improving conditions of the workplace.

1st Pay Order Issued Under Service Act

The first determination of minimum wages under the federal McNamara-O'Hara Service Contract Act has been made by Wage-Hour Administrator Clarence T. Lundquist, the Labor Dept. announced.

Lundquist directed that service employes working in Maricopa County, Ariz., on federal contracts in excess of $2,500 shall be paid from $1.66 to $3.50 an hour for stipulated classes of work.

The order also provides one week's paid vacation after a year's service and six paid holidays for all classes of service employes.

The act requires that service employes be paid at least the wage and fringe benefits determined by the administrator to be prevailing for such work in the locality. It also requires that the service shall not be performed under unsafe or unsanitary working conditions which are under the control or supervision of the contractor.

Labor Endorses Bank For Asian Development

The AFL-CIO has urged Congress to approve U.S. membership in the new Asian Development Bank, set up to provide low-interest long-term loans for economic development projects.

Legislative Rep. James F. Doherty told a House Banking subcommittee that the AFL-CIO "heartily supports" the pooling of resources in what Pres. Johnson termed "a cooperative effort for peaceful development and human betterment in Asia." Sixty-five percent of the bank's $1 billion capital is being subscribed by Asian nations.

Doherty cited the success of the comparable Inter-American Development Bank, which has financed social progress programs in western hemisphere nations. He noted that the Latin American bank has administered special programs which have helped finance low-cost workers' housing in cooperation with Latin American unions and cooperatives.

The people of Asia also need low-cost housing, credit facilities, cooperatives, health and sanitation facilities, Doherty observed.

He stressed that the bank's objectives are in line with labor's advocacy of "a practical and humanitarian foreign economic policy which recognizes that material improvement in human welfare is essential to preserve freedom in the world."

The proposed United States contribution to the Asian bank is $100 million over a five-year period, with an equal amount pledged as collateral for loans to the bank from private sources.

The bank would also be empowered to administer special development funds contributed by various nations. Only members of the United Nations or UN specialized agencies would be eligible for membership in the bank.

NLRB Legal Aide To Get New Post

Gen. Counsel Arnold Ordman of the National Labor Relations Board has named Francis E. Dowd, Jr., as an assistant general NLRB counsel charged with supervising board offices in Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Albuquerque, N.M., and Winston-Salem, N.C.

Beverage Industry Cites Tax Threat

The stability of the alcoholic beverage industry and the future of its 1.7 million employes are being threatened by unreasonably high taxation, according to the chairman of the tax council of the National Coordinating Committee of the Beverage Industry.

Charles W. Bryant, speaking before the annual luncheon of the committee, which includes a widespread cross section of unions, charged that high taxes affecting the industry encourage bootlegging.

Bryant pointed out that on top of the $10.50 per gallon in federal taxes, state and local taxes have been added to the point where 60 cents of every dollar spent for distilled spirits is tax. As a result, he said, illegal "moonshine" is being produced on a large scale.

New Numbers Game

THE PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL of Economic Advisers has come up with a new version of the "numbers game" that can affect everyone who works for wages or salary.

The object of the game is to hold down wage increases in 1966. It is accomplished by tossing away numbers used to measure increases in productivity over the past several years and substituting a new number that has no relationship to the old yardstick.

For example, if the five-year average increase in productivity came to 3.2 percent in 1965 and would under the same averaging approach rise to 3.6 percent for 1966, the averaging yardstick is dumped and the council arbitrarily says the figure should remain at 3.2 percent.

The reason for the 3.2 percent guideline to wage increases, says the council, is simple enough: "It would be inappropriate" to raise it.

BUT THE economic advisers' concern with wage-price guidelines is heavily biased on the "wage" side. There is no discussion of a guideline figure on the increase in profits—no 3.2 or 3.6 percent path set out to keep corporation earnings under control.

At most the council says that companies with "exceptionally favorable productivity gains must consider whether this is the time to seek to keep the gains in the form of still higher profits or whether to share them with consumers through lower prices." No numbers.

Two years ago in 1964, the council discussed the same problem in somewhat sharper terms: "The guideposts call for reductions (in prices) in those industries whose trend productivity gains exceed the national trend. It is fair to say that large industrial enterprises thus far have not widely heeded this advice . . . failure to follow the general price guide will cause profits to pile up. Such profits become highly visible to the public and constitute a lure for strongly intensified wage demands."

WHY THE PRESENT council chose a stern, arbitrary attitude towards wage increases is a bit difficult to understand in terms of other sections of the report.

In discussing unit labor costs, the key factor in wage-price relationships, the council notes that in 1965 "average increase in total hourly compensation was consistent with relative stability of average unit labor costs throughout the economy."

It adds that the record of wage contracts in 1965 was "generally satisfactory" and that the basic pattern of wages for most key industries has already been set for 1966.

For the entire economy the council expects unit labor costs to rise about 1.5 percent for the year and to be "approximately stable" in manufacturing.

The report's facts and figures do not provide the basic evidence for a holddown on wage increases. On the contrary, they prove that union wage policies, as reflected in stable unit labor costs, have contributed to the nation's economic growth and strength.

They do show, however, that there is a minimal concern with skyrocketing profits, which last year rose twice as fast as all wage and salary payments. The answer to this is not a "numbers game" approach aimed at a worker's paycheck.

'Incredible Waste':

Economic Report Underscores Sharp Lag in Negro Incomes

The following is excerpted from the annual report of the Council of Economic Advisers to Congress sent to the Capitol Jan. 27, 1966.

NOT ALL GROUPS of Americans share equally in their country's prosperity. In 1964, the average income of nonwhite families was only 56 percent of the average income of white families. This and similar figures provide telling indicators of the task that the nation still faces in assuring equality of opportunity and achievement for all its citizens. They also indicate an incredible waste of our human resources.

Three important and distinct types of discrimination help to explain the difference between white and nonwhite incomes.

Discrimination results in lower wages for Negroes (who comprise 90 percent of the nonwhite group) even when they are doing the same kind of work as whites. Available data show that Negroes receive less income in every industry, in every occupation, and at every level of education.

Discrimination also excludes many Negroes from higher-paying jobs that would fully utilize their talents or training. Negroes are frequently forced to hold jobs that whites with the same experience and training would not ordinarily hold; and Negroes suffer from higher unemployment rates within all skill categories.

Finally, part of the income difference is explained by past discrimination which has lowered the potential productivity of Negroes by providing less investment in human resources for them than for their white contemporaries. This type of discrimination is manifested by lower expenditures for schools and health facilities in Negro neighborhoods.

Low family incomes are a product of these factors; but low incomes would tend to perpetuate these factors even if discrimination were eliminated. Low incomes for poor whites also result in lesser educational achievement, poorer health, fewer skills, and consequently higher unemployment. To promote real equality, Negroes must break through the barrier of discrimination; but this will not be sufficient. They must also break out of the cycle of poverty.

A combination of social and economic change is necessary to correct the disparities between Negroes and whites. But prosperity is also an essential requirement because it creates and opens up jobs for the disadvantaged.

The progress of the last two years confirms a crucial lesson. A prosperous economy and the labor demand that it generates are potent forces for eliminating discrimination and income differentials even though they cannot create equality. Improved Negro purchasing power will not fully overcome the effects of discrimination, but it will have a beneficial influence.

Negroes are also at a disadvantage in the housing market. Many Negroes live in substandard housing because their incomes are low; but others are forced to do so by direct discrimination. . . . Discrimination in housing forces Negroes to pay higher rents and in many places to attend inferior schools.

ALTHOUGH ECONOMIC LOSSES are not the major reason for eliminating discrimination, they serve to emphasize its economic cost to all Americans. When there is a surplus of labor of all types and skills, eliminating discrimination results mainly in a redistribution of income. The economic cost of discrimination becomes most evident when there is near full employment of the white labor force.

If economic and social policies could be specifically designed to lower Negro unemployment to the current unemployment level of whites, the resulting gain in GNP would be $5 billion. Part of this gain would be in wages of the new Negro employes, and part would accrue as other forms of income. A further gain would result if all Negroes were able to obtain jobs which would better utilize their abilities and training.

National output can be further expanded by improving the average level of productivity of each individual. Education and training are two of the most important means to this end. If the average productivity of the Negro and white labor force were equalized at the white level, total production would expand by $22 billion. If both unemployment rates and productivity levels were equalized, the total output of the economy would rise by about $27 billion—4 percent of GNP. This is a measure of the annual economic loss as a result of discrimination. Of course, to achieve this increase in output, some resources would have to be devoted to investment in the human capital of America's Negro citizens. But this would be an investment yielding important economic as well as social returns for the entire nation.

Race Bias Poses 'High Hurdle' To Reforms of Great Society

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

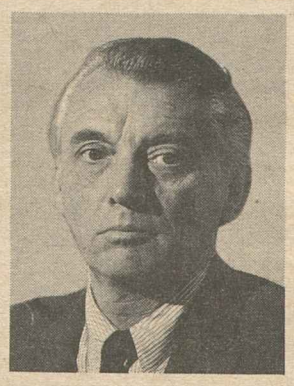
WITHIN THE SPACE of 24 hours Pres. Johnson hurled at Congress new battle plans to attack rural poverty and rebuild city slums. He proposed coming to grips with deficiencies that rob poor country residents of a full life, by pooling the resources of rural counties and towns. He fired off to Capitol Hill a six-year, $2.3 billion program to rebuild entire slum neighborhoods in U. S. cities and rehabilitate their inhabitants.



Morgan

Everybody is so distracted by the continuing crisis in Southeast Asia that it is almost impossible to get a word in edgewise on any other subject. The truth is, however, that unless these internal weaknesses are vigorously and realistically attacked without delay, the Great Society will be blighted before it begins to open to the full blossom of which it is capable.

It raises the emotional hackles of racial prejudice or produces the protective glaze of indifference to say it, but the one key to the lock on the poverty problem is the plight of the Negro. It is not the only key, however, and this very fact, if understood, may open new approaches. The battle for civil rights and the war on poverty, for instance, are really campaigns that complement each other and they should be joined.

The black man is the dramatic victim of a denial of civil rights but the fact needs to be grasped that of the 30 million Americans living on the raw edge of bare subsistence in this opulent land, eight out of 10 are white; they all are being denied the right of opportunity.

Leadership groups from the grass roots up, not just in civil rights but in many other fields, should concentrate on helping themselves and the public to clear the high hurdle of common racial prejudice in order to get on with the common cause of a better life for those of the populace who are deprived, either by pinches in the pocketbook or the brutal squeeze of bigotry or both.

One good way to begin is to explode what might be called the realistic myth that Negroes moving into white neighborhoods destroy property values. There has been some reality to it because of panic selling promoted by some unscrupulous real estate dealers to achieve "block-busting," the exodus of whole blocks of white residents whose homes are then sold to Negroes often willing to pay inflated prices.

A Washington consultant on racial affairs, Sherwood Ross, who once worked for the National Urban League, said results of a survey in 47 cities dispute the theory that home values decline when Negroes move in. He cited figures showing that home values in integrated neighborhoods jumped 45 percent in the decade between 1950 and 1960; those in changing neighborhoods rose 42 percent.

THAT DECADE included recessions preceding the long, uninterrupted period of economic growth we are now in. Nevertheless, Ross argued that the gains just cited were produced by the "swift growth of the Negro middle class—financially and culturally." If this is true, the figures should show a more spectacular rise for the boom that has been echoing across the country for the last five years.

Ross' facts and figures may be less scientifically drawn than the most careful sociological and fiscal evaluation procedures demand, but there are impressive individual examples to support his conclusions. One of these is a remarkable California enterprise called Eichler Homes, Inc., based in San Francisco. Founded in 1948, this company, which has enjoyed an enviable success in building and selling middle-class homes, has never pursued a policy of closed occupancy.

Protesting vigorously the stand of a San Francisco home builders' association against open occupancy some years ago, Pres. Joseph L. Eichler declared the only standard his company uses "to qualify a person for a house is that he has the financial qualifications and that, in our opinion, he will make a good neighbor." His race or the color of his skin has nothing to do with the transaction.

Briefly, the Eichler philosophy is that there is something more to selling a house than just a business transaction. Builders, one company official says, "are in a position that they have denied for too long . . . when they build a lot of homes or apartments, they create communities. They create a lot of things in those communities which are going to be there a long time after they leave them. The whole question of how people will live with each other, all kinds of phychological, emotional, and aesthetic considerations, are involved."

Eichler is convinced that "the race question is the single biggest block to advancement in this society. On all levels of personal relationships, education, and the other 'goods' that our society should be creating and developing, we seem to be paralyzed, and yet we have vast, unused resources."

The Eichler open-minded resourcefulness has carried open occupancy into successful subdivisions it has built in one of the most conservative suburban areas in the nation, Orange County, adjoining Los Angeles. What reforms in this country have lacked are not visionaries but practical men with vision. They are there, if somebody will look for them.

System Undercut:

States 'Cheapen' Jobless Aid In Competing for New Industry

SOME STATES cheapen their unemployment insurance programs as part of their bid for new industries, an AFL-CIO spokesman charged.

"In effect, unemployed workers have been sacrificed to this interstate competitive pressure" which "has undercut the system from Maine to California," Raymond Munts, acting director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, said.

As a result, protection ranges between "only 30 and 40 percent (of usual earnings) in the typical case today—a much smaller portion of workers' wages is now insured than was the case in 1939" when the average was 50 percent, Munts said. His statements came during the nationwide public service interview, Labor News Conference, aired weekly over the Mutual Radio Network.

Pres. Johnson's proposals for modernizing the unemployment compensation system would bring protection more in line with realistic needs through higher benefits with state-to-state uniformity, longer periods of eligibility and protection for an additional 6 million workers, Munts said in analyzing the changes.

HE REJECTED the contention that improved benefits of longer duration will lessen the incentive to find a job. "I don't know of any individual who, if he had to live on half of what he is making at the present time, would be satisfied with that," Munts declared, noting further that the "unemployment insurance system is supposed to eliminate starvation as an incentive to look for work."

He also called attention to the Mar. 31 deadline for the first Medicare registrations. "Anyone who has parents or friends over 65, whether or not they are working, should urge them to sign up" without delay, he said, pointing out that after the deadline, there will be a longer wait for benefits and higher costs.

Reporters questioning Munts were Hobart Rowen, business and financial editor of the Washington Post, and Lee Cohn, economic and labor reporter for the Washington Evening Star.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ALABAMA POLITICS in 1966, as well as the Florida politics discussed here last week, is dominated by speculation about the potential impact of Negro voters, who have registered in unprecedented numbers. There are, however, special elements—one of them being the immediate political future, if any, of segregationist Gov. George C. Wallace, the other being whether the Goldwater Republicans who won five of the state's eight congressional seats in 1964 can hang on to them in another election.

Wallace—to deal with first things first—is barred by the state constitution from running either for re-election as governor or for U.S. senator against incumbent Sen. John J. Sparkman.

The state constitution could be ignored in regard to the Senate seat by almost any governor but Wallace. It is perfectly clear, from the 1964 California Supreme Court decision in the Pierre Salinger case and from other precedents, that no state can legally impose restrictions on who may run; the Senate is the sole judge of its own membership and no state may limit that power.

But Wallace has been crying out for years about "states' rights," and it would be awkward for him to run against Sparkman now by invoking the supremacy of the U.S. constitution.

Wallace wants to run for governor again, but the legislature refused to pass a constitutional amendment removing the ban against two successive terms. Wallace is therefore still toying with the idea of having his wife, Mrs. Lurleen Wallace, run for the job, the idea being that she would be a token governor and Wallace himself would continue to run things.

It isn't certain, however, that Mrs. Wallace could win—either in the Democratic primary or in the November general election if she were nominated.

A former governor, John M. Patterson, is already in the race—and he beat Wallace in a 1958 primary in which Wallace actually campaigned as a relative moderate. Patterson, although only 45, talks today about defending segregationist "rights" the way former Sen. Harry F. Byrd did in 1955-61 in calling for "massive resistance" to the Supreme Court's desegregation decisions.

Former Rep. Carl Elliott, also an announced candidate, is calling for "racial peace and harmony" and the elimination from power of "self-serving extremists who use the race issue as a whipsaw for personal gain."

The liberal former Gov. James A. Folsom and a racial moderate, Ryan deGrafenrei, a onetime state senator, are announced candidates. Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers, an unusually articulate champion of full rights and justice for Negroes, may also run.

THEN THERE are the Goldwater Republicans.

Rep. James D. Martin, who nearly defeated Democratic Sen. Lister Hill in 1962, is considering running for governor. So is John Grenier of Birmingham, the organizational genius who built solid Goldwater delegations to the 1964 Republican national convention from 12 southern and border states.

It would be surprising, at least as of now, if one of them does not run for governor, the other for Sparkman's Senate seat. The freshly-increased Negro voters most assuredly have not forgotten Goldwater's vote against the Civil Rights Act of 1964 or Martin's against the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

That would leave four other Alabama Republican members of the House trying to hold on to their jobs and a new GOP candidate in Martin's district, plus candidates for the state legislature, county and city offices, and all the other elective jobs a party must seek to establish itself as a major political force.

With Wallace, Patterson or Mrs. Wallace as a primary victor in seeking statewide office, Alabama Democrats could not effectively bid for the support of new Negro voters as Virginia Democrats did in nominating and electing Gov. Mills E. Godwin. Still, if the Goldwaterites continue to dominate the state's Republican machinery, an imponderable enters.

One certainty: some Negroes will be elected to the state legislature for the first time since post-Civil War years.

UNEMPLOYMENT insurance programs are often "cheapened" as states compete with each other for new industries, Raymond Munts (center), acting director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, charged as he was questioned by Hobart Rowen (left) of the Washington Post and Lee Cohn of the Washington Evening Star on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public service interview aired weekly over the Mutual Radio Network.

Union Support Cited on Scout Anniversary

Renewed expressions of labor support for the Boy Scouts of America were announced as the youth organization observed its 56th anniversary during Boy Scout Week Feb. 7-13.

Dir. Leo Perlis of the AFL-CIO Community Service Dept., observing that federation unions sponsor about 250 Scout units, said members of affiliated unions make up about 25 percent of all Scout leaders and that affiliated unions contribute substantially to the scouts through local funds and community chests.

Perlis noted that AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has hailed the promotion of Scouting as part of the federation's community services program because, in Meany's words, "what is good for the community is good for labor—and Scouting is good for the community."

Labor, Perlis added, looks forward to even greater cooperation in future and to "sponsor more troops, provide more leaders and give more money."

Chief Scout Executive Joseph A. Brunton, Jr., recalled that organized labor and the Boy Scouts have been partners in serving American youth since the origin of Scouting. He added:

Partners in Scouting

"We share a deep concern for our youth and are proud to join hands as partners in bringing the character-building and citizenship values of Scouting to boys. Local labor organizations and their members are making total contributions to these aims."

The theme of this year's Scout observance is "Breakthrough for Youth." More than 5.6 million boys and adult leaders in 143,000 units will take part in anniversary programs. Some 93,000 unions and other organizations use Cub Scouting, Boy Scouting and Exploring as a training program for boys 8 through 17.

Perlis reported recently to Meany that labor interest in Scouting extends from troop sponsorship and fund-raising to donating help on construction projects. The value of one project was estimated at more than $150,000—chiefly labor donated by building trades unions in the Pueblo, Colo., area.

Farm Leader, Rabbi Urge Vote on Repeal

A farm leader and a prominent religious spokesman added their voices to the demand for a Senate vote on 14(b) repeal.

Farmers Union Pres. James Patton wired all senators:

"The National Farmers Union strongly supports repeal of Section 14(b). Repeal would help increase consumer buying power in 19 states, thus benefitting farmers as well. We trust the Senate will not evade this issue but will vote soon for repeal."

Rabbi Jacob J. Weinstein of Chicago, president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, termed the filibuster against the repeal bill "the last desperate refuge of those who would frustrate the will of the people."

If it is successful, Rabbi Weinstein said, it will be "a serious body blot on the American legislative process and its responsiveness to the public will." His organization of 900 rabbis at its last convention called for repeal of 14(b).

Spokesmen for all major religious groups and a number of business leaders have in recent months gone on record for repeal of 14(b). . . .

THESE FOUR MAYORS of Ohio towns are all members of Machinists Lodge 996 at the Monarch Machine Tool Co., Sidney, O. They ran for office, and won election, after the Shelby County AFL-CIO urged delegates in 1961 to play a more active role in their communities. From the left, Mayors Arthur Engle of Port Jefferson, Charles Brown of Quincy, Harold Bruns of Yorkshire and Gerald Biller of Sidney.

Prices, Factory Pay Rise to New Peaks

Consumer prices and the net spendable earnings of factory production workers rose to all-time highs in December, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The bureau's Consumer Price Index, goaded by a sharp rise in food costs, rose four-tenths of 1 percent to a record-breaking 111, or 2 percent above the December 1964 reading. It was the third consecutive monthly record.

The take-home pay of a factory production worker with three dependents, a separate report showed, averaged $99.62 a week; for a worker with no dependents the average was $91.80—rises of about $1 a week over November for both categories. The hike over the year was 4.8 percent for single workers and 4.2 percent for workers with three dependents, and resulted from an 8-cent rise in average hourly earnings, a longer workweek and the second step of the 1964 tax cut.

Although higher food prices accounted for much of the rise in the CPI, nearly all other majority categories of consumer goods and services also advanced.

The sharpest increase on the grocery list was registered by fresh fruits and vegetables, which jumped nearly 3 percent because of lower supplies as a result of bad weather. Meat prices again advanced, by 1.5 percent over November, to a record high that was 13.5 percent more than in December 1964. Eggs, instead of showing their usual decline, rose nearly 7 percent due to increased demand, lower production, and large purchases for military and export purposes. Fresh fruits were about the only item to show a decline.

Other advances were chalked up in housing, medical services and transportation. Apparel prices were unchanged, lower costs for women's garments offsetting higher prices for men's garb.

The 2 percent over-the-year rise was due primarily to advances in the costs of services and food, the BLS said. The increase in food prices was led by pork, up nearly one-third over December 1964, and eggs, up 15.5 percent from depressed 1964 levels. Consumer service prices were 2.7 percent higher and household services nearly 2.5 percent. The most significant price drop, the report showed, was for used cars, which declined for the first time since 1960.

The advance in the December CPI brought cost-of-living wage increases to more than 500,000 workers, about 440,000 employed in trucking getting 3 cents an hour.

The shift since September meant pay hikes of 2 cents for about 50,000 workers, most of them in the aircraft industry, with about 22,000 workers in various industries, including local and interstate transit, getting 1 cent. About 4,300 New York area workers also got 1 cent based on the quarterly change in the index for that city.

Purchasing power, or real spendable earnings, increased by a smaller amount than net spendable earnings because of the CPI rise. The advance was about 60 cents to record highs, in 1957-9 dollars, of $89.75 for the factory production worker with three dependents and $82.70 for the worker with no dependents. The comparable December 1964 figures were $88.73 and $80.54.

Amalgamated Bank Names President

New York—Maxwell Brandwen, managing director of the Amalgamated Bank of New York since 1952, has been elected president.

His selection was announced by his predecessor, Jacob S. Potofsky, also president of the Clothing Workers, who will continue as chairman of the bank's board.

Brandwen, a graduate of Harvard College and Harvard Law School, helped the ACWA establish the bank in 1923. He is a director of the Amalgamated Bank of Chicago and the Amalgamated Life Insurance Co.

Sharp Aid Revision Urged by President

out of the general program and is included in the Dept. of Defense budget.

The total $3.38 billion foreign aid program projected for the coming fiscal year, including both military and economic, is almost exactly the same as the $3.37 billion the President originally urged a year ago, even with military aid to South Viet Nam now taken out.

The actual range of the fiscal 1967 program will depend on whether, as in the current year, the original figures are later recognized as underestimates of requirements and boosted in supplemental appropriations.

The President's program of dividing economic and military aid into separate compartments is expected to run into sharp resistance. So is his request for a five-year authorization of military aid.

Chairman J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has long advocated both measures, but the House Foreign Affairs Committee has opposed them and refused in 1965 to accept a Senate-approved two-year authorization.

Johnson's shift of emphasis in the nature of economic aid, in any case, was spelled out specifically. He said assistance should go primarily to countries which "invest every possible resource" of their own in raising food production, building hospitals and schools and laying the base for critical industry.

They should also show themselves willing to "make the necessary land reforms, tax changes and other basic adjustments to transform their societies," he said, and "create the climate" to "attract foreign investment and keep local money at home."

The United States, he declared, "can never do more than supplement the efforts" of countries receiving assistance, which must "supply most of the capital, the know-how and the will to progress."

Furthermore, he added, aid should be concentrated in countries "not hostile" to us.

The President asked Congress to approve international health and education programs adding a "world dimension" to our domestic projects, which concentrate on anti-poverty measures and education.

He specifically recommended a nearly one-third increase in aid to promote food production in developing countries, to a total of nearly $500 million.

Education Aid Up

He also urged a 50 percent increase in education assistance to more than $200 million, a two-thirds increase in aid programs for attacks on disease to a total of more than $150 million, plus other specified sums of $250 million to support action under this changed emphasis.

The President said that food output in many underdeveloped countries is "falling behind population growth," which threatens a "catastrophe," and he said that population growth now consumes about "two-thirds of economic growth" as it is painfully achieved in such countries.

Aid Breakdown Given By Area and Function

This is how economic aid funds for fiscal 1967 would be divided on an area and functional basis under Pres. Johnson's proposals to Congress:

● For South Viet Nam, $550 million for social improvements and other assistance to the villages vital in resistance to Viet Cong aggression, terrorist raids and "tax" impositions.

● For Laos, Korea and Thailand—other Asian nations "directly threatened" by Communist penetration or potential attack—$197 million.

● For the Alliance for Progress, $543 million for Latin American nations cooperating in self-help social reforms and economic developments.

● For development loans to raise food production and promote other economic progress, $665 million. Nine-tenths would go to the "giant nations of South Asia" and three other countries—Korea, Turkey, Nigeria, Pakistan and India—the latter two when assurance is solid that "reconciliation" has proceeded and resumption of "hostilities" between them "will not occur."

● For "technical cooperation," meaning American advisers and teachers to help underdeveloped nations expand "the attack on hunger, ignorance and disease," $231 million.

● For international organizations—the United Nations and its Children's Fund and international economic development programs, $140 million.

● For other expanded programs in eradication of disease, malnutrition, and lack of adequate schools, about $350 million.

● For U.S. administrative expenses, support of American schools and hospitals abroad and "contingencies," $142 million.

Sen. Morse Spells Out the Case For Repeal of T-H Section 14(b)

Excerpts from the Senate speech of Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) on repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act:

Let me begin with a simple, positive statement describing what the repeal of Section 14(b) will actually do—what changes will take place in the law, in the process of collective bargaining, and in the obligation of workers to become union members.

The repeal of 14(b) will apply the federal law governing union security agreements to all 50 states, instead of to 31 of them. It will negate so-called right-to-work laws in the other 19 states.

As a result, in those 19 states, union-organized workers will have the legal right to ask for a union shop if they want to, to negotiate with their employer on the subject, and sign such a contract if the employer agrees to it.

Their freedom will be greater, not less.

Those are the facts, but they are shamelessly perverted by the enemies of labor into the horrible shadow and the unreal mockery of a society dominated by some sinister conspiracy of trade union autocrats.

Repeal of Section 14(b), we are told, will "force millions of workers into unions they do not want."

There is the implication that workers do not really want to be a part of a union, but are somehow tricked or bullied into the clutches of the union, from which they yearn to be liberated.

This view . . . was so widely held that the Taft-Hartley Act, as originally enacted, included a requirement that a special election had to be conducted by the National Labor Relations Board . . . before a union could so much as ask for a union shop.

From August 1947 to October 1951 the NLRB conducted 46,119 of these elections, in which the only question was whether or not the workers wanted a union shop. In 44,795 of these elections—97.1 percent—the union shop was authorized. Some 6 million votes were cast in the elections; more than 5.5 million workers, or 91 percent, favored the union shop.

This was highly embarrassing to those who had talked about "captive members." It was even more embarrassing, at times, to employers who had resisted the union shop, who did not want to grant the union shop, but were faced with a vote—which spokesmen for the union naturally emphasized—showing that the workers themselves, in overwhelming numbers, wanted a union shop.

The combination of these twin embarrassments led to the quiet repeal of union shop authorization elections. The truth was too hard to take.

Workers who are covered by a union shop contract can change their minds. There is an established labor board procedure under which a petition can be filed for an election to deauthorize the union shop; if a majority so votes, the union shop is voided, leaving other terms of the contract undisturbed.

Thus it is entirely possible for workers who are now in a union shop, who want to retain the benefits of union conditions, but who want to abolish the membership requirement, to do exactly that, through the mechanics of the National Labor Relations Board. This is in addition to the parallel process, better known but also ignored by the mythmakers, under which workers can decertify the union itself, if they so desire.

In practice, the first of these procedures is seldom invoked, and the second is a rarity; for as demonstrated . . . workers employed under union shop contracts like it that way.

I want to emphasize that all these dark and dire imputations about democracy in unions come with ill grace from those whose own democratic credentials are far from impressive.

I have been a close observer of the American labor movement for several decades. And I say that there is no comparable segment of American economic life in which integrity, idealism, devotion to principle and concern for the tenets of democracy is so paramount—not only in the words of ethical practices codes, which are unmatched by any business organization either in what they say or the diligence with which they are enforced, but also in sincere dedication to the concepts those codes express.

Right-to-work laws promote conflicts between states, conflicts of the most regressive kind, since they involve competition on the basis of which state can offer an opportunistic manufacturer the lowest wages and the greatest guarantees that no union will be organized to raise them.

As a group, the 19 states with these laws have long been at the bottom of the economic roster of American states, for varying reasons. But I do say that right-to-work laws, and the philosophy they represent, the philosophy of low wages and hostility to unions, to collective bargaining, and to organized labor, helps to keep these states at the bottom.

Let me cite another example which, I submit, pinpoints the impact of so-called right-to-work statutes. These laws were once in force in every seaboard state from Virginia to Texas. But a number of years ago, one state—Louisiana—repealed its right-to-work law, except for a very minor application in agriculture.

The union shop returned to Louisiana, and this year, Louisiana took the lead, among the southern states in average wages paid in manufacturing. The average in Louisiana is now $109.14 a week, or $4.14 a week higher than that of the previous leader, Texas. There are many among the right-to-work advocates, I am sure, who view high wages with dismay, but I take the opposite view; I congratulate Louisiana.

A state that deliberately undertakes to cripple its labor movement is crippling itself as well.

In my judgment, every worker and every employer in the United States, no matter what state he lives in, should have exactly the same rights under the interstate commerce clause that a worker or employer in any other state has.

We cannot segmentize the Constitution of the United States by delegating federal jurisdiction over any section of the Constitution to the states and end up with a uniform application of constitutional guarantees to all people in the United States, irrespective of the state in which they happen to be living at a given time.

The opponents of repeal tell us that they are on the popular side, that they reflect the majority opinion of the nation. They point to the editorials in newspapers; they point to the public opinion polls, and they point to their own mail.

The attitude of the press toward the labor movement is historically one of unremitting hostility; and I suppose it will always be, unless automation progresses to such an extent that publishers no longer need any employes at all, and therefore have no unions with which they must bargain.

Newspapers are against labor as consistently as they are against sin, since publishers tend to equate the two, so I think their views can be discounted.

Public opinion polls have been showing a majority vote against a question as to whether a worker should be forced to join a union to keep his job. But opinion polling is an elusive art, and I wonder what the response would be to a question as to whether a worker whose benefits derive from a union contract, who is by law under the protection of the union, should be allowed to escape paying dues.

As for the argument as to what the mail shows, let me answer that for myself. I receive many letters on this issue, most of them from businessmen in the states having right-to-work laws. I understand their personal interest and I am glad to hear from them, but their self-interest can hardly be equated with the national interest.

Let us recognize what Section 14(b) really is. It is a device to impose a compulsory open shop on the workers in the so-called right-to-work states.

The section should be repealed in the interest of common fair play and constitutional justice.

Cave of the Winds

Repeal Supporters Hit 'Distortion' of 14(b) Facts

urged around-the-clock sessions "for as many weeks as it takes to break the filibuster."

Such a dramatic move, Morse suggested, would alert the nation to the little-recognized fact that the Senate is being prevented from considering a bill on its merits. He predicted that "an aroused public opinion" would insist on a vote "once the Senate starts sessions running 24 hours a day."

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) agreed and Sen. Stephen M. Young (D-O.), speaking as "one of the older U.S. senators," discounted fears that long sessions would risk the health of elder members. He said he felt "at least 40 years younger than some who oppose the repeal of 14(b) and yearn for the era of William McKinley."

Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) ridiculed a poll taken for the National Right to Work Committee which purported to show a majority of the nation opposed to 14(b) repeal. The poll has been widely quoted by Dirksen and other members of his filibuster team in support of their attempt to block a Senate vote.

'Oversimplified'

McCarthy said the only thing the poll demonstrated was how an issue could be "oversimplified." He told the Senate the poll asked whether people favored or opposed "compulsory union membership."

He drew a parallel with two questions once put to 125 law students at Northwestern University.

When asked whether they favored "right-to-work" laws, McCarthy said, 80 law students said they did, 45 were opposed. But when the same students were asked if a voluntary agreement between a union and an employer that all employes represented by the union should become members of the union, the response was just the opposite. This time 84 said such an agreement should be permitted, 41 disagreed.

Morse stressed in his speech the harmful effects of "segmentation" of the Constitution by allowing states to exempt themselves from federal law.

"I can see no possible way in which the national interest is served when a factory in one state, operating under union contract and paying good wages, moves to another state in order to pay low wages," he said.

Morse warned that states which lure runaway industry through "right-to-work" laws and low wages "are paying a high price for their success . . . in the ignorance, ill-health and squalor bred by poverty."

He pointed out that repeal of Section 14(b) would have no effect on labor-management relations in Dirksen's own state of Illinois, which does not have a "right-to-work" law. Repeal, Morse said, would lessen competition from other states on the basis of which can "offer an opportunistic manufacturer the lowest wages and the greatest guarantees that no union will be organized to raise them."

Times Denounces Dirksen Tactics

New York—The New York Times labeled the filibuster against repeal of Section 14(b) "dishonorable."

The newspaper's editorial condemnation of the tactics of Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen was particularly noteworthy because the Times is opposed to repeal of 14(b). Nevertheless the newspaper declared:

"Under any circumstances a filibuster is an invalid abuse of minority power. But a talkathon which prevents a measure from even reaching the floor for discussion is particularly egregious; it goes counter to the idea of reasoned dialogue, which is the animating principle of all legislative bodies."

Wirtz Appoints New USES Chief

Frank H. Cassell, director of personnel administration and manager of industrial relations for the Inland Steel Co. of Chicago, has been appointed director of the U.S. Employment Service, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz announced.

He succeeds Louis Levine, who has been named an assistant manpower administrator, and has a long record of industrial and public service at national and local levels.

'Year of Transition':

Wirtz Hails Result Of Bracero Closeout

The century-old practice of importing foreign farm workers to harvest the nation's crops was virtually ended in 1965 as the country took "a necessary step toward cleansing the whole 'migrant worker' sore," according to Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz.

Wirtz made the statements in a painstaking report on the imported agricultural worker situation entitled "Year of Transition: Seasonal Farm Labor 1965."

The present "most promising prospect," Wirtz said, is for a "fuller coordination" of public and private efforts "to see to it that the migrant worker becomes a full member of a great society, bearing his share of its responsibilities in return for receiving his share in its promise."

"There still lie ahead," he declared, "the establishment for migrant farm labor of the standards of both decency and efficiency which are characteristic of other employment in this country."

The secretary said:

"Hard problems of effective and responsible representation of migrant workers must be met. The lesson of national experience is that in a highly organized and pluralistic society any group which lacks the means of collective action drops back to what eventually becomes an intolerable disadvantage.

'A Question of Time'

"Unilateral decision-making by the users of labor—especially unskilled labor—emerges now in the living history of this country less as a question of right or wrong than as a question of time until it is changed. The record is that where an imbalance of bargaining power exists either it is corrected privately or the results of the imbalance bring the inferior consequence of government protection."

In looking ahead, Wirtz said farmers who have used braceros (Mexican contract workers) in the past apparently will not need them to harvest their 1966 crops, although it is possible that workers from the British West Indies may have to be brought into Florida especially for sugar cane harvesting, and Canadians into the East to help pick apples.

In looking back at the "year of transition," the report said:

- The use of foreign farm labor dropped by 83 percent, from 634,000 man-months in 1964 to 110,000 man-months in 1965.
- Hourly wages on farms were increased from an average of $1.08 to $1.14, not a large amount but "the biggest recorded one-year increase since the Korean War period."
- Tens of thousands of new jobs were created for American workers—strengthening the conviction that Americans had not refused to do "stoop labor," but rather refused work at what had been stoop labor wages.
- Bumper crops were harvested without significant labor shortages except in "three or four" areas.
- Market prices for fruits and vegetables changed but little despite the fact that "prices for most other things went up during the year."

Wirtz said only 1,200 foreign field hands were in the country in mid-August, when domestic employment reached its peak, compared with 68,700 at the same time in 1964. The peak number at any one time in 1965 was 24,000 in September, 25 percent of the 1964 top.

Wirtz paid tribute to the growers for meeting "in resourceful and effective fashion" the labor challenges growing out of the refusal of Congress—backed by the AFL-CIO—to renew the Mexican farm labor program. The demand for foreign workers was primarily reduced, he said, by their decision "to improve wages and working conditions and by the operation of employment and technological forces."

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE future was the topic when these representatives of shipbuilding labor and management met with Rep. Edward A. Garmatz, new chairman of the House Committee on Merchant Marine & Fisheries. Left to right, Sec.-Treas. Peter M. McGavin of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept.; Harold J. Buoy, assistant to Pres. Russell K. Berg of the Boilermakers; Pres. Edwin M. Hood, Shipbuilders Council of America; Dir. Page Groton of the Iron Shipbuilders Intl. Marine Council, and Garmatz. The Maryland Democrat advised the group that he would firmly oppose any proposal to build U.S.-subsidized merchant ships abroad.

a year, substantially under the $3,000 poverty level. Over 6 million children live in families in which the father or mother is working full time but earning a poverty wage.

Neither in his report nor in a news conference did Wirtz put a figure on the increase in the minimum wage sought or supported by the Administration.

'Guidelines' Cited

He did say in the news conference that the $1.75-an-hour recommended last year by the House Labor Committee was too high to fit the anti-inflation "guidelines" the Administration has urged.

Another section of the report to Congress stressed the need for "continued aggressive attention" to enforcement of the equal pay law for men and women. Compliance has been less than adequate, Wirtz reported.

Wirtz also noted the increase in overtime hours worked in recent years, and linked it to the inadequacy of time-and-one-half premium pay to serve as a deterrent. When fringe benefits are considered in the labor cost, he said, the premium rate amounts to only 1.2 percent of straight-time wages.

City Council Urges End to Filibuster

Baltimore—The Baltimore City Council urged repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act and called on the Senate to halt the filibuster and bring the issue to a vote.

The resolution was passed unanimously at a session attended by 20 of the 21 council members, Pres. Dominic N. Fornaro of the Baltimore AFL-CIO central body reported.

In an unusual move, the City Council considered and voted on the resolution immediately, without the customary referral to a committee.

'Shipbuilding Abroad' Assailed by Garmatz

Rep. Edward A. Garmatz (D-Md.), new chairman of the House Committee on Merchant Marine & Fisheries, declared he is "unalterably opposed" to any plan which calls for overseas construction of ships destined for subsidized operations under the U.S. flag.

Garmatz, meeting with representatives of maritime labor and shipbuilding management, noted that the Administration's 1967 budget seeks funds for the construction of only 13 merchant marine vessels.

"Does the low level of funds for 1967," he asked, "mean that an attempt is being made to set the stage for formally launching a 'shipbuilding abroad' scheme?"

Garmatz voiced confidence that his committee will reject any proposal for foreign building of U.S. ships.

"I know what shipyards mean in terms of employment for our skilled workers," he declared. "I refuse to be a party to any plan which will take job opportunities away from U.S. craftsmen, diminish the availability of U.S. shipyard facilities and add to the balance of payments problem."

Shipyards and their workers, Garmatz said, should not be made the scapegoat for years of neglect and indifference to maritime needs. The nation has been spending an average of $40 million annually since 1950 for merchant ship construction, not the $100 million a year cited by "build abroad" spokesmen, he said.

Overseas construction of U.S. ships, he said, is no way of "preserving and maintaining" U.S. shipyard facilities. He will, he said, review carefully a budget in which new funds for shipbuilding are decreased.

The President's Maritime Advisory Committee recommended recently an intensified program for "renewal and expansion" of the U.S. merchant fleet. The sixth AFL-CIO convention, meeting in San Francisco in December, unanimously endorsed such a program. It also rejected a U.S. interagency report calling for a smaller fleet, with some ships built abroad for budgetary reasons.

State Collects $4.5 Million Unpaid Wages

San Francisco—A record-setting $4.5 million in unpaid wages was recovered from employers who "chiseled" on their workers unknowingly or on purpose in 1965, the Div. of Labor Law Enforcement of the California Dept. of Industrial Relations has reported.

A state law covers workers not protected by the federal minimum wage law.

The new high total of wrongfully withheld wages was up 11 percent over the 1964 figure and was nearly $1 million more than the 1963 total, Labor Commissioner Sigmund Arywitz noted in his annual report.

More than 67,670 individual claims and complaints were brought to the division's 22 offices last year. Fifty thousand were claims for unpaid wages brought under labor and public works laws and more than 60 other statutes protecting the state's workers.

The labor commissioner's office helped workers collect $778,000 from employers who failed to make agreed payments to employe benefit funds, Arywitz said.

Bay State Races Loom; Brown Seeks 3rd Term

Democratic Gov. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown of California formally announced his intention to seek a third term, calling both his potential Republican rivals—Actor Ronald Reagan and former San Francisco Mayor George Christopher—less "tough" than GOP candidates he beat in 1958 and 1962.

The political kettle boiled also in Massachusetts, where P. Kenneth O'Donnell, former White House intimate of the late Pres. Kennedy, announced for the Democratic nomination for governor.

Familiar Theme

Echoing a familiar Kennedy 1960 campaign theme, O'Donnell said he thinks the people "are looking for someone who can move the state forward again" after spending too much time "fighting yesterday's battles."

Edward J. McCormack, former state attorney general, is considered leading in convention pledges of endorsement for the gubernatorial nomination, but the actual nomination is made in a party primary in September.

Former Gov. Endicott Peabody announced he would seek the Democratic nomination for the Senate, but is expected to face a powerful challenge by Boston Mayor John F. Collins. The probable Republican Senate nominee is Atty. Gen. Edward W. Brooke, the party's biggest vote-winner in recent years. Veteran incumbent Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R) recently announced his retirement at the end of his term.

Brown described Reagan as a "Goldwater Republican" identified with extreme rightist viewpoints whose managers are now seeking to give him a new "image" of moderation.

He said California's problems are too severe for him willingly to turn the state over to "the shock troops of the radical Right or radical Left" but declined to say that he considered Reagan easier to defeat than Christopher. He pointed out that the Republican candidates he beat previously—former Sen. William F. Knowland and former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon—were nominees of "national stature" he said was lacking in either Christopher or Reagan.

In Washington, meanwhile, Republican Sen. Milward L. Simpson of Wyoming announced he would not seek re-election to a second term.

Senate Drops 14(b) Repeal, Meany Condemns Dirksen

Joblessness Declines to 4 Percent

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's jobless rate finally reached the elusive "interim" goal of 4 percent in January, the Labor Dept. has reported. It is the lowest rate in nearly nine years.

The department's Bureau of Labor Statistics, in reporting the decline from 4.1 percent in December, attributed the steady improvement in the job picture over the past year to "the very substantial growth in consumer demand."

Economic Step-Up

The January rate reflected "the stepped-up pace of economic activity," the report said, with both the post-Christmas drop in jobs and the usual rise in unemployment less than seasonally anticipated.

Unemployment rose over the month by 400,000 to 3.3 million; the expected seasonal rise was 500,000. Employment declined by 1.5 million, about 200,000 less than expected, to 71.2 million.

The 4 percent jobless rate for January means 40 of every 1,000 workers in the labor force were actively seeking work and could not find it.

Of the 3.3 million unemployed, 1.5 million are adult men, 1 million adult women and 775,000 teenagers. The report said nearly all the jobless men, 80 percent of the

Wage Policy Termed 'Negative, Unfair'

The wage policy of the President's Council of Economic Advisers "is extremely negative and grossly unfair," the AFL-CIO told a congressional committee.

The council has not only displayed a "callous disregard for fairness" in calculating the wage-price guideposts, the federation declared, but "is once again asking workers to bear the burden of fighting inflation."

The AFL-CIO's views on the council's economic report were outlined in a statement to the Joint Congressional Economic Committee by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, chairman of the federation's Economic Policy Committee. The statement was presented by AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger.

The current economic situation, the federation declared, requires the adoption of a "positive wage policy designed to provide workers with greater purchasing power and to establish a more balanced distribution of national income." This is a matter of "compelling importance," the statement said, yet the "wage policy proposed by the Council of Economic Advisers is extremely negative and grossly unfair."

The council's economic report, the statement continued, "provides a host of reasons for avoiding panic about wage pressures." But despite all this evidence the council revised its method of figuring wage-price guideposts "in an attempt to repress wages."

Declaring there was "no justification" for setting a 3.2 percent guidepost on wage increases for

Filibuster Tactics Labeled 'Shabby'

By David L. Perlman

The Senate dropped its effort to repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act after failing to break the Dirksen filibuster.

Majority Leader Mike Mansfield conceded defeat after his cloture motions to limit debate fell short of the two-thirds majority required by Senate rules. The first vote, Feb. 8, was 51-48 for cloture. An anticlimactic second vote two days later was 50-49 to limit debate.

As AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany put it, the cloture vote "conclusively proves that a majority of the Senate favors repeal of 14(b) and will so vote if permitted to do so." He added:

"The AFL-CIO is, of course, deeply disappointed that the democratic process in the Senate has been thwarted by the shabby parliamentary tactics of Sen. Dirksen and a minority of senators. Our future plans will be discussed at the next AFL-CIO Executive Council meeting which will open on Feb. 21."

The actual majority for repeal was known to be higher than the cloture vote since several senators traditionally opposed to cloture have said they would support the repeal bill. And one strong repeal supporter, Michigan's Pat McNamara (D), was in the hospital during the two votes.

Actually the Senate never even got to the stage of considering the House-passed repeal bill. As happened last fall, Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen mounted a filibuster against Mansfield's routine motion to make the repeal bill the business before the Senate.

The frustrations of the two-and-a-half week filibuster broke through the usual clublike camaraderie of the Senate as the cloture showdown vote approached.

Permanent 'GI Bill' Enacted

Congress passed its first major legislation of the new session—a permanent GI Bill of Rights including educational and housing benefits for all persons serving at least six months in the armed forces. Eligibility will date back to Jan. 31, 1955, when the benefit program set up for Korean War veterans expired.

The House and Senate votes were unanimous, speeding the measure to the President. The House quickly agreed to the single Senate amendment. A similar bill, with somewhat bigger benefits, passed the Senate last year with strong support from labor and veterans' groups.

Although the Senate sidetracked its own bill in favor of the House version, the legislation was a major victory for Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D.-Tex.), longtime sponsor of a "Cold War GI Bill of Rights." Yarborough over the years bucked the opposition of three Administrations to push the program.

Unions in Labor Board Elections Given Right to Roster of Employes

The National Labor Relations Board has adopted a new rule requiring employers to furnish, for union use, names and addresses of employes eligible to vote in any representation election it schedules.

The rule requires management to provide the employe roster within seven days of board action setting an election date.

The unanimous decision of the five-member NLRB was reached Feb. 6 to become effective 30 days later.

The board refused to set aside the results of elections lost by unions which had earlier been denied a list of names and addresses by employers.

The ruling went part way in meeting the request of the AFL-CIO and affiliated unions for improvement in NLRB election rules. The board, however, ruling in two related "captive audience" cases, rejected union requests for a rule requiring equal time for unions to address employes on premises used by an employer to defeat union organizing attempts.

Calling union attention to the new names-and-addresses rule, the board said it should "provide employes with increased opportunity for communication from all sides in pre-election campaigning."

The board therefore deferred reconsideration of other present rules—which do not usually permit

DELEGATES TO COPE area conference in Atlanta listen attentively to a panel of congressmen, a feature of an all-day session keyed to the 1966 congressional elections. This group came from Alabama, Florida, South Carolina and Tennessee as well as Georgia. Six other area conferences have been held, with six more scheduled.

COPE Conferences Set Attendance Marks

The 1966 series of COPE area conferences is drawing record attendance and interest, Dir. Al Barkan reports.

Seven of the 13 regional conferences have already been held, with participation by local union leaders from 29 states and the District of Columbia. Each of the one-day meetings is keyed to preparations for this year's congressional elections.

A feature of the conferences has been panels of area congressmen to discuss legislative goals and accomplishments and answer questions from delegates. Filmed features include a dialogue between Pres. Johnson and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and a dramatization of the accomplishments of the first session of the 89th Congress.

COPE has supplemented the films with slide presentations showing the key role in passage of major legislation played by the 51 new liberals elected to the House in 1964 with labor's help.

The participants, Barkan said, know that their own efforts in the past helped make possible such landmarks as Medicare, aid to education and other Great Society measures. "They want to reelect these liberals," he said, "and they're showing it by their attendance and responses at the COPE conferences."

The schedule of area conferences still to be held is as follows:

Feb. 25—At Chicago for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

Mar. 4—At Houston for Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas.

Mar. 8 — At Minneapolis for Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota and South Dakota.

Mar. 11—At Detroit for Michigan and Ohio.

Mar. 18—At Albany for Maine, New Hampshire, New York and Vermont.

Mar. 21—At Boston for Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Coast Crafts, Builders Weigh Quarterly Talks

San Francisco—Building trades unions and their employers ought to get together oftener than every three years to discuss their mutual problems, Wesley Sizoo, counsel for the Northern California Homebuilders Conference, told the second annual California Construction Industry Management-Labor Forum here.

Some 300 building trades union and contractors' representatives heard Sizoo's proposal for something like quarterly meetings as an important way to "take the heat off at bargaining time."

"Lets get together when we don't have critical problems," he suggested, "not just every three years."

Partly as a result of the proposal, representatives of the California Building & Construction Trades Council and of the 15,000-member California State Builders Exchange agreed to look into the possibility of putting the Management-Labor Forum on a permanent basis.

Attorneys for the two groups will be asked to explore the form of organization for a report to a board of directors meeting in April. In any case, the groups set a third annual meeting next year in Los Angeles. The two-and-a-half-day session here devoted a good part of its time to panel explorations of technical areas of mutual concern. With labor and management spokesmen leading the way, they discussed such problems as safety on the job, maintenance work under contract, and job inspection.

Ernest B. Webb, director of the California Dept. of Industrial Relations, reminded the group that some 70 percent of industrial accidents involve human failure. Even though the state jumped its safety inspection force from 23 to 45, he said, the demands of job safety require still more active participation of both union and contractor.

John H. Stanford, deputy director of the California Dept. of General Services, predicted 1966 construction in the state would go over $7 billion—up 5 percent from 1965.

Bryan P. Deavers, council president, and Frank D. Corbett, chief executive of the Builders Exchange, agreed the forum represented a step ahead in building labor-management cooperation.

They look forward as a result to "more efficiency for the public and better understanding between the employer and craftsman," they said.

GOP Retains Lindsay Seat In New York

Theodore Kupferman, a Republican New York city councilman, narrowly defeated Democrat Oren Lehman in a special election to fill the 17th Congressional District seat vacated by Mayor John V. Lindsay, also Republican.

Kupferman got 44,225 votes to 43,230 for Lehman in complete unofficial returns, with 7,810 going to a third-party conservative, Jeffrey St. John. Kupferman during the campaign had announced opposition to repeal of Section 14(b).

Jones Elected

In another special election, in the 1st District of North Carolina, Walter B. Jones, Democrat, was elected over Republican John Porter East by a 21,000 to 14,000 margin.

The New York 17th District is traditionally a GOP stronghold. Lindsay himself won it by ratios of 5-3 and nearly 2-1 in 1960 and 1962, and an overwhelming 3-1 in 1964. The total vote dropped sharply, however, in the special election. Lehman was rated an unusually attractive Democratic candidate and the Conservative Party's St. John clearly cut into Kupferman's vote.

New York City's Liberal Party, balance of power in the recent Lindsay victory, did not endorse either Lehman or Kupferman.

The GOP in the North Carolina special election rolled up its biggest vote in history in the 1st District. Four years ago Republicans did not field a candidate against the late Democratic Rep. Herbert C. Bonner; they got only 11,000 against 52,000 for Bonner in 1964.

Elsewhere politically, Mississippi's solitary Republican House member, Rep. Prentiss Walker, announced he would run for the Senate against Democratic incumbent James O. Eastland.

Load-Bearing Limits Urged by ILO Group

Geneva—A 30-nation technical conference of the Intl. Labor Organization has recommended new standards in which no worker would be asked to carry more than 110 pounds as a manual load.

The recommendation was one of a series on weight carrying that were drafted for enactment into international standards at the annual ILO full-dress conference set for June of 1967.

Vice Pres. Anthony Scotto of the Longshoremen said at the close of the two-week session at the United Nations labor agency's headquarters here: "We are going to benefit from it."

Docks to Benefit

"The waterfront," Scotto added, "is one area that stands to profit from these standards that governments will be asked to adopt in accordance with their legislative processes."

The president of ILA Local 1814 in Brooklyn, N. Y., Scotto was the AFL-CIO representative at the technical conference of worker, government and employer delegates. Bert Seidman, the AFL-CIO's Geneva-based European economic representative, seconded Scotto.

Scotto noted with particular satisfaction that the approved recommendations included a provision that load-carrying workers "should be supplied with such suitable devices and equipment as may be necessary to safeguard their health and safety."

"This means," he said, "that everything from special shoes to helmets would have to be provided by the employer. Even in the U.S. such an obligation does not exist."

Other recommendations to be put into final form by the 1967 conference include a provision fixing at a "substantially lesser weight" than the proposed 110 pounds the maximum load to be carried manually by young workers and by women. It was also urged that interim measures be taken "as speedily as possible" to raise to 16 years the minimum age for employment in load-carrying jobs and, as an ideal, that the minimum age be set at 18 years.

Stress was placed on the need to assure workers that the exertion required in a day or shift was "unlikely to jeopardize health or safety," and the employment of women, the conference said, should be "limited."

The recommendations call for a medical examination before a man is hired for regular load-carrying work, the group of worker delegates agreed with Scotto in rejecting a proposal for periodic re-examinations.

"Once a man is in the work it is up to him to decide whether his health can take it," Scotto explained. "He should not be knocked out of his job," he added.

Research Asked

Scotto praised provisions urging scientific research to determine the relationship that may exist between various ailments and load-carrying work.

The ILA official said he was surprised to learn how far ahead some foreign countries were in "almost pinpointing" that heavy work can be a cause of emphysema, a lung disease.

The recommendation on research, Scotto said, should put pressure on the U.S. authorities to make this disease a reportable illness so that statistics can be compiled.

United Funds Choose Beirne As President

Toronto, Ont.—AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, chairman of the AFL-CIO Community Services Activities Committee and president of the Communications Workers, has been elected president of the United Community Funds & Councils of America.

He is the first trade unionist to be chosen president of the 57-year-old organization, which represents more than 2,000 united funds and community chests in the United States and Canada. He succeeds Ralph Lazarus, president of Federated Department Stores.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sent congratulations to Beirne and good wishes to the council in a telegram to Lazarus.

"Joe Beirne's outstanding contributions as chairman of our Community Services Activities Committee are well known to you," he said. "His other interests, including his efforts to improve living standards and strengthen democracy in Latin America, demonstrate his deep interest in aiding the unfortunate by helping them to help themselves.

"In short, we feel you could not have made a better choice by any standards. During his term and at all times, be assured the AFL-CIO will be working hard for the goals we have in common with the UCFCA."

Beirne has been a board member or officer of the NCFCA since 1956 and was vice president at the time of his selection as president. In 1961 he was chairman of the executive committee, and in 1963 he received the association's National Community Service Award for outstanding national volunteer service in promoting community health and welfare services.

He is a vice president of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and secretary-treasurer of the American Institute for Free Labor Development. In addition to his activities in the labor movement, he is a member of the national board of Americans for Democratic Action and a member of the American Arbitration Association.

Firm Shifts Stand:

IBEW Pact Cracks Mississippi Barrier

Mendenhall, Miss.—Organized labor scored a major breakthrough in this part of the country when Simpson County's largest industrial employer unexpectedly signed the area's first union contract after two years of bitter opposition.

The period, the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers reported, was marked by threats to organizers, community pressure, a lost National Labor Relations Board election and union-filed court action under the federal Civil Rights Act.

The three-year agreement gives about 950 members of IBEW Local 2198 employed by the Universal Manufacturing Corp. a total of 46 cents an hour in wage increases, three additional holidays, a vacation schedule and insurance protection. In addition four discharged members of the local, including Pres. James Bird, were reinstated.

The company, which makes electrical components for fluorescent lamps, began operations here in August 1963 at a plant constructed with the proceeds from the sale of local bonds sold as part of Mississippi's "Balance Agriculture With Industry" program.

Rates Cut By 50 Cents

It paid 50 cents an hour less than in its plant in New Jersey, where it makes the same product, according to the IBEW.

The union started to organize in January 1964. A community group called the Universal Advisory Board was promptly established to oppose it. The company's local attorney chose the members, who included the full Simpson County Board of Supervisors, the mayors of the county's two largest cities, bankers, a radio station manager and other prominent citizens, the IBEW said.

In March, deputy sheriffs arbitrarily stopped two IBEW organizers from passing out printed handbills on a public street at the plant gate, the union charged.

In May, it said, a group of men identifying themselves as Simpson County "citizens" invaded the organizers' motel quarters and told them they'd be killed or injured if they didn't stop organizing activity and get out of town. The sheriff of Simpson County, the union declared, refused to arrest any of the men though they were well-known in the community, to act to prevent a recurrence of the threats, or to provide protection for the organizers.

Violations of civil rights continued, the union charged, even after it filed suit under the Civil Rights Act, and were a factor in the IBEW's loss of an NLRB election on Apr. 23, 1965, by 15 votes out of 559 ballots counted.

The suit, in U.S. District Court in New Jersey, was still pending when the company unexpectedly proposed to recognize the IBEW on the basis of a card check. The check was made by a retired commissioner of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service who certified that Local 2198 had a majority. Negotiations began immediately, and the new contract became effective on Jan. 31.

LABOR AND THE COMMUNITY is theme of display by Meat Cutters Local 398 at the Fairbanks Main Library, Terre Haute, Ind. Looking it over are Vivenna Abernathy of the local and Stillman Taylor of the library. The display was prepared under the direction of Local Pres. Herman Meissel from materials supplied by the Meat Cutters Education Dept.

Court Upholds Union Right to Proof When Company Pleads 'Competition'

Portland, Ore.—An employer who refuses a union request for a wage increase on the ground of competitive disadvantage is obliged to supply proof asked by the union, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled.

The decision, upholding a National Labor Relations order that the Western Wirebound Box Co. here must bargain in good faith with the Woodworkers and Local 3-3, will strengthen the position of union bargainers everywhere, IWA Vice Pres. Ronald F. Roley asserted.

The court in its decision related that, in negotiations beginning May 1, 1962, management had countered the union's proposal for a wage hike of 10 cents an hour with an offer to cut wages —first by 8 cents an hour, then 4 cents—or to keep them unchanged.

Company Pres. Walter W. Green said price-cutting by competitors made wage hikes impractical, but refused information on productivity and production costs asked by the union.

The IWA local struck June 11, 1962, when the firm refused to supply the requested data and offered a wage boost of 2.5 cents an hour only to employes called "enders." The workers stayed out for approximately three years before the strike was finally terminated by stipulation.

The appeals court cited a leading case—NLRB v. Truitt Mfg. Co.—in which the U.S. Supreme Court upheld a labor board bargaining order and said:

"Good faith bargaining necessarily requires that claims made by either bargainer should be honest claims. This is true about an asserted inability to pay an increase in wages. If such an argument is important enough to present in the give and take of bargaining it is important enough to require some sort of proof of its accuracy."

Reasoning of Court

The appeals court judges commented: "We see no reason why, under the same rationale, an employer who insistently asserts that competitive disadvantage precludes him from acquiescing in a union wage demand does not have a like duty to come forward, on request, with some substantiation."

In both cases, the judges ruled, the give and take of collective bargaining is "hampered and rendered ineffectual when an employer mechanically repeats his claim but makes no effort to produce substantiating data."

This kind of conduct, they declared, runs counter to the labor law "which admonishes both employes and employers to 'exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, hours and working conditions.' "

The hallmark of lawfully adequate negotiations is good faith, and "good faith contemplates that both negotiating parties will do what is reasonably possible to reach agreements," the court said.

Negotiations may be at arm's length but "this does not contemplate erection of artificial barriers and resort to patent technicalities to obfuscate the proceedings," it concluded.

St. Louis Craft Unions Invite Negroes to Join

St. Louis—Building trades unions here invited into membership all qualified Negro craftsmen and apprentices as evidence that a dispute which halted work on a federally-financed construction project was not over racial issues.

St. Louis Mayor A. J. Cervantes praised the open membership policy, hailing it as "a real breakthrough" in equal job opportunity.

Meanwhile a National Labor Relations Board injunction against an alleged secondary boycott by AFL-CIO unions brought resumption of work on the Gateway Arch Visitors' Center—a monument to the city's historic role as Gateway to the West.

Work had been halted when AFL-CIO building tradesmen refused to work alongside a plumber and two apprentices who were members of an unaffiliated group calling itself the Congress of Independent Unions. The three men involved are Negroes. The building trades council says the so-called independent union is contractor-dominated, works for rates well under AFL-CIO scales, and is without fringe benefits.

Besides the NLRB secondary boycott complaint, the Justice Dept. brought a suit under the Civil Rights Act charging racial discrimination by the St. Louis Building & Construction Trades Council and five of its affiliates.

The intricate dispute arose when the Interior Dept. insisted that the contractor for the project use a Negro plumbing subcontractor, in order to comply with non-discriminatory policies, instead of the low bidder. Members of other AFL-CIO unions, including Negroes, then refused to work on the job although no picket lines were set up.

Union Principles the Issue

Pres. Arthur A. Hunn of the St. Louis building trades council said the issue was strictly one of trade union principles.

"We had to fight a long time for labor conditions as they are today," he said.

Early in the dispute, the AFL-CIO plumbers local had offered to sign a contract with the Negro subcontractor and take his employes into membership. The local does not now have Negro members, although other AFL-CIO building trades locals do.

The CIU, which deals with a number of small contractors, some Negro and some white, countered with a charge that the building trades' membership invitation was an effort to "raid" their organization and "kill our union."

To this, Hunn commented: "If nothing else beneficial comes out of this dispute, it will be a laying to rest of charges that our actions were based on civil rights issues."

UAW Official to Lecture At Berkeley Campus

Detroit—Nat Weinberg, director of the special projects department of the Auto Workers, has been named by the University of California to serve for two months as a lecturer in residence on the Berkeley, Calif., campus. Weinberg will conduct student seminars on labor's role in social change.

Craft Pay Average Up 1.4c in Quarter

Wage rates of organized building trades workers increased 1.4 cents an hour, or three-tenths of 1 percent, during the final quarter of 1965—only half the gain registered in the comparable period of 1964, the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Labor Dept. reported.

The resulting average scale was $4.45 an hour, the BLS said on the basis of its quarterly survey of seven major trades. The rise was led by the Painters with an average hourly advance of 2.2 cents. Other increases ranged downward to 1 cent.

The BLS said the level of scales on Jan. 3 was 3.9 percent higher than a year earlier and 32 percent higher than the 1957-59 average. Increases during 1965 ranged from 13 cents to 21.6 cents an hour and averaged 16.5 cents.

$11 in Wage Hikes Won In New York Buildings

New York—The Building Service Employes have ratified a new three-year contract giving 25,000 workers in 2,400 office and loft buildings an $11 wage increase. The agreement also provides gains in pension benefits, sick pay, health and welfare coverage, job definitions, vacations and termination pay.

The contract, ending three months of negotiations between BSEIU Local 32B and employers, went into effect on ratification by the union executive board, its negotiating committee and employer-members of the Realty Advisory Board on Labor Relations, Inc.

Under the renewal pact, building service workers will get wage boosts of $4 a week retroactive to Jan. 1; an additional $3 one year later and another $4 on Jan. 1, 1968.

It was agreed that the union-industry welfare fund will provide additional hospitalization and surgical benefits, and will fill the gaps in the Medicare program by refunding the deductible portion of the hospitalization plan and by paying the $3 a month fee for supplementary medical benefits.

The agreement provides also that beginning July 1, 1967, union members and their wives will be entitled to use the facilities of the Local 32B health center without cost. Maintenance of health center facilities will be supported by contributions from the welfare fund under the new contract.

Pensions Increased

Full-service employes retiring after Jan. 1, 1966, will receive a $5 increase in the $50 monthly pensions formerly paid, in addition to social security benefits. Workers also will get four weeks' paid vacations after 20 years.

One of the largest local unions in the U.S., Local 32B has 42,000 members employed in commercial and residential buildings in Manhattan, Queens, Brooklyn and Staten Island, Pres. Thomas Shortman said.

New Target Needed

THE UNEMPLOYMENT RATE has finally been cut back to the 4 percent "interim target" first propounded by the Kennedy Administration in 1962. This is a notable achievement, especially in terms of breaking the pattern of the 1950s that saw the economy emerging from each recession with a higher jobless rate than before.

What has essentially happened is the reduction of joblessness to the level of nine years ago, of early 1957. What still is to be achieved is full employment—which is a good deal farther down the road than a 4 percent unemployment rate.

THE 4 PERCENT rate in itself is somewhat misleading. A number of economists have pointed out consistently that the jobless rate understates the actual amount of unemployment and underemployment. Last month there were more than 2 million persons working about 20 hours a week who wanted full-time jobs. There is an additional group of jobless, estimated at 500,000, who are excluded from the official count of the unemployed because while willing and able to work they were not actively seeking work. These include persons in the depressed Appalachia areas and elsewhere, older persons and school dropouts.

In realistic terms the actual amount of unemployment is closer to 5.5 percent rather than 4 percent if these groups are included in the calculations.

But the overall jobless rate figures conceal the really crucial aspects of current unemployment: the seasonally adjusted rate for teen-agers is triple the rate for the nation as a whole; the rate for non-white adults is double the rate for white adults; the rate for non-white teen-agers is almost two and one-half times that for white teen-age unemployment.

Despite the progress in reducing the overall rate of unemployment last year, both teen-age and non-white unemployment remain alarmingly high. If the vigorous economic growth continues in 1966, non-whites and teen-agers will continue to benefit. But there are those who are now cautioning about the dangers of reducing unemployment too rapidly. The real danger is not reducing it rapidly enough.

THERE IS no question that the economy can operate efficiently at unemployment rates below 4 percent. And now that the "interim target" has been reached a new interim target of 3 percent should be set by the Administration, with a specific date for its achievement.

This target and programs designed to achieve it are the key to whether the nearly 6 million persons who are fully or partially unemployed, or who have given up hopes of ever finding a job, are to be gainfully employed and share in the nation's general prosperity.

With teen-agers pouring into the labor force in greater numbers than ever before, with Negroes desperately seeking an opportunity to share the benefits as well as the burdens of American life, with enough urgent unfinished business to occupy the labor force for years to come, this is the moment to strike out for achievement of real full employment.

Let's Finish the Job

Commission Reports:

Basic Guarantees to Workers Key to Automation Adjustment

The following is excerpted from "Technology & the American Economy," the report of the National Commission on Technology, Automation & Economic Progress.

WHATEVER the characteristics of a given situation brought about by technological change, an adequate adjustment program must satisfy certain basic requirements.

First, those displaced should be offered either a substantially equivalent or better alternative job, or the training or education required to obtain such a job. This objective cannot be achieved unless displaced workers have access to the full range of available alternatives.

Second, they should be guaranteed adequate financial security while searching for alternative jobs or while undertaking training.

Third, they should be given sufficient financial assistance to permit them to relocate their families whenever this becomes necessary.

Fourth, they should be protected against forfeiture of earned security rights, such as vacation, retirement, insurance, and related credits, resulting from job displacements.

It is difficult to estimate how many persons are covered by adequate adjustment programs. Beyond the well-known formal and collectively bargained programs, much is undertaken by managements on their own initiative or in conjunction with public agencies and community service organizations. Qualitative assessment is also difficult.

Because of the dearth of available information, we suggest that the Dept. of Labor and the Dept. of Commerce systematically investigate and report publicly on successful private adjustment programs developed through either collective bargaining or the unilateral efforts of management.

This would not only add to the present store of general knowledge about the adequacy of adjustment coverage, but would also permit more extensive communication about effective adjustment programs among and between employers, employes, and unions.

As increasing attention is given to adjustment programs, standards of adequacy are bound to rise; today's more advanced ideas will be commonplace tomorrow. We may expect not only wider variety in the methods of adjustment, but also greater flexibility. For example, employers should be encouraged to give employes a chance to try new jobs without forfeiting their rights to old jobs. Assurance to workers that they are not limited to one, irrevocable choice among several alternatives may remove a major cause for resisting adjustments to change.

There is general agreement that wherever possible reductions in the work necessitated by technological change should be accomplished by attrition.

One of the main objectives of manpower planning is to obviate the need for sudden and substantial layoffs, and also to ease the impact on those who must be displaced. By studying attrition ratios and the age structure of the work force, and by attempting to project manpower requirements, employers could do a better job of integrating hiring and layoff policies.

BECAUSE laid-off employes need time to explore alternative job opportunities, government agencies, unions, and others have increasingly emphasized the need for an "early warning system" which will alert employes to the possibility or inevitability of future compulsory job changes. Formal arrangements do exist, but the notice periods are generally relatively short. Managements have been reluctant to enter into formal advance notice agreements for fear that the firm's competitive position may be endangered, concern that employes will seek other jobs before the change is actually effected, and apprehension that advance notice will cause a decline in worker productivity.

Recent research suggests that employer fears of premature job-changing are largely unfounded, especially if employes must forego severance pay and related assistance should they depart before jobs have been terminated. Fear of reduced employe morale and efficiency also seems unwarranted, especially when managements combine advance notice with assistance to affected workers seeking new jobs.

The value to employes of advance notice of technological change can be greatly enhanced if it is accompanied by assistance in finding alternative jobs or securing additional training or education. Employes should be given either time off with pay to look for other jobs or financial assistance while they upgrade their skills through additional training or education. Employers willing to lend this type of assistance might well make it dependent upon the employes' commitment to stay at their jobs through the transitional period.

Digest Article a 'Beautiful Job' In the Journalism of Distortion

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

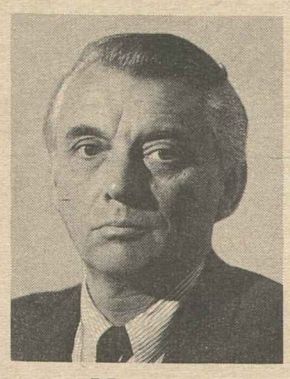
NEW YORK—The February issue of the Reader's Digest contains an article which gives the impression that a large segment of the working force in this country consists of loafers and bounders, chiselers and cheats, or that at least they will be reduced to same by a sinister bill now before Congress to strengthen and unify job insurance.



Morgan

The article labels the legislation to standardize unemployment benefits as a "new and shocking grab for federal power" which ruthlessly invades states' rights, at a cost of additional billions and represents, in effect, not creeping but leaping socialism toward a total welfare state.

I'm scared—not of the consequences of the bill which, admittedly, is not perfect, but of the Digest's beautiful job in the questionable journalism of distortion. Obviously to encourage public opposition to the measure—which it has every right to do—the Digest advertises that reprints of the article are available in bulk.

Says a Labor Dept. official: "The timing is deliberate (precisely at the beginning of this second session of the 89th Congress in which the Administration is trying to marshal its forces to pass the bill); the slant is intentional in order to cloud the issues and to make the road of the legislation more difficult."

The article could have one very salubrious effect. It could put the backers of the bill, in and out of government, on notice of the urgency of reducing their arguments to understandable language and of stressing the positive points of the measure instead of defensively leading the inquiring layman into a labyrinth of legalistic verbiage he cannot possibly understand.

For example they have hardly begun to stress the fact that, far from being an invasion of the dubiously sacred rights of states, unemployment insurance was a federal concept from the beginning; it was part of the Social Security Act of 1935 and from the beginning the federal government has collected the tax required from employers and distributed it to the states. Furthermore, no vast new bureaucracy is involved in the bill; even the new federal emergency funds provided in it—some to be drawn from general Treasury funds—would be administered through state offices.

If there are loopholes to encourage gold-bricking, feather-bedding or other unjustifiable waste they obviously should be plugged and if the Digest piece can help correct such faults, so much the better.

The danger of such a broadside is that by citing isolated cases, real or theoretical, it is apt to harry the bewildered citizen into concluding—in the absence of any balanced treatment of the measure and its purpose—that the scandalous exception is the rule.

It is too bad that somebody hasn't invented a school for politicians to train them to draft bills that a taxpayer can read without having to take a bar examination to understand them. This might put a packet of legal and legislative experts out of a job but if clearer, sounder laws resulted I would be happy to contribute to their unemployment compensation and consider it worth the price.

THE THEORY behind unemployment compensation is not the dole or public welfare. This is another thing its proponents have not made sufficiently clear. It is, simply, wage insurance.

If you carry the proper policies, your widow collects life insurance when you die; you are protected if your house burns or your car is wrecked; if you break a leg you get help with the doctor bills. If you lose your job, unemployment compensation allows you to draw, if you are eligible, a partial replacement of your lost wages.

It varies widely now by states but roughly this means job insurance theoretically equivalent to half—but in too many cases only a fourth or a fifth—of your weekly wage for a period averaging 13 weeks. This is supposed to help tide you over to the next job without forcing you on relief. It also serves as a built-in, if limited, safeguard against depression by assuring the economy more sustained purchasing power.

In 1965 less than 50 million workers were covered by existing unemployment insurance systems, of whom about 5 mililon actually drew benefits. The new bill aims to extend coverage to roughly 5 million more workers; establish minimum benefits of not less than half the weekly wage which states must observe; provide coverage up to 52 weeks for some long-term unemployed, through federal funds; make disqualification penalties uniform for workers who voluntarily quit their jobs, are discharged for misconduct or who refuse suitable work; and to modernize financing by raising employer taxes by an average of 33⅓ to 40 percent.

Proponents justify this jump by the fact that periodic adjustments have not been made previously, leaving the system, in effect, more effective when it began than after 30 years of an expanding economy.

Indeed our current prosperity is partial proof that the system works. In its contemptuous approach to the American worker, the Digest article implies the interesting premise that the system should not be improved.

'Truth' Legislation:

Break Predicted in Deadlock Holding Up Consumer Aid Bills

THE DEADLOCK on consumer-protection legislation, long engineered by special interest groups, may be broken this year, a labor spokesman has reported.

Stressing the need for "truth in lending" and "truth in packaging" measures, Evelyn Dubrow, legislative representative of the Ladies' Garment Workers, said "it would be tragic indeed" if these measures were to fail.

Interviewed on Labor News Conference, Miss Dubrow said many businessmen, bankers and small loan interests "think they are going to be hurt" by such laws, but their only effect on free enterprise would be to rule out "dishonesty in selling a product." Honest competition "is the keystone of free enterprise in this country," she declared, and "all we want to do is strengthen the system and make it work as it should."

Miss Dubrow said the requirements of both measures are simple—that consumers be given full and easily understood information about the products they buy and the actual costs involved in time payment plans and other credit arrangements.

ENFORCEMENT and supervision could be handled by U.S. agencies such as the Federal Reserve Bank, Food & Drug Administration, Dept. of Commerce and others already established, without any additional burden on the federal budget, she noted.

Chances for passage of these bills this year are good, Miss Dubrow said, pointing out that both were recommended by Pres. Johnson in his State of the Union message and have gained wide support in Congress and throughout the country.

Reporters questioning her on the AFL-CIO public service interview, aired weekly over the Mutual Radio Network, were Lloyd Schwartz, Washington bureau chief for Women's Wear Daily and other Fairchild publications, and Frank Porter of the Washington Post.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A WEEK BEFORE the final vote on the Dirksen filibuster on 14(b) repeal, a Senate GOP fund-raising dinner was vastly entertained as speaker after speaker merrily bragged about what they were doing and how effective they were about it.

Dirksen, ever the ham actor, publicly twitted labor for the fact repeal backers weren't even able to force the issue up for a vote, and condescendingly remarked that he knew union officials were angry about it but assured everyone his feelings weren't hurt.

Former Vice Pres. Nixon came down from New York to make the speech introducing Thruston Morton of Kentucky, chairman of the GOP Senate Campaign Committee. He didn't have to talk about 14(b) repeal but he chose to. He pointed out that he and Morton were both members of the House in 1947: "We're not only in favor of 14(b), we helped write it."

Morton joyously got into the act with a story—which happens to be true—about a southern businessman who seemed reluctant to buy two $500 tickets to the dinner on the basis of a telephone call from a mere staffer on the campaign committee. For his $1,000, he said, he thought he was entitled to a telephone call from no lesser mortal than Dirksen himself, the Republican floor leader.

"We'll have Everett call you," the committee staffer said soothingly. "But right now he's down on the floor stopping repeal of 14(b)."

"Never mind that call," said the southern businessman. "My check's in the mail."

IT WAS, in short, an evening of fun and games for Republican orators. They celebrated a prospective triumph—a rare one—on legislation, even though it came just through the negative blocking of legislation. And the campaign committee director was on Cloud Nine—"the biggest dinner ever . . . biggest attendance we've ever had . . . we'll end up with $500,000 net for campaign spending."

Well, there are 34 seats open in the Senate, and they might be contested by the GOP in 30 states, so that on the average campaign expenses could be covered to the extent of $16,000 per candidate.

The money will not be divided that way, of course. The 12 incumbent Republican senators, to begin with, will get airline charge plates so that they can travel as often as needed to their home states with the campaign committee picking up the bill.

Every GOP candidate, after he is selected, will be given $5,000 (this totals about $150,000) and each will get what Morton calls "full logistic support" in the form of paid-for long distance telephone calls, the cost of TV tapes and campaign newsletters.

Allocation of any remaining funds is the key issue. If a dozen hopeless candidates receive only the $5,000 minimum, the rest of the money will be dedicated—presumably by Dirksen and Morton—to candidates in "target areas" where the GOP thinks, or dreams, it can oust Democrats. There are "about six" such states, Morton said, and if we don't win them, "we'll have to get some one pardoned from jail to get a presidential candidate in 1968."

ABOUT THIS, Morton was engaging in hyperbole. It is easy to spot six or seven states in which Democrats might have trouble—Oregon, Montana, Illinois, Michigan, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, maybe even South Carolina. The fascinating thing is that when Morton mentions only "six" target areas, he could win them all and still have no more than 40 seats against 60 for the Democrats.

As for a potential candidate, there sat Nixon on the podium, and he hasn't stopped running for a second nomination since November 1960, and he's been indicted and convicted on no felony charges that would require a "pardon" to get him out of jail to run again.

THE LONG-STANDING deadlock on consumer protection legislation may be broken this year, Evelyn Dubrow, legislative representative for the Ladies' Garment Workers, told Frank Porter of the Washington Post (left) and Lloyd Schwartz of Fairchild Publications on the weekly AFL-CIO public service interview, Labor News Conference.

House Acts to Speed Rail Grievance Action

The House voted 379-0 approval of labor-endorsed legislation aimed at cutting down a mountainous backlog of claims filed by railroad operating employes under the grievance procedures of the Railway Labor Act. The bill now goes to the Senate.

The measure amending the rail labor act would make decisions of the National Railroad Adjustment Board on wages, hours and work rule grievances final and binding, except in case of fraud. Also it would require a special adjustment board to be named when either party to a grievance—labor or management—requests it.

The law now provides that special boards may be set up on individual railroads to dispose of disputes only when both parties agree to them. But some railroads have refused to agree, with the result that grievances often take many years of processing through appeals procedures.

Urging passage of the bill, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wrote congressmen that at the present rate it would take 32 years to clear the current adjustment board docket.

"Railroad workers now wait more than 10 years for decisions on claims," Biemiller said.

The Railway Labor Executives' Association said in support of the legislation that Congress set up the Railroad Adjustment Board in 1934 to arbitrate "minor disputes" involving unadjusted employe grievances, but that for 15 years the board has "failed miserably" to function as intended.

At present, the RLEA said, more than 4,000 cases involving operating employes alone are awaiting board action. It blamed rail managements for the slow pace of settlements.

Under present procedures, an employe who loses a grievance involving money has no further claim. But an adverse decision against management can be appealed, the RLEA pointed out.

Assailed as 'Grossly Unfair':

Labor Hits Economic Report For 'Negative' Wage Policy

1966 when the method of calculation in the past would have produced a 3.6 percent figure, the AFL-CIO added that in defining the wage guideposts "in terms of current dollars rather than dollars of real purchasing power" workers were being asked to bear the inflation-fighting burden. The statement added:

"We would like to remind the council that a wage policy which is concerned only with compensation as a cost is an inadequate and even dangerous policy."

In an assessment of the overall economic situation, Reuther's statement made these points:

● "The fight for full employment and against poverty . . . is a fight which America cannot afford to lose or even to postpone." The "guns or butter" issue implies "that non-defense program are of secondary importance, that they are postponable and can be slowed down without serious consequences." The nation is not now confronted with that issue.

● The Council of Economic Advisers appears to be taking the position of warning about the dangers of reducing unemployment too rapidly and has failed to establish clear and precise goals for overall unemployment. "We are suggesting that the time has now come to reduce the interim target [unemployment rate] to 3 percent, to set a specific target date for its achievement and then to seek to lower it even further by eliminating any remaining unemployment which can be avoided by reasonable policies."

● The anti-poverty program "has an extremely important function to perform. We are therefore saddened and disappointed by the inadequate provisions for it in the new budget."

● The average American worker is being "short-changed." He has not been receiving "a fair share of the gains of increasing productivity. The gap between what he produces in an hour and what he can buy for the money he earns in that hour has been steadily widening."

● The proportion of the gross national product devoted to foreign aid should be increased rather than reduced and the "wraps" should be taken off American agriculture "to help reduce hunger in the world."

● Recent U.S. price increases have not been "violent," and have been "a very small price to pay for the 5.5 percent growth in output during 1965 and the drop of almost 600,000 in unemployment between December 1964 and December 1965. They do not justify a reduction in expenditures, a tightening of credit, an increase in taxes or any other negative response which sacrifices the unemployed and the poor on the altar of absolute price stability."

The statement urged filling the "information gap" in the current economic report by providing in the future specific information so that the Administration's aims and its proposals for achieving those aims can be "fully" judged. It urged employment targets, an estimate of the level of GNP needed to achieve those targets, and policies needed to bring about full employment.

The statement reiterated AFL-CIO proposals for revamping the Federal Reserve Board to make it "more responsive to the needs of the economy" and the need for an overall democratic planning mechanism.

The commitment made 20 years ago with the adoption of the Employment Act of 1946 "has been only partially fulfilled," the statement concluded.

It pointed out that "at least one-fifth of our people have been bypassed by prosperity; our urban areas in which 70 percent of all Americans live need a total rehabilitation and rebirth; imbalances in the private sector of our economy threaten the continuation of the present expansion; and a vast, hungry and unstable world beyond our shores cries out for help and assistance."

New GI Bill of Rights Enacted by Congress

man Olin E. Teague (D.-Tex.), who had opposed the Yarborough bill in earlier years, this year took a major role in putting together a measure which he assured the House the President will sign. Although it carriers a smaller dollar tag than the Senate bill, it goes well beyond the Administration's original proposal to limit benefits to those who serve in "hot spots" such as Viet Nam and the Dominican Republic.

The legislation, unlike previous post-war bills, is designed as a permanent benefit to all who serve in uniform—in peace as well as in war.

It offers an allowance of $100 a month to veterans taking full-time education programs, including vocational as well as academic training. An additional $25 would be allowed for one dependent; $50 for two or more dependents. A veteran would be entitled to one month of benefits for each month of service, up to a maximum of 36 months.

A veteran taking a part-time educational program would receive a reduced subsistence allowance. Education benefits must be completed within eight years after discharge or after the act goes into effect.

Unlike the World War II GI program, the government would not pay the cost of tuition and books.

Tuition would be paid for active duty servicemen with two years duty time who take educational courses in their off hours. They would not, however, receive any subsistence allowance.

The bill also extends Veterans Administration home mortgage guarantees to post-Korea veterans and authorized direct VA loans in rural areas and small towns where private financing is unavailable.

Post-Korea veterans are given the same VA hospital privileges and government employment preference accorded earlier wartime veterans.

The first year cost of the bill is estimated at $327 million, rising gradually to $494 million by 1970.

In other congressional action:

● Congress sent to the White House a bill easing anti-trust restrictions on bank mergers and exempting three banks from anti-trust suits brought by the Justice Dept. Some liberal congressmen and senators expressed doubts about the bill but it moved easily through both houses.

● The House approved U.S. membership in the new Asian Development Bank, designed to help the economies of the region's developing nations. The AFL-CIO had testified in favor of the legislation.

Federal Credits Proposed to Spur State Switch to Progressive Taxes

States would be encouraged to switch from sales taxes to progressive income taxes as their major revenue source under a plan advanced by the bipartisan Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

The 26-member commission includes federal, state, county and city officials and legislators. In a special report it viewed with concern the dependence of states and localities on sales taxes and other levies which fall hardest on low and middle income families. It found the progressive income tax fairer and better able to bring in the increased revenue needed "to meet growing demands for new and improved governmental services for more people."

To encourage states to switch to income taxes on the federal pattern, the commission proposed that taxpayers in states with a progressive income tax pay a smaller federal income tax.

This would be done by allowing a federal tax credit equal to a percentage of the state income tax paid—perhaps 40 percent.

At present, taxpayers who itemize their returns may deduct state taxes from their taxable income. But this is not the same as a tax credit, which is substracted from the amount of tax owed.

For example a deduction of $200 in state taxes in an itemized return might result in a tax savings of about $40. But a tax credit of 40 percent of a $200 state income tax would mean a saving of $80 on the federal tax bill.

The advisory commission's proposal would allow either the tax deduction or the tax credit, whichever is higher.

It would also permit a federal-state agreement under which the government would collect the income tax for a state.

The commission's recommendations closely parallel the position taken by the AFL-CIO at its December convention. The convention's tax resolution included this "resolve":

"To meet the continuing need for greater revenue, we will continue to urge greater use of progressive income taxes, too long neglected by most states. To advance this objective, we urge Congress to seriously weigh the proposal to allow a credit for the payment of state income taxes against an individual's income-tax obligation to the federal government."

The commission, a permanent advisory body established by Act of Congress in 1959, noted that state and local spending has been rising by 8 to 9 percent a year.

The report noted that one-third of the states do not tax personal incomes at all and another third have only token income taxes.

Overall, income taxes provide only about 14 percent of state revenue.

Detroit Labor Editor Joins AFSCME Staff

Detroit — Hal DeLong, for 15 years editor of the Detroit Labor News, has resigned to become special assistant to Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes.

The Labor News is the official publication of the Wayne County AFL-CIO. For the next few months DeLong will edit a new publication designed for Michigan members of the AFSCME.

Affiliates Boost Victory Ratio In NLRB Votes

AFL-CIO unions increased their share of election victories in 1965, the National Labor Relations Board has reported.

Affiliates won 58.6 percent of the elections in which they participated in the first half of 1965, and 57.5 percent in the second half. Their percentage of wins was 55.7 in 1964's latter half, 52.2 in the first half, according to NLRB records.

A report for the last half of 1965 showed that for elections participated in by AFL-CIO unions, there were 109,681 eligible members in units won by affiliates, 4,631 in units won by the ousted Teamsters, 17,037 in units won by other unaffiliated unions, 103,987 where no union was chosen.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council reported at the convention last December in San Francisco that affiliated unions participated in nearly 10,500 NLRB elections in the 23-month period ending May 31, 1965, and won approximately 5,800, or 55.2 percent.

Through such victories, the council said, AFL-CIO unions won bargaining rights for some 425,000 workers.

Senate Drops 14(b), Cloture Moves Fail

and grim-faced, made a final appeal to the Senate "to face up to its responsibilities."

As part of the President's program, Mansfield said, the repeal bill "deserves the decent and respectful attention of Congress." It is "a matter of considerable importance to many millions of Americans."

The routine motion to take up the bill "should have carried without debate," Mansfield said. Instead it brought down "an attack, not only on a perfectly proper bill of the House of Representatives, but on the Senate committee which had the temerity to report it; on the whole of organized labor which had the effrontery to advocate it; and on the President who had the gall to recommend its passage. . . . Out poured the resentments, the irritations, the vendettas, and the whatevers against organized labor which were pent up over the decades."

Mansfield defended his decision not to order around-the-clock sessions in an effort to break the filibuster by declaring that such tactics have been unsuccessful in the past. When "reason and restraint" are lacking, he said, "the Senate invariably reaches an impasse of futility."

Dirksen orated about preserving "freedom" from unionism for servicemen in Viet Nam "where death in disguise hides behind every tree and in every foxhole." He defended his filibuster because, he claimed, the Senate majority has been intimidated by "pressure" and the minority represents the will of the people.

An angry Sen. Warren Magnuson (D-Wash.) took the floor to retort:

"I cannot sit idly by and listen to the minority leader talk about the will of the people on this issue. Voters of my state also have expressed their will on this issue.

"The state of Washington has voted not once, but three times on this issue . . . in initiatives and referendums, and they have denied those who would have a 'right-to-work' law passed. The last time the vote was almost two-to-one against it."

Sen. John O. Pastore (D-R.I.) called on Dirksen to allow the Senate to consider the 14(b) issue on its merits "and let there be a clear-cut decision." The filibuster, he said, denied the American people the right to have the legislation even discussed on the merits of the case.

The first cloture vote found 45 Democrats and six Republicans favoring a limit on debate; opposed were 26 Republicans and 22 Democrats. On the second vote, Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.), shifted and voted against cloture.

Rules Reform Asked

The ability of a minority to block the Senate from even considering legislation brought renewed demands from Senators Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) and Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.) for a change in the Senate rules.

Telegrams to Mansfield and Dirksen by Roy Wilkins, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, stressed the Negro community's support for repeal.

"The NAACP has long urged that this section be repealed," Wilkins said, "since its operation has not served, as its supporters are alleging, to open employment to all, irrespective of race and color. Instead, the organized labor movement which is now acting to remove barriers and to improve the training and opportunities of Negro workers, is being weakened by the so-called "right-to-work laws."

The Senate filibuster was a victory for the National Right to Work Committee and its business allies after they had lost every battle in the House. Its spokesmen, who earlier took the position that the union shop issue should be left to each state to decide, in recent months have been talking about a national ban on the union shop and new restrictive labor legislation.

unions equal time to address workers on company premises—until after the effects of the new rule become known.

The decisions came in these four cases:

- Excelsior Underwear Inc. and Saluda Knitting Inc., where on Dec. 6, 1963, employes at two Saluda, S.C., plants voted 206-35 against representation by the Clothing Workers.
- K. L. Kellogg & Sons, Long Beach, Calif., where workers turned down Operating Engineers Local 3 and Local 12 in a 21-9 mail ballot vote held May 15-28, 1964.
- General Electric Co., Los Angeles, where the vote in an election Aug. 26, 1964, was 31 for the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, 39 against.
- McCulloch Corp., Somerset, Ky., where the result in an election June 6, 1963, was 571 for, 656 against the Auto Workers.

In the GE and McCulloch cases, the unions asked for new elections on the ground that the employers had made "captive audience" speeches to employes but denied equal access to union representatives. In Excelsior and Kellogg, the unions asked new elections because the employers had refused their requests for names and addresses of employes eligible to vote.

The board certified the results of three elections and in the McCulloch Corp. case—denied the UAW's request for review of a regional director's decision certifying the results, but set forth the names-and-addresses rule for the future.

The NLRB cited its mandate from Congress to see that elections are conducted fairly. Such elections, it reasoned, should give employes an opportunity to vote "under circumstances that are free not only from interference, restraint or coercion" but also from "other elements that prevent or impede a free and reasoned choice."

The board noted the common requirement that names and addresses of voters shall be posted in political election and in corporate management or proxy contests among stockholders, and specifically cited the Landrum-Griffin Act provision that any candidate for union office is entitled to have the union distribute his campaign statements to all members.

The AFL-CIO had filed a "friend of the court" brief supporting the unions claim for new elections.

Names Needed

As to name-and-address lists, the federation asserted in its brief and in oral argument that "a fair and free election cannot be held when the union lacks names and addresses of employes eligible to vote" and the employer rejects requests for them.

Though union organizing committees now spend a third or more of their time trying to run down names and addresses, they ordinarily have finished campaigns lacking almost half the total number, the AFL-CIO reported.

California Union Gain Greatest in 8 Years

San Francisco — California unions scored their greatest gains in eight years between July 1964 and July 1965, adding 47,600 members for an increase of 2.6 percent to 1,871,700, according to official statistics published by the State Dept. of Industrial Relations.

Meany a Sponsor Of Heart Campaign

New York — AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for the 14th consecutive year is serving as a national sponsor of the Heart Fund campaign, scheduled for February by the American Heart Association.

Pres. Johnson has proclaimed February as American Heart Month. Thousands of union men and women are expected to be among the 1.7 million volunteers who will solicit funds for the drive on Heart Sunday, Feb. 20.

Postal Union Backs Merger With Clerks

A special convention of the unaffiliated National Postal Union strongly endorsed a plan to merge with the AFL-CIO United Federation of Postal Clerks.

The rollcall vote for approval of the merger, climaxing the three-day convention in Washington, D.C., was 45,091 to 3,486. The proposal must now be submitted to a mail membership referendum for final ratification.

NPU Pres. Sidney A. Goodman said the referendum should be complete by mid-March. He predicted strong support for the merger, which would heal an eight-year division in postal clerk ranks.

Pres. E. C. Hallbeck of the Postal Clerks said his 145,000-member union will hold its merger convention this spring. Hallbeck addressed the convention of the NPU, which was formed in 1958 when a number of big-city locals left the parent organization in a dispute over convention representation and voting strength.

The 1964 conventions of the two unions authorized merger negotiations and a joint unity committee came up with an agreement last fall.

DAV Cites Union For Aid to Disabled

Dubuque, Ia. — The Disabled American Veterans have presented a citation to Auto Workers Local 94 here in recognition of services to disabled servicemen.

A similar citation was presented to the John Deere Co., where Local 94 members work. Recipient of the award on behalf of the union was Chairman Leonard Meyer of the local's Community Services Committee, a past DAV state commander.

Senate Votes on 14(b) Debate

The Senate voted twice on motions to limit debate and thus break the filibuster preventing action on repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act. Under Senate rules, a two-thirds vote is needed for cloture. On Feb. 8, the roll call vote was 51-48 for cloture, with Sen. McNamara, who favored cloture, absent because of illness. The Feb. 10 vote was 50-49. On labor's scoreboard, a vote for cloture was a Right vote (R), a vote against was a Wrong vote (W).

Unemployment Rate at Nine-Year Low

4% January Level Attains Interim Goal

women and about half the teen-agers were seeking full-time jobs.

The biggest decline over the month occurred among men in the 20-24 age group, with their jobless rate falling from 5.1 percent to 4.2 percent. The report said this reflected both the influence of increased military demands and sustained pressure for more workers. A year ago this group had a rate of 7.1 percent. A "marked reduction" in the numbers of this group in the labor force was linked to military induction and school enrollment.

Teen-Age Rate Falls

The teen-age jobless rate improved from 12.9 percent in December to 12 percent and was down more than three points from the 15.2 percent of January 1965. It remained triple the national jobless rate.

The non-white jobless rate, while improved, remained conspicuously high. It fell from 7.5 percent in December to 7 percent; a year ago it was 9 percent. Yet it remained, in January, nearly double the national rate. There are 678,000 non-whites among the 3.3 million unemployed.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, testifying before the Joint Economic Committee, estimated that the overall jobless rate would be reduced to 3.5 percent or a little less during 1966.

Wirtz said continuation of the present economic expansion would reduce unemployment by about 500,000.

He also said the national commitment to full employment opportunity allows for no more than a 2 percent to 3 percent jobless rate. This ultimate goal allows for unemployment due to job-changing and new jobseekers and less than one-half of 1 percent listed as hard-core unemployed.

The continuing low January jobless rate of 1.9 percent and 2.6 percent for married men and adult men, respectively—lowest in a decade—were said to reflect the basic strength in labor demand. The rate for adult women continued to improve, falling from 4 percent in December to 3.8 percent. All three groups were improved nearly a full point over the year.

The blue-collar group continued its strong gains of recent months. These workers, most of whom are men, had a jobless rate of 5.6 percent a year ago; by December it was down to 4.4 percent and by January to 4.2 percent.

The long-term unemployed — those jobless 15 weeks or longer —failed to share fully in the general improvement. Their numbers rose by 78,000 to 678,000 in January—about as expected. Still, this total was 167,000 lower than a year ago and at its lowest level for the month in eight years.

Compared to a year ago, the unemployment situation has improved significantly, the report noted. The adjusted jobless rate fell from 4.8 percent in January 1965—last February it had edged up to 5 percent—down to 4 percent. Nearly all the decline in unemployment benefited adults—three-fourths men and one-fourth women.

Total employment, at 71.2 million, was up by 2.2 million from a year earlier, the report said. Non-farm jobs rose by nearly 2.4 million while farm employment continued its long-term decline in falling by 150,000.

The job gains over the year totaled 1.1 million for teen-agers—equaling the flood of teen-agers into the labor force—800,000 for adult women and 300,000 for adult men.

Of the 67.7 million non-farm workers, about 1.8 million worked part-time due to slack work and other economic reasons. Part-timers, who are counted in employment totals, were at the lowest level since they were first included in the report in 1955.

The total labor force was 77.4 million in January, up by 1.7 million since a year ago. The increase was about 400,000 more than originally expected.

Harold Goldstein, assistant commissioner of labor statistics, explained that large numbers of people were pulled into the labor market by expanding job opportunities. Only 100,000 of the rise was attributed to an increase in the armed forces.

Asked for a forecast, Goldstein said the upward movement in employment can be expected to continue with the pressure on the labor market, the build-up in the armed forces, increases in defense expenditures and other factors such as unfilled orders.

Industry Developments

Among industry developments, the manufacturing sector showed a gain of 875,000 jobs from January 1965 to a total of 18.3 million, the largest January-to-January gain in 10 years. Three-fourths of it occurred in durable goods and 80 percent of the job rise in the past year went to production workers, the report said.

The factory workweek declined seasonally from December by 36 minutes to 41.1 hours in January, the report added. The average workweek included 3.6 hours of overtime at premium pay, down slightly from December but at the highest January level since reports on overtime were begun in 1956.

Average hourly earnings rose by 1 cent to $2.67, an all-time high, the Labor Dept. said. But, because of the reduced hours, weekly earnings dropped by $1.20 to $109.74.

SOUTH AND EAST ASIAN journalists, visiting the United States in the annual program co-sponsored by the State and Defense Departments, had a briefing in AFL-CIO headquarters from Ernest Lee (speaking), executive assistant to the director of the Dept. of Intl. Affairs, and Dir. Albert J. Zack of the Dept. of Public Relations.

Federal Court Strikes Down Texas Poll Tax

tions. Poll taxes are prohibited, under a constitutional amendment, as a condition for voting in federal elections.

Pending before the Supreme Court is a challenge to Virginia's poll tax. It was originated by a group of citizens before passage of the Voting Rights Act, but the Justice Dept. joined in arguing the case before the Supreme Court.

Three-Judge Court

The three-judge Texas decision was written by Judge Homer Thornberry of the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, a former Texas congressman.

The unanimous decision rejected a major government argument—that the poll tax imposes an unconstitutional economic burden on Negroes, although agreeing that this was the intent when the tax was first imposed in 1902.

The ruling said, however, that the tax serves no legitimate purpose since it is imposed only on those choosing to exercise "a fundamental right" to vote.

"If the state of Texas placed a tax on the right to speak," the court said, it would be obviously "a blatant infringement of the freedom of speech. Yet the poll tax as enforced in Texas is a tax on the equally important right to vote."

The court gave the state 14 days to ask either the Circuit Court or the U. S. Supreme Court to stay the decision. Unless stayed, it would invalidate the poll tax for the May 7 primary and the November general election.

Pulp-Sulphite Union Sets Up Scholarships

Port Edward, N. Y. — A new scholarship program through which 10 awards of $1,000 each will be made annually to high school seniors with one parent a member in good standing of the Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers has been announced by the union.

The program is known as the John P. Burke Scholarship Award in honor of the retired long-time president-secretary of the union.

THIS IS A SPECIMEN of the card being issued by the Social Security Administration showing that the holder is entitled to hospital and medical care benefits under Medicare.

Elderly Urged to Sign For Medicare Extras

Although 19 million Americans over 65 are eligible for coverage under the government's new health insurance program, more than 7 million have not yet taken advantage of a "bargain they cannot afford to pass up," according to Ray Munts, acting director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

The insurance program, which cover big doctor bills and a whole range of other medical costs, goes into effect July 1, but to get these benefits each eligible individual must sign up for the $3-a-month policy. Munts pointed out.

The deadline for acceptance is Mar. 31. Those who fail to sign by that date must wait two years before getting another chance and will then have to pay a higher premium.

The lag in acceptances is probably due to lack of knowledge among many older citizens, Munts said.

"Too many do not realize that the medicare bill enacted last year is divided into two separate programs," he explained.

"The first one—which was the focus of our efforts over the years —covers hospital costs and certain post-hospitalization services, such as convalescent care. This part is automatically available to the elderly on July 1.

Voluntary Program

"But the second program is voluntary. It requires the agreement of each individual to pay the $3 monthly fee, an amount which will be matched by the government.

"We realize that for many of the elderly, $3 a month is a substantial sum. Yet this is a bargain they cannot afford to pass up; for there is no private insurance program that can come close to providing comparable protection—the kind of protection that is vitally important to the aged with limited incomes."

Munts gave this summary of the medical insurance benefits:

- Payment of 80 percent of all doctor and other medical bills after the first $50. This includes home visits, office calls and hospital visits.
- Payment for diagonstic services, laboratory tests, x-rays, surgical dressings (including casts, splints etc.), rental of medical equipment (such as hospital beds and wheelchairs for home use), ambulance service, braces, artificial arms, legs and eyes, and other related needs.
- One hundred home health visits by nurses or other health workers, with no prior hospitalization required. (This is in addition to the 100 post-hospital visits guaranteed under the hospital insurance section of the law.)

"The government's voluntary program provides the bulk of the basic needs," Munts stressed. "For those who can afford a few more dollars, private policies are now becoming available to cover the gaps, such as the first $50 and the other 20 percent of doctor bills."

Crafts Help Win Space Unit Award

The American Society of Civil Engineers has selected a unit at the Kennedy Space Center, Merritt Island, Fla., as the "outstanding civil engineering achievement of the year," Lieut.-Gen. William F. Cassidy, chief of Army Engineers, has advised Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

The distinction went to National Aeronautics & Space Administration Launch Complex 39, which includes a vehicle assembly building, crawlerways and two launch pads.

In a telegram to Haggerty, Cassidy congratulated the department and its affiliates for substantial contributions to "this historic project" by building tradesmen employed in its construction.

Building Trades Reject Bid For 'Ceiling' on Wage Hikes

UNION SHOP STEWARDS must serve the underprivileged and the poor of their communities as well as their fellow union members in the shops, Pres. Paul Jennings (speaking) of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers told a union Conference on Civil Rights for All People through Community Action. (Story on Page 4.)

Plan 'Inequitable,' 18 Presidents Say

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Presidents of 18 AFL-CIO building trades unions unanimously rejected rigid wage restrictions in the construction industry as "inequitable and "unworkable."

They firmly turned down a plan which would tend to limit construction hourly wage increases to the 3.2 percent "guideline" advocated by the President's Council of Economic Advisers. Any such ceiling, the union leaders said, would be both inapplicable to the construction industry and clearly discriminatory unless applied to all segments of the economy, including profits.

The AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. had been asked informally by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz to consider setting up a national labor-management board to mediate local wage disputes in the industry and recommend settlements.

Presidents of the 18 unions affiliated with the department said they gave "careful consideration" to the proposal but turned it down because its "purpose and effect" would be to clamp a ceiling on wage increases and it would not take into account special factors affecting construction employment.

"If the national interest demands legal and universal economic control affecting each and every segment of the national economy, the Building & Construction Trades Dept. will be the first to go along," the union leaders declared.

They charged, however, that the government is following a "contradictory and discriminatory course." The statement cited these examples from the President's economic report to Congress:

"The President told Congress, in his report, that farm proprietors' income in 1965 went up 22 per cent. No restrictions have been sought against farmers.

"The President told Congress

House Unit Approves Tax Plan

The House Ways & Means Committee voted bipartisan endorsement of Pres. Johnson's proposal to speed tax collections and roll back two excise tax cuts.

The legislation will reach the House floor on Feb. 23 under a "no amendment" rule traditional with tax bills. Its passage by the House is expected.

With only minor changes, the committee followed recommendations made last month by Pres. Johnson to help finance the Viet Nam war and avoid inflationary strain on the economy. The committee bill would:

- Require big corporations to pay their estimated taxes in quarterly installments the year the money is earned. This would not increase the amount of taxes owed—but it would get the money to the Treasury earlier.
- Restore the 10 percent excise tax on telephone calls, which had dropped to 3 percent on Jan. 1. The tax would stay at 10 percent until April 1, 1968, when it would drop to 1 percent. At the end of 1968 it would be repealed entirely.
- Roll back the auto excise tax cut from the present 6 percent to

"Urgently Needed":

Johnson Asks Funds For Rent Subsidies

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Johnson asked Congress for "urgently needed" funds to start the rent supplement program and the National Teacher Corps.

Congress authorized both programs last year by close votes—but refused to appropriate any money to carry them out.

The rent supplement program would allow low-income families to move from slum housing to modest but adequate housing they could not otherwise afford. The family would pay one-fourth of its income and the government would pay the balance of the rent.

The Teacher Corps would enroll both experienced and student teachers for work in city slums and rural poverty areas. Johnson has said the program's goal is "to improve the quality of teaching where quality is most needed and most often in short supply."

The President asked Congress to appropriate $30 million for the rent program and $13.2 million for the Teacher Corps for the remainder of the fiscal year. He also asked an additional $12.7 million for the Selective Service System because of stepped-up military draft demands.

The rent subsidy program ran into a storm of opposition in the House last year and the Administration was forced to limit it to persons eligible for public housing. The original intent was to make it available to families above the public housing income level who could not afford rentals being charged for housing outside of slum areas.

While the House voted 208-204 to keep the rent supplement provision in the housing bill, it later voted 185-162 to delete funds to start the program from the final ap-

Teacher Pay Higher Under Union Pacts

Chicago—Unionized teachers collect higher salaries than their unorganized colleagues, but the earnings of both still trail behind those in comparable professions and occupations, a survey by the American Federation of Teachers has disclosed.

Further, the study revealed, smaller school districts pay "substantially less" than the larger districts.

The survey showed that teachers who belong to unions in districts enrolling more than 6,000 pupils earn an average of $7,932 a year, compared to $7,101 for non-union educators. The average salary was $7,237 while in all districts regardless of size it has been computed

Labor Board Affirms Key Unit Ruling

The National Labor Relations Board, has reaffirmed its 1963 ruling that the single district office is the basic appropriate bargaining unit for insurance agents and ordered the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. to bargain with the Insurance Workers.

The case had been returned to the board by the Supreme Court last Apr. 5 for "lack of articulated reasons." In so doing, the high court vacated a decision by the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston upholding the company's challenge to the unit.

The new board decision, a union spokesman said, will unlock a logjam of 35 other Metropolitan cases where orders to bargain previously were challenged by the big insurance firm. Metropolitan has 20 days to file exceptions, bargain with the IWIU or await a court order to start bargaining, he said.

All board members except Howard Jenkins, Jr., participated in the latest decision, involving the Metropolitan office in Woonsocket, R.I. The union won an election there in 1962 but management refused to bargain on the ground that a local or district office was in its opinion inappropriate.

The IWIU spokesman said the union will resume its delayed Metropolitan organizing drive at once; and will ask the NLRB to set election dates in the 10 Metropolitan offices where elections covering 560 agents had been suspended, and two others where the union is ready

GOP Congressman Guards South's Anti-Labor 'Bait'

Alabama Republican Congressman William L. Dickinson was bluntly frank in a newsletter telling his constituents why he is opposing improved federal standards of unemployment insurance.

The Administration bill, he complained, is part of a package "aimed at weakening the sales talk of southern states in their recruitment of northern industries." It would "make it easier to get unemployment benefits" and "raise the taxes that employers pay into the program."

The other parts of the "package" that would make it more difficult to lure runaway industries, Dickinson indicated, are the proposed minimum wage increase and repeal of Section 14(b).

All three bills, he charged, are "aimed right at the South"—presumably by lessening such incentives to employers as low wages, low business taxes and anti-union legislation.

LABOR IS HELPING a nationwide effort to get the facts on Medicare coverage to millions over 65 who face a Mar. 31 deadline for enrollment. More than 4,000 attended this Detroit rally sponsored by the Mayor's Committee on Medicare and the Auto Workers.

48 Contracts Awarded:

Insurance, Health Groups To Handle Medicare Plan

The Social Security Administration has named 48 organizations to act as contractors for the payment of doctor bills under Part B of the Medicare program.

Chosen were 32 Blue Shield plans, 15 insurance companies and one independent insurer. Each will serve a designated geographical area, although none has yet been named for Virginia, the Virgin Islands, Guam or American Samoa. In certain areas the members of group practice prepayment plans will be served by their plans rather than the area contractor.

The Medicare law provided that the administrative functions connected with the payment of bills be contracted out, so far as possible, to non-governmental organizations.

The Medicare program goes into effect next July 1. Persons 65 or over must register to be covered by the medical insurance section and pay a fee of $3 monthly; the registration deadline is Mar. 31 for those who had reached 65 by the end of 1965, with persons reaching 65 since then required to sign up within three months of their 65th birthday.

For their $3 fee, the registrants will be covered for 80 percent of their doctor's bills, plus a variety of other medical services beyond an annual deduction of $50.

Two Methods of Payment

A senior citizen who has contracted for medical insurance will have two choices when it comes to paying his bill:

- He can pay the doctor direct and send the bill to the contract paying agency, which will reimburse him for 80 percent of what is determined to be a "reasonable fee." The agency, in cooperation with doctors or their organizations, will determine the "usual and customary" charges and also the prevailing rates for similar services.
- He can assign his claim to the doctor, who can collect the "reasonable fee" from the agency in full payment for his services.

Contractors, the Social Security Administration said, will have the additional responsibility of safeguarding against "unnecessary utilization" of services provided under the program, and will be required to maintain such records and furnish such information as the government may find necessary.

The SSA said the selections culminated months of consultation with representatives of prepayment plans, commercial insurors, independent health insurors and health plans, physicians and other professional personnel.

"All of the selected organizations," it said, "have given assurance that they will follow an affirmative personnel policy under the laws and regulations governing civil rights and equal employment opportunity. Contracts will also contain restrictions on the use by the contractor of its government role to promote its insurance sales."

Typical of the local or area prepayment plans which will serve their own members are the Group Health Association, Washington, D.C.; Kaiser Foundation Health Plan on the West Coast; Health Insurance Plan of New York; Group Health Cooperative of Puget Sound, in the state of Washington, and the Community Health Association, Detroit.

In other areas and states the Blue Shield plans will serve as the contract agency with the following exceptions:

Connecticut, Connecticut General Life Insurance Co.; Illinois, except Cook, Du Page, Kane and Will Counties, Continental Casualty Co.; Missouri (85 eastern and central counties), General American Life Insurance Co.; Nebraska, Mutual of Omaha; Ohio except Ashtabula, Cuyahoga, Geauga, Lake and Lorain Counties, Nationwide Mutual Insurance Co.

Insurance Firms Named

California (Los Angeles and Orange Counties), Occidental Life Insurance Co.; Louisiana, Pan-American Life Insurance Co.; North Carolina, Pilot Life Insurance Co.; New Jersey, Prudential Insurance Co.; Maine, Union Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Alaska, Arizona, Hawaii, Nevada, Oklahoma and Oregon, Aetna Life Insurance Co.; Idaho, New Mexico, Tennessee and Wyoming, Equitable Life Assurance Society; Georgia, John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.; Minnesota and Mississippi, Travelers Insurance Co.

In New York State the United Medical Service, Inc., will serve the New York City metropolitan area except for Queens, where Group Health Insurance, Inc., will be the contracting agency; Blue Shield of Western New York will serve seven counties in the Buffalo area; Genesee Valley Medical Care, Inc., will serve six counties in the Rochester area, and the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. will serve the remaining 34 counties and also the state of Kentucky.

NLRB Cancels Election Loss, Cites Anti-Union Campaign by Community

The National Labor Relations Board, citing an inflammatory anti-union campaign by community leaders in Mississippi's Simpson County, set aside a 1965 election lost by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and ordered a new vote free of hostile pressures.

The unanimous order upholding IBEW unfair practice charges was issued despite a recent agreement between the union and the company that benefited from the community campaign—the Universal Manufacturing Corp. They signed contract terms Jan. 31 which gave 950 members of IBEW Local 2198 increases of 46 cents an hour and other benefits.

The board set aside the election, held Apr. 23, 1965, on the ground that actions by community leaders, who had backed a $1.2 million bond issue for the company's plant in Mendenhall, Miss., "rendered impossible the rational, uncoerced selection of a bargaining representative." The board directed a second election at a time to be set by its regional director.

An IBEW spokesman said, however, that since recognition has already been granted, an election would be unnecessary and the union would withdraw its charges.

Employe Targets

In its decision the board related that employes of the company, which makes fluorescent light components, had been the target of strongly anti-union newspaper advertising, editorials, cartoons and handbills between Mar. 5 and Apr. 23 last year which:

- Made inflammatory, irrelevant appeals to racial feelings.
- Linked unions, civil rights and communism as parts of a "single pernicious entity" and implied that union dues would reach Communist Party coffers.
- Threatened possible plant closure and blacklisting of union members from other employment in the area.

The board voided the election, lost by a vote of 287-272, because the employes, "faced with pressures of this sort, were inhibited from freely exercising their choice in the election."

The NLRB noted that the only two area newspapers had rejected union advertisements while accepting ads and editorials opposing the union. The ads in one paper were paid for by "Friends and Neighbors of Simpson County" and in the other by the editor, one of a number of business and professional men organized by the company's attorney.

The board found also that the union could not rent suitable meeting places and had to hold meetings near Jackson, Miss., 30 miles away.

Board members disagreed with the regional director's finding that the "specter of communism introduced into the campaign may be condoned" because it appears so often in campaigns that workers can properly evaluate it. Frequent use, the NLRB said, cannot "blunt the explosive emotional impact" of such a theme.

The company plant was opened in 1963 after Simpson County voters approved a $1.2 million bond issue to finance it and leading citizens established the Universal Advisory Board to work with management.

Transit Strike Penalty Voided In New York

Albany—The New York legislature hastily passed a bill, backed by Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R), to suspend penalties of the state's Condon-Wadlin Act against transit workers who struck earlier this year.

The Condon-Wadlin Act forbids strikes by public employes and carries an enforcement clause forbidding, among other penalties, any salary increase for strikers for three years. A New York Supreme Court justice ruled, on the basis of the act, that payment of the raises won in their recent strike settlement by transit workers would be illegal.

New York state and city officials were appalled by the obvious possibility that transit workers might indignantly reject such a penalty decision, and the legislature promptly amended the law to make it non-applicable in their case. The agreed-upon raises will be paid.

Gleason Cites 'Rustbuckets':

'All-Out' Effort Seen U.S. Shipping Need

A shortage of modern U.S. ships to carry supplies to Viet Nam demonstrates the need for an "all-out effort to build up the American-flag merchant fleet" quickly, Pres. Thomas W. Gleason of the Longshoremen told a House subcommittee.

Testifying about three-week delays he observed in cargo unloading at Saigon, Gleason said U.S. supplies are being carried in "old and broken ships" he called "rustbuckets" dredged up from the mothball fleet.

Gleason, a member of the President's Maritime Advisory Committee, scored lack of cooperation by government agencies in relieving port tie-ups. There is no question, he said, that "certain government agencies" have been downgrading the "importance to our defense of American-flag ships manned by skilled, loyal American seamen."

The ILA head, who made two trips to South Viet Nam without cost to the government, recommended that "baby flattops" be reactivited immediately to carry ammunition and suppliers in special containers. The carriers would eliminate waiting time needed to convert other vessels and also, he testified, could be used to store ammunition for quick unloading when needed.

THOMAS W. GLEASON

Gleason told Chairman Edward A. Garmatz (D.-Md.) and his Merchant Marine subcommittee that the backlog of ships waiting to get into Viet Nam ports extends all the way back to the Philippines. More than 100 ships are involved, he said.

The ILA president made recommendations to the Defense Dept. after a trip last October and, returning in December, found none of them put into effect. Funds were not available, he was told.

Gleason's union is paying all costs of keeping four experienced dock experts in Saigon for a six-month period. So far, they have received friendly treatment but little action toward reducing congestion, he reported.

Gleason said his experience in the Maritime Advisory Council has convinced him "there must be action to save the American merchant marine; action to guarantee our merchant fleet a fair share of U.S. commerce instead of the 8 or 9 percent our ships now carry; there has to be action to curb the 'runaway' fleet."

"One government department has been saying that these (foreign flag) ships are a part of our emergency defense forces," Gleason testified. "But they have not been of any use to us in Viet Nam." He added:

"The record of crews of foreign-flag ships refusing to sail to South Viet Nam, while there are plenty of them sailing to North Viet Nam, should be all the proof needed that we cannot count on foreign ships manned by foreign nationals for our security or our world-wide responsibilities."

MIDWEST LEADERSHIP Training Institute of the Technical Engineers is addressed by Pres. Russell Stephens. The three-day session in Chicago drew 50 participants from six AFTE locals, and covered collective bargaining, grievance processing and legislation. Participants included Otto Pragan, AFL-CIO assistant educational director, and Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.).

Study Urges $2 Floor for Wages, Blames Guidelines for Pay Lag

A $2-an-hour federal minimum wage, with greatly expanded coverage, could be achieved without overstraining the American economy, according to a report by the Conference on Economic Progress.

It should be done, the report urges, for "moral" as well as economic reasons because millions of fully-employed workers are now living in poverty.

Economist Leon H. Keyserling, author of the report, also has sharp criticism of federal wage-price guidelines. A former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, Keyserling blames the guidelines for the fact that gains in real wages "have lagged far behind productivity gains."

The guidelines have held down wage increases in industries with high productivity gains, he says. But they have not helped raise wages in low-paying industries with productivity gains below the national average.

He estimates that a gradual increase of the minimum wage to $2 an hour would lift the total wage bill of business enterprises affected by an annual average of less than 1.5 percent.

Keyserling says the "overwhelming majority" of the businesses would be able to absorb the increased cost without difficulty.

20% 'Inadequate'

The report estimates that 20 percent of poverty in the nation is caused by inadequate wages to employed workers. Lifting the minimum wage would not only raise a large group out of poverty, the report notes; it would also greatly reduce unemployment by increasing purchasing power and demand.

Coverage under the Fair Labor Standards Act, the study urges, should include at least eight million additional workers. It also proposes federal legislation to provide an incentive for states to enact improved minimum wage laws for persons not covered by the federal law. It cites the unemployment compensation program as an example of state laws resulting from federal legislation.

Keyserling rejects the argument that needed wage increases would create an inflationary push on the economy. He noted that price increases and attempted increases which have caused concern to the government did not stem from wage pressures. And if a full-scale war on poverty—beyond any now contemplated—would generate inflationary pressures, fiscal and monetary measures are available to meet this problem.

Despite military and international commitments, the report says, "we have abundant economic capabilities to accelerate the war against poverty very greatly without delay; the only question is whether we have the national morality or sense of justice to give higher priority to this war than to some far less important things which compete for economic resources."

Machinists Win Election At Big Charleston Plant

Charleston, W. Va.—The Machinists scored the third major AFL-CIO organizing victory in this area in two years by winning bargaining rights for 1,300 employes of the Union Carbide Corp. against a long-sustained anti-union campaign by management.

The vote in a National Labor Relations Board election was IAM 644, no union 617. The Plumbers got 8 votes in two of the three units on the ballot.

The victory was particularly significant, AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William Kircher said, because it sustains organizing momentum in a key area.

AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Jesse Gallagher noted that the IAM win at the firm's Institute plant followed a February 1965 victory by the same union at the corporation's South Charleston plant. Two years ago the Auto Workers won bargaining rights for 1,900 employes of the Food Machinery Corp. here.

The Machinists began organizing at the Institute plant nearly a year ago and encountered a barrage of hostile propaganda that never slackened, they reported.

Management posted large anti-union cartoons through the plant. Dial telephone messages were recorded by supervisors. Anti-union posters and leaflets came out frequently.

Other tactics, according to the union, included letters just before the election with special appeals to workers' wives at home; a campaign belittling proposed contract terms at South Charleston, followed after contract signing by the unilateral award of the same gains to Institute workers—an improved health and welfare program, an additional holiday and, six weeks before the election, an additional week of paid vacation.

The IAM credited the victory to the work of its in-plant organizing committee which withstood management pressures; officers and members of new Lodge 598 at the South Charleston plant, and the assistance of AFL-CIO Rep. A. Bruce Campbell, assigned to work with the IAM organizers.

Court Approves Nebraska Districts

Omaha, Neb. — A three-judge federal court approved a redistricting plan for Nebraska's one-house legislature after having turned down two previous reapportionment bills.

The court had thrown out both a 1962 constitutional amendment and a 1963 redistricting bill as violations of one man, one vote standards. It upheld the third attempt, passed on the final day of the 1965 session of the legislature, despite population differences between districts of up to 19 percent.

IBEW Adds 25,000 In 6-Month Period

The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers added 25,000 members in the last half of 1965, Pres. Gordon M. Freeman announced, adding "this is good news to us as we begin our diamond jubilee year."

The IBEW will be 75 on Nov. 28. It has 825,000 members and hopes, Freeman said, to add 75,000 more before the anniversary date.

Insurance Union Upheld On Metropolitan Units

to petition for a vote among another 250 agents.

Other major insurance firms followed the lead of Metropolitan in challenging the NLRB's single-district-office rule and the outcome of many other union organizing drives, where elections also have been won, pivots on the Metropolitan case.

After the Supreme Court ordered the case remanded to the board, Metropolitan filed a new motion asking the NLRB to vacate its previous orders and take testimony on changes in the firm's organizational structure. The union ther filed a cross-motion to deny the company's request.

Finding Affirmed

Last Oct. 14 Trial Examiner Harold X. Summers ruled that the changes made in the company's managerial structure did not affect the earlier finding that a single unit was appropriate.

The full board approved Summers' findings. Rejecting company arguments and reviewing the record, it said "we conclude that our earlier determinations were and are correct" and set forth its reasons in detail.

Applying principles laid down by the Supreme Court, it determined that "each of the company's individual district offices is a separate administrative entity . . . and therefore is inherently appropriate" for bargaining purposes.

The board noted, however, that a unit composed of two or more district offices may also be appropriate "if there is a reasonable degree of geographic coherence among the offices." There is little justification, it continued, for requiring that adjacent offices, organized by the same union, be in different bargaining units where a combination also would be appropriate.

"We are convinced," said the decision, "that the single district office is the basic appropriate unit for insurance agents, and we have consistently directed elections in that unit where it has been petitioned for. We therefore reaffirm our earlier finding" as to Woonsocket.

Dress Pact Wins Gains For 8,000

Philadelphia, Pa. — Wage and working condition improvements have been won by the Ladies' Garment Workers for 8,000 dress workers in a new three-year agreement with employers here.

Workers will also get improved welfare benefits financed by an additional 1 percent in employer contributions to the health and welfare fund.

Two schedules of raises were agreed to: 5 percent for piece workers as of Jan. 1, 1966, with another 3 percent after two years; 10 cents an hour immediately for time workers, with a further increase of 5 cents two years later; $5 a week now for cutters plus a later boost of $3 a week.

The agreement provides for temporary craft minimums ranging from $1.60 to $1.75 an hour; a cutters' minimum of $105 a week; a half-day holiday with pay on Election Day; and a method for upgrading new hires without experience.

The pact was reached after months of talks between the ILGWU's Philadelphia Dress Joint Board, two employer associations and four independent firms.

Graphic Arts Unions Push Merger Talks

Officers of the Printing Pressmen and the Lithographers & Photoengravers have appointed subcommittees and scheduled a series of meetings "to work on the specifics" of merger.

IPP Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade and LPIU Pres. Kenneth J. Brown, who head the subcommittees, said that meetings will be held Feb. 24-25, Apr. 5-7 and Apr. 28-29, with a meeting of all executive board members of both unions set for May 18-19 to report on progress toward unity.

Exploratory exchanges the unions began last July became formal talks in October and have continued since then.

"Because of our past experiences we have been meeting together," said DeAndrade. "Now, we want to act together so that we can best represent the interest of our members in dealing with present and anticipated future dramatic technological developments in the graphic arts."

"Merger," said Brown, "will have the most positive impact on our fundamental union functions in the areas of bargaining, organizing, servicing the needs of our members and effectively mastering the challenge to job security and skill requirements posed by the accelerating pace of technological developments."

Actors' Equity Moves To New Headquarters

New York — Actors' Equity, which for nine years maintained offices at 226 W. 47th Street, has moved to 165 W. 46th Street, where it occupies the 13th floor and part of the 14th floor of the 16-story building. The telephone number is unchanged—PLaza 7-7660.

Canadian Wage Gap Set as UAW Target

The Auto Workers will put "sharp emphasis" at their convention this year on salaries, pensions, shortened work time and complete closing of the wage gap between U.S. and Canadian workers, UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock declared at a Washington press conference.

The conference preceded a meeting of the union's General Motors Council on prospective bargaining issues in negotiations next year. Delegates voted unanimously to recommend these policies to the UAW convention in Long Beach, Calif., May 16-24:

- A wage fund large enough to achieve a uniform wage system in all plants, eliminating "completely" all wage disparities between GM's Canadian and American plants.
- Support for a pending bill to reinsure pension funds against plant shutdowns.
- Legislation providing non-cancellable auto insurance and an "assigned risk pool" for fire insurance policyholders in areas without coverage.

Woodcock reported that a new GM plant near Montreal will make cars for New England states. Soon the U.S. and Canada will have a "completely integrated system" entirely under the control of the auto manufacturers, he declared.

Canadian wages average $2.75 an hour against $3.15 for American auto workers. Some Canadian skilled trades rates are $1 below U.S. rates, said Woodcock, who heads the UAW's General Motors Dept.

Declaring he was "awed all over again" by GM's "tremendous" profits ($2.1 billion net after taxes in 1965), Woodcock said the corporation's annual receipts exceed those of any country except three —the U.S., the United Kingdom and Soviet Russia.

In 1965, he said, GM made $4 billion before taxes—$11.2 million a day, $467,000 an hour, $7,785 a minute or $1.30 a second in profits. He used the before-taxes figures, he said, because employe wage figures are always before taxes, before deductions.

It is clear, he said, that GM can afford to bring wages of its 25,000 Canadian UAW workers up to the U.S. average, to finish the job of eliminating U.S. wage inequities, and to improve job security provisions.

Woodcock expressed sharp criticism of the President's Council of Economic Advisers for failing to take any account of profits in setting its wage-price "guidelines." Noting that the council praised auto manufacturers for making what he called "token reductions" in car prices, he put the price of one such "reduction" at $1.43 for a model of GM's Cadillac.

Cogen, Clayman Fill JLC Posts

New York—Two main union officials were elected national officers of the Jewish Labor Committee at a meeting of the organization's executive board here.

Pres. Charles Cogen of the Teachers was named secretary and Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., was chosen second vice president.

Pres. Adolph Held expressed the JLC's "pride in the eminence and calibre" of the new officers.

Steelworkers Encounter Digest's 'Paper Curtain'

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Steelworkers have joined the growing list of unions that have smacked into the "paper curtain" Reader's Digest has thrown up to protect itself from the facts of life.

The union, like others, has learned "from first-hand experience that you can't" obtain a correction of a misstatement involving unions. The Steelworkers ran into the "paper curtain," Steel Labor said, when it tried to refute "unsubstantiated" statements first printed in the magazine U.S. News & World Report, under the name of its editor, David Lawrence, then reprinted by the Digest. Lawrence had written that under the 1965 basic steel contract, a steelworker would average $10,000 a year.

A Reader's Digest researcher communicated with the USWA Research Dept., which provided the actual figures. Compiled for 1963 by the American Iron & Steel Institute, they showed an annual income in basic steel averaging $6,517 prior to the 1965 settlement, and the union added: "Even when the wage provisions of the new contract were fully effective in 1968, and even assuming 2,000 hours of work a year, workers in basic steel would average less than $7,000 a year—$6,947. Additionally, only two-thirds of steel employes receive pay for as much as 2,000 hours annually."

But last December the Digest nevertheless reprinted Lawrence's article with its incorrect figures. A protest to the magazine wrung only a concession from the managing editor that Lawrence's figure "is quite different from the $7,000 you offered as an average yearly wage."

"While the Digest could not encourage an answer to Mr. Lawrence," Steel Labor went on, "they added, 'many thanks . . . for the offer and for your cooperation' on the research."

The union also sought a correction from U.S. News & World Report. "We received an answer that included arguments to back up its claims but no agreement to allow us to present our arguments on its pages," Steel Labor reported.

The Steel Labor article was accompanied by a cartoon depicting two workers at lunch with one complaining, "Boy, am I in hot water at home. My wife read in Reader's Digest that I make 10 Gs a year and she wants to know where the other three went to."

'Steward' System Planned:

IUE Parley Shapes Anti-Poverty Efforts

A program to develop "community stewards" to represent the poor, the unemployed, the uneducated and the victims of discrimination in the same way shop stewards act for their fellow union members on the job was launched by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at a three-day Conference on Civil Rights for All People Through Community Action.

Speakers stressed the close tie between civil rights and the anti-poverty program and IUE Pres. Paul Jennings told the conference dinner:

"We cannot just rest with having a good position on civil rights and working in the plants—we have to work in the community as well."

He reiterated that the active union leader cannot be content with representing his members in the shop, but must "act as a steward for the community."

Manpower Administrator Stanley Ruttenberg said the Labor Dept., under the Manpower & Development Act, is now trying to reach the "hard core" unemployed who need basic education, must be steered to job training possibilities and have to learn how to look for jobs.

Miles Stanley, assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany on the anti-poverty program, called on organized labor to step up its community activities in the fight to wipe out need. It is at the community level, he emphasized, that "this war must be fought and where it will be won," and he warned strongly against a let-down following labor's successful fight for legislation.

"All our work will be forfeited," Stanley declared, "if we do not rise to the challenge of seeing that the laws we helped bring into being are implemented properly."

Unless organized labor acts "to make its greatest contribution" in the follow-up, he warned, the very people who opposed the bills while the AFL-CIO and its affiliates were working to get them through Congress—"the chambers of commerce, the boards of trade"—will take over.

"The labor movement can make a take-over by special interests extremely difficult without becoming overly aggressive itself," he said. "But my experience indicates the labor movement has not been aggressive enough."

AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Donald Slaiman, who presided at a forum on How Can Labor Fight Discrimination and Poverty in the Community, pointed to the "very direct" relationship of poverty and civil rights.

In spite of gains on the legislative front, he said the income gap between minority groups and the total population has started to widen after years of narrowing. This is due at least in part, he want on, to educational deficiencies of minority groups and their consequent lack of qualifications to fill increasingly complex jobs in a world of steadily advancing technology.

Opening Doors

"Opening the door doesn't mean much," he said, "if a young Negro man or women doesn't know where the door is or is distrustful of going through it because of his past experience."

To implement properly the laws that offer a future of hope to the poverty-stricken, Slaiman said, labor must not "leave the field to businessmen, lawyers, politicians or welfare workers," but must learn how to make the programs work in city slums and "rural Appalachias."

"And it's going to be pretty rough to live up to what we have to do," he added.

Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington office of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, declared there would be no fair employment practices laws were it not for organized labor.

"If you see people going to the polls without having to pay a poll tax," he added, "you'll see a monument to AFL-CIO-NAACP cooperation."

LBJ Orders Rights Unit Shifted to Justice Dept.

Pres. Johnson by executive order has transferred the Community Relations Service—key agency in enforcing racial non-discrimination in programs assisted with federal funds—from the Dept. of Commerce to the Dept. of Justice.

The transfer, made under the President's broad powers to reorganize federal agencies, promptly was assailed by southern spokesmen and by New York's liberal Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R), the latter of whom filed a motion of disapproval.

The transfer will go into effect unless it is formally disapproved by one of the houses of Congress within 60 days.

Johnson Summary

The President gave the following summary of his reasons for the transfer:

- Merchants and business organizations have made great progress under the public accommodations section of the 1964 Civil Rights Act and one reason for locating the service in the Dept. of Commerce originally is therefore no longer "compelling."
- The Dept. of Justice has broad experience in the mediation and negotiation of local civil rights disputes and its staff and experience should be utilized.
- The Dept. of Justice already has responsibility for enforcing the act in cases where mediation and negotiation fail, and "effective and efficient" administration will be improved by concentrating both functions in a single department.

A bloc of liberal senators led by Javits expressed fear that the Community Relations Service would be diluted by its placement in Justice instead of Commerce.

Southerners, on the other hand, indicated that mediation and negotiation might be weakened if local community officials had to deal with an arm of government that in the long run also must handle criminal prosecution for alleged violations.

Party leaders indicated, however, their support of the President's reorganization plan, and potential opposition was tempered by the fact that the President had already named Roger W. Wilkins, a Negro with civil rights organization connections, as director of the service. Wilkins will function as an assistant attorney general with direct access to Atty. Gen. Nicholas deB Katzenbach.

ORIGINAL GEMINI V CAPSULE aroused keen interest among the thousands of Brazilians who inspected it. Among them was Minister of Foreign Affairs Juracy Magalhaes, a former ambassador to the U.S., who was given a special tour (above) by exhibit officials. The missile display was housed in its own tent (below), adjacent to the exhibition hall, while it was in Rio.

QUESTIONS OF WORKERS who visited the exhibit were answered by Sylvia (right), a member of the Textile Workers Union of America from Providence, R.I., and Silva, a Rubber Worker from Bristol, R.I., both of whom are fluent in Portuguese. Some 40,000 visitors were attracted during the opening week in Rio, with a later showing scheduled for Sao Paulo. Each Brazilian union with headquarters in Rio was given a special "night" featured by the reading of a message from Pres. Johnson. The program included a fashion show with models displaying women's finery made by union members under contracts with employers in New York and California style centers. It also showed a day in the life of a New York City member of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Labor and the GI Bill

THE AFL-CIO'S ROLE as the people's lobby received added impetus and recognition with congressional passage of a permanent GI Bill of Rights including educational and housing benefits for all persons serving at least six months in the armed forces.

When Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) first opened his campaign for this "cold war" GI Bill of Rights, his initial sole support came from the labor movement. The AFL-CIO testified before congressional committees and rallied support for the measure.

The argument was two-fold: men who enlisted or were drafted into the armed services deserved as a matter of simple equity the benefits that had been granted earlier to World War II and Korean War veterans. In addition, granting educational benefits to veterans would help provide a better education to thousands who could not otherwise afford the cost.

Here as in other programs proposed and supported by the AFL-CIO, there is no union benefit in terms of membership or dues; there is only labor's dedication to the national interest, to the welfare of all Americans to achieve a better life.

A One-Way Street

THE U.S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, which says it has "deep reservations about the appropriateness of guideposts as tools for control," is nevertheless full of praise for the Council of Economic Advisers for holding its wage guidepost to 3.2 percent.

The Chamber's compliments came in the form of a letter to CEA Chairman Gardner Ackley from Virgil Day, head of the Chamber's Labor Relations Committee and vice president of General Electric.

Citing the business group's philosophical reservations and opposition to government-style controls, Day calmly proceeds to say, "we think the Administration deserves the thanks of every thoughtful citizen for wisdom and courage in holding the line in the face of what must have been heavy and harassing pressures to move the guidepost to a higher figure. . . ."

Still clinging to the "reservation" about the guideposts in general, Day urges Ackley to adopt a "longer-term trend" as the basis for the guidepost concept and to beware of "inflationary biases" in developing the guidepost for 1967. Day has made the case, if any further evidence were needed, that the wage policy of the Council of Economic Advisers is a one-way street designed to repress wages.

Wages and Poverty

ABOUT 60 PERCENT of all the poverty in the U.S. is quite directly attributable to full-time unemployment, part-time unemployment, inadequate wages when employed or combinations of these three factors. . . .

The present federal minimum wage standard is $1.25 an hour. Assuming 50 weeks of work per year and a 40-hour week, the annual income of a worker at $1.25 an hour falls 20.1 percent below that needed to lift a multiple-person family above the poverty-income ceiling set by the government. . . .

Assuming further a secondary breadwinner in the family who earns one-third as much as the principal breadwinner, the annual income of the family is only 6.5 percent above the poverty income ceiling, and 44.4 percent below a "modest but adequate" standard of living as derived from studies of the U.S. Dept. of Labor.

Need for Senate Rules Reform Underscored by 14(b) Failure

SOMETHING IS WRONG in the United States Senate when a willful minority can obstruct legislation clearly supported by a majority.

The Senate was powerless to perform its basic legislative function on the motion to repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act. This bill has been requested by the President of the United States. It has passed the House of Representatives. It has been recommended by the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. In Committee the vote was 12 to 3 for repeal. A majority of the Senators have indicated support for the bill.

Despite all this, the repeal bill was never even allowed to come before the Senate for debate. No vote to repeal 14(b) was ever taken. When the repeal bill was scheduled to be debated, majority rule broke down. The minority was allowed to take command.

This unhealthy and undemocratic state of affairs grows directly from Senate rules of procedure, rules which give any Senator the unlimited right to talk, talk, talk on any subject, or any whim at any time as long as he likes.

The Senate rules are rigged so that a Senator's talk can be checked only by a two-thirds vote. In this way, one-third of the Senate can seize control at any time and, by endless speeches, stall all other Senate business. In this case, the filibuster was used as a form of legislative blackmail.

By obstructing all Senate business, including measures vital to the war in Vietnam, a low-wage, anti-labor minority headed by Sen. Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois—the Republican floor leader—blackmailed the Senate majority into withdrawing the motion.

This was not labor's failure; this was a Senate failure. But it was a defeat for labor and more importantly, it was a defeat for the democratic process. Union members will find it hard to accept rationalizations with which Senators defend their right to stall and obstruct legislation.

We believe that Senators should have every right to a full and complete debate on every issue. But Senate rules should contain enough discipline to require Senators to talk about the issue before the Senate and to guarantee majority control.

As IAM President Roy Siemiller wrote in his open letter to Senator Dirksen, the Senate should practice the kind of democracy it has prescribed for labor unions. The citizens of the United States are entitled to the same fair play that the Congress has guaranteed to union members Modernization of Senate rules has become a national necessity.

A Tail That Wags the Dog

Role of Labor Praised

The extent to which union members have become financial mainstays of community charity drives is reflected in the election of Joseph A. Beirne, an AFL-CIO vice president, as national head of the United Community Funds and Councils of America. The organization coordinates the campaigns through which $600 million a year is raised to support voluntary hospitals and other private welfare agencies.

Traditionally the bulk of the money for these agencies has come from people of wealth, the pillars of the social and corporate community. But the Lord and Lady Bountiful motif has yielded in recent years to a much more democratic concept of fund-raising responsibility. One-third of all the funds now comes from workers in unionized industries. This shift has culminated in Mr. Beirne's selection to succeed Ralph Lazarus, president of Federated Stores. It is symbolic of a cooperative trend that is easy to forget when labor-management conflicts deprive the community of essential services.

Story of Nov. 9 Power Blackout Must Include Tribute to Radio

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

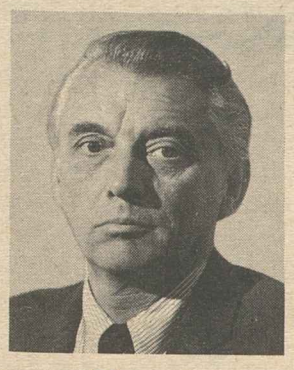
THE TIME HAS COME to pay a special tribute, render a respectful salute to that magic little box called the radio.

It has come to be looked upon as a sort of country cousin in the family of communications, old-fashioned, even quaint, and with nowhere near the glamor in all colors of the rainbow of that city slicker, the television set. Yet this small gadget in recent urban and other crises has put the TV receiver to shame.



Morgan

I realize that comparisons, even with video, are invidious on the whole but in this instance some special cases—as well as cases too long taken for granted—justify them, and if the examples make the AM-FM transistor feel less envious of and less inferior to the idolized home screen, so much the better.

The most dramatic case in point, of course, is last November's massive power blackout which deprived some 30 million people of electricity for as much as 12 hours or more. In such a long, dark and eerie night what the public needed most was information dispelling fears that the end of the world had come, via a Soviet missile or some other conveyer of cataclysm. Newspapers were unavailable or almost uselessly delayed. There could be no such thing as an "extra."

Television networks, all of which have their nerve centers based in New York City, the megalopolis hardest hit, were temporarily crippled but even when they were able, with some alacrity, to shift their controls to Los Angeles and other cities it was of little value within the stricken area, where television stations were all but paralyzed.

Radio networks and radio stations, however, were able to improvise with auxiliary power more easily and the hero of the evening emerged as none other than that much-maligned portable package of sound, the transistor. Those home sets that had to be plugged into the wall socket were, naturally, like their TV counterparts, dead as the proverbial doornail.

B.B., Before the Blackout, that is, there were undoubtedly secret moves afoot to ban the transistor as a rock'n'roll booby-trap, an ear-splitting, privacy-invading scourge to western civilization. But that fateful night of Nov. 9, it came through with clear, cool voice and flying colors. Said a mountainous special report on the emergency to the Federal Communications Commission:

"The availability in the hands of the public of transistor radios able to receive information concerning the nature of the emergency may well have prevented a catastrophe of major proportions," and it went on to urge "a campaign to persuade the public that a transistor radio is a necessity in every home."

Then came New York's transit strike. In full voice and helpful print the news media concentrated on the crisis but it was the radio which seemed most flexible—relaying traffic conditions to commuters and drivers in stalled cars who might hopefully thereby find a hole in the line or a route for an end run around the jams of steel and chrome in the main streets. Walkie-talkies and other short-wave hook-ups infinitely aided the work of police and firemen—as indeed they do in every city and town of the land every day of the year, crisis-filled or "normal."

THE DEFENSE DEPT. depends heavily on radio for critical military communications, whether in messages from a helicopter spotter to a gun crew in the jungles of Viet Nam or a signal from the Pentagon to a flagship of the fleet. The Early Bird Satellite is an exciting forerunner of instant pictures of the world's news, but sound for radio will be bounced off the same orbiting backboard and of course "instant radio" from most corners of the globe has been a practical actuality for more than a generation.

Any salute to radio must, unfortunately, be counterbalanced by grave indictment of the quality of "normal" broadcast programming. Long has radio waved, AM, FM and shortwave; networks and individual stations have demonstrated how they can rise to vital public service in a crisis. But when are they going to put something in their everyday fare besides little synthetic capsules of news, to be swallowed between the commercials for cathartics and liver pills, and digested during interminable wails of the latest imitator of the Beatles?

There are, according to the FCC, 5,759 AM and/or FM radio stations operating in the 50 states of the republic. A few of them furnish programs of excellent quality. But the bulk of them produce cheap stuff with vulgar sound effects—a kind of sonic supermarket with the overtones, as Newton Minow put it, of an oriental bazaar. There are more than 215 million radio sets in use in the United States today —20 million more radios than people.

Interestingly enough, along with the patent medicine and deodorant people, extremist groups do not discount this audience. Radical right organizations sponsor some 7,000 radio programs a week to which will soon be added a special weekly quarter-hour from the John Birch Society. Just because we've let TV become the "boob tube" do we have to settle for radio as merely a "squawk box?"

3.2% Wage Guidepost Scored As 'Shortchanging' Workers

THE PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL of Economic Advisers is "gimmicking-up" its guideline figure in an attempt to put a 3.2 percent lid on wage gains, the AFL-CIO's top economist has charged.

Nathaniel Goldfinger, director of the federation's Dept. of Research, said the council has ignored climbing living costs, rising efficiency and mounting profits in reaching its figure. The formula the council itself established "would have required a guidepost of 3.6 percent," he said.

"This is an attempt to shortchange workers," Goldfinger asserted as he was questioned by reporters on the nationwide radio interview program, Labor News Conference.

The guidelines theory is meant to maintain stability of wages, prices and profits, but "it hasn't worked," he said. "There are no guidelines on profits," he pointed out, and they have been "soaring—going through the roof—about 64 percent from 1961 to 1965," more than doubling the growth of wages and salaries.

Nor have the price guidelines been applied, as the council intended, to bring about price cuts in highly productive, highly profitable industries, to help offset necessary price increases in other industries, Goldfinger noted. That failure contributes substantially to the steady incline of living costs, he added.

Goldfinger said there is no "great upward pressure from wages on the price level;" that, in fact, "the cost of labor in each item of industrial production dropped by about eight-tenths of 1 percent" last year.

He added that if a national emergency develops over Viet Nam and "the President thinks there is need for a stabilization program," then "all kinds of income should be restrained—profits and dividends, executive salaries, as well as workers' income."

Reporters questioning him on the AFL-CIO interview, aired weekly over the Mutual Radio Network, were Hobart Rowen, business and financial editor of the Washington Post, and Alan Adams, Washington correspondent for Business Week magazine.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ALBANY REPORTS, telling how the legislature felt when compelled to exempt New York City's subway and bus workers from the punitive clauses of the state's Condon-Wadlin Act, force renewed speculation about Gov. Rockefeller's refusal to get rid of the ill-conceived and unworkable law last year.

Condon-Wadlin was passed during the hysteria of the 1950s. It forbade strikes by public employes and imposed severe penalties for violations—immediate dismissal and economic sanctions, in case strikers were later rehired, forbidding any wage or salary increases for three years.

Existence of the law allowed strike leaders to be sent to jail—and some of them have been sent to jail. There were 19 leaders of a State, County & Municipal Employes local imprisoned last year when 7,500 city Welfare Dept. workers struck for four weeks. Under a different law the late Michael Quill and several other Transport Workers leaders were jailed during the 12-day transit strike.

But none of this really works. Part of the transit settlement was a provision that Quill and his colleagues be sprung from the lockup. Fines threatened against the union were never, in fact, actually levied.

The subway and bus workers got wage increases, and when a court held that this was illegal under the Condon-Wadlin Act the legislature hastily passed its ex post facto bill, backed by both Rockefeller and New York City's Mayor John V. Lindsay, saying, "Excuse it, please, but we don't think we'd better allow the law to be applied in this particular situation."

The SCME strike of Welfare Dept. workers was ended by an agreement that the 19 jailed leaders—13 men and six women—would be released, and that no further Condon-Wadlin penalties would be applied against them or the union pending a final court decision on the constitutionality of the law, which the union challenged. That case is still in the courts.

The wage-and-working condition disputes—the basic issues that led to the walkout—were put up to a fact-finding panel with authority to recommend settlement terms.

Teachers have struck the New York school system—and there were no Condon-Wadlin Act penalties imposed.

Administrators eventually run up against the hard fact that you can't run buses and subway trains with injunctions, that city welfare work can't be done by injunctions, that teachers are required to make a school system work.

IT IS ENTIRELY possible to sympathize with members of the New York legislature who called the hasty transit-worker exemption a "bad bill," possibly an unconstitutional act in that it singled out a special group for special treatment, a "stupid method of bailing out of a situation caused by an unenforceable law."

The legislature almost certainly will now pass a second special law making the penalty clauses inapplicable to the Welfare Dept. workers who struck last year. "The two cases are absolutely the same," remarked Democratic Sen. Joseph Zaretski. Social workers in a city "are doing work just as necessary as the guard on a subway train or the porter in a station."

Several other legislators observed that, for practical purposes, the "monstrous" Condon-Wadlin Act was dead and that Rockefeller simply recognized that fact when he asked the special legislation for transit workers.

The point is that the governor had a chance to improve the situation materially when the legislature last year sent him a bill modifying Condon-Wadlin Act penalties, substituting milder sanctions against striking public employes and, for the first time, authorizing collective bargaining for them.

Rockefeller vetoed the bill with a comment that it would "undermine the deterrent to strikes" by public workers and "impair vital functions of state and local governments." What does he think just happened in Albany?

THE 3.2 PERCENT wage guidepost proposed by the President's Council of Economic Advisers represents a discriminatory lid on wages, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger (center) told Hobart Rowen (left) of the Washington Post and Alan Adams of Business Week magazine on the weekly AFL-CIO public service radio interview, Labor News Conference.

How to Buy:

Unexpected Big Medical Costs May Lead to Greater Problems

By Sidney Margolius

A MAJOR CAUSE of family financial predicaments is unexpected big medical bills. Such unanticipated expenses often are the beginning of deeper difficulties when families resort to loan companies to consolidate bills without realizing the cost of this type of credit, reports Meredith Jones, home economist at the Cincinnati Family Service agency.

A Tennessee credit bureau estimates that large doctor and hospital bills cause about one-third of family financial troubles. An American Bar Association committee found that medical bills are those most often turned over to professional bill collectors.

Medical expenses cannot be reduced as easily as food or recreation or even housing costs. Most of the really effective solutions to rising medical costs can only be accomplished on a community-wide basis, such as more efficient distribution of facilities to avoid duplication, and greater use of the comprehensive care provided by group health plans.

These plans, such as Community Health in Detroit, Kaiser in California, Health Insurance Plan of New York, Group Health of Washington, and Group Health of Puget Sound have their own medical centers and staffs. HIP now is seeking to have its own hospitals, as Kaiser has. Some labor unions also have their own group care centers.

Especially susceptible to the dangers of unexpected medical bills are families with several children, families which have committed all surplus income to installment payments, and retired couples. The retirees, or at least those who have reached 65, will have the protection of Medicare beginning July 1, if they also sign up for the optional Plan B, which will pay for doctor bills.

For younger families, the only possible way to budget for unexpected hospital and medical expenses is through insurance. Many families have only inadequate insurance, usually in an effort to keep down the expense.

The real need is for as comprehensive a policy as you can afford. A policy with a large "deductible" (that part of the expense you pay), for example, the first $500 of an illness, will not protect against the tonsillectomies, broken arms, etc., which comprise most of a young family's medical bills.

Least expensive way to buy health insurance is on a group basis. It usually costs 20 to 40 percent less for the same benefits.

While some policies are more suitable and cost less for the benefits provided, there is no really cheap hospital or medical insurance. Families in the $5,000-$10,000 bracket must expect now to allot 6 to 8 percent for health insurance and other health expenses.

MOST WORKERS have at least Blue Cross insurance for hospital bills. If you do not have access to a group plan for doctor bills too, find out if Blue Shield in your area accepts individual enrollments. While there are gaps in the coverage provided by various Blue Shield plans, in general it is less expensive and safer than individual policies offered by commercial companies, especially by mail.

A major problem in buying individual policies from commercial companies is that they may refuse to accept you if your health history or physical exam indicate you would be a poor risk, or only accept you subject to a waiver of coverage for specified conditions, a Social Security Administration survey points out.

Another problem is that your insurance may be cancelled or not renewed. This sometimes happens after you have been subject to an illness involving a series of claims for payments. The SSA survey reports that nine states now do not permit cancellation within the term of the policy, and several require that it can be cancelled or not renewed for at least a year or two.

Whether or not your own state law provides such safeguards, it is essential that you insist on them; that you refuse to buy any policy that makes exclusions or "eliminations" for the very illnesses for which you may need care, or that can be cancelled or "non-renewed" at the insuror's choice.

Traffic Deaths Reach Record High in 1965

TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS in 1965 killed 49,000 persons, an all-time high, but the traffic death rate—fatalities per 100 million miles of travel—declined for the first time since 1961, the National Safety Council reported.

The death toll was a 3 percent increase from the previous record of 47,000 who died in 1964. In addition, an estimated 1.8 million persons suffered disabling injuries.

The economic loss to the nation from traffic accidents last year totaled $8.5 billion, of which $3 billion came from damaged and destroyed property. The remainder resulted from wage loss, medical expenses and overhead cost of insurance.

Travel in 1965 reached about 880 billion vehicle-miles, 5 percent over the 1964 figure. As a result, the death rate for 1965 was 5.6 fatalities for every 100 million miles of travel, down slightly from the 1964 rate of 5.7. The all-time low was 5.2 in 1961, while just 20 years ago—for 1945—the rate was 11.3.

The death toll for December alone was 4,940, up 10 percent from 4,490 in 1964 and the worst single month on record.

"We are, of course, somewhat encouraged by the fact that the death rate has gone down after three straight years of increases," said Howard Pyle, council president. "But we must also reverse the steady increases in the numbers of men, women and children who are killed every year in traffic accidents.

"As we recently stated before the Senate Subcommittee on Executive Reorganization, headed by Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D-Conn.), however, there is no such thing as an easy, cheap, quick answer to our traffic problems."

In the council's testimony before the Ribicoff subcommittee, Pyle described a comprehensive 18-point program he said could cut the nation's traffic deaths in half.

"The 18 points in our suggested program place heavy demands on all concerned," said Pyle. "Eleven of the points, for instance, spell out some activities that must be carried out by the federal government, such as more fully utilizing existing legislation to spur the engineering and design of safer vehicles and increasing financial incentives for intensified programs of traffic-safety research.

"Other points call for stepped-up activity by state and local governments, and two recommend that the automobile industry itself accelerate the building of safer vehicles. The National Safety Council believes, for example, that all cars should have as standard equipment such safety devices as collapsible steering wheels, attachment points for shoulder harnesses, dual brake systems, and tires that are safe at maximum loads and legal speeds."

Marx Brothers Magic Converts New Generation of Enthusiasts

By Jane Goodsell

WHEN WE WALKED into the theater, I realized with belated insight that we shouldn't have brought the children. It was one thing to tell them how screamingly funny the Marx Brothers were, but it was quite another to let them see for themselves. It wasn't the first time we'd made the same mistake of trying to recreate our own bygone enthusiasms for our children, and it always turned out to be a hapless venture.

The delights of bygone days rarely retain their luster in the here and now and, by this time, we should have realized that sentimental journeys into the past were doomed to disappointment. But experience had washed over us in vain, and here we were, taking the children to see a double bill of "A Day at the Races" and "A Night at the Opera."

I cringed when I remembered the many times the children had heard Jim and me reminiscing about old Marx Brothers movies. We always ended up asking rhetorically, "why don't they make movies as funny as that nowadays?" In short, we thought the Marx Brothers were the greatest, and we'd said so in no uncertain terms.

Now, as we edged our way to seats in the darkened theater, I knew that we were about to be proved wrong. The Marx Brothers weren't—and probably never were—as funny as they used to be. Had we come by ourselves, we might have whipped up some faint enthusiasm for old times' sake. But why had we brought our daughters?

I WAS SO engrossed in introspection that I didn't pay much attention to the movie. We came in during a scene in which Groucho is masquerading as the noted surgeon, Dr. Quackenbush, and Harpo and Chico are his orderlies. Mrs. Rittenhouse, the grand dame, is seated in the examining chair and Groucho is taking her pulse. "My good woman," he murmurs, "you have mice."

My husband nudged me and guffawed. I smiled wanly. I had made up my mind to be just as unamused as my daughters. Let them patronize me for my youthful naivete but now, at least, I could be just as superior and sophisticated as they could. I intended to be the first to suggest that we leave.

I was wondering how soon I should do so when I heard a strangled gasp from the row behind me where the children were sitting. I looked around, and there was Molly—laughing so hard she was gasping for breath. Katie and Ann, on either side of her, were clutching their stomachs and howling.

And suddenly, miraculously, the Marx Brothers were as wild and wonderful as ever.

Consumer 'Truth' Laws Need Stressed

Shopping Safeguards Held Vital To Preserve Bargaining Gains

Wage increases won at the bargaining table are being lost at the shopping center in the absence of laws to protect consumers.

An article in the February issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist documents this warning with examples of everyday sales and lending practices which reduce the buying power of every family's earnings.

The AFL-CIO's magazine discusses the two big consumer bills on the unfinished business agenda of Congress—truth in packaging and truth in lending legislation.

It also focuses attention on lesser-known consumer legislative issues—including the need to close loopholes in the Food, Drug & Cosmetics Act, extend federal meat inspection, bring standards and safety to the sale of automobile tires, and explore the ramifications of trading stamps given away with purchases.

Most of the pending consumer bills have been urged by Pres. Johnson. But the article points out that "strong consumer and labor support will be needed if consumer legislation is to move from committee rooms into actual enactment."

Main Points

Anne Draper of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research prepared the article, which makes these main points:

The purpose of the truth-in-packaging bill sponsored by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D.-Mich.) is to require intelligible packaging so that the consumer will be able to compare brands on the basis of price and contents—without using a slide rule or a magnifying glass.

It would require the net weight of the contents to be plainly printed on the front panel. It would bar such meaningless descriptions as "jumbo half-quart" as a substitute for one pint. It would prohibit manufacturers' "cents off" promotion when there is no assurance that the cents off are actually passed on to consumers.

Weight Standards

It would also authorize government agencies to set standards for reasonable weights or quantities in which packaged products can be sold. Today, for example, a busy shopper may be faced with a choice between a 20-ounce package for 35 cents or a competing brand's 24.5 ounces for 40 cents.

Is It 300 Sheets— Or Only 300 Pages?

Your youngster needs a package of loose leaf filler paper for his school notebook.

Would he notice the distinction between a package marked 300 sheets and one marked 300 pages? Would you?

The manufacturer who counts each sheet as two pages (front and back) profits by the confusion. His "300 pages" is really 150 sheets of paper. But there is no law which prevents him from trying to mislead the buyer.

In another area of consumer discontent, the Hart bill would permit establishment of meanings for such descriptive terms as "regular," "large" or "king-sized." It would authorize definitions of "serving" so that the claim "serves four" would have some relation to reality.

The bill would also prohibit "slack-filled" packages—where the contents do not fill the container thus presenting a deceptive impression of the amount to the buyer.

Industry spokesmen have claimed that this is often inevitable with the use of high-speed packaging machinery. The Federationist article counters with the question:

Candy Illusion

"But how does this explain the four-inch candy bar packed in a six-inch tray—giving the illusion of six inches of candy?"

To illustrate the loss to consumers through confusing or misleading packaging, the Federationist cites an experiment conducted at Eastern Michigan University.

Thirty-three young, married women were instructed to select the most economical package—the largest quantity for the price—for each of 20 products at a selected supermarket.

The shoppers made mistakes on an average of nearly half the purchases. And their mistakes cost them more than 9 cents extra on each dollar spent—the equivalent of a 9 percent pay cut.

If consumers are handicapped in shopping for groceries, they make even more costly mistakes when it comes to securing a loan at the lowest cost or getting the best deal when buying goods on the installment plan.

Very often, in fact, they never know how much they are being charged for credit.

Tricky 'Discounts'

For example: discount rate of 7 percent for one year is a true interest rate of about 13.9 percent, while a $7 per $100 add-on rate is about 12.9 percent in true interest.

But most often, there is no simple way to judge a sales offer. For example, an advertisement for a used car might read: "Only $1,644 . . . $97 down . . . $11 a week."

The heart of the truth-in-lending bill of Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D.-Ill.) is the requirement that the borrower be told both the dollars and cents cost and the true annual interest rate of a loan or credit purchase.

Prominent disclosure of interest costs in terms that can be compared with each other would do a great deal to bring down the cost of borrowing by encouraging credit-shopping, the article notes.

It cites a University of California study of families using installment credit to buy automobiles.

Four-fifths of them did not check any credit source other than their car dealers. They paid an average of 22.9 percent in true interest charges. The one-fifth that did check other lenders came out with a relatively low 12 percent rate.

Over two-thirds of the families said they did not know how much they were paying for credit in terms of annual interest and of those who thought they did know, most were under the impression they were paying "5 or 6 percent."

If each family had used the best available credit source, the average saving on new cars would have been $148 and on used cars $74!

Here is an example of how the Douglas bill would help a car buyer decide between paying off $1,500 at the rate of $53.40 a month for 36 months or $60 a month for 30 months.

Charges Stated

Under the Douglas bill, the first lender would have to state that the payments include a finance charge of $422.40 at an annual interest rate of 18.3 percent. The second lender would have to state that his plan represented a finance charge of $300 at an annual interest rate of 15.5 percent.

Thanks to the federal meat inspection law, about 85 percent of all meat and 65 percent of processed meat products are federally inspected. But inspection is not required of meat and meat products which do not cross state lines. Only six states have adequate state inspection laws, and 19 states have none at all.

Rep. Neal Smith (D.-Ia.) has introduced a bill to extend federal meat inspection to virtually all meat and meat products.

Cosmetics can now be put on the market before being tested for safety—making the consumer a guinea pig for new products. Only after injuries occur, and the government hears about them, can action be taken to get unsafe products off the market. And persons with allergies often are unaware of the risk they take in using certain cosmetics, because no list of ingredients is required.

Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (D.-Mo.) is sponsor of a bill which would correct this.

A bill to established federal safety standards for new tires and a grading system for tires has been introduced by Senate Commerce Committee Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D.-Wash.) after hearings sponsored by Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D.-Wis.).

Tire Confusion

To the consumer and to most tire dealers, the nomenclature of tires is a confusing jumble of meaningless adjectives.

There is no fixed meaning for terms such as "premium," "first-line," and "second-line." One manufacturer's "second-line" may be equivalent to another's "premium" or a third firm's "de luxe."

Several congressional committees have expressed interest in investigating the effect of trading stamps on prices—to determine if the consumer actually benefits or whether the added cost boosts prices beyond the value of any "gifts" received by stamp savers.

CHANGE FROM LEFT TO RIGHT was praised by housewives, who found the smaller, compact package holding the same amount as the large container took up a lot less space on the pantry shelf.

WHAT'S IN THE PACKAGE would be clearly printed on the label if the truth-in-packaging bill sponsored by Sen. Philip Hart (D-Mich.), who does his own checking, is enacted by Congress.

EVEN AN EXPERT like Mrs. Esther Peterson, special assistant to Pres. Johnson for consumer affairs, may be mystified by the incredible variety of weights and sizes that "things" come in.

Canada Labor Sees Urgent Need For Economic Growth Policies

Ottawa, Ont.—Canadian workers, like their brothers in the United States, want a bigger share of the profits they're helping their employers pile up and class the danger of inflation as secondary to the peril of curbs on purchasing power.

The Canadian Labor Congress, at a face-to-face meeting with Prime Minister Lester Pearson and his cabinet, declared that maintenance of the economic improvement recorded last year depends on preventing demand, and especially consumer demand, from dropping too far behind productive capacity.

The government recently asked organized labor to join a drive against alleged inflation by exercising restraint in collective bargaining. The CLC leadership told Pearson it feared his administration might act in the absence of a "real inflationary threat" and thus "cut our economic advance in midstride and cause a reversal of the downward trend in unemployment."

"We cannot find evidence to support the view that Canada has entered, or is on the point of entering, an inflational period requiring broad restraints in monetary, fiscal, wage and other policies," the CLC said flatly.

The union delegation in a 15,-650-word statement pointed out that the times are so "good" there is an obvious ability on the part of employers to pay wages higher than has been the case in recent years."

"Inevitably, wage and salary earners will seek to share in the good times," it continued. "Where they are organized into trade unions they will just as inevitably do so through the process of collective bargaining and, if necessary, engage in the entirely legal process of strike action after other methods have failed to achieve a satisfactory settlement."

It noted that the bargaining process, which includes the right to strike or lock out, is one of the methods used to attain a "redistribution of the wealth which is produced" in a market economy such as Canada's.

"If corporations are to have virtually unlimited freedom in the pursuit of profits," the statement added, "workers must be free in turn through their trade union and otherwise to obtain for themselves a fair share of the product of their labor."

The CLC expressed concern at threats to national unity posed by the demands of different provinces for regional and local autonomy in areas such as off-shore mineral rights, the right of opting out of federal social security programs and the right to curtail manpower services. The danger, the CLC said, lies in a weakening of the federal government to the point where it would be unable to plan for the nation as a whole.

"We cannot conceive of full employment being established in Canada except through federal initiative," the labor spokesmen declared. "We cannot see our relations with other countries maintained except through the federal government. We do not see how our less well-to-do provinces can be assisted without a redistribution of the wealth which is produced in Canada irrespective of the province within which it is produced."

The CLC also called for increased federal government efforts to stimulate the economy so the growing number of new workers entering the labor market can find jobs.

It urged Pearson and his Liberal government to introduce legislation to protect workers adversely affected by the sudden introduction of technological changes, and backed proposals making it obligatory upon employers to defer such changes until negotiations with the unions.

In international affairs the CLC asked the government to support a four point program in Viet Nam:

- "Unconditional discussions or negotiations, open to all parties to the conflict, to bring about an immediate cease-fire.
- "Implementation of the Geneva Accords of 1954 and 1962.
- "Self-determination and independence for the people of Viet Nam, as well as for all the people of Southeast Asia, free from outside interference.
- "A massive aid program to assist the people concerned in their economic development and rehabilitation."

Salary Scales Higher For Union Teachers

at $6,500 by the U.S. Office of Education.

In school districts with enrollments of 25,000 or more, the union teacher averages $791 a year more than the non-union, according to the study.

The survey was based on responses to a questionnaire from 489 school superintendents in districts employing 509,947 teachers and was undertaken by Pete Schnaufer and Don Burton, AFT researchers.

Despite the differential, the union said in making public the results of the study, there is still "dire need" of higher salaries and the removal of inequities. The AFT pointed to widely varying salaries among the states for teachers with the same qualifications and added:

"A nation that pays its teachers one and a half to two times as much in one state as it does to teach in another is creating a class system divided not by birth or wealth but by access to knowledge."

The AFT researchers compared their findings on teacher salaries with Labor Dept. reports showing averages of $14,429 paid attorneys in private industry; $11,573 for engineers; $11,023 for chemists and $8,672 for accountants.

"The flight from bad school to good school, from poor state to rich state, often does not pause for long even at the better salary; it carries the teacher right into a better-paying occupation," the report said.

Both the union-calculated average salary in larger districts and the USOE overall average, the AFT declared, "are just a few dollars over the 'modest but adequate' standard of living seen by the Bureau of Labor Statistics as the minimum needed by an urban worker to raise a family of four."

"Regrettably," it concluded, "the teacher is still very much underpaid."

In Message to Congress:

New Farm Program Offered by Johnson

Pres. Johnson in a special message to Congress charted a radically changed agricultural program for the country, including a return to the "ever-normal granary" concept for domestic needs and a revised foreign-food aid program aimed at promoting greater farm production abroad.

The message, plowing new ground in formulating a modernized U. S. farm program, emphasized these points:

- The "surplus" food problem, under which food from bulging warehouses was "disposed of" to help feed the hungry abroad, is no longer a "problem."

Except for cotton and one or two other products, the warehouse "surpluses" of the 1950s have disappeared and additional production is needed in some areas.

- Congress should therefore authorize an "ever-normal granary" approach under which the secretary of agriculture will authorize production to create "minimum reserve levels," if necessary with increases in crop acreage.

To meet these standards, the Agriculture Dept. was directed immediately to increase soybean production, raise rice crop acreage by 10 percent and buy "limited quantities" of dairy products for domestic and foreign needs. "Milk from U. S. farms is the only milk available to millions of poor children abroad," the president observed.

The rapid disappearance of our farm surpluses, Johnson said, requires that foreign-food assistance be tied to the urgency for underdeveloped nations by "self-help" to improve their own agricultural production.

Day of Reckoning

The U. S. might stall off the day of reckoning for 10 or 20 years, he indicated, by unchanged policies of food shipments abroad. Candor required him, he said, to add, "the time is not far off when all the combined production, on all the acres, of all the agriculturally productive nations, will not meet the food needs of the developing nations" with their exploding populations.

"Food for Peace" programs, he said in his message, should be tied to technical assistance and local self-help to lift farm production in developing nations from a mere subsistence level for farm families to a modern agriculture that produces cash crops.

This would make farmers in these nations "a better customer of urban industry" and begin supplying the needs of their own people for food and fibers.

"Marked improvement" in these directions has already taken place in Greece and Taiwan, he said, which have raised their own food production and become better customers for their own industrial products and our food exports at the same time.

Two Bills Stressed

The President asked for two specific bills: one embodying the "ever-normal granary" doctrine at home, the second continuing foreign-food aid tied to the theme of increased production abroad rather than the outmoded domestic "surplus" supply.

Our foreign aid programs have helped avert famine in the past, he declared. Now we need new programs emphasizing improved technology, stronger emphasis on nutritional foods such as "high-quality synthetic" substances based on protein isolated from fishes, a cooperative world attack on hunger, malnutrition and starvation.

The reserve food stock the United States needs "lies in the 60 million acres now withdrawn from production" as "marginal," the President said, acknowledging a startling change in world and domestic conditions.

Our commitment asserts "the interdependence of mankind in its quest for food and clothing and shelter," Johnson told Congress, recognizing that an abundant harvest is a "product of man's skill" as well as a gift of God, that "hunger and want anywhere are the eternal enemies of all mankind," that "agriculture is an essential pursuit of every nation."

IAM Members Approve Pay, Per Capita Hikes

Members of the Machinists, voting in a union-wide referendum, approved a 50-cent monthly increase in per capita payments to the international union and a salary increase for officers and field representatives—their first since 1957.

Proposition 1, to raise per capita payments from $2 to $2.50 a month, won by a vote of 80,915 to 46,505. Proposition 2, raising salaries from 20 to 25 percent for union staffs, was carried 76,162 to 50,935.

Sec.-Treas. Matthew DeMore, announcing the tallies, said the changes will go into effect Apr. 1. In the meantime, an IAM committee on laws will write the changes into the union constitution as amendments.

IAM Pres. P. L. Siemiller expressed thanks for the vote which would help, he said, to provide "new incentives" to continued growth and service.

Both questions were approved by the 1964 IAM convention but lost in a referendum late that year. In resubmitting them for balloting at January lodge meetings, the union's executive council made these points:

- More per capita income is needed to avoid drastic cuts in staff and services. Since 1962, grand lodge expenses exceeded operating income by $4 million.
- IAM staff members got no raises during a period when members' wages increased by an average of 37 percent. Only 8 cents of the 50-cent per capita boost will go toward salary hikes. The balance will be used to erase deficits and expand services voted by the 1964 convention.

Building Trades Bar Bid for Wage Ceiling

that corporation profits after taxes went up 20 percent in 1965. No profit controls have been suggested.

"The President told Congress dividend payments increased 12 percent in 1965. No dividend limits have been urged.

"The President told Congress professional workers' income went up 7.5 percent in 1965. No guidelines have been applied in this field."

The building trades presidents strongly endorsed AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's statement of Jan. 26 noting that the general level of wages has not even kept pace with rising costs, increases in productivity and the need to overcome inequities and substandard conditions.

Construction employment is seasonal, depending on weather as well as economic conditions, they noted.

"The average work time per year is no more than 70 percent of normal industrial working time," they said. "While building trades mechanics have obtained, through their trade unions, comparatively high hourly rates . . . their annual wage income is far below the industrial average."

The statement pointed out that more than 8,000 locals of unions affiliated with the Building & Construction Trades Dept. engage in local-level collective bargaining and stressed:

"This is not an industry in which any single agreement sets a national pattern."

Employment in the building trades "is essentially casual," the unions noted. "Workers are hired for a specific job and, when it is completed, they sometimes have to wait days and weeks until beginning work on another job."

While the proposal for a national board to make recommendations on wage adjustments "has no official government status," the union presidents noted that the secretary of labor "has verbally indicated he is interested in it."

Their unanimous conclusion, the union presidents said, is that "the plan supported by Sec. of Labor Wirtz is unworkable and we therefore are unable to accept it."

Spending for Health Triples Since 1950

Americans spent $36.8 billion on their health in 1964—nearly triple the $12.9 billion they paid out in 1950, according to a report in the Social Security Bulletin for January.

The study also showed that during the 15-year period:

- Per capita expenditures more than doubled, increasing from $84 to $191 per person per year.
- "Third party" payments for health services and facilities—by private insurance, government or philanthropic organizations — met slightly more than one-third of personal health care costs in 1950 and nearly 50 percent last year.
- Hospital care spending, slightly less than 30 percent of the total in 1950, rose to 35 percent; the $12.7 billion spent on hospital care in 1964 was nearly as much as the total health care bill in 1950.
- Spending for nursing home care increased seven times, from $142 million to $1.2 billion.
- Expenditures for the services of practitioners in private practice accounted for 32 cents of each 1950 health dollar and for but 29 cents of each dollar in 1964; health supplies — drugs, drug sundries, eyeglasses and appliances—which accounted for 17 cents of each dollar in 1950 cost 15 cents last year.
- Medical research, fastest growing item on the national health bill, jumped from $117 million to $1.3 billion.
- The cost of construction of medical facilities more than doubled, increasing from $840 million to $2 billion.

The study showed that consumer payments, either directly or through private insurance, paid for 68 percent of the 1964 expenditures; government financing paid for 26 percent, and the rest came from other sources.

But the federal government picked up nearly one-third of the bill for hospital and medical facility construction. The remainder of the cost was about evenly divided between grants from philanthropic organizations and financing by the hospitals themselves.

AFTER 30 YEARS as a union official, a war on poverty seemed a natural for George Cottell (right), 71, former business manager of Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 437 in Fall River, Mass. So when he retired he enrolled as a VISTA volunteer and after a year of service in Hartford, Conn., signed up for a second year. Here he is with Richard Fraher, whom he helped rise from a jobless welfare recipient to the proprietor of a TV repair shop.

Retired Unionist Finds VISTA a Way 'to Help'

Hartford, Conn.—George Cottell, who spent nearly 30 of his 71 years as a local union official, decided that "if I were not working now I'd just be rotting away" and has signed up for his second year of service in VISTA, the volunteer corps in the nation's anti-poverty effort.

Cottell, a native of Fall River, Mass., was business manager of Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 437 there from 1927 through 1960 except for the stretch from 1935 to 1943, when he helped run the Works Projects Administration program in Massachusetts.

He resigned in 1960 to become executive director of the city's Public Housing & Urban Renewal Commission following four years of service as one of the commission's five members. He held the post until Aug. 1, 1964, when he reached the compulsory retirement age.

A man who had spent as active a life as Cottell was, perhaps naturally, unhappy in retirement, and when he heard of Pres. Johnson's War on Poverty he obtained information through the office of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) and applied for a job with VISTA—Volunteers in Service to America.

A VISTA volunteer is paid $50 a month, plus a modest expense allowance, by the federal government and is not allowed to take a job that could be filled by somebody else. The primary task is to help social workers with over-large case loads.

Cottell applied, received an appointment in December 1964 and was invited to Washington to meet Pres. Johnson. Then he spent six weeks of training at Camp Newhope, N.C., and finally was assigned to the Hartford Welfare Dept.

He has since been helping slum residents find jobs, welfare services, health care, training opportunities and other services.

Cottell is familiar with poverty —"except for the war years, Fall River has been a depressed area since the first textile mill closed in 1922," he said.

"I've seen women in the mills getting $3 a week," he added. "That is why I got involved in the labor movement and helped organize unions all over Massachusetts and the rest of New England."

Asked why, at his age, he chose to enlist in VISTA rather than take it easy, he said:

"I wanted to do something to help people, and people in poverty need help."

Ford, Chrysler Profit Marks Set Records

Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. weighed in with their annual financial reports — both showing new high records for sales and profits — although the two companies together fell short of matching General Motors Corp.'s earlier report of $2.1 billion in net profits.

Ford's 1965 revenue, the company reported, reached $11.5 billion, reflecting record-breaking worldwide sales of 4.5 million automobiles, trucks and tractors. This resulted in net profits of $703 million, after taxes and after reinvestment of $630 million in new plants and equipment.

The profits climbed faster than the sales, which were 19 percent above the 1964 figures but yielded net profits 39 percent higher. Fourth-quarter sales were spectacular despite strikes, and this continued into 1966, forcing the company to raise its production schedules on new-model cars.

Chrysler reported sales of just under $5.3 billion and net profits, after taxes, of $233 million—9.1 percent higher than the previous record year of 1964. The company also reinvested $292 milion from its revenues in property, plant and equipment, plus special tooling outlays of $160 million. An additional $127 million was invested in subsidiaries and associated companies.

Dividends paid dropped slightly —from $5.50 to $5.44 a share—because outstanding shares were increased by nearly 4 million. Chrysler said that since 1962 the company has "more than doubled" its sales, earnings and stockholders' investment in capital plant.

For Ford and Chrysler, as for GM previously, the 1965 sales and profits marked the fourth successive year of record-breaking highs.

Johnson Picks Lee C. White To Head FPC

Pres. Johnson announced a series of major executive-level appointments, including the key nomination of Lee C. White, last of the top-ranking Kennedy White House staff, as chairman of the Federal Power Commission.

The FPC, with regulatory powers over interstate electricity, gas and oil pricing policies of private industry, for years has been a turbulent center of conflicts between private interests and the demands of consumer groups for protection against unlimited private profit-seeking.

White has been special counsel to the President. He was previously, during the Kennedy Administration, deputy White House counsel under Theodore H. Sorensen. He succeeds Joseph C. Swidler at the FPC, who despite the controversial nature of many FPC decisions, won wide respect as a "swing man" in balancing the scales in the rate-fixing battles between consumers and power producers.

The President in a news conference announced these additional appointments:

- Bill D. Moyers, press secretary, was given a "deputy" in Robert H. Fleming, hitherto chief of the American Broadcasting Co. news division.
- Dixon Donnelley was named assistant secretary of state for public affairs—the top-ranking job in the department's public information field.
- Elmer B. Staats, a veteran career official and deputy director of the Bureau of the Budget, was appointed comptroller general.

Johnson Requests Funds to Launch Rent Supplements, Teacher Corps

propriations bill of the first session.

Johnson told Congress that top officials of the Dept. of Housing & Urban Development have now set up guidelines for the program paying "particular attention to the views of Congress."

He said non-profit organizations in 43 states are prepared to build "housing of modest design and cost" under this program. Urging that the money be provided to get it under way, the President said: "Congress alone can convert procedures and proposals into decent shelter for our people."

The Teacher Corps proved only slightly less controversial when it was approved by Congress. The Senate voted funds to get the program under way but at the insistence of House members of an appropriations conference committee, the money was deleted from the bill.

Urging that it now be appropriated, Johnson declared:

"Funds are needed now—so that the first teams to be chosen for the Teacher Corps may begin training this summer. This fall, in poor rural and urban areas, they will be sharing their skills and understanding with the children and teachers who need them most of all."

He said the Teacher Corps would unite "the idealism and wisdom of . . . young graduates and accomplished teachers," raising the level of education through "enthusiasm and skill."

The new secretary of the Dept. of Housing & Urban Development, Robert C. Weaver, termed the rent supplement program "critically needed."

In a speech to the National Press Club, he said rent supplements would complement the public housing program and add needed flexibility. He noted that when a family no longer needs help, the government would just stop the supplementary program instead of making the family move, as would be required under public housing.

Under the plan, housing would be built and managed by nonprofit organizations and private, limited-dividend developers. The program would be limited to housing "of modest cost and design," without luxury features.

In urging additional funds for the Selective Service System, the President said inductions this fiscal year are expected to total 360,000 compared with the estimate of 125,000 on which the original $49.1 million appropriation was based.

Dirksen Weighing New Filibuster

Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen is so pleased with the success of his filibuster against repeal of Section 14(b) that he's threatening to use the same tactics against two other bills strongly supported by labor.

Dirksen told newsmen that he is "equally strongly" opposed to legislation improving the minimum wage and unemployment compensation laws.

He said he would decide whether to filibuster against these measures when he knew the final forms of the two bills. Neither measure has yet been acted on by the House.

Griffin Wants Up:

Nebraska, Michigan Set for Senate Races

A major political battle was assured when Nebraska's Democratic Gov. Frank B. Morrison announced that he would run against incumbent GOP Sen. Carl T. Curtis.

Curtis, completing his second term, was floor manager for Barry Goldwater at the Republican national convention of 1964 that nominated the then Arizona senator.

Morrison, rated as a conservative or middle-of-the-road Democrat, has proved his statewide appeal as a vote-winner by scoring three successive victories in a normally Republican state.

Lt. Gov. Philip Sorensen, younger brother of the late Pres. Kennedy's close adviser, Theodore Sorensen, is expected to seek the Democratic nomination for governor. A former Republican governor, Val Peterson, who left the state in 1953 to join the Eisenhower Administration, will run for the GOP nomination.

Another fierce battle was assured when Republican Rep. Robert P. Griffin, one of the cosponsors of the 1959 Landrum-Griffin Act, announced he would seek the Michigan Senate seat held by incumbent Democratic Sen. Pat McNamara, who is completing his second term.

The raging right-left split in the California Republican Party, centering on a candidate for governor against incumbent Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown, was intensified when the state's senior senator, Thomas H. Kuchel, gave an all-out endorsement of former San Francisco Mayor George Christopher against Ronald Reagan, actor and inheritor of remnants of Goldwater forces, for the Republican nomination.

Otherwise in politics around the nation, Oklahoma's junior Sen. Fred R. Harris (D), elected in 1964 to fill the unexpired term of the late Sen. Robert S. Kerr, appeared assured of election to a full six-year term when the state's only prominent Republican officeholder, Gov. Henry L. Bellmon, announced that he would not run.

Harris beat the former University of Oklahoma football coach, Bud Wilkinson, in 1964. Wilkinson promptly indicated he was out of politics and Bellmon says he is retiring, too.

A leading candidate for Democratic nomination as governor is former Gov. Raymond Gary.

The blazing Democratic primary race for governor in Alabama, to succeed retiring Gov. George C. Wallace, was sharply modified when a ranking moderate candidate, Ryan deGraffenried, a former state senator, was killed in an airplane crash. Remaining as leading candidates are former Gov. John Patterson, a persistent segregationist, and the liberal former Rep. Carl D. Elliott.

Texas Liberal to Run

Ronnie Duggan, longtime liberal critic of the Texas Democratic organization and present critic of Pres. Johnson's Viet Nam policies, announced in Austin that he would run for the Senate as an independent in November.

He is expected to have no trouble in getting the necessary 25,000 signatures to petitions placing him on the ballot, once Democratic and Republican primaries are over, and qualified Texas observers say he may draw a strong protest vote from citizens dissatisfied with both conservative Republican incumbent Sen. John G. Tower and the Democrat expected to win the party's nomination with backing from Gov. John Connally, Atty. Gen. Waggoner Carr. Carr is viewed by some liberals as no less hostile to Great Society domestic programs than Tower.

A hot Democratic primary race was set up in Houston when veteran Rep. Albert Thomas died in Washington. Larry McKaskle, a real estate broker, will seek nomination for the 8th District seat against State Rep. Robert C. Eckhardt. The latter is expected to get the endorsement of the Harris County Democrats, a liberal bloc.

A perennial candidate, Harold E. Stassen, announced in Philadelphia that he would run for the GOP nomination for governor against Lt. Gov. Raymond Shafer, the slated candidate of incumbent Gov. William W. Scranton's organization in Pennsylvania.

'Let's Negotiate'

25th Broun Award Presented by Guild

By Eugene A. Kelly

The Newspaper Guild gave its 25th Heywood Broun award to a reporter whose stories freed an innocent man from jail, and paid affectionate tribute to the memory of its founder, Broun, at an anniversary dinner.

With 21 past winners joining in the applause, John Anthony Frasca of the Tampa, Fla., Tribune accepted a citation and $1,000 in cash for 1965's top journalistic achievement in the spirit of Broun, the columnist who founded the union in 1933 and was its president until he died in 1939.

Frasca's entry, a series of stories printed between Aug. 5 and Sept. 29, 1965, led to the release from prison of Robert L. Watson, father of two who was serving a 10-year term on conviction of robbery at Mulberry, Fla., Mar. 11, 1965.

The Tribune's series led to financial aid from an anonymous Tallahassee industrialist to pay for legal expenses; the volunteer efforts of two private detectives to get more facts, and the donated services of a Tampa attorney. A man who later confessed the crime was arrested and jailed along with a police chief and two policemen, all charged with conspiracy in the robbery. Watson was freed after serving 26 weeks of his sentence.

The three awards judges chose Frasca's series as the best of 91 competing entries.

3 Special Awards

In addition, they gave special commendation to Steve Underwood and Harry Jones, Jr., of the Kansas City Star for stories that produced nursing home reforms. Honorable mentions went to Robert H. Collins of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and to John Moore of the Houston Post, both for stories exposing irregularities by public officials.

Judges were Benjamin C. Bradlee, managing editor of the Washington Post, who presented the top award; NBC News commentator David Brinkley, and Carl T. Rowan, columnist and former U.S. Information Agency head.

Twenty-one of the 26 living winners and co-winners of past Broun awards received certificates of appreciation from ANG Pres. Arthur Rosenstock.

The anniversary program included film clips of Broun and brief recorded excerpts from two of his speeches; a talk by U.S. Atty. Gen. Nicholas deB. Katzenbach; and a tribute to the Guild by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany delivered by Federation Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

ANG Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson expressed the Guild's gratitude to Schnitzler for rallying labor support behind the union's first strike—in 1934 at the Newark, N.J., Ledger.

Special guests at the dinner were Broun's widow, Connie, and their daughter Patricia.

Katzenbach spoke of the rising crime rate and the need to increase public awareness of it and public determination to challenge it.

"This is a need many reporters and newspapers recognize and act on," he said. "This very audience demonstrates the tenacity and willingness of the press to pursue it as a high responsibility."

He deplored, however, what he said was an absence of "experienced, sensitive reporting" on crime and the courts, resulting in "too many sensational crime stories designed to shock the reader and too few about the need for reform in bail and criminal court procedures."

Katzenbach suggested that the Guild take the lead in promoting training programs for reporters.

Interest Rate Hiked On Savings Bonds

U.S. Savings Bonds are a better buy than ever.

Pres. Johnson has ordered the interest rate raised from its present 3.75 percent to 4.15 percent to make the bonds more competitive with other forms of saving. The new rate applies to bonds already issued as well as to those to be purchased in the future.

Johnson coupled his announcement with a plea to Americans to invest regularly in savings bonds as a "prudent and patriotic" action which strengthens the nation and its economy.

LBJ Tax Plan Wins Approval Of House Unit

7 percent until Apr. 1, 1968, when it would drop to 2 percent. It would go down to 1 percent in 1969.

- Step up income tax withholding for persons with higher incomes by switching to a graduated system of deductions. At present all taxpayers have 14 percent of their earnings deducted each payday, with allowances for dependents. This results in most persons in higher tax brackets owing the government money at the end of the year. The new withholding taxes would run up to 30 percent, with exceptions provided for persons with heavy deductions.
- Require quarterly social security payments by self-employed persons.

Except for the excise tax rollbacks, the legislation would not increase any taxes. But it would bring an estimated $4.8 billion more into the Treasury in the next fiscal year, mostly through a speedup in the collecting process.

Six of the eight Republicans on the Ways & Means Committee said they "reluctantly" support the tax bill but urged that it be accompanied by a cutback in domestic social programs. Two GOP members opposed the increase in excise taxes.

NMU Officials Report on Visit To Viet Nam

New York—The National Maritime Union has made recommendations to the Navy on reducing time lost by civilian ship crews because of congested Viet Nam ports, based on a three-week inspection trip by NMU Vice Pres. Mel Barisic and T. J. Walker, the union's assistant contract officer.

At a Washington meeting with Navy Under Sec. Robert H. B. Baldwin, Barisic recommended procurement of barges, tugboats, and floating cranes to help unload vessels in crowded harbors.

The NMU officials also met with Maritime Administrator Nicholas Johnson on problems affecting the morale of seamen in Viet Nam. Johnson agreed to help the union and shipping firms set up recreation centers, speed mail delivery and ease shore leave restrictions in military zones, Barisic said.

Council Steps Up Labor's Campaign

By Saul Miller

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Intensified and strengthened political action to increase the number of liberals in the House and Senate emerged as a major goal of the AFL-CIO for 1966.

The stepped-up drive in the off-year elections took shape against the background of the failure to overcome a GOP-Dixiecrat filibuster blocking repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, differences on the content of a minimum wage bill, opposition to "one-way" guidelines designed to hold down wage increases, and economic and political problems.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, at its winter meeting in the Americana Hotel, spelled out the approach in its statement dealing with the 14(b) repeal filibuster, declaring:

"The liberals in the House and Senate must be re-elected in the 1966 elections, and their ranks increased. This means an even greater united effort by the labor movement."

Pres. George Meany put the 1966 effort in a framework of independent action, telling reporters that the labor movement will make its own way politically and that it doesn't have to "toady along behind" any political party.

Stressing that the labor movement is non-partisan politically, Meany said, "I don't buy the idea that we have no place to go." Labor has lived through many administrations, he noted, where the President did not agree with labor's objectives but the unions kept fighting for their point of view.

Assessing the filibuster against 14(b) repeal led by Senate GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen, the AFL-CIO president said labor would give close scrutiny to the role of the Republican Party. Its record on liberalism is not good, he said, and while the GOP generally has an affirmative attitude on anything that big business wants, it takes a negative approach on anything that organized labor proposes.

The Administrative Committee of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education—the council plus 40 union officials—strongly supported the campaign to expand and strengthen political action this year, rejecting the concept of political neutrality or inactivity. The committee indicated that candidates will be judged on their records regardless of party and that major efforts will be made on registration and vote campaigns.

The COPE objective will be to improve on its 1964 performance in all areas, with a continuing drive to get affiliates to meet their financial quotas. The voluntary 5-cent assessment of all affiliates for the register-and-vote campaign will be continued and greater efforts made to secure voluntary contributions from union members—the Give-$1-to-COPE drive.

In his press conference remarks, Meany said that he saw no need for the organization of a labor party in the U.S., and that American unions had achieved greater benefits and strength without a labor party than unions in other countries with such parties. But if such a course is necessary for the AFL-CIO, he added, it would be considered.

'Down Payment for Poor':

Prompt Action in Congress Urged on Wage Floor Boost

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO called for prompt action by Congress on minimum wage legislation as a "down-payment for America's working poor."

The Executive Council said that proposals of a bill before Congress—HR 10518—to extend the protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act to 7.9 million additional workers and to raise the wage in several annual steps to $1.75 an hour would constitute "modest steps, indeed."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a press conference that the federation "can't buy" what he understands are the Administration's proposals on minimum wage—$1.40 per hour effective September 1966 and $1.60 effective September 1968. He said a year has already been lost in the minimum wage fight because of failure of Congress to act in 1965, that the minimum should be at the very least $1.60 in September 1967 and should then go to $1.75.

Meany replied to a reporter's query on whether the AFL-CIO would wage a battle in Congress against the Administration's proposals by saying that "if that's what it's got to be, that's what it will have to be. We have our position and we will stick to it."

He termed the difference with the Administration on wage-hour legislation a family quarrel and said that, in effect, it provides a "testing ground" in terms of future relationships. He added that labor will battle for what "we think is the proper type of minimum wage legislation," stressing "I don't want a war with anyone."

The council pointed out that the proposed improvements must be measured against "nearly 10 million workers who would still be left outside the act's protection and the wages that are required for decent living by the nation's workers."

Prompt action is needed, the council emphasized, so that the wage-hour law "can serve its original purposes in the public interest and help win victory in the war on poverty."

Noting the present exclusion of more than 17.5 million workers from protection of FLSA, the council said that even if these workers were given the law's existing pro-

Johnson Asks Campaign To Cleanse Rivers, Air

Pres. Johnson asked Congress for a wide-ranging and permanent program to cleanse the nation's river basins and atmosphere of pollutants, and coupled with it proposals for a new Redwood National Park in California and eight other major recreation areas.

As foreshadowed in his State of the Union message last month, he urged an effort to "clean and preserve entire river basins from their sources to their mouths."

For the immediate future he asked a demonstration program built upon "a new kind of partnership" involving interstate compacts and community cooperation, with federal financial assistance, for sewage disposal systems and federal enforcement of standards of pollution abatement.

The enforcement power, he said, would be transferred by executive order from the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare to the Dept. of the Interior, which already has water preservation programs ranging from irrigation to saline water research.

He proposed elimination, in the "demonstration projects," of the dollar-ceiling on federal sewage system grants to local communities and a total of $50 million in new federal funds to begin both plan-

Job Training Program Set with Urban League

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO and the National Urban League will join in a cooperative movement to enhance job and promotion opportunities for Negroes, Federation Pres. George Meany announced here.

The program was approved by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, which voted $10,000 a year for three years to help launch it after an appearance before the council by Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the league.

Meany at a press conference termed the Urban League approach "very positive" and a "good program" in terms of pre-apprenticeship training for Negro youths and job promotions for Negro workers.

He said the AFL-CIO is "not satisfied" that discrimination is being eradicated at all levels of the trade union movement as quickly as desired, but stressed that "constant improvement" and progress are being made. Complete elimination will take time, he noted, and the AFL-CIO will continue to press for results.

Voicing support for the AFL-CIO's civil rights program, Young told the council that "we both recognize" that unfortunately there still remain "many gaps between the stated policies of the AFL-CIO and the practices of some local unions."

The great increase in the number of Negro union members, Young said, "is due to their growing awareness of the advantages to be gained from such membership." Working with the unions, the league "will encourage more active participation of non-white workers in unions and community activities." It is "imperative," he added, "that minority youth be assisted in making early vocational choices" based upon first-hand knowledge of the requirements necessary to enter into

Renewed Fight Pledged on 14(b); Council Scores Role of GOP

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Dirksen-led Republican-Dixiecrat coalition that blocked repeal of Section 14(b) "has raised once again the question of whether his party (the GOP) is the anti-labor party, the party that stands unalterably opposed to any social progress legislation," the AFL-CIO declared.

The federation's position on the filibuster was spelled out in a statement adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its meeting here. (Text on Page 6.)

The council declared that the labor movement, despite "formidable" obstacles, will continue the battle to win repeal of the section of the Taft-Hartley Act allowing states to bar union security provisions. The key to the struggle, it said, will be the 1966 elections which will call for "an even greater united effort by the labor movement" to increase the number of liberals in House and Senate.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a press conference that Sen. Everett McKinley Dirkensen's filibuster action on 14(b) and the action of other Republicans, including leaders in the House, indicated that labor must give close scrutiny to the role of the Republican Party. He said the GOP is looked on "as the more conservative of the two parties," that its record on liberalism is not good and that the party has an affirmative attitude on anything that big business wants and a negative attitude on anything that organized labor proposes.

He noted that a group of Democrats in the Senate essentially belongs in the GOP and follows an ultra-conservative political line, but said this does not change the responsibilities of the Republican Party. Dirksen and Rep. Gerald R. Ford, House GOP leader, "want to take us back to the last century" in terms of their social and economic views, he commented.

Meany stressed that the council's comment on the role of the Republican Party is "not a conclusion but something we must think about."

The council statement on the 14(b) fight noted that while a majority of the Senate favored repeal, it was prevented from even considering the bill because of the Dirksen-led filibuster. It stressed that "all but six of the Senate Republicans and all but four of the Southern Democrats" were included in the filibuster coalition.

The Senate's failure to vote on the issue has created the following situation, the council said:

- Section 14(b) remains on the books and the inequities that arise from "right-to-work" laws in 19 states will continue; the "corrosive interstate competition for industry" will proceed; and the intrastate conflicts over "right-to-work" laws will be "renewed and intensified."
- Senate Rule XXII will continue to "frustrate majority action." Dirksen has raised the threat of filibusters against minimum wage and unemployment compensation bills. The AFL-CIO is for full debate as long as a "terminal point" is reached when a vote is taken.

Disservice to Democracy

"The Senate does democracy a disservice by insisting that the only true majority is two-thirds," the council said.

- Organized labor will meet the new promised attacks by the professional promoters of "right-to-work" laws "any place they arise." The "turmoil and rancor these contests will arouse will be of their making," it added.

The council noted that "the propaganda barrage against 14(b) repeal, based upon the most outrageous and inflammatory falsehoods, has misled thousands of well-meaning citizens." The statement added:

"The wells of information upon which Americans rely were for the most part poisoned by an unbridled venom and deliberate dishonesty. Never have the purveyors of opinion been more unanimous in a shabbier cause."

In reply to a query, Meany made is clear that he did not believe that Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) did "as much as he could" in the fight against the Dirksen-led filibuster.

Meany Charges Deceit In Anti-Repeal Editorial

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A classic example of the deceit used in the campaign against repeal of section 14(b) was unveiled for reporters covering the AFL-CIO Executive Council meeting by Federation Pres. George Meany.

He noted that just a few minutes before the final vote on cloture was taken in the Senate, in an attempt to shut off the filibuster, Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R.-Ill.) introduced into the Congressional Record an editorial from the Miami Herald of Feb. 17, 1966, entitled "A Principle Goes to Jail."

The editorial said the repeal of 14(b) would put employers under the threat of going to jail and cited a case of a Milwaukee businessman, Levi Mews.

There was no principle involved in the case, Meany commented, except the principle of obeying the law of the land. He cited the following facts:

On Sept. 11, 1963, Local 139 of the Operating Engineers filed with the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board a complaint charging Mews Ready Mix Corp. with unfair labor practices. After hearings, etc., an enforcement judgment was entered May 20, 1964, requiring Levi Mews to make certain pension and welfare fund payments, submit payrecords to officers of the funds and discharge an employe, Laverne Schlei.

No appeal was entered and on June 12, 1964, Mews was served with an order to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for failing to comply with the judgment. On July 3 the circuit court entered a judgment finding Mews guilty of contempt for failing to fire Schlei and failing to pay certain employes.

On Nov. 2 a new show cause order was issued on the contempt question but Mews could not be located. Finally after further hearings in January and February of 1965 he was again adjudged in contempt and received a 30-day prison sentence on one of two violations and an additional 30 days on the third.

"These were the facts in the case," Meany said. "The Miami Herald made no attempt to determine them. Sen. Dirksen made no attempt to determine them. Both chose rather to slander the trade union movement."

Re-Use Fees Add to Income Of Musicians

Hollywood, Calif. — Hollywood Musicians Local 47 last year collected more than $454,000 in penalty and re-use payments for musicians in the fields of phonograph recording, live television and recorded spot announcements and jingles.

The Overture, the local's monthly newspaper, noted that penalty payments ranged from about $16,000 paid by one company down to $10.80 added to one musician's salary because he wasn't paid within the time specified in the contract. Payments for re-use ran from about $1,100 to more than $130,000.

The local pointed out that the total reported does not include comparable penalty and re-use payments in motion pictures and television film.

8 Unions Draw Up Joint Contract Goals

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Eight AFL-CIO unions which have formed a united front for 1966 contract talks with the electrical industry's two giants have drawn up a program of bargaining goals aimed at regaining lost ground.

It will be presented to a Conference on Collective Bargaining set for Mar. 15 in Washington at which locals with members in plants of the General Electric Co. and the Westinghouse Corp. will be represented.

The Committee on Collective Bargaining the international unions set up declared the goals of the joint program were:

- "To provide for a catch-up in wages and other benefits in which the GE and Westinghouse agreements fell behind since 1960.
- "To provide for GE and Westinghouse employes a fair share of the gains in productivity that have enabled these corporations to realize such substantial increases in profits.
- "To secure for GE and Westinghouse employes wage and other benefit provisions equal to those provided by comparable companies and industries."

Unions Listed

Associated in the common venture are the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Auto Workers, Machinists, Sheet Metal Workers, Allied Industrial Workers, Technical Engineers and Flint Glass Workers.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany when questioned at a press conference during the Executive Council meeting here observed that the joint approach to negotiations "makes sense." If it works in this case, he added, it will be applied in other areas where it might prove helpful.

The program to be laid before the Mar. 15 meeting includes proposals for substantial wage increases, including cost-of-living clauses and elimination of geographical differentials; holiday and vacation standards equal to the rest of the industry; measures to maintain job security and continuity of income; the union shop; full arbitration; provisos for dealing with automation, and substantial improvements in pension and insurance benefits.

GE and Westinghouse, the committee said in a statement adopted here, can well afford to boost wages and make other contract improvements.

Employes of the two firms, it noted, have fallen 25 to 30 cents an hour behind other basic industry wage and benefit levels since 1960. While improvements ranged between 2.7 and 3.9 percent per year in other industries, it went on, they have averaged only 2.1 percent at GE and 1.8 percent at Westinghouse. The cost of living has risen by 7.7 percent since June 1960, it continued, reducing the "real net gain" to eight-tenths of 1 percent for GE workers and one-half of 1 percent for Westinghouse employes. It said, too, that employe productivity based on sales per employe has been rising at about 5 percent a year.

Both corporations, the committee declared, "have been enjoying unexampled prosperity."

GE's profits have jumped from $200 million in 1960 to $355 million, a rise of nearly 80 percent. The net earnings of Westinghouse, "after difficulties in the early 1960s due in part to the effects of the price-fixing conspiracy," the committee said, almost doubled from $57 million in 1962 to $107 million last year.

"Not only have we not secured wage and other benefit provisions that these corporations could provide," the statement said, "but we have not really had genuine collective bargaining during the past six years. . . .

"We are joining together in this effort to secure genuine collective bargaining for the first time in many years from these corporations. We pledge each other the fullest of mutual cooperation and support to secure . . . equity and justice in 1966."

Israel Cited as Model For Developing Lands

Miami Beach, Fla.—The developing countries in Africa and Asia "can learn much" from the Israeli experience and their unions can profit from the role of Histadrut in building the Middle East nation, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared here.

Meany's assessment of Israel came at a dinner honoring Mrs. Golda Meir, former Israeli foreign minister, and launching the 1966 State of Israel bond drive.

Pointing out the long-standing support for Israel by the American labor movement and the U.S. government, Meany said that Israel as a democracy and a continuing force for world peace "not only needs but deserves help." He wished the bond drive "the greatest success" to help give the nation the strength to secure "a just and lasting peace with the entire Arab community."

The AFL-CIO president noted: "I am sure that by now the Arab people, as distinguished from demagogic leaders, really want to live in peace and friendship with Israel—for their own good, for the good of the whole world."

He emphasized also that on the basis of Pres. Johnson's recent proposal that American help should go to countries which are not "hostile to us" and which provide solid evidence that they are determined to help themselves, "some of Israel's most dangerously aggressive neighbors are disqualified from receiving American assistance."

The federation president pointed to the recent "so-called Tri-Continental Congress" held in Havana at which the delegates "pledged themselves to armed hostility against the United States." The chairman of the political committee of this conference "was the chief delegate from the UAR. He denounced our country as the 'first enemy of the world.' And the ruler of the UAR himself sent warm greetings to this gathering of guerrillas whose first aim is to destroy our country and its good neighbors in the South."

Meany paid high praise to Mrs. Meir's role in building Israel and her inspiration to all men and women who cherish freedom as a way of life. "She truly personifies," he said, "that unique combination of human qualities that are indispensable to the triumph of progress over backwardness, prosperity over poverty, freedom over tyranny, peace over war."

Council Spurs Drive for '66 Elections

Urges Strong Effort To Bolster Liberals

The political and legislative concerns that dominated the opening days of the Executive Council sessions were expressed in a series of statements that:

- Urged prompt congressional action on minimum wage legislation as a "down-payment for America's working poor." (Story Page 1.)
- Spelled out labor's determination to continue the battle to win repeal of 14(b), certain that the repeal measure has the necessary support for passage if the Senate filibuster can be overcome. (Story Page 2; Text Page 6.)
- Called for greater utilization of the 1964-65 Civil Rights Acts, more efficient enforcement and a greater degree of compliance by local communities. (Story this page.)
- Urged a "top priority" in Congress to "revitalize" the unemployment compensation system at the current session. (Story this page.)
- Supported a National Urban League-labor program to enhance job and promotion opportunities for Negroes. Meany later described the program as a "very positive" approach and pledged full AFL-CIO cooperation. (Story Page 1.)

Meany Comments

At his press conference Meany:

- Strongly reaffirmed labor's opposition to the Administration's wage-price guideposts as "one-way" programs that have the effect of keeping wages down. He reported on conversations between the council and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz on economic policy, minimum wages and other matters, terming the discussion "amicable."

Wirtz, at a separate press conference, told reporters that the Administration's position was to make every effort to win acceptance of voluntary restraints and make them work. He said he planned to continue to present the guidepost viewpoint and the dangers to the economy for any labor settlement that is "out of line."

- Stressed that labor was especially concerned over the applications of guideposts to minimum wages, declaring that the war on poverty can never be fought successfully in those terms.
- Said that the boycott of ships dealing with North Viet Nam, as proposed by three AFL-CIO maritime unions, "makes a lot of sense." (Story Page 4.)
- Voiced support for a joint bargaining approach to negotiations with General Electric and Westinghouse by eight AFL-CIO unions. (Story Page 2.)

In other actions, Meany announced that after hearing a presentation by Pres. Charles Cogen, of the American Federation of Teachers on the St. John's University strike and a proposal for a council of AFL-CIO professional unions, the council:

- Voted to set up a subcommittee to study the question of academic freedom and its relationship to the trade union movement. Meany named Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther, David Sullivan and Lee W. Minton to the committee.

Meany said "the AFL-CIO firmly believes that the faculty members discharged by St. John's University are clearly entitled to full and fair hearings conducted under democratic procedures. We urge the St. John's University administration to grant such hearings without further delay."

- Set up a subcommittee to investigate the matter of a council of professional unions, assess the need and report back to the next council meeting. Meany named Vice Presidents Richard F. Walsh, Joseph A. Beirne and I. W. Abel to this committee.

WHAT WENT ON at the AFL-CIO Executive Council's sessions in Bal Harbour, Fla., was relayed to reporters for every branch of news media by Pres. George Meany at a series of press conferences. Here he is flanked by Public Relations Dir. Albert J. Zack (right) and Assistant Dir. Robert Wentworth.

Broadened Wage Floor Pressed to Aid Poor

tection "they would receive only a poverty wage." Under the current $1.25 minimum wage a fully-employed, year-round worker earns $2,600, substantially less than the Administration's "poverty level" of $3,130 a year.

The statement declared also that the cost of improvements in the wage-hour law "can easily be absorbed out of record-breaking business profits and rapidly rising productivity."

While endorsing legislation now before Congress, the council said that organized labor would continue its fight for extension of the act's protection to all workers and for an increase in the minimum wage to $2 an hour.

The council advanced detailed data to support its position and stressed the following points:

- Minimum wages raise the wages of the very poor. Studies show that the lowest wage rates usually rise to the level of the federal minimum only by changes in the law.
- The minimum wage historically has required periodic revision and such revision is needed now. The last increase from $1 to $1.25 was in 1961.
- The overall cost impact of small-step increases in the minimum wage is slight. A $1.40 minimum wage for presently covered workers and a $1.15 minimum for more than 7 million uncovered workers would increase total wage and salary payments in 1966 by one-half of 1 percent. The impact in succeeding years would be roughly similar if the minimum were gradually raised.
- Low wage industries have shown that they can make adjustments.
- Minimum wage changes do not cause unemployment. Various studies, in fact, show just the opposite.
- Inflation has never resulted from small increases in the minimum wage. During the past five years, while the minimum wage increased twice and coverage was extended, the Consumer Price Index has been relatively stable.

The council statement reviewed the various groups of unprotected workers who would be covered under HR 10518, including those in retail trades, restaurants, laundries, hotels and motels, hospitals and related institutions, construction, logging, motion picture theaters, agricultural processing and farm workers.

It said that the "same automatic percentage increases and extensions of coverage must also be provided in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and American Samoa as on the mainland."

TrainingPlan Set by Labor, Urban League

apprenticeships and into technical and other occupations."

The League program, in cooperation with the AFL-CIO, will:

- Set up programs to improve the position of Negro workers "in those occupations, industries and business enterprises" which have union contracts.
- Disseminate within the Negro community information on job prospects in the blue-collar labor market, the nature of unions and the rights and responsibilities of union membership.
- Establish a national trade union advisory committee within the urban league to further the cooperative relationship for job opportunities in organized skilled trades and assist in the placement of qualified individuals in job categories where their skills can be fully utilized.

Young told reporters at a press conference he hopes the program will open a "new era of cooperation" between the labor movement and the Negro community, because the condition of the Negro worker today is little different than it was five or 10 years ago.

With unions opening doors to Negroes in greater numbers, he said, the challenge to Negro groups is to provide men who can take advantage of the opportunity.

Four Are Named To IUOE Board

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Four changes in membership on the executive board of the Operating Engineers were announced here by Pres. Hunter P. Wharton.

Business managers of four IUOE local unions were elected by the board to succeed four veteran members retiring after long years of service to the union. The new members are:

Thomas A. McGuire, Local 15, New York City, replacing William J. Stuhr of Local 520, Granite Ctiy, Ill.

William A. Gray, Local 428, Phoenix, Ariz., succeeding Charles Palaska, Local 324, Detroit.

Russell T. Conlon, Local 302, Seattle, succeeding Jack McDonald of Seattle.

Dale Burchett, Local 49, St. Paul, Minn., in place of Paul O. Larson of St. Paul.

High Congress Priority Urged on Jobless Aid Bill

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Congress was urged to give "a top priority" to proposals to "revitalize" the unemployment compensation system at the current session.

The urging came from the AFL-CIO Executive Council, which said a bill—HR 8282—on which extensive hearings have been held in the House Ways & Means Committee, would correct the current unfair and outmoded situation.

It stressed that the tremendous variations in state laws called for federal standards. "No emergency now exists," the council emphasized, "to justify any more temporary patchwork."

With all the limitations in state laws—in coverage, eligibility, duration and weekly benefit amount—"only one out of every five dollars due to unemployment is compensated."

The bill before the House committee, the council said, would increase benefits, extend protection of the system, prohibit extreme variations in eligibility requirements and disqualification penalties and provide extended benefits for those unemployed beyond six months who have used up all of their state rights.

"A modernized unemployment insurance program can be a major preventive strategy for fighting poverty," the council statement said, "by acting immediately to support family income and forestall the workingman's dependence on his creditors and public forms of relief."

The council pointed out that other bills under consideration would limit the payment of extended benefits to people unemployed only in recession conditions and that "this would defeat the purpose of the system."

It cited also "efforts to discredit jobless pay improvements" by resort to "epithets picturing compensated workers in derogatory terms. The cry of abuses is a thinly-veiled attack to reduce costs and the employer tax contribution," the council declared.

Enforcement Step-Up Asked Under Rights Act

Bal Harbour, Fla.,—The AFL-CIO called for greater utilization of the 1964-65 Civil Rights Acts, more efficient enforcement and a greater degree of compliance in local communities.

These steps are necessary, the federation's Executive Council declared here, "to insure that equality under the law and equal opportunity become fully realized."

It added that beyond equality under the law is the basic need for full employment providing real jobs at good wages, integrated schools providing quality education, an adequate minimum wage protecting millions now excluded and expansion of the war on poverty on every front.

The council expressed the hope that the Administration's proposals on equal administration of justice will achieve the goals laid out by Pres. Johnson in his State of the Union message calling for non-discriminatory jury selection and authority for federal courts to try those who attack or intimidate civil rights workers.

Johnson's call for more aggressive action on school desegregation and new opportunities for minorities to escape from urban ghettos was welcomed by the council. It stressed also the need for strengthening the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission by giving it power to issue cease and desist orders in job discrimination cases.

The statement noted that there has been "substantial progress to date" as a result of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965, but that greater efforts were needed, especially under the Civil Rights Act title barring distribution of federal funds to communities and programs that do not measure up to full integration.

Cost Held No Excuse To Cut Women's Pay

Employers may not pay women less than men simply because they claim the cost of employing women is greater, the Labor Dept. ruled.

Wage-Hour Administrator Clarence T. Lundquist said such a policy would be "plainly contrary" to the Equal Pay Act and would "perpetuate and promote discrimination against women."

Peace Corps Picks Teacher For Key Post

Robert Klein, who was a shop steward for Local 2 of the American Federation of Teachers while teaching in New York City public schools and a member of the local executive board, has been named director of Peace Corps activities in Ghana.

Klein was a volunteer in the Peace Corps' first overseas mission, serving in Ghana from 1961 to 1964. He is the first corps volunteer to head a countrywide operation.

A graduate of the University of Chicago with a master of arts degree, he also attended Teachers College at Columbia University and began teaching social studies in the New York school system in 1956. He became active in the UFT, served on its scale and grievance committee and was on the executive board at the time of the one-day strike that won union recognition in 1960.

During his first tour of duty in Ghana he taught English and history in the Sefwi-Wiawso Secondary School, 300 miles north of Accra, and remained as a Peace Corps field staff member—the first ex-corpsman ever given such an appointment—when his term as a volunteer ended in 1963.

The following year he was transferred to East Africa and as associate director established the Peace Corps in Kenya five months before the first volunteers arrived. Since September 1965 he has been at Peace Corps headquarters in Washington as an African regional desk officer.

DEEP IN DISCUSSION during the AFL-CIO Executive Council meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., are Vice Presidents George M. Harrison (left) and I. W. Abel.

Wider Powers Urged For NLRB Examiners

Chairman Frank W. McCulloch of the National Labor Relations Board, testifying before a House labor subcommittee, said NLRB members believe a plan to give greater authority to trial examiners to speed up decisions in unfair labor practice cases "would now be appropriate."

As a single change in NLRB procedure, the plan would "probably have the greatest effect" in whittling away the mounting backlog of unfair practice charges, McCulloch told a special subcommittee inquiring into board procedures.

A proposal called Reorganization Plan No. 5 of 1961 would have given examiners authority to dispose of unfair practice cases which do not present "novel issues of fact, law or policy." The plan was defeated by the House and McCulloch testified the board did not feel it should attempt by rule to do what the House "expressly disapproved."

As the intake of unfair practice cases continues to climb, the board believes the time has now come to give the examiners more decisional authority, subject to board and court review, he said.

McCulloch opposed a proposal, in a bill pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee, to require formal examiner's hearings in election cases. He said this would "nearly treble" the number of examiner hearings and cause increased delays.

The NLRB chairman said the board has made strenuous efforts to handle its increasing load of work fairly and expeditiously but the rising level of cases "demonstrates that the national labor policy still meets determined challenge and resistance" in some quarters, he said.

Last August he had told an interviewer that too many American businessmen are illegally impeding union organization and indicated that the board may seek new techniques to discourage anti-union conduct by employers.

Since 1958, McCulloch testified, the NLRB case intake has climbed from 16,750 a year to 28,000 and may exceed 30,000 in 1966. Despite the hiring of 25 more trial examiners, the time lag from end of hearing to examiner's decision shot up from 77 days in the last half of 1963 to 114 for 1965's last six months, he said.

Another witness, NLRB General Counsel Arnold Ordman, reported that 91 percent of NLRB cases are handled by the board's 31 field offices. Most cases are disposed of in 30 to 45 days, he said.

Time Lags

The initial decision to issue a complaint is made within 25 days after a charge is filed, Ordman said, but the time before a complaint is issued has increased from a median of 56 days in fiscal 1964 to 59 days in fiscal 1965. The goal he said, is to

He noted that the board's rulings have been upheld in 80 percent of the cases in which they have been challenged in federal courts. About 50 percent of board decisions are taken to court and the longest delays occur at this level, he said.

Reporting an increase in the number of discretionary injunctions asked against employer unfair labor practices, Ordman said they averaged 17 a year in the 1962-65 period as against three a year in 1953-59.

For 6th Straight Year:

Business Foresees Further Profit Rise

The booming profits surge of the past five years is expected to continue throughout 1966, according to a survey by economists for McGraw-Hill, Inc.

Taking their questions directly to corporation executives, McGraw-Hill learned that 83 percent of the companies expect their pretax profits to be higher this year than last, that nearly half anticipate that the gain will be 10 percent or more, and that only 8 percent expect earnings to slip.

The gains in 1966 may not be as spectacular as in 1965, when profits before taxes jumped 15 percent and net earnings after taxes a sensational 20 percent, but most businessmen foresee a rise of about 6 percent in pretax earnings, McGraw-Hill reported.

In addition, they anticipate a rise of 9 percent in corporate cash flow, on top of the 15 percent gain registered last year. Corporate cash flow means retained earnings and depreciation, and business firms expect to be able to finance 77 percent of their planned capital spending for the year from these internal funds.

While McGraw-Hill's economists were making their survey of prospects for 1966 business profits, two of the nation's industrial giants released the actual figures for 1965.

American Telephone & Telegraph Co. reported record revenue of $11.3 billion and net income of $1.85 billion, also a record.

General Electric Co., including its foreign operations for the first time in a consolidated report, said gross revenues were $6.2 billion and net earnings $355 million, both record highs.

The McGraw-Hill survey of business expectations for 1966 eliminated corporate income from agricultural operations and from overseas plants, it was specified, and overseas profits may be "substantial."

A pretax leap in earnings of 6 percent this year would be "impressive," the survey observed, because it would occur "without the benefit of some very exceptional stimulants" applied to the economy in 1964 and 1965.

The five-year record, as compiled by the McGraw-Hill economists, shows a climb from about $50 billion in gross profits in 1961 to nearly $70 billion in 1965. An additional 6 percent rise this year would push the figure well above the $70 billion mark, excluding all profits earned overseas or from agriculture and fisheries.

Court Orders Firm To Rehire Supervisor

New Orleans, La.—An employer who refused to recall a laid-off supervisor after he testified against the company in a National Labor Relations Board proceeding is guilty of unfair labor practices against rank-and-file employes, the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals here ruled.

The decision upheld an NLRB order against the Oil City Brass Works, Beaumont, Tex. The appeals court based its ruling on the principle that if the power of the board to protect its witnesses is not coextensive with its power to compel testimony, the "overriding purpose of the National Labor Relations Act will be frustrated."

Boilermakers' Drive

The issue grew out of an organizing drive Boilermakers Local 587 started at the firm's plant in 1962. Oil City Brass refused to grant recognition on the union's requests, and the local filed unfair labor practice charges. During a hearing before a trial examiner John Hammock, a supervisor on layoff, while under subpoena, testified against the employer's interests.

The company complied with an NLRB order to bargain on request, but the union filed another charge claiming that whereas Hammock had been offered reemployment before the first hearing, he was told after testifying that a job was not available. In the second case, the NLRB found he was denied reinstatement because of his testimony.

The board maintained that because Hammock was refused recall after his testimony, rank-and-file employes would fear retribution if they testified. The appeals court rejected this reasoning as "irrelevant," declaring that the real issue is whether the company's refusal to recall the supervisor interfered with, restrained or coerced rank-and-file employes in the exercise of their rights. The board's order should be enforced as an "inherent protection of its source of information" necessary to assure rank-and-file employes "the exercise of their statutory rights," the ruling stated.

"Rank-and-file employes have a right to have their privileges secured by the act vindicated through the effective administrative proceedings provided by Congress," the court continued.

"As in the instant case, it may often be necessary to have supervisory personnel testify. It follows, therefore, that any discrimination against supervisory personnel because of testimony before the board directly infringes the right of rank-and-file employes to a congressionally-provided, effective administrative process. . . ."

Though the law is restricted to protecting the rights of rank-and-file employes, the court added, it "is broad enough to cover any restraint" on their rights.

"We can think of few restraints more direct," it observed, "than actions calculated to prevent rank-and-file employes from having supervisors testify on their behalf."

Maritime Unions Weigh Hanoi Shipping Boycott

Bal Harbour, Fla.—AFL-CIO maritime unions are planning a Washington conference to work out plans for a boycott against ships of nations which have traded "and are still trading" with North Viet Nam.

The conference will be called if in the next 30 days the Administration does not invoke stiffer penalties against nations whose ships are involved in the North Viet Nam trade, the federation's Maritime Trades Dept. said.

The department's executive council supported a wire sent to the President by the Seafarers, Maritime and Longshoremen's unions declaring that a recent decision to bar ships which engage in such trade from participating in U. S. foreign aid programs is "a slap on the wrist" which will not stop the support for the Communist nations. The MTD said the alternative is "to invoke a boycott" against ships of nations trading with the North Vietnamese.

At a press conference, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in reply to a question that the boycott proposal "makes a lot of sense." He voiced complete sympathy with the unions' approach and said he was "in general agreement with their attitude."

'Blood Money'

The wire to the President, signed by Seafarers Pres. Paul Hall, NMU Pres. Joseph Curran and ILA Pres. Thomas W. Gleason, declared that trade with North Viet Nam "puts blood money in the pockets of ship owners and other profiteers in so-called allied nations." Asserting that the time for "pussy-footing" is long past, the three union leaders said "American seamen and longshoremen are determined to take action to discourage the flow of supplies which strengthens North Viet Nam and their puppets in the Viet Cong in their aggressions and thus enlarges the threat to world peace."

The wire concluded that "very soon our members will begin to demonstrate their protest on all waterfronts in this country directed against any and all ships of those nations which permit trade with North Viet Nam."

MTD leaders said they hoped the Administration would be able to come up with a workable program so that the Washington conference and boycott program would not be necessary.

The department's resolution pointed out that a number of measures have been introduced in Congress calling for punitive actions against vessels trading with the North Vietnamese, including banning from U. S. ports, but that the State Dept. has refused to lend its support to the bills.

Survey Compares State Jobless Aid

A new 222-page "Comparison of State Unemployment Insurance Laws" has been issued by the Labor Dept. to help give the public a better understanding of the program and how it works.

The study covers state legislative changes during 1965 and includes sections on methods of financing, state unemployment insurance programs, benefits, conditions to be met for payment and administrative systems.

The volume was first published in 1937 and has been revised periodically since. The new edition, which includes a loose-leaf format for updating changes, may be purchased for $1.50 each from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. 20402.

'Passed Over' Unionists Win RehiringOrder

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has found Champion Papers, Inc., guilty of unlawfully refusing to rehire seven laid-off members of the Papermakers & Paperworkers because of their union sympathies, and recommended that they be returned to work with backpay for lost time.

The union charged that seven women workers, laid off during a reduction in force at the firm's Hamilton, O., plant, were passed over last May when Champion added 30 permanent employes to its staff of sorters.

After hearings, Examiner Ivar H. Peterson, former NLRB member, ruled that the firm failed to follow its own seniority practices and passed over the union adherents to discourage union membership.

Union Staffs Sharpen Skills at Institute

Full-time staff representatives of unions with locals in the South went to school for a month at the University of Georgia at Athens. They analyzed all phases of union work under modern conditions, got up-to-date reports on use of tools they need for union service. School was the Southern Staff Training Institute, third in a series sponsored by National Institute of Labor Education and AFL-CIO Departments of Education and Civil Rights. To date institute has trained 57 staffers from 20 unions, 18 states. Instructors came also from Universities of Texas and North Carolina, Michigan State and Clark University.

The Dirksen Filibuster

IT WAS the principles of representative democracy that suffered the most when a filibuster denied to the Senate its right to act on the bill to repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act.

As the votes proved, a majority of the Senate favored repeal and wanted to act on it. But this majority was prevented from even considering the bill when Sen. Dirksen led a filibuster coalition that included all but six of the Senate Republicans and all but four of the southern Democrats.

Sen. Dirksen succeeded in blocking repeal of 14(b). But by renewing the Republican-Dixiecrat alliance, he has raised once again the question of whether his party is the anti-labor party, the party that stands unalterably opposed to any social progress legislation.

This is the situation:

1. Section 14(b) remains on the books. The one break in an otherwise uniform edifice of labor relations law is unrepaired. The inequities that arise from compulsory open shop laws in 19 states will continue; the corrosive interstate competition for industry, based upon low wages, weak unions and minimal social benefits, will proceed; the costly intrastate conflicts over so-called "right-to-work" laws will be renewed and intensified.

2. Rule XXII of the Senate, which permits unlimited debate on any motion or any bill offered to the Senate unless a limit is imposed by a two-thirds majority of the senators present and voting, continues to frustrate majority action. It perpetuates the threat of negative government by 34 out of 100 senators. The threat became a reality on 14(b), and Sen. Dirksen has raised the same threat against minimum wage and unemployment compensation bills.

We in the AFL-CIO do not argue for shotgun government. We believe the Senate should have the power to delay, to debate at length, to give public opinion a chance to mobilize. As a minority we cherish the rights of all minorities. We are for full debate, as long as it ultimately reaches a terminal point when a vote is taken. We oppose debate whose only objective is to prevent a vote. The Senate does democracy a disservice by insisting that the only true majority is two-thirds.

3. The professional promoters of the invidious doctrine that masquerades as "right-to-work" have proclaimed their intention of mounting new campaigns in a number of the 31 free states. The turmoil and rancor these contests will arouse will be of their making. We will meet these attacks any place they arise.

4. All these problems call for political action. The liberals in the House and Senate must be re-elected in the 1966 elections, and their ranks increased. This means an even greater united effort by the labor movement.

The obstacles are formidable. The propaganda barrage against 14(b) repeal, based upon the most outrageous and inflammatory falsehoods, has misled thousands of well-meaning citizens.

There was literally no place where most citizens outside the labor movement could find an objective statement of the 14(b) issue or of the trade union position. The wells of information upon which Americans rely were for the most part poisoned by unbridled venom and deliberate dishonesty. Never have the purveyors of opinion been more unanimous in a shabbier cause.

Yet the truth can and will prevail, as it has prevailed before. Repeal of 14(b) is supported by a majority in the House and the Senate. It is supported by civil rights leaders and by the churches. It is supported by the people. Therefore, we look to the future with confidence that 14(b) will be repealed.

Changing Voter Power Patterns New Element in 1966 Elections

THE VOTERS in the November 1966 midterm elections will choose 435 members of the House, 35 members of the Senate and 35 governors, in addition to literally thousands of other officials for lesser state and municipal posts.

It has long been a generally accepted rule of American politics that in midterm elections (that is, the non-presidential years), the opposition party scores gains over the party in control of the White House.

Most of the one-time "rules" are now, however, out the window. It is no longer true, for example, that a presidential candidate who wins by a shattering majority can automatically pull in with him the coattailriders in races for the House and Senate. Eisenhower beat Stevenson in 1956 by more than 9 million votes but Democrats retained their grip on both houses of Congress. Kennedy Democrats in the midterm election of 1962 lost only a net of two House seats to the Republicans—practically a standoff, and far below the average of more than 40 seats that had shifted in midterm balloting for many years.

Besides, new elements must be taken into account this year. More than 20 states have rejiggered their congressional districts in line with the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" doctrine and more will have completed redistricting before next November. A member of the House may find himself running in a district that is more strongly Democratic or more strongly Republican than it was in 1964 and is at least partly unfamiliar.

In the southern states, the fact of heavier Negro registration—not as high as might have been hoped but nevertheless substantial enough to command respect among old-line white politicians—is a new element.

Still, it is possible nine months in advance of the elections to note certain facts and certain imponderables and apply them even to the races for governor, where the voters in recent years have shown a remarkable alacrity in throwing out whichever party was in power and voting in the other party.

The elections of 1966, indeed, may be the first where the ancient "rules" no longer apply because of changing power patterns among the voters—the influence of cities and the suburbs going up, the ancient dominance of sparsely-populated rural areas dipping.

THE DEMOCRATIC Party has shown great strength, as measured in votes for members of the House for many years. Its congressional candidates ran ahead of its presidential candidates in the elections of 1948, 1952, 1956 and 1960; only the disastrous Goldwater nomination of 1964 handed the Democratic nominee, Mr. Johnson, a national plurality so enormous that it outstripped the natural strength of his party. And the Johnson landslide, in turn, pulled into victory other Democratic candidates in districts they scarcely dreamed of ever winning, some by such thin pluralities that they obviously must now be counted as potentially vulnerable.

It is not generally realized how strong and steady a tide of Democratic victories has been flowing for at least 14 years, even when the GOP had the father image of Gen. Eisenhower as a presidential candidate.

Eisenhower had one Republican Congress—just one—and this by the narrowest of margins, in his eight years in the White House. He lost control in the mid-term elections of 1954 and Democratic victories since then have been piling up.

The Democrats scored a net gain of 47 seats in the House in 1958 and great successes in the Senate, including the election of the remarkable group labeled the Class of '58 that was totally re-elected in 1964.

Republicans in 1960 regained 21 of the 47 House seats they had lost in 1958, although their presidential candidate, former Vice Pres. Nixon, rolled up a personal vote surpassing the total GOP vote for Congress. But this was, for the time being, the end of the line. In the mid-term elections of 1962, when John F. Kennedy was in the White House, as noted above, the GOP's net gain in the House was only two seats.

With the Johnson landslide, the GOP suffered a net loss of an additional 37 House seats and two Senate seats to the Democrats in 1964. The party was left with only 17 governors out of 50—not even a quorum at the annual Governors Conference. It lost state legislatures and the mayors of municipalities, and sheriffs and judges in the counties.

So we come to 1966—and there aren't really any familiar "rules."

'Body Clocks' Put Off Balance By Jet-Speed Time Changes

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

LOS ANGELES—I am happy to note that the medical experts are digging into a problem that has bugged us jet-age travelers for a long time. The airlines are improving their storage and delivery services and I hardly ever lose my hand luggage anymore, but on long flights I am constantly leaving my emotional and physiological baggage behind.

Morgan

On a jet junket to Moscow a few years ago I must have dropped my basal metabolism somewhere over the Greenwich meridian. On a 27-hour swoop from Washington to Saigon last summer the timing of my digestive functions fell off into the Pacific long before we crossed the international dateline. Even on the momentary jaunt that spanning the American continent has become I often feel like a drop-out from the Lewis and Clark expedition.

With subborn pride I refused to admit that this was the fatigue of old age overtaking me and now I learn from the science news dispatches that I don't have to. Multiple crossings of time zones, it says here, make your "body clock" run down. Several months ago, in experiments run by the Federal Aviation Agency, some human guinea pigs were flown from Oklahoma City to Rome, penetrating seven time zones in a few hours; through 10 time zones to Manila and from Washington, D.C., to Santiago, Chile, a long flight with no time change; longitudinally speaking, Santiago is east of Washington.

What happened? According to a New York Times account, "after the west-to-east and east-to-west flights, even the Ph.D.'s in the two groups—all of whom were male college graduates—could not add up a double column of figures either rapidly or properly. All showed tension measured by an increased perspiration rate, and their decision-making processes were out of kilter.

"It took three to five times longer for their 'body clocks' to switch to foreign time. Every subject adapted much faster back home despite the equal number of time changes on the return flight.

"After the north-to-south Santiago flight, by contrast, the men showed nothing wrong except fatigue."

The human body, as well as other living organisms, it appears, functions by delicate internal rhythm patterns (or "biological clocks") which presumably may be disturbed by, among other things, rapid changes of time and place.

"Man's days, his nights, his diseases, his times of trouble, periods of confusion, moments of clarity," according to a recent bulletin from the National Institute of Mental Health, "may well be determined and balanced by a delicate and vastly complex intermeshing of biological time cycles."

Much more research is needed before hard and fast conclusions can be drawn about these phenomena. Scientists differ over where these rhythm mechanisms or clocks are located and what they are most sensitive to. It now seems very probable, however, as reported in The National Observer recently, that some of these cycles are entirely controlled by such external forces as light, darkness and significant changes in time.

THIS POSES intriguing and troublesome questions: what about the mental capacity of jet-propelled diplomats and businessmen to make command decisions after long, time-zone-consuming flights? (Already some corporations and the State Dept. are faced with the probable necessity of instructing their respective traveling representatives to rest at least a day before plunging into important negotiations abroad.)

If there is a problem now with jet travel, won't it be compounded when we start getting there in half the time via supersonic transport? We won't even mention the physiological complications of space travel for the moment. As for the mere supersonic jaunts, just around the corner of progress, Dr. Sheldon Freud, an Air Force research psychologist loaned to the FAA for its experiments, asked: "Will we have to rest twice as long afterward? Is it worthwhile getting over there in such a hurry?" In terms of safety and efficiency, one of the most vital questions of all is what happens to the body clocks of jet pilots on long flights?

In March the FAA plans to run the same extensive tests on 10 jet transport pilots which the initial experimental groups underwent in 1964 and 1965. The experiments will involve flights from New York to Rome and back.

Meanwhile it is timely respectfully to ponder the sharpness of mind, the clarity and penetration of thought on the part of peripatetic presidents and prime ministers, secretaries of state and other special emissaries who are obliged to convene summit meetings on earth-shaking problems instantly following long jet journeys and before they can rewind and reset their body clocks. As one privately exasperated bureaucrat put it the other day, "Washington is blessed with few enough top brains without dispatching men like Averell Harriman and Hubert Humphrey to run 100-yard dashes by jet all over the world."

Labor News Conference:

Beirne Urges Congress to Act On Automation Panel's Report

NOW THAT the National Committee on Technology, Automation & Economic Progress has completed its long study of automation-created problems, it is up to Congress to act on the panel's recommendations, a labor member of the commission has said.

The commission's report deals with more than 75 items that Congress can act on "either piecemeal or in a broad fashion," said Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, an AFL-CIO vice president.

Beirne said that among items that can be "immediately implemented right from the commission's report" are amendments to the Employment Act of 1946, which established maximum employment "as a national policy." Prompt congressional action on those "would go a long way toward providing the kind of economic climate that would eliminate unemployment" in the United States, he added. His statements came during the nationwide radio interview program, Labor News Conference.

Bierne said he considers the most important commission recommendations to be:

- "Free public education from nursery school through graduate school" for all youngsters, limited only by the ability and desire of the student.
- Establishment of a "negative income tax" to lift the income of all Americans above the poverty level.
- "A minimum wage that would apply to all workers."
- Making the federal government "the employer of last resort" that would put people unable to find other jobs to work on the nation's "great backlog" of public work needs.
- Establishment of a "system of matching men and jobs," that would enable unemployed workers to move to job openings elsewhere.

Reporters questioning Beirne on the AFL-CIO public service program, aired weekly over the Mutual Radio Network, were Frank Porter of the Washington Post and T. F. Coman of the Bureau of National Affairs.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE THESIS that opponents of the Administration's welfare programs can be appeased by extreme caution in budget-making took a beating when the House votes were counted on the special Viet Nam tax bill.

The ranking Republican member of the Ways & Means Committee, Rep. John W. Byrnes of Wisconsin, joined Democratic Chairman Wilbur D. Mills of Arkansas in supporting the Administration's program. Byrnes used to set the pace on fiscal matters for his fellow Republicans, but he did not set the pace for them on this bill.

There was some routine debate, with GOP orators making routine speeches against welfare programs, but most of the Republican leadership sat in dead silence.

Then came the blockbuster—a roll call vote on a motion by Republican Rep. James B. Utt of California to reject the bill as it stood and send it back to committee with instructions for deletion of its excise tax increases on automobiles and telephone calls.

Only 21 Republicans voted with Byrnes against the motion to recommit, while 111 voted in favor of it. Included in the 111 were Representatives Gerald R. Ford of Michigan, the GOP floor leader, Leslie Arends of Illinois, the whip, and John H. Rhodes of Arizona, the party's Policy Committee chairman.

Administration forces beat back the Utt recommittal motion but by an exceedingly narrow 207-187 margin. A shift of 11 votes would have inflicted a major defeat on the Administration.

THERE WAS A SIGN of trouble ahead, also, in the 76 Democratic votes cast for the Utt motion to recommit. They were principally southern Democratic votes, and that is a familiar pattern. But the issue was not one in which the conservative coalition could have been expected to show such strength.

This was a bill to finance the cost of our forces in Viet Nam. It was clearly labeled as such. The position of most Republicans has been to uphold Pres. Johnson's policy in Viet Nam, merely complaining that probably he ought to expand our activities.

Yet the Administration barely scraped through—and the only way the vote can be reasonably interpreted is as a warning of things to come when Congress gets around to appropriating money for domestic programs such as housing, anti-poverty activities and perhaps even school aid.

Indeed, Rep. Thomas B. Curtis of Missouri, ranking GOP member on the Joint Economic Committee, said during the debate that Congress ought to "rescind" some of the non-defense appropriations voted last year, although he then voted against the Utt motion.

"Inflation, inflation, the threat of inflation"—this is becoming a GOP battlecry as we come closer to the elections.

IT IS PERFECTLY CLEAR from the series of messages the President has sent Congress this year that he is by no means unaware of the budgetary problems people may invent for him.

He has proposed that we "cleanse our rivers," for example, but is willing to increase the federal contribution to sewage plants only in whatever "demonstration" river projects are finally authorized.

He wants whole areas of cities to be transformed—but here again he would confine early action to what might be called demonstration testing-places.

He has asked Congress for authorization of federal programs in many fields but accompanied the requests with indications that actual spending in the next fiscal year would be relatively small—often merely for planning and similar preliminaries.

There was no sign in the vote on the Utt motion that the President's carefulness in the budget-making process had won over his opponents. If they were against the welfare programs last year, they are against them all over again this year—with Viet Nam as the up-to-date excuse.

ACTION TO COMBAT automation-created problems is now up to Congress, Communications Workers Pres. Joseph A. Beirne (center) told reporters Frank Porter (left) of the Washington Post and T. F. Coman of the Bureau of National Affairs on Labor News Conference. The AFL-CIO vice president is a member of the National Commission on Technology, Automation & Economic Progress.

How to Buy:

Demand for Safety Creeping Up On Automobile Manufacturers

By Sidney Margolius

A BIG DEMAND is building up to get Detroit to design its cars for greater safety. The car makers may find the public clamor hard to resist, especially since the alternative may be laws imposing safety standards.

Manufacturers recently have found picket lines of doctors, lawyers and businessmen in front of their auto shows. Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D.-Wis.) has proposed a law to finance government research and testing of safety features. Sen. Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.) is holding hearings on the entire problem of auto and highway safety. Several states are passing laws of their own requiring specific features.

The whole point is, experts do not believe that the several safety features made standard instead of optional on this year's cars really solve the need. They feel Detroit has emphasized speed and style, and has sought to save on production costs at the expense of safety.

The government itself will require that the cars its General Services Administration buys in 1967 have additional features. Some of these now are available as options.

These include padded dash and visors; safety door latches and hinges; anchorages for seat belt assemblies and seats; dual brake systems; safety glass; safety tires and rims; dual speed windshield wipers and washers; glare resistant dashboards; dash-light brake warning; four-way flasher to flash all signal lights simultaneously to warn of danger, and impact-absorbing steering wheels and columns.

The GSA requirements also will seek to provide more uniformity among different makes when safety is involved. All the cars it buys will have to have uniform bumpers and the same automatic shift arrangement.

One of the most useful features GSA will require is a dual braking system, with a second master cylinder in case the first one loses its fluid. Curiously, this has been available now only on one of the lowest-price makes and one of the costliest. At one meeting of automotive experts a GM engineer was asked why the system was not available on other GM cars. He said they didn't need it. Later he was asked why it was provided on the Cadillac. He said it was safer.

It costs about $50 to have an additional master cylinder installed after you buy a car, our technical consultant advises. But it would cost only $5 at the factory, he estimates.

Dr. Paul Gikas, who was a consultant to the GSA, has called the new specifications "nothing to brag about."

OTHER FEATURES which experts would like to see are a back window defogger, cornering lights, and an automobile roll-bar for added protection if a car accidentally rolls over on its top. Others have suggested independent rear suspension, hydraulic bumpers, and disc brakes (now available as an option on some makes).

The suspension design of cars, though somewhat improved in 1966, has long been a source of criticism. Detroit gives a billowy ride at the expense of stability, one expert points out.

Much of the rising demand for greater safety and even government testing has been caused by the accidents involving earlier Corvair models. In recent years some 500 lawsuits were filed against GM for alleged defects in the Corvair. Many of these incidents occurred in 1960, '61 and '62. Many of these suits charged that these early-model Corvairs unexpectedly went out of control and crashed.

In a new book, Unsafe at Any Speed, Ralph Nader, an attorney who has long studied auto safety, charges that the suspension system on the earlier Corvairs was unsatisfactory under certain circumstances, such as a sudden swerve or cornering at high speed.

Other complaints were that there was a tendency toward oversteering and insufficient stability in strong winds at high speed.

This problem is considered to be corrected on the later models of Corvair by improvements in the suspension system.

Job Injuries Show Rise, Fatalities Decline in '65

Chicago—Deaths due to on-the-job accidents dropped to 14,100 last year, a decline of 100 from 1964, but disabling injuries rose from 2,050,000 to 2,100,000, the National Safety Council reported.

The cost—in lost earnings, medical expenses, insurance payments, interrupted production time lost by other workers, and losses from fires associated with the accidents—was estimated at $6 billion.

The death rate from work accidents also showed a decline of 1 percent last year to 7.3 fatalities per 100,000 population.

Broken down by classifications, the death toll last year was: trade 1,200; manufacturing 1,800; transportation and public utilities 1,700; mining, quarrying and gas wells 700; service and government 3,000; agriculture 3,000, and construction 2,700.

Misinterpretation 'Unfortunate':

Educational Tests Held Open to Error

ALTHOUGH intelligence and achievement tests have made a substantial contribution to American education, misinterpretation or misuse of the results has had some unfortunate consequences.

Especially unfortunate has been the assumption that "human ability is more fixed and the rate of development is more completely predetermined by heredity than they really are. . . . Evidence . . . indicates that experience, and particularly pre-school experience, can make substantial differences in a child's IQ score."

That is one of the major points made in "What You Should Know about Educational Testing," by J. McV. Hunt, a new Public Affairs pamphlet. The author is a professor of psychology at the University of Illinois and a frequent contributor to professional journals.

"When a teacher assumes that intelligence is fixed and that development is largely predetermined," he finds, "it dampens his ardor for the innovation of new teaching materials and methods. . . . Similarly, some parents have tended to think of one of their children as bright and have encouraged him to study while thinking of another as dumb for whom special educational opportunities would be a waste. [This] may do a grave injustice to both children."

Although division of pupils according to level of ability can benefit both those with high and those with low scores, Hunt stresses that "these groupings should never be permanent." The goal should be to see that each child is taught in the way best calculated to bring out his abilities. Unfortunately, however, "school administrators have all too commonly assigned the most skilled teachers to classes with high scores while assigning the newly trained and those whose skill is questionable to classes with low scores, which tends to give these groupings permanence."

THIS CRITICISM is especially relevant today. Many slum children enter school with a severe handicap that is a natural result of their limited opportunities. Without corrective opportunities, they will be ill equipped for coping with teaching designed for children from the suburbs.

Another source of error is "failure to recognize that scholastic performance is what really counts, and that it takes into account characteristics that may not be measured by the tests of ability or aptitude." Hunt offers several examples of erroneous judgments which were made solely on the basis of low test scores and ignored more favorable classroom performance. It should be noted too that a high test score in contrast to mediocre academic performance may be a clue to low motivation or poor work habits, he says.

On balance, Hunt finds "existing tests have some defects, but decisions based upon proper interpretations of test results are far more accurate than decisions based upon unaided parent or teacher judgments, and more accurate than decisions based on mere grades or ranks in classes" which do not take into account variations among classes and schools.

Poor Li'l Rosy-Fingered Dawn Has to Fight for a Cold Welcome

By Jane Goodsell

ON THE SUBJECT of daybreak, I'm afraid I don't see eye to eye with the world's great poets. Robert Browning waxed ecstatic over the dew-pearled earth when morning's at seven and all's right with the world. Homer sang of dawn's rosy fingers, and Shakespeare rhapsodized over the many glorious mornings he had seen.

Whenever I read one of these lyric outbursts in celebration of dawn's early light, my heart goes out to the man's poor wife. What a trial it must have been to be married to a man who greeted the day by exclaiming, "But look, the morn in russet mantle clad/Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill."

My husband, bless his heart, behaves more rationally. When the alarm goes off, he groans, whimpers and curses his fate like a decent, normal human being. Since I greet the rosy-fingered dawn with equal displeasure, we begin the day in perfect accord. We are both wretched, moody, morose and—most important of all—silent. I cannot understand how a marriage can succeed when one member wakes up awake and the other wakes up still asleep.

Still, we are not 100 percent compatible because my husband's recuperative powers far exceed mine. By the time he has showered, shaved, dressed, drunk two glasses of orange juice and three cups of coffee, he is in full possession of his faculties and capable of rational and coherent speech.

I am still in a state of shock—dazed and disoriented. It requires my full powers of concentration to remember where we keep the milk.

DESPITE clear proof that I am unfit for matutinal conversation, he persists in interrogating me at breakfast.

"Hey!" he says, snapping his fingers to rouse me from my morning torpor. "Hey! Does the laundryman come today? From his tone it's obvious that this is the third—or perhaps the fourth—time he has posed the same question.

"What?" I ask. "Who?"

"The laundryman. Does he come today? I'm out of shirts."

"Wh-what's today?"

"Wednesday. Yesterday was Tuesday. Tomorrow is Thurs—oh, forget it!" He shakes his head despairingly and departs for the office.

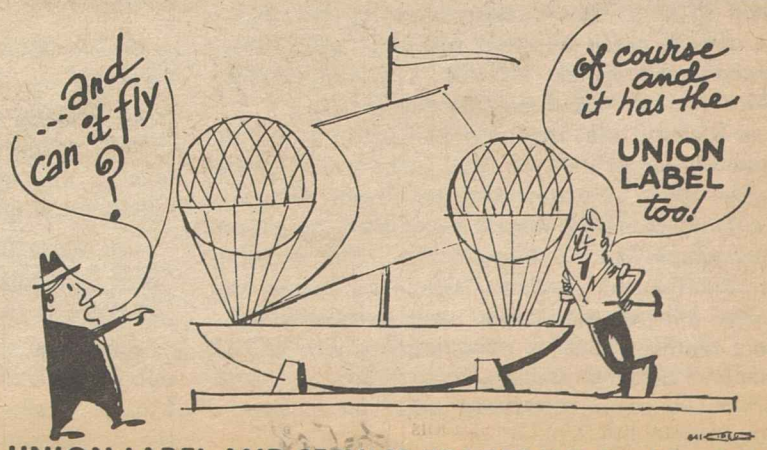
Obviously, I would be better off married to a man who isn't alert and intelligent at the breakfast table. Still, things could be worse. At least he isn't rhapsodical and, when I consider the lyricism poor Mrs. Browning had to put up with, I consider myself a fortunate woman.



UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Union Asks New Contract:

Mediators Take On Rail Firemen Issue

Cleveland, O.—The National Mediation Board has assigned mediators to help settle the railroad firemen dispute, Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen reported here.

Gilbert said he was notified that the board has scheduled mediation meetings on the Chesapeake & Ohio, Louisville & Nashville and Pacific Lines (Southern Pacific). He expects it to act soon on the four other roads where the union is pressing for a settlement—the Baltimore & Ohio, Norfolk & Western, Santa Fe and Atlantic Coast Line.

The BLF&E has notified all seven roads that it wants to negotiate new contract terms covering firemen, including those forced off their jobs by a decision that expires Mar. 31 under a 1963 federal law compelling arbitration of crew sizes to avoid a railroad strike.

In the meantime, Gilbert's union asked a U. S. District Court in Chicago to rule that the "force and effect" of the decision which cost 17,500 firemen their jobs on all U. S. roads will expire officially Mar. 31. The union also asked the court to enjoin the railroads from violating a May 17, 1950, agreement that the BLF&E says becomes effective again when terms of the compulsory arbitration law expire.

No hearing date has been set in the suit, filed Feb. 17.

In a parallel development, Gilbert cited a recent report by the Interstate Commerce Commission as confirming his union's charge of an "alarming" rise in train accidents and deaths since firemen were removed from diesel freight and yard locomotives starting May 7, 1964.

Gilbert said the commission's 79th annual report for calendar 1964 showed an increase of 12.9 percent in train accident fatalities; a rise of 10.9 percent in train accidents; and a continued rise in safety law violations by railroads.

Railroad train and train service accidents resulted, the ICC report said, in 2,344 deaths and 18,334 injuries during 1964, compared with 2,077 killed and 18,289 injured the year before.

Gilbert called the rail accident picture "much worse" than the statistics show because, the ICC has only enough staff to investigate about 50 of the 5,000 to 6,000 accidents happening yearly on railroads. He charged also that more than 10 percent of actual accidents are not reported by managements.

The ICC noted "a sharp rise in violations of the various railroad safety laws in the past five years. Equipment is being utilized more often, leaving less time for maintenance" the commission said. It added: "Carriers have decreased the number of maintenance and repair facilities, and employes engaged in such work" while the accident toll rises.

Union Wins Election In Spite of 'Promotions'

Fort Worth, Tex.—The Boilermakers overcame last-minute raises and announced "promotions" of half the bargaining unit at the American Mfg. Co. here to win a National Labor Relations Board election, 57-7.

The victory was important, AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Lester Graham said, because of the principle at stake—whether management can by making sudden "promotions" destroy effective union representation.

The election results were favorable but management has announced it will carry on the fight in the courts, Graham said in a report to Federation Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher.

Last Nov. 2 the union petitioned for an election among company inspectors and warehouse employes. At an NLRB hearing the firm stated its claim that inspectors are supervisors, but the claim was rejected then, as were challenges to inspectors voting in the election.

About two weeks before the Feb. 15 vote, the company gave raises ranging from 15 cents to 25 cents an hour to 52 of the 103 inspectors, telling them they were supervisors.

The Boilermakers won two previous elections at the same plant—in April 1964 as bargaining agent for production and maintenance employes, and a decertification election July 8, 1965. The vote for the union was 180-101 in the first election, 189-69 in the second.

AFL-CIO organizers J. M. Scott and I. R. Gray participated with the Boilermakers in the election campaign among employes of the firm, which makes pumping equipment.

Job Training Pact Signed By BSEIU

A school for the unemployed offering training in custodial work will be set up in Washington within the next two weeks by the Building Service Employes under a contract with the U.S. Office of Education.

The school, co-sponsored by Washington Locals 82 and 536 as well as the international union, has rented its own facilities and will operate on a classroom basis with full-time instructors. Each of the four training periods planned for 1966 will enroll 40 students and last for 12 weeks.

Prospects will be supplied through local and federal agencies, screened by the U.S. Employment Service and indoctrinated so they will be aware of the type of training they will receive and the type of job for which they are heading. BSEIU Rep. Richard E. Murphy will be administrator of the school.

"Our main purpose in sponsoring this school," said BSEIU Pres. David Sullivan, "is to secure jobs for unemployed workers after they have completed the course. The school represents a concrete effort to support Pres. Johnson's War on Poverty. If it is successful we hope to establish similar schools in other cities."

Quill Lauded At Memorial In New York

New York — More than 4,000 persons paid final tribute to the late Pres. Michael J. Quill of the Transport Workers at a memorial service in Manhattan Center at which a message from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany hailed him as "a staunch ally in the fight for our common goal — an ever-growing trade union movement dedicated to the advancement of workers and the progress of the nation."

Quill died Jan. 28. Meany, attending AFL-CIO Executive Council sessions in Bal Harbour, Fla., was represented by AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann, who read his message.

"Because he was a strong and courageous man," Meany said, "Mike Quill became a symbol of trade union militancy, but to the Transport Workers he was another sort of symbol—a symbol of the freedom and the better life they had won through the union of which he was the chief architect. The Transport Workers will miss him as a leader, and all of us who knew him well over the years will miss him as a warm personal friend."

Other speakers included Arthur J. Goldberg, U. S. ambassador to the United Nations and former union counsel; Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO, and Theodore W. Kheel, labor mediator and arbitrator.

Marist College Honors Beirne

New York—Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, was one of two recipients of Great Contemporary Americans awards given by Marist College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., at a dinner here attended by more than 700 representatives of religion, labor, education, business and industry. Francis Cardinal Spellman of New York was the other recipient in the first of what the college plans to make annual awards.

Beirne, chairman of the AFL-CIO Community Services Committee, paid tribute during his acceptance remarks to the "millions of members of trade unions who are vitally concerned with education and community service."

At the same event, the college presented Pres. Toby Coletti of the Long Island AFL-CIO with its community service award.

Jobless Benefits Upheld For Duration of Lockout

Sacramento, Calif.—Workers whose employers lock them out in anticipation of a strike that hasn't even been called are entitled to unemployment compensation, the California Supreme Court has decreed.

The ruling reversed a District Court of Appeals finding that employers could lock out their employes without liability for statutory jobless benefits.

The dispute, which went on for more than four years before being resolved by the state's highest court, originated during negotiations on a new contract between Butchers Local 563, Huntington Park, and the Coast Packing Co. and other meat packing and processing firms.

"The final action is a victory for every worker in California and for the public interest at large," said State AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts, "because it amounts to reassurance that the fundamental purpose of our jobless insurance program is not going to be subverted by judicial decree."

The state labor central body submitted a friend of the court brief to the Supreme Court, and its general counsel presented oral arguments.

When Local 563 and the company were negotiating in September 1961 the union refused to give assurance that it would allow time to clear cattle pens and coolers before calling a strike. It turned down a company proposal to extend the existing contract beyond its Oct. 1 expiration date, with any settlement to be retroactive. Coast Packing began to curtail operations on Sept. 29. The following day the union offered to extend the agreement for 10 days, but the company refused. On Oct. 2 the firm and other packing houses locked out their employes. A new agreement was reached on Oct. 18.

However, the company tried to block unemployment compensation benefits for the period Oct. 2-18, citing a proviso in the law barring payments to any worker who "left work because of a trade dispute." The union pointed to court rulings that have consistently found workers are not disqualified unless they "voluntarily" leave work during a dispute.

The employer refused to agree and the union took the issue to the courts. Its position was upheld by the Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board and the Superior Court of Los Angeles, but the District Court of Appeals upset the finding.

The Supreme Court in its decision said that if employes are to be denied benefits, there must be "some volitional conduct on their part which reasonably causes the work stoppage." It found none in the Coast Packing case.

Approval of the company's position, the court held, "would be to disqualify any employe because an employer closed his plant to avoid economic loss."

"This would surely defeat the very purpose of the scheme of unemployment insurance benefits and would justify almost every closure, including lockouts," the court ruled.

Senate Races Shape Up In Two States

Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) announced that he would retire at the end of his second term this year and the possibility arose immediately that there would be a sharp Democratic primary battle for the succession between Mayor Jerome Cavanagh of Detroit and G. Mennen Williams, six times elected governor, who has served since 1961 as assistant secretary of state for African affairs.

The Republican nominee appears certain to be Rep. Robert P. Griffin, co-sponsor of the 1959 Landrum-Griffin Act.

Neither Cavanagh nor Williams has made a formal declaration of candidacy for the Democratic nomination, but Cavanagh has been frequently mentioned as a candidate and Williams has said he has given consideration to entering the race.

In Tennessee, a statewide Republican primary race for a Senate seat was assured when Howard H. Baker, Jr., son of a long-time GOP House member, announced he would run against Kenneth Roberts, state campaign manager for Barry Goldwater two years ago.

The incumbent is Democratic Sen. Ross Bass, elected two years ago to fill out the unexpired term of the late Sen. Estes Kefauver.

UNION COUNSELLING CLASS given in New Haven, Conn., for members of locals of the Communications Workers, was graduated after 10 weeks of lectures and discussions on voluntary and tax-supported agencies, social security, medicare and other welfare programs. Frank Fallon (standing, fourth from right), United Fund labor staffer, was the course coordinator.

Discredited 'Weep' Film Still Used By Employers Fighting Unions

Employers are still showing the discredited anti-labor movie, "And Women Must Weep" to their workers in an effort to keep them out of unions, a report to the National Labor Relations Board has disclosed.

In the latest instance, an NLRB trial examiner reported that a Southern firm has been repeatedly showing the film to captive audiences of new employes.

He recommended that the Southwire Co. be ordered to abandon the practice at its plant in Carrollton, Ga., but refused to order the reinstatement of two employes who campaigned for the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers during a 1965 organizing effort. The two had refused to take lie detector tests and by so doing, the examiner held, brought about their dismissals by their own actions.

The IUE said it will file exceptions to the decision on the ground that the use of lie detectors in employment has been banned by several courts.

The union said that Southwire, which has 900 employes making wire cable, previously was found guilty of interfering with employe rights and has over the years shown "open and intractable opposition to any unionization of its plant."

Examiner Maurice S. Bush ruled that the "Weep" movie contains implied threats of reprisal against union supporters and has the effect of restraining and coercing employes in the exercise of their organizing rights.

Regular Treat

Bush cited the position of the NLRB general counsel that "the repeated showing of this film conveys" to employes the impression that union organizing "would seriously threaten" not only their jobs but their physical security.

After viewing the movie, the examiner upheld the general counsel and the IUE on charges filed a year ago.

Showing of the "Weep" film has caused the NLRB, in cases extending back to 1961, to set aside four elections lost by unions because the film exceeds the permissible bounds of free speech. In another case, the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board voided an election after viewing both the "Weep" movie and a documentary film called "Anatomy of a Lie," produced by the Machinists in rebuttal.

"Weep" purports to document a 1957 strike at the plant of the Potter-Brumfield Co. at Princeton, Ind. Actually, the IAM found it is a fictionalized account with a contrived script showing a brutal local union president forcing a strike on terrorized members and then committing violence in the community.

The IAM reported the actual facts: only nine of the 400 members of the IAM local voted against the strike after a plea by the union president—a warm, grandmotherly woman—not to walk out on her account but only if provoked by company actions.

The IAM "Anatomy of a Lie" film revealed the company's importation of strikebreakers and presented the testimony of the sheriff and the father of a baby wounded by a shot in the night that there was no evidence whatever tieing the union to the violence.

In holding in the Southwick case that no unfair practice was involved in the firings for refusal to take lie detector tests in a dispute over a falsely punched timecard, the examiner explained:

"This is not to be interpreted as a criticism of the two employes" who were in a dilemma. Although they asserted innocence and "there is no legal proof that they were not innocent, if the tests . . . show them guilty, their employment record could be besmirched for all time."

If they failed to take the test, Bush noted, they could be fired. Instead they chose, "as many honorable and intelligent employes would," not to submit, the examiner reported.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council deplored the use of "so-called lie detectors" in a 1965 resolution, "not only because their claims to reliability are dubious but because they infringe" on the citizen's right to personal privacy.

Union's Right to Know Issue in Court Review

The Supreme Court agreed to review a case involving a union's right to information on a company's transfer of machinery to another location.

The dispute stems from the removal of machinery from an Acme Industrial Co. plant in Chicago. The company refused to tell the Auto Workers why the equipment was being moved and where it was being sent. The union contract provides that if the company moves work to another plant, employes may claim jobs at the new location.

Acting on an unfair labor charge filed by the UAW, the National Labor Relations Board ruled that the union had a right to the information. A federal appellate court, however, denied enforcement of the NLRB order, declaring that the union's request should have been resolved through the contract's grievance and arbitration machinery.

The NLRB had asked the Supreme Court to review the case, declaring that the decision could affect "innumerable collective bargaining agreements."

In another case, the Supreme Court refused to review—and thus left standing—a lower court decision that will require many labor relations consultants to disclose to the government full lists of their corporate clients.

Under the Landrum-Griffin Act, persons hired by an employer to persuade workers not to organize must file details of the arrangement with the secretary of labor and also submit an annual report showing receipts and expenses "of any kind from employers on account of labor relations advice or services."

A North Carolina lawyer, R. D. Douglas, Jr., in 1960 and 1961 filed three reports dealing with payment for speeches to groups of employes. However, he refused to list all his clients and fees, declaring that the Labor Dept. exceeded its authority by requesting the information.

A federal district court upheld Douglas, but an appeals court reversed the decision and ordered him to furnish the information. The appellate court ruling now becomes final.

Fortas Leads Strong Dissent:

Court Ruling Opens Unions to Libel Suits

A closely divided Supreme Court ruled that parties to a labor dispute may sue for libel under state laws if they claim that untrue charges were made with malice and caused provable damage.

The 5-4 decision overruled lower court dismissal of a $1 million libel suit brought by an official of the Pinkerton Detective Agency. The suit was against a Detroit local of the unaffiliated United Plant Guard Workers, two union officers and a Pinkerton employe who circulated a leaflet during an organizing campaign.

A federal district judge and the U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals had held that state libel laws did not apply because Congress had given the National Labor Relations Board exclusive jurisdiction to police union representation campaigns.

Justice Tom C. Clark, speaking for the court majority, said the NLRB's concern applies only to the effect of libelous statements on the free choice of workers and provides no redress for "personal injury caused by malicious libel."

Two strong dissents were entered by the minority.

Justice Abe Fortas charged the decision "jeopardizes the measure of stability painstakingly achieved in labor-management relations. It introduces a potentially disruptive device into the comprehensive structure created by Congress for resolving these disputes." He said no libel suit should be allowed in a labor dispute "where the allegedly defamatory statement is confined to matters which are part of the fabric of the dispute."

2 Join Fortas

Fortas was joined in his dissent by Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justice William O. Douglas.

Justice Hugo L. Black, in a separate dissent, said the decision "tosses a monkey wrench into the collective bargaining machinery Congress set up to try to settle labor disputes."

The objective of the National Labor Relations Act, Black stressed, was "to settle disputes—not to aggravate them."

He said it would be "difficult to conceive of an element more certain to create irritations guaranteed to prevent fruitful collective bargaining discussions than the threat or presence of a large monetary judgment gained in a libel suit generating anger and a desire for vengeance."

The court majority acknowledged that it found it "difficult" to draw a line between the area pre-empted by federal labor law and "the traditional concern and responsibility of the state to protect its citizens against defamatory attack."

It noted also that language "commonplace" in labor disputes might be grounds for action under some state laws, without the need to prove specific damage.

The decision sought to meet this problem by declaring:

"We therefore limit the availability of state remedies for libel to those instances in which the complainant can show that the defamatory statements were circulated with malice and caused him damage."

Flaw Noted

It noted that the libel suit brought by the Pinkerton official did not specify the nature of the claimed damages and therefore would not meet the court's criterion. It said the complainant should be given permission to revise his suit if he still wishes the case to go to trial.

The leaflet which touched off the court battle alleged that "Pinkerton guards were robbed of pay increases" and that "Pinkerton managers were lying to us."

The suit was brought by an assistant general manager of the Pinkerton agency, William C. Linn, who claimed that he was one of the managers referred to in the leaflet, and that the statements were "defamatory and untrue."

Previously the agency had filed unfair labor practice charges against the union on the basis of the leaflet, but both the regional director and the NLRB general counsel refused to issue a complaint.

The court majority left open the possibility of reconsideration if the line it sought to draw between state and federal jurisdiction proves through experience to interfere with federal labor policies.

If this should be the case, "the court will be free to reconsider" the issue, the decision noted, since its ruling does not rest on "a constitutional issue, but solely with the degree to which state remedies have been pre-empted" by federal law.

Guild Members to Teach Journalism in Viet Nam

Two members of the Newspaper Guild will spend three months teaching journalism to South Vietnamese newspapermen at an institute in Saigon set up by the Intl. Federation of Journalists at the request of the South Vietnam Union of Journalists.

They are Farnsworth Fowle, a newspaperman for 26 years who has worked for the New York Times since 1949, and Rene Torre, of Montreal, Que., a news editor for the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.

About 40 Vietnamese newspapermen will attend the institute, which will have morning and afternoon sessions so they can continue to work at their jobs. In addition to instruction by Torre and Fowle, who will teach in French, the students will be given lectures by Saigon university professors in subjects such as economics, history, political science, legal procedures and sociology.

Arrangements for the institute were made by ANG Intl. Affairs Rep. Ronald Watts after conferences in Saigon with Ho Van Dong, IFJ vice president for Asia, and Sec. Phan Nhu My of the Vietnamese newspaper union. IFJ training, they said, would help improve professional morale and instill enthusiasm for a free press.

Fowle has been covering the United Nations General Assembly for the Times following service in Turkey, Greece, Germany and England, and previously worked for CBS News, the former Intl. News Service and Time magazine. Torre, born in Morocco of French parents, worked for the Depeche de Tangier which was owned by his grandfather, in Tangiers, before going to Canada in 1957. Both Fowle and Torre are active union members.

Unions Score Gains In Fringe Benefits

Unions have been winning important benefits for their members in contract "fringe" areas while public attention generally has been focusing on wages, the AFL-CIO American Federationist reports in its February issue.

Because of the favorable climate for collective bargaining in 1965 —rising sales, profits and employment—many gains were achieved in the area of shorter hours, pensions, health and welfare programs, longer vacations, stronger job security and other non-wage areas, the magazine says in a report by Rudolph Oswald, economist for the the federation's Dept. of Research.

Fringe gains achieved last year point to further gains this year, said Oswald. He concluded that fringe benefits are of major importance in protecting the health of workers and their families, in increasing leisure time, cushioning the impact of technological change and securing "better and earlier pensions."

In the field of retirement benefits, the survey reports, pension gains last year continued the trend set earlier by "significantly" increasing benefits for retirees and by allowing those below 65 to retire on full benefits. Millions of workers were affected, it points out, by negotiations in the steel, can, glass, aluminum, aerospace, longshore, garment and other industries.

Notable improvements were won in several union pension plans—benefits ranging up to $5.50 a month times years of service; retirement at any age after 30 years of service; supplemental payments up to $100 a month until early retirees reach age 65; "portable" pensions that may be carried from one job to another in the construction trades, the glass industry and others.

The Longshoremen won a provision that widows of 25-year workers who die before retirement may draw a pension of $87.50 a month. Washington, D.C., Transit Employes achieved a yearly increase in pension payment based on the percentage increase in the top operators' rate, including cost-of-living adjustments.

The survey stressed new contract protections negotiated in 1965 to meet problems caused by automation. They included work guarantees, attrition clauses, protection against wage rate cutbacks, advance notice of major changes, automation funds and better transfer arrangements.

The ILA won an agreement that all New York dockworkers are guaranteed 1,600 hours of work or pay per year, provided they worked at least 700 hours in the preceding year.

Attrition Plan

Five unions negotiated an attrition clause protecting 300,000 railroad workers against job loss after two years of service.

In the field of shorter hours, the article notes numerous gains, including workweeks of 35 to 37.5 hours in the construction and printing industries, as well as some trade, manufacturing and service companies.

Carpenters in San Francisco negotiated a 4.5-day week with eight hours of work for four days, 4.5 hours on the fifth, the survey notes.

Longer vacations also are becoming the rule, it adds. The fifth week of vacation is spreading, and the sixth and seventh week is being won for veteran employes. The Brewery Workers won seven weeks after 25 years in three contracts.

Numerous improvements in supplemental unemployment benefits and savings plans are listed.

In most negotiations, it notes, wage issues continue to dominate the bargaining. But, it adds, "unions also seek to protect the worker and his family from the worst hazards of modern life" particularly job loss, inadequate medical services and insufficient family income during periods of illness, accidents and unemployment.

Rail Fireman Cited For Saving 4 Boys

Canton, O. — Sixty-year-old James M. Duffy, whose alertness enabled him to save the lives of four boys walking in the path of the moving Pennsylvania Railroad train on which he was a fireman-helper, was presented with the fourth quarter 1965 Safety Award by the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen.

Duffy, a member of the union's Lodge 630 here, spotted the boys as his 61-car freight rounded a curve near Braddock, Pa., which prevented Engineer D. P. Faulds from seeing them. He began blowing the whistle, which the children were unable to hear because of a passing train on another track, and shouted to Faulds to apply the brakes.

Three of the boys got off the track safely, but the smallest, five-year-old James Berkavich of Braddock, was thrown against a screen fence. Duffy's speedy action was credited with averting harm to the older boys and with preventing more serious injury to the youngest.

Women Teach the Men At State COPE Parley

Middletown, Conn.—The women taught the men a thing or two at a two-day statewide COPE conference at Wesleyan University here.

Fifty-five delegates from Connecticut's central bodies learned at first hand how much work goes into the card files compiled by Women's Activities Dept. volunteers—and how useful the files and skills of WAD members can be in a campaign.

State WAD Directors Ruth Greenberg and Madeline Matchko helped State AFL-CIO Pres. John Driscoll prepare the program for the conference. At one point, each delegate was given the names of several union members to process for a card file, using a city directory, precinct finder, reverse telephone book and an official roster of voters.

Emphasis was put on the values of card files for special mailings, telephone campaigns and recruiting COPE workers, as well as registration and get-out-the-vote drives.

Unions Open Meeting Halls For Training

New York—A demonstration program aimed at qualifying 17-to-22-year-olds for chronically unfilled jobs, with union halls as the first classrooms, has been set up by the labor-backed Coordinating Council on Education for the Disadvantaged. The CCED will undertake the project under contract with the Office of Manpower & Training of the Labor Dept.

Known as Program SAVE (sub-professional and vocational education), it will prepare young men and women whose high school educations have proved inadequate, most of them Negroes or Puerto Ricans, for entry into community colleges where their training will be completed.

Job Follow-Up

A follow-up program that includes working with U.S. Employment Service offices will channel them into jobs.

Eight unions have offered their halls for use in the program—Sleeping Car Porters, Ladies' Garment Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 3, Teachers Local 2, Longshoremen's Local 1814, Seafarers, Auto Workers Reg. 9-9A and Millinery Workers Local 2.

SAVE is financed to serve 800 young men and women in its first year. Upon registration at a union center, the student will be given an appointment with a counsellor who will assign him to qualified and sympathetic tutors in the subjects in which he needs help. When he is fully prepared he will be assisted in entering the community college for his sub-professional training, during which SAVE will keep an eye on his progress, and thence into a job.

The program is intended to deal with the problem of those whose education has left them unprepared to enter the world of work so that they go jobless while many jobs are unfilled.

CCED membership includes AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, several AFL-CIO vice presidents, Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO and officials of many New York unions. The chairman is Benjamin F. McLaurin, eastern zone official of the Sleeping Car Porters and a member of the Board of Higher Education of New York City.

Retail Clerks to Contest NLRB Lockout Ruling

The National Labor Relations Board, in a decision challenged by the Retail Clerks, has upheld the right of employers in a multi-employer bargaining group to lock out employes in non-union as well as union stores.

The board ruled that a food store chain was "preserving the integrity" of the employer bargaining unit when it closed 28 stores whose employes were not in the bargaining unit, and kept them on the payroll when nearby stores were closed during a 1964 strike.

Four board members ruled that the closing by Acme Markets, Inc., of the non-union stores on the Eastern Shore of Chesapeake Bay was not an illegal attempt to discourage union membership. The fifth member, Gerald A. Brown, concurred, saying there was no lockout and "no meaningful discrimination" against the non-unit employes.

An RCIA spokesman called the decision "dreadful" and said the union will ask the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals to set it aside. He called employer tactics in the dispute a "very sophisticated concept of anti-union strategy" that cannot go unchallenged.

The union filed charges against Acme after settlement of a strike extending from Apr. 17 to June 24, 1964.

The strike was called against all Acme stores covered by the Retail Clerks' contract with the employer, who bargains in a group of chains represented by the Baltimore Food Employers' Labor Relations Association. No other stores were struck but all members of the employer association closed down and Acme shut 28 stores in Maryland, Delaware and Virginia to avoid benefiting from the closing of competitors' stores. Another 23 Acme stores stayed open.

Both union and management agree, the board voted, that the lockout of employers in the bargaining unit was a "lawful multi-employer defensive lockout" under the rule validated by the Supreme Court that members of a multi-employer unit may lock out workers to protect themselves against a "whipsaw" strike. The question at issue was whether management could lawfully lock out employes in stores not involved in the labor dispute.

The board ruled that it can where the facts "establish that the lockout was intended to serve a legitimate business interest" and contained no evidence of intent to discourage union membership. All five members voted to dismiss the complaint.

Standby Program Urged To Meet Economic Ills

A limited form of "standby" tax and public works legislation has been suggested by the National Planning Association to counter either recession or inflation threats to the economy.

The NPA statement noted that Congress has turned a cold shoulder to proposals that the President be given flexible powers to lower or raise taxes and spending to meet changing economic conditions.

The 32-year-old private planning group presented as an alternative a program which would leave the final decision in the hands of Congress. The proposed standby legislation would not take effect unless (1) requested by the President, (2) recommended by the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, and (3) authorized by Congress through passage of a joint resolution.

Also recommended by the NPA was an expansion of the President's annual economic report to include longer-range projections for economic development.

The statement, issued on the 20th anniversary of the Employment Act of 1946, noted that new tools have been fashioned to steer the economy in recent years. The emphasis today is on sustaining a desirable rate of economic growth, the statement noted.

It said longer-term projections can contribute to this goal "by providing orientation for government programs and private investment planning."

State-County Union Nets Delaware Gains

Wilmington—The first union contract covering public employes in Delaware has been negotiated by the State Tax Dept. and the State, County & Municipal Employes.

It establishes a union shop and provides big gains in working conditions, fringe benefits and job security for the agency's 155 employes.

The pace-setting agreement is also expected to spur a statewide organizing campaign that has seen the AFSCME win nine consecutive union representation elections among state and county employes.

The organizing surge stems from a 1965 law which gave collective bargaining rights to public employes in Delaware for the first time. It set up ground rules for union representation elections, granted a dues check-off when a union wins bargaining rights, and authorized state and county agencies to negotiate contracts.

The legislation was signed last June and the AFL-CIO regional organizing staff has been working with a team of AFSCME organizers in the unbroken series of election victories. The joint campaign has also been getting an assist from the State AFL-CIO, which was instrumental in getting the collective bargaining law through the legislature.

The agreement between the tax agency and AFSCME Local 1385 provides:

- A union shop covering all future employes and nearly all present employes. The only exemptions are employes who were hired before 1940. There are only two such employes.
- Improved vacations including three weeks after five years (previously 10 years), four weeks after 10 years (previously 15), and new provisions for five weeks after 15 years.
- Eighteen days of sick leave a year, six more than at present, cumulative to 100 workdays. On retirement or dismissal, an employe is entitled to pay for up to 100 days of accumulated sick leave.

Those who quit are entitled to pay for up to 30 days of sick leave.

- Premium pay for overtime work in money instead of compensatory time off, and double time for work on weekends and holidays.
- Payment by the state of the full cost of family health insurance coverage and a $1,000 life insurance policy for each employe.
- A grievance procedure, including arbitration.
- A seniority system applying to layoffs, bumping rights, transfers and promotions.

AFSCME Regional Dir. P. J. Ciampa credited reapportionment of the Delaware legislature for the new collective bargaining law, which he termed one of the best in the nation. The legislative reapportionment, he said, "gave control to urban and liberal interests."

Oliver W. Singleton, AFL-CIO regional director, commended Delaware for its "1966 attitude" toward collective bargaining by public employes. He termed the agreement with the tax agency "one any union could be proud of."

High Court Upholds Ohio Redistricting

A Republican-written reapportionment of the Ohio legislature was upheld by the Supreme Court, despite Democratic objections to establishment of single-member districts in counties where legislators had previously been elected at-large. A lower court decision was affirmed without comment.

A contrary argument was heard by the Supreme Court in a case involving reapportionment of the Hawaii legislature. Here Gov. John A. Burns (D) asked the court to outlaw multi-member districts, declaring that this left major areas and groups without representation.

Meanwhile, the New York legislature gave up the attempt to find a reapportionment formula which would be acceptable to the Republican Senate and the Democratic Assembly. The State Court of Appeals took over the reapportionment job and named a five-member judicial commission to draw up a one man, one vote formula by Mar. 14.

Union Contract Sends Counter Girls to Italy

New York—Five Philadelphia restaurant workers, Negro women who have been earning in the area of $50 a week, have flown off for two weeks in Italy under one of the most unusual clauses in any contract ever negotiated by an American union.

The agreement, between Hotel & Restaurant Employes Local 434 and Dewey's, a chain of luncheonettes, provides that management set aside 75 cents per worker per week for a special fund some of which is earmarked to send members abroad to serve as "people to people" ambassadors.

Chosen to inaugurate the program were Mrs. Dorothy Twiggs, Mrs. Mary Vaughan and Mrs. Barbara Green, counter-girls; Mrs. Lillian Warren, a waitress, and Mrs. Connie Dixon, recently promoted from counter-girl to manager. They range in age from 27 to 38.

Before leaving to visit fellow-craftsmen in Rome, Milan and Florence, they were briefed by the State Dept. and the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs in Washington, and plans were made for the U.S. Embassy in Rome to assist them. A Philadelphia friend arranged for them to have an audience with Pope Paul VI. They were to be welcomed by delegations from Italian culinary unions and, among other things, will inspect a training center for hotel and restaurant workers.

Not only will they have two weeks abroad at the expense of their employer, but the trip does not count as vacation time and they are getting their regular wages.

The contract clause was negotiated by Sec. Edward H. Rovner of Local 434 and Farrell Yesner, general manager of the restaurant.

It grew out of Rovner's indulgence in shop talk with waiters in Rome while he was on his way home from Israel a few years ago. Most of the Italian cafe workers knew nothing about Americans, he found, except for the wealthy who patronized swank hotels. Many of them voiced interest in meeting average American workers and finding out what life in the United States really was like, he learned.

On his return he talked to Yesner and they agreed on the importance of spreading a better understanding of this country among the workers of other nations. They negotiated the special fund, which with about 250 workers in 14 luncheonettes mounts up to about $10,000 a year. First expenditures are $2,000 a year for a scholarship for an employe's child, and another $2,000 for any legitimate cause the workers select. The rest goes into the travel fund.

The employes in each shop nominate one of their number for the trip, and then all vote for the five winners.

House Passes Administration Tax Program

The House passed the Administration's tax bill, but a conservative coalition served strong warning that it will launch a budget-slashing drive on Great Society domestic programs.

A Republican attempt to trim back the tax bill was defeated by an unexpectedly narrow margin of 207-187. The House then approved the bill, 246-146, sending it to the Senate.

It would temporarily increase the excise taxes on automobiles and telephone calls by rolling back a tax cut which took effect on Jan. 1. It also would put income tax withholding on a graduated formula and speed up the schedule for payment of corporation taxes. While this would not increase the amount of taxes owed, it would bring the money into the Treasury earlier and—the Administration claims—reduce inflationary pressures.

Republican speakers, including some who voted for the tax bill, demanded sharp cuts in domestic spending and Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R-Mo.) said Congress should rescind some nondefense appropriations voted last year.

Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) of the Ways & Means Committee, who steered the tax bill to passage, said that "greater restraint" should be exercised in domestic spending if a further tax increase is to be avoided.

Most Republicans on the Ways & Means Committee, including the senior GOP member, John W. Byrnes (Wis.), had supported the tax bill in committee. However, only 22 Republicans voted against a motion to recommit the bill and delete the excise tax increase. Voting for recommittal were 111 Republicans and 76 Democrats.

Voting for final passage were 200 Democrats and 46 Republicans; opposed were 88 Republicans and 58 Democrats.

Three of the four top-ranking Republican leaders voted for recommittal and against the bill—Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford (Mich.), GOP Whip Leslie Arends (Ill.), and John H. Rhodes (Ariz.), chairman of the GOP Policy Committee. The lone GOP leadership vote for the bill was cast by Rep. Melvin R. Laird (Wis.), chairman of the party caucus.

ning and project costs.

In a resolution on natural resources the 6th AFL-CIO convention last December observed that the federal government had an "inescapable responsibility" in the formulation of long-range conservation goals and that this responsibility has been intensified by the increasing contamination of our water and air.

The convention specifically urged:

- The creation of regional planning agencies on water control backed by federal financial aid.
- An increase in federal grants to assist communities in the construction of sewage treatment plants and an increase in the dollar-ceiling at least for larger communities.
- Strenthened federal compliance and enforcement procedures against water pollution.
- Increased federal grants to the states for air pollution, with federal enforcement machinery made available.
- An accelerated emphasis in all branches of government—federal, state and local—to acquire additional land for recreational purposes.

Johnson made it clear in his message that basic responsibility for the control of water pollution would rest with the states at least until July 1967, but he asked immediate legislation enabling the federal government to halt infringements through either administrative hearings or court suits.

Much has already been learned about new techniques in controlling pollutants, he said, and an additional $20 million would be invested in research in this field in the coming fiscal year.

Federal financial assistance, he observed, has "stimulated a 50 percent increase in the air pollution budgets of state and local governments" in less than two years since enactment of the original Clean Air Act of 1963 by the 88th Congress.

Mindful of its own responsibilities, the federal government is now requiring all its installations to bring their water-pollution control systems up to the highest levels, Johnson said.

A new executive order would shortly be issued, he said, to deal with problems of air pollution that might arise from federal activities.

The Redwood National Park proposed in his message, he said, would preserve intact "a park of international significance," with great trees that soared upward 2,000 years ago.

Urging Congress to plan now to "complete our national park system by 1972," the centennial of the establishment of Yellowstone, the President asked Congress for approval this year of recreational facilities at Cape Lookout, N. C., Sleeping Bear Dunes, Mich., Indiana Dunes, Ind., Oregon Dunes, Ore., Great Basin, Nev., Guadalupe Mountains, Tex., Bighorn Canyon, Mont., and Flaming Gorge, Utah.

Labor Centers Aid Medicare

Los Angeles—The Los Angeles County AFL-CIO with the cooperation of affiliates and the Social Security Administration has arranged to have centers for medicare registration set up in local union halls in different parts of the area on different dates until the Mar. 31 deadline.

Executive Sec.-Treas. W. J. Bassett has appealed to all union officers to make sure that eligible friends as well as members of unions are registered because "to many senior citizens, failure to register could cost them tremendous sums of money."

Rutgers to Give Degree in Labor

New Brunswick, N.J.—The board of governors of Rutgers University has instituted the new degree of bachelor of arts in labor studies and will put it into effect in the evening college as soon as funds and a department chairman are available.

The course will open a special liberal arts program to union members and others who want to continue their education while working. The curriculum will be designed especially to appeal to present and potential union leaders.

LBJ Policy On Viet Nam Endorsed

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council "unreservedly" endorsed Pres. Johnson's policy of combatting Communist aggression in South Viet Nam while continuing "an active search for peace and freedom through negotiations."

The council in a statement on the Viet Nam situation said it "completely rejects all insinuations and assertions" that the U.S. has been or is now opposed to free elections in Viet Nam.

The Communists in Viet Nam, the council stressed, opposed free elections in 1954 "as they do now," proposing instead "all sorts of prefabricated committees and so-called united front groups."

The council asserted that the objective is to defeat aggression in South Viet Nam "and to prepare the ground for the holding of free elections which will enable the South Vietnamese people to establish a government of their own free choice."

It "heartily" welcomed the decision by Pres. Johnson to carry out an extensive program of social and economic reform in South Viet Nam and strongly urged that the "advice, assistance and participation" of the Vietnamese Confederation of Labor (CVT) "be secured in carrying out" the program outlined at the recent Honolulu conference of the American and South Vietnamese governments.

The council noted that everything that has happened in the Viet Nam

ANTICIPATED MERGER of two postal unions is reported to the AFL-CIO Executive Council by Postal Clerks Pres. E. C. Hallbeck, standing. The unaffiliated National Postal Union is currently balloting on ratification of a merger plan which would bring all postal clerks into the AFL-CIO union.

Council Reasserts Stand:

Union Rights Upheld For Public Workers

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO strongly reasserted its support of the right of state and local government employes to organize unions and engage in collective bargaining and stressed the developing need for effective mediation and fact-finding procedures.

The Executive Council reaffirmed its long-held belief that "the realistic vehicle for state and local government labor-management relations is collective bargaining." It warned that repressive legislation prevents reasonable negotiation and blocks the bargaining process.

Noting the growth of organization among state and local government workers, the council said that the growth also of legislation recognizing the right of workers to organize and bargain "underlines the need for impartial mediation facilities, contract enforcement and methods of avoiding work stoppages."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a press conference that the problems of government workers cannot be solved by punitive legislation and that the road to "tranquil relations" for public employes is through realistic and effective mediation and fact-finding.

He said it would be a "bad idea" for Congress to legislate in terms of labor relations on the state and local government level, that it would be "reaching far down" for the federal government to become involved at that level.

He called for outright repeal of New York State's Condon-Wadlin Act, which imposes severe penalties on public workers who engage in strikes.

On the general proposition of the right of public employes to strike, Meany said it would be "wise" to limit this right in terms of firemen and law-enforcement officials, pointing out that the constitution of the Fire Fighters prohibits strikes.

Meany noted that the executive order setting up union recognition and other procedures in the federal government was an important step in the "right direction" and urged cities and

Two Southern States Face Primary Battles

Gov. George Wallace of Alabama, barred by the state constitution from seeking a second consecutive term, finally decided to run his wife, Mrs. Lurleen Wallace, instead, and Atty.-Gen. Raymond Flowers also announced he would seek the Democratic nomination in a primary that may include 10 or more candidates.

The possibility loomed strongly that the upshot of the civil rights turmoil stirred up by the segregationist Wallace would be a major political shift, including the election in November of a Republican governor—the first in nearly a century.

In Virginia, meanwhile, a double-header Democratic primary race for two seats in the U. S. Senate, involving a clear challenge to the long-entrenched Byrd machine, was set up.

Former State Sen. Armistead Boothe announced he would run against incumbent Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr., for the remaining four years of the six-year term to which Byrd's father was elected in 1964. The younger Byrd was appointed to the post last year when his father suddenly resigned.

State Sen. William B. Spong of Portsmouth revealed that he would run in the primary against veteran incumbent Sen. A. Willis Robertson, a conservative whose third six-year term expires with this Congress.

Boothe and Spong are considered representative of populous and largely urbanized northern and Tidewater Virginia, as distinguished from the rural areas which

AFL-CIO Opposes Great Society Cuts

By Saul Miller

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO called for an increase in corporate taxes to meet any future rise in military expenditures for Viet Nam rather than a cutback or freezing of Great Society programs.

The federation's Executive Council said ending the 7 percent tax credit and/or an excess profits tax or a hike in the corporate tax rate would be sound economic policy as well as economic justice.

"The cost of the Viet Nam war should not be absorbed by cutting back or freezing current levels of federal expenditures or stunting the promised growth of essential programs," the council declared in a statement on the national economy. It stressed that "the poor should not be compelled to bear the major burden of the conflict. . . ."

In a companion statement on wage guidelines, the council assailed the policies of the Council of Economic Advisers, terming them efforts to "shortchange workers." The guidepost policy and the 3.2 percent figure for wage increases, the council said, impose "the burden of the price level on wage and salary earners, who do not set prices, while there is no effective guideline for prices and no guidelines at all for profits and dividends."

The CEA, it added "has clearly violated any standard of equity."

The council's economic policy statements and resolutions on international affairs highlighted the final sessions of the mid-winter meeting here at the Americana Hotel. Earlier the council mapped a stepped-up drive in 1966 to increase the number of liberals in the House and Senate as the AFL-CIO's major objective, and spelled out positions on repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, minimum wage legislation and civil rights.

World Affairs Action

On international affairs, the council:

- Renewed its unreserved support of Pres. Johnson's Viet Nam policies and rejected "all insinuations and assertions" that the U. S. is opposed to free elections in Viet Nam. (Story this page.)
- Called for prompt and favorable action on the President's foreign aid request for $3.4 billion and praised his "new emphasis" on health, education and food production and planning the program over a five-year period. (Story, Page 2.)
- Urged hearings by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the operations of the recent Tri-Continental Conference among Communist elements in Havana so that constructive measures can be drawn "for defeating the Communist threat to peace and freedom in the Western Hemisphere." (Story, Page 3.)

On domestic problems, the council:

- Set out a three-point program to give full protection of the new medicare program and the social security benefit increase to 19 million elderly Americans. (Story, Page 2.)
- Proposed greater appropriations for low-cost housing and urban renewal to beef up the "unduly modest" Administration program. (Story, Page 2.)
- Urged the President to send Congress his recommendations on salary adjustments and improvements in federal employe benefits. (Story, Page 2.)

High Court Nails Down Severance Rule for GIs

The Supreme Court unanimously nailed down the principle that a returned serviceman's seniority rights can't be ignored in a severance pay agreement.

The ruling further established that severance pay provided by a contract is a seniority benefit and subject to the guarantees the law gives returned servicemen.

The court upheld a claim for additional severance pay filed by six former tugboat firemen whose jobs were eliminated by the Pennsylvania Railroad—which operated the tugs—under a 1960 strike settlement agreement. The settlement provided severance pay for dismissed workers based on years of service with the company.

Justice Hugo L. Black, speaking for the court, said the Selective Service Act was violated when the company refused to count military service in computing severance pay.

The law clearly states that employes who enter military service continue to accrue seniority while they are in uniform, Black noted.

He said it would be a "bizarre" interpretation of the law if this obligation were evaded because the severance pay agreement referred to a period of "compensated service" rather than seniority.

Congress clearly intended, Black said, that "the returning veteran

Federal Pay Hike Proposal Held Urgent

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Pres. Johnson was urged to send to Congress "at the earliest date possible" his recommendations on salary adjustments and improvements in federal employe benefits.

The request came from the AFL-CIO Executive Council, which declared that "these matters" deserve prompt consideration on their merits.

The council pointed out that nearly a million federal workers are members of the AFL-CIO, that they cannot bargain on wages "so the importance of government proposals for improvements . . . has more than ordinary significance."

"We are concerned," the council said, "over the failure of the Administration to propose to Congress measures to achieve full, current comparability between private industry and federal government salaries paid postal and other federal workers . . . the policy of comparability . . . remains only a promise; it must become a reality."

The council noted that to date "no recommendations have been offered by the Administration for achieving comparability, even though all necessary data have been available to officials since last fall."

Disputes Plan Report Filed With Council

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Nearly 60 percent of the cases filed under the AFL-CIO's internal disputes plan in more than four years of the plan's operation have been settled by mediation, Federation Pres. George Meany reported to the Executive Council.

A total of 482 cases were filed as of Feb. 10, 1966, of which 282 were settled by mediation with another 26 still in the mediation process.

There have been 164 determinations by impartial umpires and 8 fact-finding reports. Of the determinations by umpires, violations were found in 118 cases. The council subcommittee set up under the plan has received 53 appeals from the umpires' determinations and denied 45. Six were referred to the Executive Council.

Of the 32 complaints of noncompliance with determinations of the umpires received by the subcommittee, compliance was achieved in 18 and non-compliance found in eight. In the eight cases sanctions were imposed as set out under the plan and are currently in effect with respect to six affiliates.

Prompt Action Pressed On Foreign Aid Budget

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO called for "prompt and favorable action" by Congress on Pres. Johnson's foreign aid request for $3.4 billion.

The federation's Executive Council praised the President's "new emphasis" on increased appropriations for improving health, education and production of food and urged Congress to enact the Administration's proposals to separate economic and military aid programs and to authorize them for a five-year period.

Criteria Backed

It supported also the President's insistence that foreign aid should go to countries which are "not hostile to us" and which provide "solid evidence that they are determined to help themselves."

The council emphasized that no U.S. aid should be given to any government "which encourages or engages in subversive movements and activities against our country and nations friendly to us." It stressed also that "any government which neglects sorely-needed social reforms and gives priority to military adventures and subversive undertakings against other lands does not deserve American aid."

The council urged the government to "make sure" that shipments of wheat "are not taken for granted by any regime as an easy and convenient source of food. Such an attitude can only undermine urgently needed efforts of the aided peoples to help themselves by raising their own food supplies," the council said.

The statement on foreign aid also urged the U.S. to join the new Asian Development Bank which is to have predominantly Asian management and said it was encouraged that more than 30 countries have already signed the agreement or indicated their interest in joining this bank for promoting economic progress in the world's most populous continent.

Labor Support Spurred For Coast Grape Strike

Bal Harbour, Fla.—AFL-CIO affiliates were urged to give "effective and sustained support" to the strike of grape workers in the Delano, Calif., area "so that the right of agricultural workers to form their own union and bargain collectively will be achieved."

The call for support came in a statement adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council which cited the Delano strike as evidence that agricultural workers are on "the threshold of a great surge toward unionism."

The council also commended Sen. Harrison Williams (D-N.J.) for scheduling mid-March hearings in California on the plight of agricultural workers and pledged his Senate subcommittee on Migratory Labor its full support.

"We are confident," the council said, that the investigation will "expose to public view the human misery" that is forced upon farm workers.

The council renewed the AFL-CIO's call for federal legislation "to eliminate the sanctuary of exemptions now granted to employers in agribusiness"—huge factories in the field—by applying the National Labor Relations Act, federal minimum wage and unemployment compensation protection and coverage of other laws "that other American workers have enjoyed for three decades."

"America's agricultural workers must be brought into the nation's economic mainstream or the war against poverty will be lost," the council declared.

Meany Asks Aid In Radio Walkout

Bal Harbour, Fla.—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called on the trade union movement to give full support to the 11-month-old strike by announcers and technicians against radio station KPOL in Los Angeles.

The strike by employes represented by the Television & Radio Artists and the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers is being waged against an employer seeking to impose open-shop conditions in the broadcasting industry in Southern California with the support of "extreme right-wing groups," Meany said.

Florida Painters Vote Children's Hospital Aid

Miami, Fla.—Some 6,000 members of 30 locals of the Painters throughout Florida have agreed to donate $1 a year each for at least five years to help the Variety Children's Hospital meet an annual operating deficit of about $1 million.

On Medicare, Social Security:

Program Outlined To Assist Elderly

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A three-point program to give full protection of the new medicare law and the social security benefit increase to 19 million elderly Americans was urged by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The council noted that "as the force most responsible for this legislation" labor has a special obligation to insure its full success. It urged prompt action to:

- Stimulate enrollments in the voluntary part of the medicare program, which covers a major share of doctor bills and other medical expenses.
- Protect public assistance beneficiaries who are being deprived of additional income provided by the rise in social security benefits.
- Secure passage of legislation to relax the present rigid enrollment deadline for medical insurance.

The deadline for enrollments under the voluntary medicare plan is now Mar. 31, 1966, and those who fail to sign up by that date will be forced to wait for nearly two years and then will be charged a higher premium than the $3 a month currently set. The council noted that nearly seven million eligible persons have yet to sign.

In 35 states, the council pointed out, public assistance allotments have been cut by the exact amount of the social security increase. "This flouts the clear intent of Congress," the council charged, "which provided that state agencies could ignore the social security increase in calculating the need of those receiving public assistance."

In addition, the council said, each state should be urged to "buy in" the $3 monthly premium for medical coverage for all its aged recipients of public assistance. Only 17 states have done so.

The task of reaching 19 million Americans and informing them of the medicare program is "a formidable one," the council said, and millions may lose out for sheer lack of knowledge.

Step-Up Asked In Funds to End Urban Blight

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Administration's proposed Demonstration Cities act "is an important and auspicious step in the right direction," the AFL-CIO declared, but the program is "unduly modest" to be truly effective.

A real onslaught on urban blight, the federation's Executive Council said, calls for massive additions to the supply of low and moderate cost housing which will require additional legislation. The council called for at least 125,000 low-rent public housing units a year and for adequate funds to be made "promptly available" to implement the rent supplement program for "disadvantaged people."

The statement declared also that urban renewal funds in the 1965 legislation were inadequate and urged that the capital grant authorizations be increased by one billion dollars per year for a three-year period.

For the past two years the council statement pointed out, residential building has been out of step with the rest of the economy, and added to previous deficits the lag has resulted in a "far-reaching imbalance." A much greater step-up in housing starts is necessary to make possible the rehousing of families living in slums and substandard homes and those doubled up in overcrowded tenements, the council said.

'67 Murray-Green Award To Honor Dr. Albert Sabin

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Dr. Albert Sabin, University of Cincinnati researcher who developed the oral vaccine for infantile paralysis, was named winner of the 1967 Murray-Green Award by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The council honored the Russian-born Sabin for his "lasting contribution to the health of humanity." The award, consisting of $5,000 and a gold medal, honors the memory of the late Pres. Philip Murray of the former CIO and the late Pres. William Green of the former AFL.

Dr. Jonas Salk, who developed the first anti-polio vaccine, was 1957 winner of the award. His vaccine, administered by injection, prompted many AFL-CIO local central bodies to sponsor low-cost or free community programs to protect large masses of people.

The 1966 Murray-Green Award will be presented at a dinner in Washington, May 19, to Mr. and Mrs. Sargent Shriver. The latter will be honored for contributions in the field of mental health and Shriver for his work in the war on poverty.

IT WAS THIS WAY, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison (seated) explained to Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge (center) and former Vice Pres. A. J. Hayes during a lull in sessions of the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

Profits Tax Urged to Cover Viet Needs

AFL-CIO Opposes Cutbacks In Great Society Aid Programs

● Reasserted its support of the right of state and local government employes to organize and bargain collectively and stressed the need for effective mediation and fact-finding procedures. (Story, Page 1.)

The statement on the national economy welcomed the achievement of the "interim target," a 4 percent unemployment rate, but pointed out that "our economy is still some distance from full employment."

The government was urged to establish a "new interim target of a 3 percent unemployment rate" and, when that target is reached, to move on to achieve "job opportunities for all Americans who are willing and able to work."

On the 20th anniversary of the Employment Act of 1946, the council declared, "it is time that the government redeem its pledge and obligation to achieve and sustain full employment."

On the basis of present economic trends and the federal budget, total national production should rise in 1966 by about 5.25 percent, the council said, adding that the "economy has the ability to support such a rise . . . without the development of widespread inflationary shortages."

Still Slack in Economy

There is still slack in the economy, the statement pointed out, with more than 3 million unemployed, 1.8 million compelled to work part-time and 500,000 or more people not seeking work because there are no available jobs at their skills in their communities. Industry, the council noted, is operating at a rate "considerably less than full operations" and the economic potential to boost production is "growing rapidly."

On the question of future military costs, the council had this to say:

"If it becomes necessary to raise military expenditures above the present anticipations or if the increase in demand expands considerably faster than expected, a rise in corporate taxes will probably be required. Under such conditions, elimination of the 7 percent tax credit for business investment in new equipment, and/or an excess profits tax, and/or an increase in the corporate tax rate will be needed to dampen down the pressures on economic resources from the third year of a continuing capital goods boom that arises from skyrocketing profits."

The capital goods boom, the council said, is "not sustainable," and the government should be prepared to offset a weakening of business investment and a leveling-off or decline of military spending. It added:

Arms Spending Necessary

"We do not want an economy based on spending for destruction. Military expenditures are a necessity for the defense of freedom; they must never be the bedrock of our national economy."

The statement urged government planning for a rapid rise in "investment in the public services," not only for the public good but to provide necessary employment and consumer buying power.

On the guidelines question, the council made the point that there are built-in restraints in the determination of wages that are not present in other economic factors. It cited the unilateral wage action by employers in unorganized companies, the factor of employer resistance to wage increases in collective bargaining and the existence of long-term contracts.

In contrast, "prices in several key industries are effectively set by a few top executives of the dominant corporations and in many other industries prices respond to immediate market opportunities, with little if any regard for costs."

By not taking increased living costs into account, the Council of Economic Advisers "has further shortchanged workers, since a 3.2 percent guidelines increase does not translate into a 3.2 percent increase in buying power."

Workers' buying power had been lagging behind the increase of productivity, the council said, and profits and dividends have been rising much faster than employe compensation. It added:

"The economy needs a rapid restoration of balance between business profits and workers buying power, rather than an increasingly unbalanced lag of wages and salaries behind profits and dividends."

The council reaffirmed its position that if the President determines there is a national emergency "to warrant extraordinary stabilization measures . . . he will have the support of the AFL-CIO" for even-handed restraint on all economic factors. "We are prepared to sacrifice," the council asserted, "as much as anyone else, for as long as anyone else, so long as there is equality of sacrifice."

In other actions the council:

● Called on all affiliates to give "effective and sustained support to the grape workers strike in Delano, Calif., and pledged its support to an investigation of the plight of agricultural workers planned by Sen. Harrison Williams (D-N.J.). (Story, Page 2.)

● Heard a report that nearly 60 percent of the cases filed under the AFL-CIO's internal disputes plan in more than four years of the plan's operation have been settled by mediation. (Story, Page 2.)

● Received a progress report on the proposed merger of the United Federation of Postal Clerks and the National Postal Union. The merger is to be finally voted on by both unions later this year.

● Voted to give the 1967 Murray-Green Award to Dr. Albert Sabin, developer of an oral polio vaccine, and heard a report of the role of organized labor in united fund and community fund drives. In 1965 individual contributions from AFL-CIO members totaled 37.5 cents of every dollar collected, or more than $600 million. (Story, Page 2.)

● Received reports on the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the international trade secretariats and the "impact" programs of Latin American aid by the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

AFL-CIO positions on the ICFTU executive board will be held by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther and James A. Suffridge.

● Set the next meeting of the Executive Council for May 2 in Washington.

Text of Council Statement On Public Employe Rights

Statement of the AFL-CIO Executive Council on rights of local and state government employes, Bal Harbour, Fla., Feb. 28, 1966:

The AFL-CIO notes the growth of organization among local and state government employes. This growth has been accompanied in some of the states by legislation recognizing the right of these workers to organize into unions of their own choice, election and certification procedures for the choosing of exclusive bargaining agents, and for the development of free collective bargaining.

Additionally, a number of local and state governments have adopted executive procedures in an effort to provide collective bargaining mechanisms.

These developments underline the need for impartial mediation facilities, contract enforcement and methods of avoiding work stoppages.

There is substantial evidence that such methods as unilateral appeals procedures and compulsory arbitration do not solve the legitimate grievances of the affected workers and add to the frustrations of both management and labor.

Repressive state statutes designed to punish employes of local and state governments who withhold their work have proved to be a barrier to reasonable negotiation and an added impasse to the collective bargaining process.

The AFL-CIO reasserts its support of the right of state and local government employes to organize into unions of their own choice and to be recognized for the purpose of collective bargaining.

We also reassert our belief that the realistic vehicle for state and local government labor-management relations is collective bargaining, together with effective mediation and fact-finding procedures, including the use of impartial panels with authority to make recommendations for settlement.

Public Employes Backed on Rights

states to follow the same general approach.

The council statement declared that "there is substantial evidence that such methods as unilateral appeals procedures and compulsory arbitration do not solve legitimate grievances of the affected workers and add to the frustrations of both management and labor."

In addition to effective mediation and fact-finding, the council urged the use of impartial panels with authority to make recommendations for a settlement in handling disputes involving public employes.

Senate Hearings Asked On Threats from Havana

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Thorough-going hearings by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the recent Tri-Continental Conference in Havana were urged by the AFL-CIO for the purpose of developing "constructive measures for defeating the Communist threat to peace and freedom in the Western Hemisphere."

The Executive Council described the conference as designed to "forge the links between Communist insurrectionary forces in Latin America and the subversives operating under the cover of the so-called African-Asian Solidarity Organization."

The Havana gathering, the council said, "proclaimed as its overriding aim the destruction of our country and turned its heaviest guns on American resistance to Communist subversion and aggression in South Viet Nam."

Never before in the history of Communist-directed conferences, the statement continued, was "armed struggle" advocated so openly as a means of forcing peoples under the Communist yoke. The council pointed out that as a result of the conference, the council of the Organization of American States met in special session in February and endorsed by an 18 to 0 vote a denunciation of the Havana meeting.

Reds' View Demonstrated

The AFL-CIO council stressed that Communist determination to prevent the progress of democracy and social justice in Latin America was forcibly demonstrated at the Havana conference by "Communists of every stripe." It called for the strengthening of the OAS and urged the U.S. to make every effort to have the OAS implement a 1962 resolution declaring the need to maintain vigilance against planned aggression or subversion.

The council called for improving the Alliance for Progress through greater participation and responsibilities by the member nations. It urged development of democratic institutions such as peasant cooperatives and guarantees of the rights of labor as well as expansion of educational opportunities and improved methods of producing food.

The American people must be enlightened about the "sinister aims" of the Communists in Latin America, the council said, because democracy and the "profound social reforms urgently needed in the Americas can be achieved only through freedom."

Solid Backing Given Johnson On Viet Nam

crisis since the AFL-CIO convention in December 1965 confirms the correctness of the federation's position. The statement cited the U.S. efforts to secure an honorable settlement and the rejection by the Communist governments of Pres. Johnson's efforts.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, at a press conference, noted that elections in Viet Nam could not be free if there were pre-conditions set up by outside forces. In reply to a question as to "escalation" of the war in Viet Nam, he said, "When you're in a fight, you fight as hard as necessary." He noted that if bombing the supply lines of Viet Cong is escalation, it is something we must do in terms of protecting the lives of American troops and making easier their job of defeating aggression.

Fire Fighters Present First News Awards

Leo Cardenas of the San Antonio (Tex.) Express took top honors in the Fire Fighters' first annual Intl. Awards Program with a news story on the rescue of a two-year-old girl from her burning home, IAFF Pres. William D. Buck announced.

The program is part of the union's effort to make the public aware of the value of the work performed by their professional fire departments, Buck said. At the same time, he said, it gives union members a chance to express appreciation for the "understanding of our work and our problems."

Local Entries

The entries were submitted by IAFF locals. The winners will receive plaques and citations at ceremonies in their localities, with $500 for the first place in each of three categories and $250 for second place.

First place winner in the news photograph category was Ronald Rolo of the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard Times for a photo showing firemen playing their hoses on houses to save them from a blaze engulfing a nearby building.

Top award in the television or radio news story classification was won by Jack Fitzgibbons of Station WAKR-TV, Akron, O., who wrote, edited and narrated an account of a fire that took three lives, including those of two firemen.

Second places in the three areas went to David Carmichael, Toronto (Ont.) Globe & Mail, in the news story division; John Franke, Toronto Telegram, for news photos, and Bill Krueger of KDAL Radio and KDAL-TV, Duluth, Minn.

Judges for the contest were Dir. Saul Miller of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications; Alan Adams of Business Week magazine, and Warren Y. Kimball, managing editor of Firemen, published by the National Fire Protection Association.

Organizing Stressed At Pressmen's Parley

Pressmen's Home, Tenn.—Organizing techniques and legislative goals for 1966 were fashioned by more than 200 delegates to a three-day regional "labor action" conference here.

The conference was sponsored by the Printing Pressmen, the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization and the Tennessee AFL-CIO. Federation Regional Dir. Paul Christopher was chairman.

At a session on unfair labor practices led by AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher, the need for increased organizing effort and an updated approach was emphasized. Alan Kistler of Kircher's department reported on recent major decisions of the National Labor Relations Board.

Delegates at an evening session on the strike of five federation unions at the Kingsport, Tenn., Press stressed the need for a continuing "Don't Buy" campaign against World Book Encyclopedia and other books produced by Kingsport Press strikebreakers.

Pres. Matthew Lynch of the Tennessee AFL-CIO and Daniel A. Powell, area COPE director, led a session at which delegates were urged to push voter registration drives and to support friendly candidates.

The conference was followed by a reception sponsored by members of 12 local unions employed at Pressmen's Home. Guests of honor included IPP&AU Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade and Sen. Ross Bass (D-Tenn.).

Leaders of 60 IPP&AU units, meeting earlier in Chicago, voted to seek added benefits in the form of expanded coverage of the joint union-employer retirement fund, creation of a union-sponsored health and welfare program, and drive for higher standards of wages, hours, manning scales and improved jurisdictional rights.

Ways to implement the program will be outlined to officers and members of other local unions and councils at 12 regional workshop seminars in major cities, starting with Atlanta, Ga., Apr. 2.

DeAndrade said other objectives of the program include "better and more informative communications" between the union and its members and with employers and the general public; and a plan for organizing more members in the industry.

Delegates to the conference heard a report on the status of the union's special defense fund, and voted renewed support of the Kingsport Press strike.

Canada Unions Fight Use of Injunctions

Oshawa, Ont.—A strike by some 50 Newspaper Guild members against the Oshawa Times had nationwide ramifications as Canadian labor leaders at an emergency meeting here mapped a campaign against the use of injunctions in labor disputes.

A bill curbing the right of courts to hand down injunctions in labor-management disputes has already been introduced in Parliament by David Lewis, New Democratic Party member and counsel for the Toronto Newspaper Guild.

James Renwick of Toronto Riverdale, NDP member of the Ontario legislature, introduced a bill in the provincial body which would abolish ex parte injunctions and tighten the conditions under which any injunctions may be granted in labor disputes. Ontario Labor Minister Leslie Rountree indicated twice under questioning that possible amendments to the injunction law are under study.

The meeting of union leaders was called to support the Toronto Guild's strike at the Oshawa Times and protest the issuance of an injunction restricting the number of pickets to 10. Ironically, the strike was settled the night before the meeting, but it went on anyway.

The walkout had drawn widespread community support as Oshawa, home of the Auto Workers' largest Canadian local, is a strong union town. Hundreds of union members marched on the picket line in a challenge to the injunction and succeeded in closing down the plant.

Some 60 union leaders headed by Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress laid the plans for the campaign against the injunction laws. Pres. David Archer of the Ontario Federation of Labor acted as chairman, with OFL Sec.-Treas. D. F. Hamilton as secretary.

Jodoin and Archer emphasized that the meeting was called in support of the right to strike, and did not condone violence.

"If the Auto Workers want to put 16,000 workers around a plant," said Jodoin, "they should have the right to do so as long as it is peaceful. They certainly have a right to the streets—the streets don't belong to the corporations."

The Guild's settlement at the Oshawa paper included $15 in wage increases over three years, raising the top minimum to $115; union security, improved overtime, auto mileage and insurance clauses, and three months' notification of staff cuts due to the introduction of new equipment or processes.

Unique Union

The Times is the only North American paper in the world-wide Thomson chain whose white-collar workers are organized.

In Washington, D.C., the ANG executive board voted citations to the Oshawa & District Labor Council and seven local labor leaders in recognition of their assistance in the strike. Individual honors went to Douglas Sutton, chairman of the council's interunion liaison committee; Pres. Clifford Pilkey and Sec. Keith Ross of the council; Pres. Fred Beckstead of the Building & Construction Trades Council; Sec.-Treas. Don Urquhart of the Lake Ontario District Council of Carpenters; Pres. Albert Taylor of UAW Local 222 and Pres. Joseph Grills of Steelworkers Local 1817.

Medicare Spurs Gains In Rail Health Benefits

Miami, Fla.—Improved hospital, surgical and medical benefits for 450,000 non-operating railroad workers and their families were agreed upon in negotiations here between 11 unions and managements of more than 200 U.S. railroads.

The improved benefits will be available starting July 1 for well over 1 million beneficiaries.

Presidents of the unions signed revised agreements at the close of nearly three months of talks.

The improvements were made possible to a large extent by enactment of the medicare bill providing federal health insurance and supplemental medical benefits for retired workers, said Chairman G. E. Leighty of the union committee. Leighty is president of the Transportation-Communication Employes.

The settlement provides these major improvements in the employer-financed commercial insurance policy:

- The major medical expense allowance, now set at a maximum of $5,000 over the period of a lifetime, may when exhausted be restored at the rate of $1,000 a year to a continuing maximum of $5,000.
- Maximum surgical benefits will rise from $300 to $420; anesthesia allowances from $25 to $84 and x-ray and laboratory fees to a new $100 maximum.
- Coverage will include radiation therapy for the first time.
- Allowances for hospital "extras"—charges for services other than room and board above $500—are raised from 75 percent of cost to 80 percent.

All off-train workers and their families, including employes 65 or older, are covered by the new provisions except to the extent that benefits for the over-65 group are paid for by the new medicare program. The $3 monthly premium for the latter group will be paid for from the insurance fund, Leighty said.

The unions are urging all over-65 workers and dependents to apply for the supplemental medicare benefits. Affected unions are the Railway Clerks, Maintenance of Way Employes, Railway Carmen, Signalmen, Boilermakers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Firemen & Oilers, Machinists, Sheet Metal Workers, Dining Car Employes and Transportation-Communication Employes.

Redistricting Of Two States Survives Tests

The U.S. Supreme Court refused to interfere with legislative reapportionment plans adopted in Arkansas and Wyoming. Both plans had been upheld by lower federal courts as meeting one man, one vote standards, and the high court declined to hear appeals from the decisions.

The Arkansas reapportionment reduced the size of the House from 75 members—one from each county—to 44 members, each elected from a district of nearly equal population.

The Wyoming reapportionment included establishment of seven multi-member districts, where voters will ballot for two or more state senators. Opponents had sought to have the court compel the division of these districts into sub-districts of one senator each.

Supreme Court Clarifies FLSA Retail Exemption

Calling a business establishment a retail store doesn't make it one, the Supreme Court decided in ruling that an Idaho sheet metal plant and a Tennessee tire dealer were subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Both firms had been sued by the secretary of labor for violation of wage-hour provisions. They based their claim for exemption on a 1949 amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act which included in a definition of exempt retail establishments one which is "recognized" as a retailer "in the particular industry."

The two companies said the bulk of their sales are to the final customer and that other firms in the industry consider such sales to be retail.

As the Supreme Court decision put it, the key question was whether the secretary of labor is required to accept an industry's own usage of the term retail as controlling. "If the answer were yes," the court said, the two companies would be exempt from the wage-hour law, as they claimed.

The high court held unanimously, however, that Congress did not intend to give every industry "self-determination" in defining retail.

Its decision, written by Justice John M. Harlan:

- Upheld the finding of the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals that the Idaho Sheet Metal Works was covered by the FLSA. The Burley, Ida., firm fabricates, installs and maintains sheet metal products. About 60 percent of its sales are to the general public, as opposed to industrial customers. But 83 percent of its gross income comes from work done for five potato processing companies. The court found that this phase of the business made it "an establishment engaged in the sale and servicing of manufacturing machinery" and therefore not exempt.
- Reversed the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals, which had held the Steepleton General Tire Co. of Memphis, Tenn., exempt as a retail firm. More than half of its income, the Supreme Court noted, is from sales and repairs to tires furnished to businesses operating fleets of trucks or construction vehicles. The Supreme Court accepted as within the "discretion" of the secretary of labor a decision holding that quantity sales at discounts to truck fleets are "nonretail."

Steel Unionist Heads Local United Fund

East Chicago, Ind. — Peter M. Calacci, a Steelworkers' staff representative in Subdistrict 2 of Dist. 31 and vice president of the Lake County AFL-CIO, has been elected president of the United Community Services of East Chicago.

Calacci, a member of USWA Local 1010 and a veteran trade unionist, is the first labor representative to head the community's united fund. His election closely followed that of AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne as president of the United Community Funds & Councils of America.

'Free Speech' Victory:

TV Unions Upheld In Sponsor Boycott

San Francisco, Calif.—The right of unions to conduct a consumer boycott of merchants who advertised on a struck Sacramento television station has been upheld by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The court concluded—nearly six years after the Broadcast Employes and the Television & Radio Artists struck Station KXTV in a contract dispute—that a broadcasting station is in effect a producer of the goods it advertises. Therefore unions may lawfully picket advertisers and handbill their places of business under the publicity provision of the Landrum-Griffin Act, it declared.

An attorney for AFTRA called the decision a "significant victory" for free speech because it extends to services the previously stated Supreme Court doctrine regarding the boycotting of products.

During the legal battle over their boycott rights, however, the two unions lost their bargaining rights at the struck station, owned by John Hay "Jock" Whitney and others. Whitney is publisher of the New York Herald Tribune.

Reversal Mandated

The appellate court here reversed its own previous ruling to conform with a Supreme Court decision in a parallel case.

Reviewing the facts in the case, the judges decided that the Supreme Court's ruling in the "Servette" case makes mandatory a new conclusion — that a broadcasting station is in effect a "producer" of the goods it advertises and unions may picket it under the publicity provision of the labor law.

In Servette, the high court ruled that a person engaged in the wholesale distribution of tangible articles made by another person or company is himself a producer of such products.

The 9th Circuit reasoned from this ruling that one engaged in advertising tangible articles manufactured by another is likewise a producer of such products within the meaning of the publicity proviso.

That was the point made by the two unions when a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner ruled in 1961 that AFTRA and NABET Local 55 had engaged in an illegal secondary boycott by conducting a "do not patronize" campaign against advertisers on Whitney's station. The ruling led the NLRB regional director to ask for an injunction against the boycott and a U.S. District Court judge issued a restraining order, later removed.

In 1962 the NLRB reversed the examiner, holding that KXTV was by extension a producer of goods, and union handbilling activities were protected by the publicity proviso. The appeals court overturned the NLRB decision but now has reversed itself.

During the lengthy dispute the circuit court remanded the case to the board for consideration of two union arguments not reached by the NLRB in its original decision. The board reaffirmed its original ruling on the ground that the Supreme Court's Servette decision, issued after the remand, should govern. The appeals judges then agreed with the NLRB's interpretation.

COMMUNITY INTEREST of Ladies' Garment Workers was again demonstrated when members of Local 91 donated to eight New York City day care centers $8,000 they raised at an exhibition and sale of paintings they had done. The first check was presented by ILGWU Sec.-Treas. Louis Stulberg to Mrs. Fiorello H. LaGuardia for the center at the LaGuardia Memorial Home. Seated at left is Frances H. Kohan of the Concord Child Care Center and, at right, Mgr. Edward Schneider of Local 91. Standing are representatives of other day care centers which shared in the art show's proceeds (from left): Richard Yancey, Frank Abate, Oliver Gibson, Mrs. Sydelle Diner, Ruth M. Bushong and Nancy Stewart.

White Collar Fringes Led By Vacations

White collar workers receive fringe benefits valued at 27 percent of their basic salaries on the average, according to a survey by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The BLS study, two years in preparation, is designed to provide a basis for comparing fringe benefit expenditures of employers in private industry with those of the federal government, the nation's largest employer.

Paid vacations added 4.8 percent to salary costs, with holidays adding another 2.9 percent. Retirement programs, including both private pension plans and social security, amounted to 7.4 percent of basic pay.

Health benefit programs, including sick leave as well as insurance, amounted to 4.2 percent of salaries. Overtime pay and shift differentials totaled 3.2 percent. Unemployment taxes and additional programs added 1.6 percent.

Yearend and other special bonuses averaged 2.3 percent for all employers and 4.6 percent for employers who gave such bonuses. Other miscellaneous benefits added six-tenths of 1 percent to the costs.

BLS Finds Slowdown In Factory Pay Hikes

The rise in average hourly earnings of factory production workers slowed down to 2.9 percent a year during the past five years, the Labor Dept. has reported.

This latest figure, a Bureau of Labor Statistics study shows, compares with annual rises averaging 4 percent between 1956 and 1960 and 5.3 percent between 1951 and 1955. The findings were reported in an article prepared by James R. Wetzel of the BLS Division of Employment & Unemployment Analysis in the new combined report on employment and earnings and the labor force.

There is "no sign of an acceleration in the rate of advance over the five-year course of the current economic expansion," the study pointed out, adding that during the 1961-65 expansion, "the rate of increase has been exceptionally stable at a relatively low level."

Straight-time hourly earnings rose from $1.18 in 1947 to $2.50 last year; average hourly earnings went from $1.22 to $2.61. Thus, the BLS said, the postwar rise in weekly earnings—from $49.17 to $107.27 — was due almost exclusively to the upward trend in hourly earnings.

Workweek Up Slightly

The rest was attributed to a slight rise in the workweek, which fluctuated unevenly between 39 and 41 hours per week.

Since the end of the war take-home pay has increased steadily, rising from just under $50 in 1947 to nearly $100 in December 1965, the article showed. It far outstripped the rise in the Consumer Price Index, which moved irregularly upward at a slower pace.

"When spendable earnings are adjusted to compensate for rising prices, the gain in real spendable earnings—or purchasing power—amounted to 44 percent, somewhat less than half the rise in dollar take-home pay," the article said. "Expressed in 1957-59 dollars, the rise was from $61 in 1947 to $88 in 1965."

The BLS pointed out that while the rate of wage increases has been declining, "factory workers' earnings have been supplemented by employer contributions on their behalf for such benefit programs as pensions, life insurance and health care, which are not reflected in these measures of earnings."

Workers also have gained through increases in paid time-off such as vacations and holidays, the article notes.

While earnings have gone up since the end of World War II, the taxes withheld from gross pay have gone up a lot more—more than six times. In 1948 federal withholding and social security taxes, the study showed, amounted to 15 cents of every $10 in factory wages. Last year the same levies accounted for $1 out of every $10 —mostly because of the progressively higher tax on increased earnings.

Firm, Detective Agency Accept Labor Spy Ban

Harvey Aluminum, Inc., big West Coast metals firm, and a private detective agency it had employed have both agreed not to engage in labor espionage against the Steelworkers or any other union.

The agreement came in settlement of labor spy charges growing out of a seven-year battle by the company to prevent union organizing at its main plant in Torrance, Calif., and a subsidiary plant at The Dalles, Ore.

The National Labor Relations Board, in a unanimous 5-0 vote more than three years ago, upheld charges by the Steelworkers that Harvey had hired the Wallace Security Agency, Inc., of Portland, Ore., to furnish labor spies posing as production workers to make regular reports on the activities of company employes.

In the interim a court enforced the board order but directed further hearings on a disputed point; and Harvey recognized the union at Torrance.

Harvey claimed the detectives were hired to ferret out evidence of theft and drug peddling, but an NLRB investigation and hearings revealed that, while some thefts were uncovered, the major objective of the detectives was to spy on union supporters and report them to their superiors.

Two of many witnesses at NLRB hearings testified they were hired to spy at The Dalles plant. One said he turned in more than 100 names of union sympathizers and the other listed 36 workers and their union or anti-union activities.

The settlement agreement, approved by the board in a recent order, directed Harvey management and Wallace Ummel, head of the detective agency, to post notices and stop spying on union employes or interfering with their right to form or assist unions.

In 1964 the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals enforced a previous NLRB finding against Harvey and Wallace for unlawful interference with West Coast workers.

Another company campaign against a union—the Auto Workers at Adrian, Mich.—was held unlawful by the NLRB in a separate decision Feb. 12. The board ordered Harvey to stop threatening to close the plant or punish workers by imposing worse job conditions, laying them off or reducing work on the plant presses if the UAW won an NLRB election.

Union Convention Voting Analyzed

The different methods used by the larger international or national unions to amend their constitutions and to allocate voting strength among locals of varying sizes are examined in a new study prepared by the Labor-Management Services Administration of the Labor Dept.

The study, "Local Convention Representation and Constitutional Amendments in National Unions," analyzes the constitutions as of June 1963 of 73 unions of 40,000 or more members.

The publication is on sale at 25 cents a copy by the U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. 20401.

MARTIN J. WARD took office effective Mar. 1 as secretary-treasurer of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters in succession to William C. O'Neill, who retired. Ward, assistant secretary-treasurer since 1958, formerly was business manager of Chicago Local 597. His appointment and that of his successor, Leslie E. Dilg, a general organizer since 1943, were made by Pres. Peter T. Schoemann.

Clothing Union Wins Election In Wisconsin

Janesville, Wis.—A $1 million fire which temporarily disrupted operations at the Norwood Mills, Inc., fabric plant here during an organizing campaign did not burn out the employes' will to form a union. They voted for the Clothing Workers 124-97 in a National Labor Relations Board election.

Company workers approached the ACWA last fall for help in organizing. The union was preparing to petition for an election when a fire shut down the plant temporarily in December, Manager Murray H. Finley of the ACWA Chicago Joint Board said.

Operations were resumed in that plant and an older one. So were organizing activities. The election was held among employes in both plants and contract proposals are being prepared to cover both.

The successful campaign was conducted with the aid of organizers from the ACWA and AFL-CIO regional staffs.

A Question of Equity

THE CONSERVATIVE GROUPS in the country are busily at work fashioning a new bludgeon with which to beat the Administration's Great Society programs and the social and economic progress they promise—the threat of inflation.

Republican leaders in Congress have announced that the issue in the 1966 elections will be inflation and the need therefore is to slash all social welfare programs, curb wages and fringe benefits for workers and generally stop cold the economic progress of the past five years. They generally have the support of conservative Democrats.

All this will be trumpeted through the land in the next six months in the name of stability and patriotism and any other handy slogan that will help attack liberal positions and spokesmen.

Unfortunately, the Administration has given some aid and assistance to the inflation-is-the-issue orators, albeit perhaps without meaning to do so, by allowing its economic spokesmen to place more than usual stress on the question of wage-price stability.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S wage-price guidelines policies with their one-sided emphasis on wage restraints and passing mention of prices, its slowing up of government expenditures so that the cash budget in fiscal 1967 will show a slight surplus, and the continuing speeches of its economic leaders for a hold-the-line approach have all helped project the issue out of all relation to reality.

Nearly all economists are in agreement that total national production of goods and services will rise about $50 billion this year, an increase in real terms of about 5.25 percent.

The AFL-CIO believes that this increase in the Gross National Product can be supported by the economy without the development of widespread inflationary shortages; the anticipated rise in defense and civilian demands for goods and services can be met without great difficulty or strain.

Because of the present uncertainties there is room for a difference of opinion as to how much increased demand the economy can handle, and this is difficult to forecast. But the answer is not to hack away at all government programs that spell progress, especially those aiding the millions who have not shared in the general prosperity of the past few years.

Yet those who cry inflation loudest would do just this without consideration of the justice or equity of the case.

JUSTICE AND EQUITY demand that if there is any need to slow down the pace of the economy, the first target should be the fantastically skyrocketing profits of the past five years and the tremendous amount of dollars earmarked for new investment.

If the nation later this year faces a need to step up military expenditures, an increase in corporate taxes would be the sound economic approach and one that would provide real equity for all Americans.

To allow profits to soar to unheard-of heights while calling for cutbacks or a freeze of social welfare programs in the name of stopping inflation would be to sell out the principle of equality of sacrifice in time of national need.

The AFL-CIO has declared unequivocally that if a national emergency warrants extraordinary stabilization measures it is ready to join wholeheartedly in the effort as long as there are even-handed restraints on all groups in the economy. Workers, the poor or the disadvantaged must not be made to carry the load alone.

The One to Tap

'Sound Social, Economic Policy':

Higher Corporate Taxes Urged If Inflation Curbs Are Needed

The following analysis is excerpted from background material on which the AFL-CIO Executive Council, meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., based its statement on the national economy and the proper methods of increasing government revenues, if required, to meet social needs at home and the costs of the Viet Nam fighting:

THE CHANGE in the economic impact of federal budget operations is going to be quite sharp—from an expansionary deficit of nearly $7 billion in fiscal 1966 to a slightly restrictive surplus in fiscal 1967.

That conclusion is slightly misleading, because gross expenditures will actually increase somewhat faster than the net budget totals show. Nevertheless, a sharp change is scheduled. This scheduled change is similar to taking the foot almost completely off the accelerator of a moving automobile, after having pushed down on it.

Within this context—and the economy's ability to absorb the expected rise of economic activity—the level of federal expenditures could be increased modestly above scheduled levels, without great strain.

However, if the Viet Nam situation requires a further step-up of military expenditures in the coming months or if the rise in demand for goods and services increases considerably above present expectations, it probably will be necessary to raise corporate taxes—through elimination of the 7 percent tax-credit on investment in new plant and equipment, and/or an excess profits tax, and/or a corporate tax rate rise.

Under such conditions, it probably would be necessary to slow down the pace of rising demand for goods and services. Since business investment is now continuing to increase at a yearly rate of 15 percent for the third consecutive year—twice as fast as total national production—it would be sensible to slow down the rise of profits and the pace of increasing investment outlays, if it becomes necessary to prevent inflationary shortages.

Such slowing of the business investment boom could permit a faster rise of military spending, without applying pressures on economic resources. Moreover, profits have been skyrocketing since 1961.

Therefore, such a rise of corporate taxes would be sound social as well as economic policy if additional military expenditures become necessary.

In contrast, the alternative of cutting back such social programs as the war on poverty, aid to education and the rebuilding of urban areas—or freezing social and economic programs—could be dangerous to society.

The hopes aroused by advances in social measures in the past few years should not be undermined or destroyed. In addition, the cutbacks or freezes of social advances would have an adverse impact on the lowest income groups.

The uncertainties concerning the outlook for the next several months mainly center on the course of developments in Viet Nam and the impact on the economy. But it is important to remember the difference between the economic impacts of the Viet Nam and Korean conflicts.

First, our economy is much bigger now than in the early 1950s. In 1952 and 1953, national defense expenditures accounted for about 13 percent of total national production. In contrast, defense expenditures accounted for 7.5 percent of total output in 1965, and in 1966, they are expected to account for only a slightly greater share.

SECONDLY, the Korean War required a sharp rise in the size of the Armed Forces and in military expenditures. The Armed Forces are expected to expand about 300,000 in 1966—they rose 1.5 million between 1950 and 1951. In contrast to the relatively small scheduled increase of military spending this year, defense expenditures shot up $19.5 billion between 1950 and 1951.

Our much bigger economy should be able to deal with the uncertainties of the economic impact of the Vietnam conflict without difficulty, even if additional military expenditures are needed.

Just as the federal government should be prepared for the contingency of a possible further rise of military spending, it should also be prepared to offset the easing of military expenditures.

We do not want an economy based on spending for destruction. Military expenditures are a necessity for the defense of freedom; they must never be the bedrock of our national economy.

Therefore, the government must plan at once for a rapid rise in its investment in the public services that should be instituted, expanded and improved—not only for the public good but also to provide necessary employment and consumer buying power.

Architects Step into Campaign To Make Beauty Respectable

By Edward P. Morgan

A GROUP of subversives, as it were, is plotting an American revolution.

The conspirators are members of no secret tong. They belong to the reputable American Institute of Architects, AIA, whose current activities have been inspired, in part, by the wives of two Presidents and urgent recommendations by Pres. Johnson himself. Until very recently, beauty was not considered a national issue except at the cosmetic counter and the Miss America contest. But thanks to the lively interest in the natural and man-made attractions of our land expressed by the Kennedys and the Johnsons, beauty in the civic sense is no longer a joke or a dirty word.

Morgan

The two first ladies, Jacqueline and Lady Bird, have added their own special impetus to the nation's slowly growing consciousness of taste, the value of our cultural heritage, the importance of gracefulness over ugliness in buildings and the enduring worth—if they are permitted to endure—of such botanical knick-knacks as trees and grass and flowers.

So the profession of architecture has been emboldened to lend some of its own considerable talents to the subject. Two AIA committees, one on esthetics, the other on urban design, have been comparing notes in the institute's headquarters, Octagon House, one of Washington's lovelier landmarks, which James Madison used as a presidential mansion for a while after the British burned down the White House in the War of 1812.

Almost diffidently, the architects are mobilizing for a "war on ugliness." They are moving slowly; some think too slowly. But like similar professional groups, such as the American Medical Association or the American Bar Association, they are divided, left, right and center, and furthermore they are not sure exactly what their role should be.

But at a recent regional conference in San Francisco, spawned by the White House Conference on Beauty, architects happily discovered bureaucrats who candidly admitted that the government itself did not have rigid, pre-set ideas on how to proceed. If this fluidity can be maintained it is a promising augury of future planning.

Already the architects have discovered, however, that that word "planning" is a major obstacle in itself. Coupled with that sacred phrase, "free enterprise system," the prejudice against planning has presented an almost insuperable barrier in the past to the imaginative, intelligent layout of cities and towns, the parks within them and the preservation of the natural beauty around them. It is as if the education supported by our American "money-making culture" has taught us to sanctify profits to the exclusion of virtually all other values.

An architect from Winston-Salem, N. C., who has long been battling real estate and other interests on zoning decisions and civic construction plans, put it this way at one of the Octagon House sessions:

"You try to persuade a property owner not to put up a filling station or a parking lot on his land and he eyes you as if you were a Bolshevik and accuses you of undermining the free enterprise system."

NEVERTHELESS, the AIA's "war on community ugliness" task force has produced, in rough draft, a declaration which says, in part, "The public, both its leadership and electorate, must be made to see economic goals are not supreme, and that the uncontrolled bulldozer and the billboard are not indices of the state of our culture." Economic goals are still vulgarly decisive, however, as the draft recognizes. In the chaotic gap between problems and solutions in city planning and resource conservation, it concedes, "economic exploitation and predatory self-interest become the law of the land and social and physical ugliness are the inevitable by-products."

One of the ways to right this ghastly state of affairs is to make people realize that in the long run harmonious urban planning and the preservation of natural beauty are sound investments, that they can be made to pay off dollar-wise. A change in the tax structure is one approach.

Why can't esthetic objectives and economic objectives be made identical? One proposal submitted to the Maryland Scenic Beauty Commission would, for example, levy an "earnings tax" on, say, parking lot owners and slum tenement landlords. Instead of or in addition to what is usually an absurdly low "ad valorem" basis for their property taxes, they would be taxed on earnings received from such enterprises. On the other side, there would be tax deductions and/or exemptions for investments in beautifying the property.

You can almost hear the anguished screams of vested interests against any such "revolutionary" scheme, but saving our cities and countrysides is going to take a revolution in public responsibility and it's encouraging to note that leaders among the nation's architects are organizing a kind of guerrilla force to infiltrate the establishment. Some architects are even preparing to make the supreme sacrifice by running for office.

Breakthrough Seen:

Wage Floor for Farm Labor Could End Law of the Jungle

WITH FOREIGN FARM worker importation programs ended, 1965 was "the beginning of a free labor market in agriculture," a union spokesman has said.

This was a "tremendous breakthrough" in the fight to win "the same protection for farm workers that other workers now have," declared Arnold Mayer, legislative representative for the Meat Cutters. Ending of the so-called bracero program was the first "major action" by Congress to help farm workers, he pointed out.

Last year's experience in recruiting domestic farm workers instead of relying on the "crutch" of foreign nationals proved, Mayer said, that "agriculture can get sufficient numbers of U.S. workers" to cultivate and harvest the crops when decent wages and working conditions prevail. "The results were excellent," he added, as he was questioned by reporters on the nationwide radio program, Labor News Conference.

Farm workers have lagged behind those in other industries because they have been denied minimum wage safeguards, unemployment compensation coverage and the right to organize into unions for collective bargaining, Mayer said.

"THE ONLY LAW that exists today in agriculture is the law of the jungle," but there is now good reason to believe that condition will begin to change, he observed.

Mayer pointed out that low wages paid by corporate farms and large growers have also hurt small farmers "who depend upon the family" to do the work. "If the corporate farm can get a worker for 90 cents an hour or less, that means that the labor the family puts in on the same crop is worth only 90 cents an hour or less," he noted.

Reporters questioning him on the AFL-CIO public service interview program, aired weekly over the Mutual Radio Network, were William Eaton of United Press Intl. and Sam Sharkey of the Newhouse Newspapers.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A LONG-RANGE estimate about the upcoming November elections is furnished by Congressional Quarterly, an unbiased reference service used very widely in Washington. Congressional Quarterly's informed guess, about eight months in advance of the Nov. 8 election date, is that 240 seats in the House of Representatives are "safe Democratic" or "leaning Democratic."

A majority in the House is 218, so a majority for the Republicans is not within their reach. The "safe Republican' and "leaning Republican" districts total 133, which is eight seats short of the current GOP contingent of 141 members.

According to the CQ estimate, there are 62 congressional districts left over from the total House membership of 435, and as of the moment the disposition of the voters in these districts is indecipherable. Split them evenly between the parties, and the Democrats would come up with 271 members of the House in the 90th Congress, the Republicans with 172.

It is not likely that the November election returns will show precisely that divison. But if they did it would mean a net loss for Pres. Johnson's party of 23 House members from the 294 Democrats elected in 1964.

Such a loss might endanger Mr. Johnson's firm control on Capitol Hill. About 50 to 75 of the southern Democrats may vote with Republicans on key issues, such as motions to send an Administration bill back to committee or motions to approve some unpalatable substitute.

At such moments an apparently large Democratic House majority can become a delusion, and a Democratic President thinking in national terms on schools, poverty programs, health and welfare must take into account the possibility that he doesn't have the troops.

IT IS TOO EARLY to try to reach solid judgments on the probable results of the elections. A few months ago the general guess would have been that the nation would simply conduct a referendum on Mr. Johnson's Great Society programs and that the President's party would win in another landslide.

The waters, since then, have become muddied. We have more than 200,000 troops in Viet Nam, and the history of the 1952 election, when we were being compelled to fight in Korea, indicates that political capital can sometimes be made by those who pander to war-weariness and easy sloganeering.

The last three American Presidents, beginning with Gen. Eisenhower, have been compelled to expend an enormous part of their energy and attention on Southeast Asia. In Eisenhower's years, the chief source of concern was Laos, rather than Viet Nam, and we poured in aid funds equivalent to twice the previous per capita income of the Laotians. Mr. Kennedy was able to establish, precariously, a kind of neutralization of Laos, but only after months of hard and urgent labor.

MR. JOHNSON nevertheless has a new vote of confidence from Congress on his Viet Nam policy, no matter how heated and protracted the Senate debate that preceded the vote, and he is conducting military operations with the most careful concern to avoid giving the Red Chinese an excuse to intervene.

It is never pleasant when U.S. troops must be committed to action thousands of miles away to salvage the freedom of a people little known by our own people and, until recently, of little concern. The alternatives, however, are plainly grim, and a President must function with courage in what he deems a vital national interest.

Former Pres. Truman was assailed for pledging aid to Greece and Turkey—but he was re-elected, and his party wrestled control of Congress away from the Republicans. Partisan attacks on Mr. Johnson, if and when they come in greater volume during the campaign, might kick back on the sponsors.

1965 SAW "the beginning of a free labor market in agriculture," Arnold Mayer (center), legislative representative for the Meat Cutters, told reporters Sam Sharkey (left) of the Newhouse Newspapers and William Eaton of United Press Intl. on the weekly AFL-CIO public service program, Labor News Conference.

How to Buy:

Soaring Food and Shoe Prices, Interest Rates Need Watching

By Sidney Margolius

WITH LIVING COSTS at an all-time record high, moderate-income families need to watch especially three fast-rising expenses, food, shoe prices and interest rates.

Food prices have become really drastic. Meats have reached the highest levels in history, with many cuts 20-25 percent above a year ago.

Shoe manufacturers this year have raised many prices 50 cents to $1, blaming the boosts on higher hide prices. Another increase is expected this spring. In actual fact, untanned hides comprise only about 5 percent of the retail price of a pair of shoes, or about 50 cents on a $10 pair. Even the 40 percent rise in hide prices this past year means manufacturers' true costs have gone up only about 20 cents a pair.

Rising interest rates already have affected loans, with many lenders raising rates on both personal and car loans one-half of 1 percent, or 50 cents per $100 of debt. This is a time to avoid taking on new loans and installment debts, and if you must, put down the most you can, and pay back as soon as you can.

Credit union and bank rates, usually $4.50 to $6.50 per $100, or true annual rates of approximately 9 to 12 percent, still are lower than finance company or store credit charges, such as the 1.5 percent a month or 18 percent a year, on revolving credit accounts.

The increase of one-fourth of 1 percent in the FHA mortgage rate, recently announced by the Federal Housing Administration, is another blow to families which may be seeking mortgages. The jump from 5.75 to 6 percent means a family actually would pay $864 more in interest on a $15,000 mortgage for 30 years.

The FHA rate increase especially affects buyers of lower-price houses. Ironically, the 6 percent rate (including one-half of 1 percent for mortgage insurance guaranteeing lenders against loss), now is higher than the average rate on conventional (non-FHA) mortgages in many areas.

This means mortgage-seekers need to shop more widely among local lenders, and try to make larger down payments, to beat back the rather premature FHA increase. Do your mortgage shopping even before you settle on the house.

If you can't make a substantial down payment now, try to get a favorable "right to prepay" clause in your mortgage. This will permit you to reduce your mortgage by making additional payments without a severe penalty. For example, some lenders permit prepayment of any amount after one year, with no penalty charge. Others may permit pre-payment of up to 10 percent of the mortgage in one year without penalty.

THE RISE in shoe prices hits moderate-income families especially hard since shoes are usually their largest clothing cost, often taking 20 percent of the family's clothing budget. Children's shoes are a special concern. Parents sometimes pay as much for kid's shoes as their own.

As well as construction, proper fit is an important factor in determining how much wear you get from shoes. In fact, while cheaply-made shoes should be avoided, the most expensive shoes may not be the best buy for children, either. They may wear so well that parents neglect to check the fit. Children's shoes should be checked for fit four times a year, not merely twice, as many families do.

But beware of shoddy quality in promotionally-priced shoes this year. The boost in U.S. manufacturers' prices is encouraging a flood of imported shoes, many of dubious quality.

In comparing values, look for:

Welt construction, in which both upper and sole are attached to a thin strip of leather called a welt; full grain calfskin, recognizable by a close grain and tiny pores; leather reinforcement at the top of the heel seam (in the best quality, the leather overlaps at the seam), and genuine leather sock lining.

The food price situation is so bad that the U.S. Agriculture Dept. led its list of March "plentifuls" by recommending peanuts. That kind of diet can get monotonous, although peanut butter is a highly nutritious, low cost favorite among children.

The only other relatively reasonable protein values are broilers and eggs. High meat prices have kept up egg prices too. But we're coming into the flush season with lower egg prices available. Combinations of eggs and meat can help stretch your use of expensive meat this spring.

New York Sampling:

Heart Attack Study Finds Activity Factor

PHYSICALLY ACTIVE MEN are likely to return to work sooner following heart attacks than less active men.

This was one of the findings of a research team of the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York (HIP) in a report published in the February issue of the Journal of the American Public Health Association.

In the largest medical-statistical sampling of its kind ever undertaken, the study, now in its sixth year, covers 55,000 adult males in HIP's 700,000 subscriber population under a continuing grant from the National Institutes of Health of the U.S. Public Health Service.

The finding is consistent with an earlier report from the study that heart attacks occur more frequently among men who are least active physically. In addition, the percentage of men who died soon after an attack was found to be three times greater for "least active" men than for those considered "most active."

Along with the physically inactive, men over 55, those suffering severe attacks, and blue collar workers made up the largest percentage of those who had not returned to work three months after the attack. However, the difference for blue collar workers might be influenced by such factors as lower job mobility, disability pensions and Workmen's Compensation regulations, the report observed.

The study found that 20 percent of all heart attack victims had returned to work within three months and 60 percent by eighteen months.

Among those who survived the acute phase of the attack, 30 percent returned to work within three months and 90 percent by 18 months.

Among the men covered in the research, 301 suffered a heart attack during the first 18 months of the study, which is under the direction of Sam Shapiro, HIP's director of research and statistics. The medical director is Dr. Charles W. Frank, associate professor of medicine at Albert Einstein College of Medicine. Associated with the study are Mrs. Eve Weinblatt, HIP's assistant director for research and Dr. Robert V. Sager, the plan's associate medical director.

A unique feature of the research was that it weighed physical activity connected with employment, as well as leisure-hour patterns of physical effort.

The HIP study noted that the marked disadvantage for least active men "emphasized the importance from a public health standpoint of more specific studies of physical activity in relation to coronary heart disease."

Girls of All Ages Are Frightened By Dark at the Top of the Stairs

By Jane Goodsell

IT'S BEEN YEARS since our house has been free of ghosts, ghoulies, bogeymen, bears, burglars and things that go bump in the night.

When Ann was a little girl, we were haunted mostly by bears in the toy chest. I'd wake up in the middle of the night to see a wispy little figure standing barefoot beside my bed, clutching her Raggedy Ann doll and whispering, "Mommy, they're there again! Can I get in bed with you?"

By the time the bears had departed, Katie discovered the man who lives behind the furnace. Well, he wasn't a man exactly. He was more of an unseen presence, a sort of a feeling that something was about to jump out and grab you. At any rate, Katie never could give us a clear cut description of him. Sometimes she'd say he had a black patch over one eye and looked like a pirate.

In the daytime, he changed character completely and became ridiculous. Katie and I would go down to the basement together and look behind the furnace.

"See?" I'd say. "There's nothing there at all. You aren't going to be scared any more, are you?"

"Nope," Katie would say bravely. "Not any more. Besides, he's just an old silly."

NOW IT'S MOLLY who wakes me up at night, whispering, "Mommy, can I get in bed with you?" She stands beside my bed, a shadowy little wraith in a too-short nightgown, holding her flashlight in one hand and dangling her Pooh Bear in the other. I pull back the covers and move over to make room for her.

"I heard something tapping against my window," she whispers. "It went tap . . . tap . . . tap . . ."

"It was just the branch of a tree," I tell her reassuringly. "That's nothing to be afraid of."

"When I'm here with you," she murmurs, "it's just a tree. But when I'm all alone in my room, and it's all dark, and everybody's asleep, and I hear that tap, tap, tap . . . then it's something trying to get into my room."

Well, naturally I let her stay. After all, if something is tapping at the window, trying to get into the house, I'd just as soon have company, too.

Path to Better Jobs:

High School Tests Urged on Unionists

Unions in all parts of the country are offering their members something new in the way of service—help in finishing high school so they will be eligible for better jobs.

They're not passing out diplomas—in fact, most of the 100,000 adults ranging in age from 20 to 70 who finally made it last year didn't end up with diplomas at all, but with Certificates of High School Equivalency. These are just as good for most purposes and meet the requirements of employers seeking high school graduates, Marjorie B. Rachlin writes in the current issue of the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine, the American Federationist.

Mrs. Rachlin is a labor educator of broad experience who developed her Federationist article, AFL-CIO Dept. of Education feature, from stories she had written for the Machinist, official weekly of the Machinists. Some 62 million Americans lack high school diplomas, she notes, but in this age of automation, "it is becoming much easier" to get one.

"There are two main ways to secure a high school diploma," she writes. "A person can go back to school, usually at night, and make up the credits he needs to graduate. Or he can take a test, called the General Educational Development Test, through arrangement with his state department of education. If he passes the GED test, he can, in 45 of the 50 states, receive a certificate of High School Equivalency.

"A Certificate of Equivalency is not a diploma, but it is as good as a diploma for most purposes. It is accepted by employers as evidence of completion of a high school education since it shows a person has knowledge equivalent to that of a high school graduate. Many colleges accept it, although it does not guarantee admittance to a college because most colleges have their own tests. . . ."

With automation changing job requirements in many plants, Mrs. Rachlin points out, "unions have become interested in helping members secure their high school diplomas."

"Publicizing the GED tests is one simple way to do this, since many members have not heard about the tests or the High School Equivalency Certificate," she continues.

"Some local labor groups have gone further, however, and have worked with local public education authorities to set up special classes to prepare members for the GED tests. This is a new kind of union service which has met with enthusiastic response from members."

"Taking the GED test is the quickest way to finish high school for most adults," particularly for those who need a diploma or certificate mainly to fill the formal requirements of a job or license," Mrs. Rachlin notes, and adds:

"However, for a person who needs wider knowledge to enter a new career, for the person who wants background to go on to college, it may be wiser to spend the time to go back to school and take the courses he needs."

The GED test is really five separate tests, Mrs. Rachlin explains, covering English composition, social studies, mathematics, English literature and science, which are designed "to test the individual's knowledge in each field and his ability to think." The questions are all multiple choices intended to determine, she writes, if the person "has the background knowledge and reasoning power of an average high school graduate." Each takes about five hours.

Some people take the tests with little or no preparation and others take special 10-week brush-up courses offered by their high schools, often with union cooperation. The average adult "has learned much more than he realizes," Mrs. Rachlin notes, and "the GED test is designed with this in mind." If one fails in one subject, she says, all he has to do is brush up on it and take the test again in that subject.

A warning is given against expecting too much from correspondence courses alone, but they can be helpful for those taking GED tests, Mrs. Rachlin says. She adds that for any further purpose, such as obtaining a formal high school diploma or for admittance to a college, local educational authorities should be consulted."

MORE THAN 30,000 paperback books a year are sold to union members by libraries like this one, run by the Auto Workers. Shown with some of the 255 titles in stock are UAW Education Dir. Carroll Hutton (right), Mrs. Shirley Green and Tony Thoman, book program manager. A number of other unions have similar programs providing books of all types at popular prices.

Medicare Spurring Health Plan Changes

South Bend, Ind.— The "imaginative dovetailing" of existing health insurance programs with medicare was urged by an AFL-CIO spokesman at the University of Notre Dame's 14th annual Union-Management Conference.

Raymond Munts, acting director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, said it will take "a good deal of scurrying" to develop coordinated plans by July 1, when the medicare program goes into operation.

He told the conference:

"Negotiated plans for retirees have an opportunity to complement the social security benefits at greatly reduced cost, and a number of unions are now negotiating a supplementary package to plug some of the gaps in the medicare benefits.

"Many unions would like to take this opportunity to establish a broader range of total coverage . . . Another challenge at adaptation exists where early retirement puts some workers off the payroll before they are eligible for medicare. A transition program of benefits equal to the post-65 package has been negotiated in some companies."

Munts noted also that medicare will strengthen private health insurance by providing for "the highest risk group—the aged."

Beyond Doctors

The federal government's responsibility in administering medicare, Munts said, goes beyond winning the cooperation of doctors who fought enactment of the program.

"When government becomes a big buyer of health services," he said, "it must be interested in the cost and quality of what it is buying."

If medicare succeeds in providing good service at reasonable cost, he suggested, "we can confidently extend it to other problem areas—to the disabled and survivors under social security, maybe even to the unemployed who, like the aged, frequently lose their health insurance."

The broader implication of medicare, Munts said, is that for the over-65 age group "accessibility to care is equal for the rich and for the poor. . . . Health services are becoming a matter of right."

Citrus Packers Choose Union At 3rd Plant

Winter Haven, Fla.—Workers at the Adams Packing Association Inc., one of the state's largest shippers of fresh fruit and canned juices, voted for the Steelworkers after a rapid organizing campaign. The vote count by the National Labor Relations Board was 388-264.

The multi-unit plant at nearby Auburndale was the third organized by the union with the aid of workers in area can plants under USWA contract. The can workers have a wage scale from 90 cents to $1.25 an hour higher than that of employes in the citrus packing industry, some of whom do similar work for $1.25-$1.60 an hour, the USWA said.

The Adams firm has plants where workers pack fresh fruit, citrus canned goods, concentrate and juices, and a pulp mill for cattle feed. It agreed to a consent election among its 776 eligible workers.

Taking part in the campaign, which began Jan. 20, were members of the USWA and AFL-CIO organizing staffs and an in-plant committee.

Johnson Picks Moderate for 'Fed' Vacancy

Andrew F. Brimmer, a top-ranking economist in the Dept. of Commerce, was named by Pres. Johnson as a member of the Federal Reserve Board.

Generally rated as a "moderate" in his views on monetary policy, Brimmer succeeds C. Canby Balderston, who voted last December with Chairman William McChesney Martin to raise interest rates by one-half of 1 percent — an action opposed by the President and strongly attacked by labor.

The reserve board split by a 4-3 vote on its interest rate action, and Brimmer thus could become an important figure in formulating its future judgments on the timing and scope of interest-rate changes.

As assistant secretary of the Commerce Dept., Brimmer supervised its Office of Business Economics and previously had taught at both the University of Pennsylvania and Michigan State University.

The Federal Reserve Board was created by Congress as an independent agency, not responsible to the President, but every strong President has sought to influence its actions in the field of monetary policy. Martin, the present chairman, has close ties with the financial and banking communities and moved toward the December interest-rate increase because of his apprehension of inflation.

The Administration sought to stave off the increase, and public objections were voiced in advance by both Treasury Sec. Henry Fowler and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

Johnson and Martin met quickly, however, to deny that any open break was in prospect.

Fire Fighters Add 1st Delaware Local

The entire membership of the Wilmington, Del., Fire Dept. has joined the Fire Fighters and has received its charter as a local, Raymond C. Fogarty, district vice president of the union, has announced.

The local is the first established in Delaware, which was the only state in the country without a Fire Fighter unit, Fogarty said. The department has about 245 members.

IAFF Pres. Wililam D. Buck expressed gratification at the "major breakthrough" for the union in the Delaware area.

Fogarty also announced the chartering of new locals in Anne Arundel County, Hagerstown and Indian Head, Md., and Farrell, Pa.

Reopened Shoe Plant Hit For Refusal to Bargain

The National Labor Relations Board ruled that the Cumberland Shoe Corp. was guilty of unfair practices and violation of a court order to bargain on wages and working conditions when it reopened a closed plant without notifying the Boot & Shoe Workers.

The firm owned plants at Chapel Hill and Franklin, Tenn., and in 1964 decided to close the Chapel Hill plant on the ground that it was losing money. It had previously been found guilty of unfair practices by the NLRB and the judgment was affirmed by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The plant was fully closed by Apr. 1.

About Oct. 5 the company reopened a boot-making department at Chapel Hill and began recalling the work force. It resumed full-scale operations about Jan. 15, 1965, according to testimony.

Trial Examiner Eugene F. Frey ruled after new hearings that the real reason for the company's shutdown and reopening was not economic "but an attempt to revive and continue the Chapel Hill operation in a non-union plant and atmosphere."

The board disagreed, saying "it is abundantly clear that the Chapel Hill operations were originally discontinued" for "compelling economic reasons."

The situation became different when Cumberland Shoe started a new operation in the once-closed plant, the board declared. It agreed with Frey that the firm committed a new unfair labor practice by its failure to notify the union of the reopening, and by again refusing to bargain on request.

Since the board's order to management to bargain with the union had been enforced by the appellate court, the company had a "clear and continuing obligation to recognize and deal with the union as the representative of its employes," the NLRB said.

It ordered management to bargain now with the Boot & Shoe Workers on pay rates, hours, and other contract terms.

IAM Associate Counsel Named NLRB Examiner

George W. Christensen, associate counsel for the Machinists since 1952, was one of five attorneys appointed by the National Labor Relations Board as trial examiners. A former labor relations adviser for the Wage Stabilization Board, he will serve the NLRB in San Francisco.

Steel Union to Provide Milk for Viet Children

Pittsburgh—Steelworker locals in the United States and Canada are raising money to buy canned chocolate milk for the children of South Viet Nam.

Milk is urgently needed, the USWA said, to halt the spread of diseases caused by malnutrition. Because both ordinary milk and reconstituted milk products are often risky in a hot climate where water is not always sanitary, canned chocolate milk was chosen as a safer and more appetizing form of nourishment.

The milk will be distributed to the children by South Viet Nam's labor movement—the Confederation of Vietnamese Workers. The CTV is already providing a number of social services to the people of the war-torn land, many in cooperation with AFL-CIO unions.

The USWA announced its campaign in a letter from Sec.-Treas. Walter J. Burke to district directors, staff representatives and local unions. Burke said "other safe nutritional foods" may also be sent for distribution by the Vietnamese federation at its 21 schools and social centers.

"One of the most unfortunate side effects of the Vietnamese conflict is the great hardship being inflicted upon the civilian population," he observed. "Human misery visited upon any group is to be deplored, but it is particularly touching as it involves small children."

Many AFL-CIO affiliates in recent months have undertaken special programs to help the people of South Viet Nam, including contributions to buy food, medicine, clothing, tools and school kits through CARE's refugee aid program in response to an appeal by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

ORIGINAL VOLUME of "Sixteen Discourses" by Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet, pioneer American educator of the deaf, was presented to Dr. Freeman McConnel (left), director of the Bill Wilkerson Speech & Hearing Center in Nashville, Tenn., by Pres. Norbert Ward of TV Engineers Local 2132. The union, a unit of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, made the presentation in observance of National Electric Week and the birthdate of Thomas A. Edison.

Unions Win 95% Vote At Local Poverty Unit

Los Angeles—Employes of the Economic & Youth Opportunities Agency here scored a major breakthrough when they picked Local 1108 of the State, County & Municipal Employes as their bargaining representative by a vote of 373 to 23.

The agency, which has some 585 employes ranging from clerks at $4,000 a year to professional researchers and program planners whose salaries rise above the $12,000 mark, is state-operated but governed by the participating counties.

The balloting marked the first time the election facilities of the State Mediation Service were used by agreement of a union and a state agency. Other AFSCME units have obtained exclusive recognition in other units of the state government, but without use of the election procedures.

The victory was the climax of a year-long organizing drive conducted by EYOA employes themselves, the union and the AFL-CIO Los Angeles-Orange Counties Organizing Committee, and was hailed by Dir. Sam Hunegs of AFSCME Council 20 as a precedent-setter on the organizing front.

Edward F. Lingo, coordinator for the Public Employes Division of the organizing committee, termed the 95 percent "yes" vote "an indication of the growing awareness on the part of public employes, including professional and white collar groups, of their need for effective union representation—and of the fact that union representation can be most effective within the framework of true collective bargaining."

The agency's executive board agreed to the union request for a bargaining election after hearing a persuasive plea by its labor member, Pres. Irvin Mazzei of the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO. In addition, it agreed to bargain on a first contract if the union won.

Local 1108 had the good wishes of EYOE Exec. Dir. Joe P. Maldonado, who said the election would "help regularize relations" between the agency and its employes.

Pay Chiseling Suits Brought By Labor Dept.

Continued employer violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act are pointed up in civil suits filed by the Labor Dept. against two industrial firms and six southern cotton farmers.

Overtime violations and failure to keep the required records were charged against the Gulf Oil Corp., Houston, Tex., and the Lone Star Steel Co. in Morris County, Tex. Operators of cotton farms in North Carolina and South Carolina were accused of violating the child labor provisions of the law, and with failure to keep required records.

A Labor Dept. spokesman said the latter suits are typical of "several hundred" filed each year in child labor law cases.

The department charged that eight Gulf employes who truck gasoline from the firm's refineries at Abilene and Big Spring, Tex., have been employed more than 40 hours a week without being paid time and a half as the law requires. Wirtz asked in a similiar suit that Lone Star Steel be ordered to pay overtime and keep adequate records for 150 workers at its steel mill and iron mine.

The suits against the cotton farmers asked court orders restraining them from violating the record-keeping and child labor provisions of the law, including a provision that youths under 16 cannot be employed in agriculture during school hours.

Aid Rallied for Genesco Strikers

Chapel Hill, Tenn. — A small new local of Boot & Shoe Workers is walking a picket line here to do what no other union has been able to do — get a first contract from Genesco, third largest U.S. shoe manufacturer.

Nearly 200 workers at the big firm's Chapel Hill warehouse joined the union, voted for it in a National Labor Relations Board election, and walked out after months of unsuccessful efforts to get a first contract. The strikers need all the help they can get, said Intl. Pres. John E. Mara, and are seeking support of a consumer boycott of Genesco shoes sold under these labels:

I. Miller, W. L. Douglas, Flagg Bros., Safety First, Jarman, Fortune, Friendly, Hardy, Holiday, Fortunet, Johnson & Murphy, Mademoiselle, Milliken's, and Valentine.

AIFLD Progress Report:

'Impact' Aid to Latin Labor Termed Highly Successful

The AFL-CIO Impact Projects Program of self-help for Latin American unions was called "an outstanding success" in a progress report prepared by the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

The AIFLD administers the program and through its field representatives assists in developing specific projects.

Its success has been notable, the report declared, "both from the standpoint of immediate, tangible results achieved by these projects, and the opportunity which they afford the Latin American worker to participate in the betterment of his economic and social conditions."

"Results such as these," it added, "are an invaluable tool in the development of a strong democratic labor movement."

The program was launched in November 1964, when the AFL-CIO Executive Council allocated $50,000 for grants or interest-free loans to finance small projects for which the Latin American unions would provide labor and, in some cases, additional funds.

Ten months later, in September 1965, the AIFLD reported to the Executive Council that 24 projects in nine countries had been approved and were completed or in various stages of development, and that all but $80 of the original $50,000 had been committed. The Executive Council made another $50,000 available for the program.

The latest report noted that since September, 15 new projects had been approved and that a total of $80,955 had been committed. The sum was split between $45,915 in interest-free, non-readjustable local currency loans and $35,040 in the form of grants, the report said.

"The increase in the number of projects approved stems directly from the increasing number of requests being received by AIFLD country program directors in the various countries," the report said. "This increase is a natural result of the program's becoming more widely known among the free, democratic trade unions of Latin America."

The 39 separate projects now in various stages of completion are in 13 different countries, the report showed.

They range from red, white and blue slides, swings and a merry-go-round in Manizales, Colombia, next door to headquarters of the Caldas Workers Union, to six hand looms to be used in a Floresta, Pernambuco, boarding school in Brazil.

The playground was made possible through a $700 Impact Projects grant that provided half the cost of seven pieces of equipment that have seen considerable use since the dedication in January. The union put up the rest of the cost—and also made the decision to paint the equipment this country's national colors.

The grant for hand looms amounted to $540, was sponsored by the Federation of Rural Trade Unions and went to a boarding school for the children of rural workers who live too far away to commute. The youngsters in their spare time will use the looms to weave hammocks which will be sold to help defray the cost of operating the institution.

The projects all have strong community overtones—a $1,000 interest-free loan to increase the stock of a drug cooperative in Cartagena, Colombia, sponsored by the Union of Workers of Bolivar; another loan of $1,925 to help a Quito, Ecuador, union-sponsored cooperative buy land for a housing project; a $5,000 loan to the Postal Union of Buenos Aires, Argentina, to complete construction of a community center in Buenos Aires, and so on.

Other countries where projects have been completed or are under way, the report showed, are Bolivia, British Guiana, Chile, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Honduras, Nicaragua, Peru and Venezuela.

'Bad-Faith' Bargaining Found in Checkoff Case

A trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board has ruled that a company failed to meet its obligation to bargain in good faith when it rejected a dues checkoff proposal in the belief that the union would wither away without it.

Examiner Frederick U. Reel said the Roanoke, Va., Iron & Bridge Works, Inc., refused to give the Steelworkers a dues deduction arrangement on the pretext that the collection of union dues was union business. The principle was "phony" because it was grounded in the company's belief that the union could not exist without a checkoff, Reel held. He wrote:

"Where an employer takes a position in bargaining not to advance his own economic interest" or the rights of his employes but "for the purpose of damaging or destroying the union . . . he is not bargaining in good faith."

Company employes first voted for the USWA in 1951 but the local died out in the absence of a dues checkoff. A company union was recognized in 1961 and management granted a checkoff clause, but it died anyway, Reel found, when no worker authorized a checkoff.

The Steelworkers won a new election 97-26, after a second organizing drive and, after 12 or 13 contract meetings, voted a strike. The union offered six dues deduction plans, all rejected by management. The examiner, citing the record, said the company long before the start of negotiations "equated the checkoff with the union's survival" and bargained in bad faith.

The examiner recommended that the firm be ordered to bargain in good faith if the union again requests a dues checkoff. The USWA ended its strike without the checkoff in 1965, but continued to press its unfair practice charges.

Job Outlook Brightest In White Collar Fields

The Labor Dept. has taken its regular look into the glass ball of job prospects and has announced that over the next decade the outlook is brightest for professional, technical, service and clerical workers.

The results of its research are detailed in the 1966-67 edition of its Occupational Outlook Handbook and attest to the impact of automation on demands for skills. The handbook provides basic information on long-term employment trends in many jobs and industries for young people making career choices.

Among jobs with "bright long-term employment outlooks," the handbook lists:

"Engineers, mathematicians, scientists, health-related workers, instrument makers and repairmen, electronic maintenance workers, construction craftsmen, air-conditioning and refrigeration mechanics, computer programmers, business-machine servicemen and several areas of teaching."

Also listed are these "significant" occupational changes for the period up to 1975:

- White collar occupations will continue to grow more rapidly than blue.
- Professional, technical and kindred workers, service workers and clerical workers will grow the fastest.
- Skilled, managerial and sales occupations will show average growth.
- Labor and unskilled jobs will show little or no growth.
- Farm workers will continue to decline in number.

Major industrial changes forecast were:

- A slowdown in the rate of decline of farm jobs.
- A slight decline in mining jobs despite a substantial rise in production.
- Little overall change in transportation and public utility employment as drops in railroad jobs are offset by increases in air and motor freight transportation.
- Growth of about one-fifth in manufacturing, with variation among industries.
- A 25 percent rise in wholesale and retail trade, finance, insurance and real estate.
- A one-third increase in contract construction.
- A rise of up to 50 percent in government employment, most of it at state and local levels.

The handbook, which spells out the details of 700 jobs, may be ordered from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D.C. 20402; or from regional offices of the Bureau of Labor Statistics in Atlanta, Ga.; Boston, Cleveland, New York City, Chicago and San Francisco. Price, $5 per copy.

Union Promotes Domestic Wines

Philadelphia—The Glass Bottle Blowers, following through on Pres. Johnson's recent statement that he wanted wines made from American-grown grapes served at White House functions, has initiated a campaign to get union members to buy wines made in this country.

The drive was launched with a full-page appeal in GBBA Horizons, the union magazine, which emphasized that "today's American wines rate as high as the most expensive imports."

Besides, the publication added, the bottles American wine comes in are made by GBBA members, as the entire bottle-making industry is organized.

Message to Congress:

LBJ Urges Changes In Health, School Aid

Pres. Johnson asked Congress for a package of health and education legislation which would expand many existing programs, cut back on others, and break ground for "ambitious goals for the future."

The twin goals, the President said, are:

- "Full education for every citizen to the limits of his capacity to absorb it.
- "Good health for every citizen to the limits of our country's capacity to provide it."

Much of the emphasis in the President's message was on developing more flexible forms of federal aid and grants to states, along with reorganization of the Public Health Service "for its rapidly changing and expanding role."

His most controversial proposals, however, were directed towards cutbacks of two existing programs. They have already aroused a storm of opposition on Capitol Hill — including outcries from economy-oriented conservatives.

The Administration is asking a big slash in grants to school districts where there are large numbers of federal civilian and military personnel. The effect would be to eliminate "impact" aid to 1,200 of the 4,100 school districts which now receive it, and to reduce the amount received by the other districts. The cost would be cut from $466 million to $206 million a year.

School Milk Cut

Johnson also asked a sharp cut in federal subsidies for milk sold in schools and for school lunches. These subsidies, now available without regard to need, would be replaced by a program of free milk and free or very low-cost meals to needy children and those attending schools in low-income areas. Additional pilot programs would experiment with projects such as free breakfasts to needy children and free lunches at summer child-care centers.

The major new program advanced by the President — although its first year cost would be low — involves modernizing obsolete hospitals in urban areas through federal loans and grants. The President also asked Congress to appropriate this year the full $270 million authorized for hospital construction under the Hill-Burton Act.

In education, he proposed a doubling of the "Operation Head Start" program for pre-school children from poor homes, a liberalized "poverty ceiling" for school districts to qualify for federal grants and modest increases in aid to libraries and colleges.

Johnson told Congress he has directed establishment of "a center for research on the cause, prevention, control and treatment of alcoholism" in the Public Health Service.

"The alcoholic suffers from a disease which will yield eventually to scientific research and adequate treatment," the President said. "Even with the present limited state of our knowledge, much can be done to reduce the untold suffering and uncounted waste caused by this affliction."

He asked for funds to step up the government's research and services in family planning, declaring: "It is essential that all families have access to information and services that will allow freedom to choose the number and spacing of their children within the dictates of individual conscience."

To complement the school lunch program for needy children, Johnson said he has directed the secretary of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare to develop a special food service program at centers for the elderly.

"Local organizations will be able to offer balanced, nutritious meals to the elderly—without charge or at reduced prices to those who are in need," he said.

In other areas, the President asked grants to improve training facilities for medical and dental technicians and proposed a more flexible system of health research grants for the states so that money could be used where most needed.

He also endorsed legislation making mortgage insurance available for group practice facilities.

TRACTOR WITHOUT A MUFFLER was used by the employer at the vineyards of Louis Caric & Sons to drown out the voices of Delano, Calif., grape strikers who had set up a picket line. The walkout is joint move of the AFL-CIO Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee and the unaffiliated National Farm Workers Association to win bargaining rights and a living wage for farm workers. The AFL-CIO Executive Council at its meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., urged affiliates to give "effective and sustained" support to the strikers.

High Court Nails Down Ex-GIs' Seniority Rights

was to be treated as though he had been continuously employed during the period spent in the armed forces."

The decision added:

"The cost to an employe of losing his job is not measured by how much work he did in the past—but by the rights and benefits he forfeits by giving up his job . . . The rights and benefits increase in proportion to the amount of seniority, and it is only natural that those with the most seniority should receive the highest allowances since they were giving up more rights and benefits."

Black said the amount of severance pay "is just as much perquisite of seniority as the more traditional benefits such as work preference and order of layoff and recall."

The 8-0 decision—Chief Justice Earl Warren did not participate—reversed the U.S. 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals which had ruled in favor of the railroad. It upheld the original district court decision granting each of the veterans involved an additional $1,242 in severance pay.

Both the original 1940 Selective Service Act and subsequent draft laws provide re-employment rights with full seniority for persons who enter the armed forces—either through the draft or as volunteers. The Supreme Court severance pay ruling would thus apply to all persons with military service who are re-employed at the firm where they worked before entering the armed forces.

In another case, the Supreme Court refused to consider a union's suit to compel a second arbitration of a grievance after an arbitrator's award had been set aside by a state court.

An Ohio judge had nullified an arbitration in a grievance brought by the Machinists against the Jeffrey Galion Mfg. Co., holding that the arbitrator had exceeded his authority by ruling on issues not raised in the proceedings. The union then filed suit in federal court to compel a new arbitration, but both the district court and the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals rejected the suit. The Supreme Court declined to review the case.

Ontario Health Plan Falls Shy Of Union Goals

Toronto, Ont.—The Ontario legislature after years of debate has passed a medicare bill that falls short of Royal Commission recommendations which have been adopted as standards by organized labor, churches and other mass membership groups.

For a standard premium of $60 a year for an individual or $150 for a family of three or more, the plan will provide coverage for physicians' services in the home or on office calls and in hospitals, as well as for special services ordered by the individual's physician.

The provincial government will subsidize part of the annual fees for low-income families. Half the premium will be paid for individuals with taxable incomes of $500 or less a year and for couples with taxable incomes of $1,000 or less. Families of three or more with taxable incomes of no more than $1,300 will get a $90 subsidy.

The Canadian Labor Congress and its affiliates and the New Democratic Party of Ontario vainly urged the provincial government to broaden the program to bring it within the scope of federal health care grants.

Sex Bias Barred In Insurance Plans

A health insurance plan that covers a male employe's wife but not a female employe's husband violates the equal pay provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, Wage - Hour Administrator Clarence T. Lundquist has ruled.

But if the same benefits are offered married employes of both sexes and some choose not to participate for personal reasons, such as to avoid dual coverage, "no violation would result," he wrote in reply to an inquiry.

Lundquist added a warning that the question of equal group medical insurance coverage might also be subject to the equal employment opportunity section of the Civil Rights Act, and indicated a query might be made of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Cost-of-Living Index Unchanged in January

Living costs leveled off in January after a four-month rise, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The Consumer Price Index rested at its December level of 111 percent of the 1957-59 price average. This was 1.9 percent higher than January of 1965.

BLS Commissioner Arthur M. Ross told newsmen he expected consumer prices to rise slightly more than 2 percent this year, but said the economy still was "safely below the threshold of inflationary phenomena."

A companion BLS report showed a one-cent increase in average hourly wages of factory workers in January, to a record $2.67. But weekly take-home pay dropped $2.25 below December's all-time high. This was ascribed to a seasonal reduction in the workweek and the 1966 increase in social security taxes.

The January average factory take-home pay was $97.37 for a worker with three dependents. While this was up $2.28 from a year ago, the increased buying power—based on 1957-59 dollars—was only 40 cents.

LBJ Pleased

Pres. Johnson, at a news conference, described the January cost of living report as "encouraging."

Ross said the price index would have gone up about one-tenth of 1 percent in January if it were not for the reductions in excise taxes on telephones and automobiles. An Administration bill to rescind those tax cuts has already passed the House.

In other areas, food prices averaged seven-tenths of 1 percent higher in January, primarily because of sharp increases in meat prices. Used car prices dropped 3 percent, but auto insurance costs went up in many areas. Clothing prices dipped, although less than usual for January.

Although there was no change in the January price index, about 975,000 workers will receive cost-of-living increases based on changes in the price index over the past quarter or half-year. The great majority, in the auto, farm equipment and aerospace industries, will receive an additional two cents an hour.

In dollar terms, the January price index of 111 means that the market basket of goods and services which cost $10 in the 1957-59 base period would cost $11.10.

Pagano Takes Post In Adult Education

Jules Pagano, head of the Peace Corps' training program and former education director for the Communications Workers, has been appointed director of the Division of Adult Education in the U.S. Office of Education.

Pagano headed CWA education activities for 11 years and for four years also was assistant to the CWA vice president. He joined the Peace Corps in 1961 as a consultant on recruitment and training. In his new post he will administer adult basic education programs.

Dinner Slated In Tribute to NFU's Patton

James G. Patton, who retires next month after 25 years as president of the National Farmers Union, will be honored by organized labor at an appreciation dinner Mar. 28 in Washington.

Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists is chairman of the sponsoring committee and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will be the principal speaker at the dinner in tribute to Patton's lifetime of devotion to farmer-labor understanding and cooperation.

Patton is the son of a union officer and as a youth walked many picket lines. He actively supported organized labor's effort to improve urban living conditions and strongly backed higher wages that put more money in the pockets of the farmers' best customers.

He became chairman of the National Council for Industrial Peace following the deaths of the original co-chairmen, Sen. Herbert Lehman (D-N.Y.) and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. At hundreds of meetings of farmers he spoke out against so-called "right-to-work" laws, and gave full backing to AFL-CIO efforts to obtain repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits states to enact them.

The dinner will be held in the Statler-Hilton Hotel and will be preceded by a reception.

LBJ Stresses Safety Role:

Cabinet-Level Department Asked for Transportation

Pres. Johnson asked Congress for a major restructuring of federal government activities in the transportation and travel-safety fields through the creation of a new cabinet-level Dept. of Transportation.

Into this new department, under his proposal, would be transferred several agencies and bureaus now functioning semi-autonomously in the Dept. of Commerce, such as the Bureau of Public Roads, the Federal Aviation Agency and the Maritime Administration in addition to the policy and research activities and staff of the present under-secretary for transportation.

The Coast Guard, a unit of the Treasury Dept., would also be transferred to the proposed new department to pursue its "principal peacetime activities" relating to transportation and marine safety. In time of war it would operate, as now, as a unit of the Navy.

Safety functions of the Civil Aeronautics Board and Interstate Commerce Commission would also be shifted.

The President pointed out that passenger and cargo transportation has increased enormously within the past quarter century and remarked that, "vital as it is, mammoth and complex as it has become," the country's system for handling cargo and passenger demand "is not good enough."

35 Agencies Involved

The proposed new department, if authorized by Congress, would supersede and pull together some 35 federal agencies now spending just under $6 billion a year on transportation in various forms. Together these agencies employ almost 100,000 workers, the President told Congress.

Citing the importance of transportation as an employer, he pointed out that there are 737,000 railroad workers, 270,000 in urban and inter-urban systems, 230,000 in air transport, almost 1 million in motor transport and a grand total of more than 2.5 million with the inclusion of pipeline and water transport employes.

Yet our city streets are congested, the automobile superhighways have not prevented 50,000 accidental deaths a year, high-speed ships are partially wasted because of port delays, and much of our existing transportation equipment is aging if not obsolete, his message said.

The country "lacks a coordinated transportation system that permits travelers and goods to move conveniently and efficiently from one means . . . to another, using the best characteristics of each," he declared.

The result is "waste of human and economic resources — and of the taxpayers' dollar" because of failure to modernize our facilities and take full advantage of new technologies.

First Proposal in 1936

The first serious proposal of a Dept. of Transportation came in 1936 from a select committee of the Senate, the President's message reminded Congress, and since then has been recommended by the Hoover Commission on government reorganization and by Pres. Eisenhower.

Johnson placed heavy emphasis on the safety functions of the proposed new department, pointing out that "the toll of Americans killed . . . since introduction of the automobile is more than all the combat deaths suffered in all our wars."

He recommended passage of a Traffic Safety Act under which the government could set minimum safety standards for all vehicles and their components, including automobile tires, and bar interstate shipment of vehicles not up to the standards.

2 Southern States Face Major Primary Battles

have been the foundation of the Byrd organization's power.

Major gubernatorial candidates among Alabama Democrats now include Flowers, Mrs. Wallace, former Gov. John M. Patterson, former Rep. Carl D. Elliott and former Gov. James Folsom—which probably means that no candidate will get a majority in the May 3 primary and that a runoff will be required later that month.

Republicans meanwhile are preparing to nominate freshman Rep. James D. Martin as candidate for governor. Alabama went heavily for Barry Goldwater in 1964, gave the GOP five of the state's eight U. S. House seats, and some Democrat officeholders are now shifting to the Republican Party in the hope of catching a GOP tide.

The GOP has not yet indicated its choice of a candidate against Democratic Sen. John J. Sparkman, but Sparkman seems at least assured that he will have no serious primary opposition.

Democrats recently struck the phrase "white supremacy" from the party emblem in recognition of the growing importance of the state's registered Negro voters, now totaling about 200,000. Martin, a hard-line segregationist himself in 1964, now speaks more moderately but is expected to win few votes among Negroes unless the Democratic nominee should turn out to be Mrs. Wallace.

Mrs. Wallace made it clear that she was running as a stand-in for her husband and that Wallace, if she was elected, would continue to run the governor's office.

Ex-Staff Official Hushing Dies at 82

William C. Hushing, who retired in 1956 as co-director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, died at his home in Litchfield, Ill., after a heart attack. He was 82.

A member of the Pattern Makers since 1910, he sparked the first union organization in the Canal Zone, helping to establish the Central Labor Union and the Metal Trades Council in 1914. For many years he represented the interests of Canal Zone unions in Washington, and later joined the staff of the former AFL as an organizer. In 1932 he was appointed to the AFL Legislative Committee, and in 1938 became its chairman. He became co-director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation upon the merger in 1955.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Girtha E. Hushing; a daughter, Mrs. Thelma Dawson; a granddaughter and a sister.

Additional $4.8 Billion Approved for Viet War

Congress voted overwhelmingly to authorize an emergency $4.8 billion for the Viet Nam war and Pres. Johnson hailed the vote as one "our fighting men and allies will gratefully approve."

The bill speedily passed the House, 392-4, and won 93-2 approval in the Senate after a sometimes stormy two-week debate.

Most critics of the Administration's Viet Nam policies joined with supporters of the President in approving funds for military aircraft, weapons and equipment needed in Southeast Asia.

Only five senators voted against tabling—thus killing— an amendment by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) to rescind the 1964 resolution by Congress approving "all necessary measures" the President might take to repeal aggression in Southeast Asia. Among the five was Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J. W. Fulbright (D-Ark.), who has been at odds with the Administration for many months.

Presidential Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers commented that the vote gave senators an opportunity to say where they stand.

Seventy-eight House Democrats who voted for the bill itself signed a cautiously-worded statement endorsing Johnson's efforts to bring about peace negotiations and declaring their opposition to any "indiscriminate enlargement of the military effort."

Minor differences between the two bills were expected to be quickly reconciled. The funds authorized must then be appropriated in a separate bill. However, no obstacle is expected.

Another war-linked measure, the Administration tax bill, was cleared for the Senate floor in almost the same form it passed the House.

The Senate Finance Committee approved the higher excise taxes on telephone calls and automobile sales and the speedup in corporation tax and withholding collections—all designed to provide $6 billion over the next 15 months to help offset higher military costs.

One major amendment was adopted in committee—to bar tax deduction for advertisements in political publications.

In other actions:

- The Senate passed and sent to the White House a bill authorizing U.S. participation in the new Asian Development Bank, a cooperative enterprise to help Asian nations strengthen their economies. The AFL-CIO had testified in favor of the bill.
- The House voted 371-23 for a bill creating 45 new judgeships in federal district and appellate courts —designed to relieve overcrowded court dockets. The bill now goes back to the Senate which last year approved a 44-judgeship bill.

Pensions Cover 40% of Workers

New York—Forty percent of the nation's civilian work force is covered by pension plans, the Institute of Life Insurance estimated. During 1964, pension checks totaling nearly $6 billion were paid to retired workers in addition to social security benefits. Backing up the payments were pension plan reserves totaling more than $126 billion.

Ship Registry Law Enacted In 8th State

New York—Georgia became the eighth state to require identification of the country of registry in all advertising and sales of passenger ship services.

The National Maritime Union, which has campaigned for such laws for several years, congratulated the state legislature for passing and Gov. Carl E. Sanders for signing what the union calls an "honest label" law.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran noted that the Georgia legislature had the bill before it for three years. Passage was spurred, he said, by the Yarmouth Castle ship disaster last Nov. 13. The cruise ship, sailing under Panamanian registry, caught fire and sank with 89 lives lost and 20 survivors burned on a Miami-Bahama Islands trip.

Curran said that if the vessel had carried U. S. registration "she would never have been permitted to sail in her condition."

Other states requiring identification of ship registry are New York, California, Maryland, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and New Jersey.

Jobless Rate Dips to 3.7%, Low Point in Twelve Years

LBJ Asks 3.2% Hike In U.S. Pay

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Johnson proposed a "guidelines" pay and fringe benefit package averaging 3.2 percent for 1.8 million salaried federal employes — to take effect next January.

Salaries would be raised an average of 2.85 percent, ranging from a 1 percent increase for the lowest-paid workers to 4.5 percent in the top pay grades. The President said pay at the bottom is already "comparable" to nongovernment jobs, while employes in executive jobs have not yet caught up to private industry.

Improved retirement and health benefits would bring the government's cost up to 3.2 percent, but employes would be required to match a higher government payment to their contributory retirement plan. Their payroll deduction would go up from 6.5 to 7 percent.

Johnson made it clear that he intends to use the government's role as the nation's largest employer to set an example of compliance with the 3.2 percent guideline and that the Administration will fight any attempt to "break" the 3.2 percent level. He said:

"For the past many months, the government has appealed to labor and industry alike to hold price and wage increases within the guideposts established by the Council of Economic Advisers.

"If our government is to ex-

High Court Rules:

Key Sections Upheld In Voting Rights Act

The Supreme Court in a sweeping decision upheld the key sections of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 against an attack brought by the state of South Carolina.

Specifically approved were provisions of the law abolishing the literacy tests used by some states to restrict voting by Negro citizens and, when required, the appointment of federal examiners to make sure that Negro applicants for registration are not systematically discriminated against.

The court, in an opinion written by Chief Justice Earl Warren, also approved sections of the law knocking out state requirements for the payment of "accumulated poll taxes" for past years and the appointment of federal poll watchers in places where federal examiners have previously been assigned.

The only dissent to the court's decision came from Justice Hugo L. Black, who wrote that he "agreed with substantially all" of Warren's opinion on literacy tests and the appointment of federal examiners to register Negro applicants, but would rule out one further section of the law—a provision that any new state voting laws must be reviewed in advance by federal authorities "to determine whether their use would perpetuate voting discrimination."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany testified on Mar. 25, 1965, before the House Judiciary Committee in favor of the Administration voting rights bill on which the final statute was based, urging merely that it be broadened and strengthened, and the labor federation strongly supported its passage.

The court held that the Voting Rights Act was a valid use of specific power conferred by the 15th Amendment providing the right of citizens to vote "shall not be denied or abridged . . . by any state on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude."

The Chief Justice pointed out that under three previous civil rights laws, passed in 1957, 1960 and 1964, Congress had attempted through milder legislation to guar-

Viet Nam Revenue Bill Cleared for Final Vote

A Senate-House conference committee gave Pres. Johnson a major victory by agreeing on a compromise version of the $6 billion Viet Nam tax bill that knocked out major revenue-cutting amendments previously voted by the Senate.

The conference committee eliminated a Senate amendment, sponsored by Sen. Vance Hartke (D-Ind.), that would have exempted local telephone calls from an increase in excise taxes from 3 to 10 percent. The Hartke amendment, approved by a narrow 46-42 Senate vote, would have cut $315 million from revenues under the bill.

The conferees sharply modified another Senate amendment, offered by Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R-Vt.), to extend minimum social security benefits to 1.8 million persons over 70 years of age not now covered. The cost would have been paid out of general revenues rather than the Social Security Trust Fund and would have cost the Treasury $800 million a year.

As modified, the bill now limits benefits to 300,000 persons over 72 years of age, reduces the proposed benefit to $35 a month, and postpones the fiscal effect to 1969, so that the President's budget for fiscal 1967 and fiscal 1968 will not be affected.

The conference committee further watered down the effect of this provision by ruling out benefits for persons 72 years of age and older

'Task Unfinished,' Johnson Stresses

By Saul Miller

The continuing months-long decline in the jobless rate picked up speed in February with a drop to 3.7 percent, the lowest figure since November 1953 and the first time in nine years that it moved below 4 percent.

Continuing economic growth—which marked its 60th consecutive month in February—was reflected in the Dept. of Labor's figures which showed a reversal of the usual rise in the number of unemployed for the month.

Indicative of the high level of economic activity also were the drop in teen-age unemployment rates to late 1957 levels and a drop in the jobless rate for part-time workers from 6.8 to 6 percent.

Pres. Johnson, in his manpower report to Congress, hailed the 3.7 percent rate as a "triumph" for our nation's economy, but said that "the task remains unfinished."

The new jobless figure is an "average," he pointed out, and "conceals the fact that some 3 million workers still lack jobs."

The Labor Dept. report showed unemployment dropping 100,000 from January to February to 3,150,000—made up of 1.5 million adult men, 950,000 adult women and 700,000 teen-agers.

Employment hit 71.6 million in February, slightly below the expected gain. The department said that total employment rose by nearly 2.1 million in the past 12 months. The number of workers

Manpower Report Sets New Goals

By Willard Shelton

The government's manpower development and training program must be redesigned to place renewed emphasis on matching potential workers with available jobs, Pres. Johnson told Congress.

Noting that the program was originated when the overall unemployment rate was 6 percent, the President reported that the constantly-expanding surge of economic activity had sharply reduced this rate and that in some areas and industries an actual shortage of skilled workers had developed.

This overall improvement, however, "conceals the fact that some 3 million workers still lack jobs" and that the joblessness rate

AMA Issues Retraction In Normile Libel Suit

The American Medical Association has issued the following statement:

In March 1963, the American Medical Association was sent a tape recording of what purported to be a political fund-raising speech made in Pennsylvania by a Pittsburgh labor leader, Mr. Paul Normile, director of District 16, United Steelworkers of America. Believing in good faith that the tape recording was authentic, the AMA reproduced it and the American Medical Political Action Committee produced and distributed a booklet, entitled "The Voice of COPE," containing the text of the speech and a phonograph record made from the tape as evidence of the tactics which they believed labor used in support of its objectives.

Mr. Normile thereafter filed a lawsuit alleging that he never made the speech in question. Distribution of the tapes and records was immediately voluntarily discontinued pending full investigation of his contention. As a result of its exhaustive investigation, the AMA is now satisfied that Mr. Normile did not make the speech in question. In fairness to him, the statement that he did so is retracted. Furthermore, all copies of the tape recording and the AMPAC booklet and record in the possession of AMA or AMPAC have been destroyed. To prevent further playing of the recording, it is urged that any person having a copy of either the tape or the record take similar action. The AMA sincerely regrets the error.

PICKETS PROTESTING DISCHARGES of 70 employes were placed at entrances to the YMCA's William Sloane House in New York by Hotel, Motel & Club Employes Local 6. The lockout came after 46 employes were arrested while sitting in the lobby in support of the chairman of the union organizing committee, who had been fired, and to back the union's request for bargaining rights.

Rebels Must Return $160,000:

Pulp, Paper Unions Win Suit for Funds

Portland, Ore.—Nearly $160,000 the rebel Association of Western Pulp & Paper Workers took from locals of two AFL-CIO affiliates to finance its organization in 1964 will be restored, with interest, under a decision by Judge Robert Jones in Multnomah County Circuit Court.

Beneficiaries are the Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers, which stands to recover $142,000, and the Papermakers & Paperworkers, scheduled to get $15,700. Interest will be additional.

The transfer of funds from the treasuries of locals to set up a rival organization, the court ruled on the basis of evidence presented at a four-week trial last year, violated the constitutions of the two internationals.

The rebel group raided locals of the AFL-CIO affiliates and took over bargaining rights for some 21,000 members. Its campaign charges of corruption, collusion, undemocratic practices and lack of service to locals were repeated during the trial, but in his 58-page decision Judge Jones found that the internationals "have always guaranteed essential democracy and have always provided fair representation to the local union members."

The prime issue that led to the breakaway, he found, was the internationals' taking over negotiations from the locals in 1964. While the judge regarded this as "high-handed and arbitrary," he added that "under the circumstances of internal dissension and need for a united front against management, such assumption of power may well have been in the best interests of the union members."

Some of Fund Sequestered

About $20,000 of the money involved was frozen about a year ago with a preliminary injunction. If the AWPPW decides to appeal, it must deposit the money with the court, or file a bond.

Pulp-Sulphite Vice Pres. Oren Parker of Seattle, Wash., and UPP Vice Pres. Oscar Robertson of Portland described the decision as "a vindication of the two international unions."

They said the internationals will return the money to the locals involved, and in cases of locals that have been dormant since 1964 will keep it in trust until they are reactivated.

Exec. Sec. Edward J. Whalen of the Oregon AFL-CIO said he was "most happy" that the "ridiculous charges" against the internationals were "completely refuted" by the decision.

About 30 additional cases, involving some $250,000, remain to be tried in Oregon, Washington and California.

Oil Union Parley Sets Broad Bargaining Goals

Denver—The Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers will seek job security guarantees, annual pay adjustments, and elimination of inequities in negotiations next fall with the oil industry, Pres. A. F. Grospiron announced here.

The program was developed at a meeting of the union's Oil Bargaining Policy Committee. The committee delayed until a future meeting on June 27 the establishment of a precise set of negotiating goals, but adopted a general statement of intentions.

"We believe the oil industry must recognize that regular and permanent employes are entitled to guaranteed job security and that the oil companies should discuss with and negotiate with the union ways and means that job security can be guaranteed," a report issued by the committee said.

Grospiron pointed out that the union's goal was "to save people, not jobs." He said the OCAW is not trying to tell industry "that such-and-such a job should be maintained in existence forever. We are saying to the oil companies that they should take care of the people they have on the payroll and not turn these people out."

The committee report called for the elimination of "present conspicuous inequities in retirement age under pension plans, vacations and basic wages."

Uniform patterns in these conditions traditionally have prevailed in the oil industry, but deviations developed in 1964. At that time, one major oil company granted optional retirement at age 62, while other companies declined to do this but lengthened vacations and increased wages slightly.

The committee report did not specify precise goals in wage or fringe benefits, but stated that "there must be annual upward adjustments in compensation, in wages and/or in benefits, commensurate with increasing productivity (which has brought excellent profits) and cost of living changes."

The precise goals to be worked out at the June meeting will be submitted to the appropriate bargaining groups for ratification prior to negotiations.

Firings Bring YMCA Strike In New York

New York—Some 70 low-paid employes of the William Sloane House Young Men's Christian Association were discharged by telegram after a sit-in demonstration in the lobby to protest the firing of the chairman of an organizing committee set up by Hotel, Motel & Club Employes Local 6.

Forty-six of the workers, who also were seeking union recognition, were arrested on charges of trespassing and disorderly conduct as a result of the sit-in.

The union immediately threw a picket line around the residential hotel. Officers said that 153 of the 207 Sloane House employes had signed membership application cards, but that the YMCA claimed exemption from the legal bargaining requirement on the ground that it is a charitable organization. However, the Local 6 officials said, YMCAs in some other cities operate under union agreements.

The pickets' signs and leaflets cited wages as low as $44 a week, no medical insurance or hospitalization, and no unemployment compensation "because Sloane House won't cover us."

The residence house recruited strikebreakers from among guests as both volunteers and paid employes, according to reports from the executive director, William A. Howes.

Local 6, a unit of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes, represents 27,000 members in jobs comparable to those at Sloane House. Officials said information picket lines probably would be placed at the YMCA's 24 other branches in Greater New York.

State Poll Tax Struck Down In Alabama

Montgomery, Ala.—A three-judge federal court struck down Alabama's poll tax, declaring it "was born of an effort to discriminate on the basis of race or color and it has had just that narrow effect."

The constitutional challenge had been brought by the Justice Dept. under instructions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act. The three Alabama-born federal judges divided 2 to 1 in deciding the case. Their ruling permanently enjoined Alabama from collecting its $1.50-a-year poll tax as a condition for voting in state elections.

Earlier this year, a federal panel found the Texas poll tax unconstitutional. Justice Dept. suits are also pending in Alabama, Mississippi and Virginia. The Supreme Court is expected to rule shortly on an earlier suit challenging Virginia's poll tax.

Staff Institute On Bargaining Set for May 17

Madison, Wis.—The 1966 AFL-CIO Collective Bargaining Institute for full-time union representatives and staff members will be held on the University of Wisconsin campus May 17-25.

This year's institute will focus on new trends and developments in collective bargaining. It is sponsored by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education and the university's School for Workers. The special faculty will include experts from the AFL-CIO staff, from the University of Wisconsin and the University of Chicago.

All participants will take two courses on collective bargaining and one on labor, government and society. There will be a choice of two workshops—contracts and negotiations or arbitration.

The institute fee, which includes most meals but not housing costs, is $62. The registration deadline is Apr. 30. Further information and application forms may be obtained from Otto Pragan, assistant director of education, AFL-CIO, 815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006.

TRIBUTE will be paid by the labor movement to James G. Patton, retiring after 25 years as president of the National Farmers Union, at a dinner Mar. 28 in Washington. All members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council are members of the sponsoring committee, headed by Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists.

Internship Offered In Labor Education

The deadline for applications for the labor education internship offered by Teachers Local 189 falls on Apr. 1.

The award, given annually by the organization of labor education staff members, provides eight weeks of practical experience in union education and an $800 scholarship to cover expenses.

The internship is intended for a younger man or woman who would like to make a career in labor education but needs training. Application blanks and further details may be had by writing Labor Education Internship, Local 189, AFT, 6313 W. Halbert Road, Bethesda, Md. 20034.

14(b) Repeal Foes Line Up For Cotton 'Union Shop'

Sixty-nine congressmen apparently believe that a union shop is bad for workers but a compulsory dues plan is good for cotton farmers.

Forty-eight Democrats and 21 Republicans who voted against repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act voted for a bill authorizing a vote by cotton growers on a proposed $1-a-bale assessment to promote the use of cotton products over other fabrics.

A voluntary program along these lines is already in effect, but congressmen from cotton-growing states say its effectiveness is limited by the "free riders" who don't contribute to the fund.

Rep. Harlan Hagen (D-Calif.), one of the few active supporters of the bill who also voted for 14(b) repeal, said the "rationale" behind the cotton bill "is the same as that behind the union shop." He added: "There are too many free riders in the cotton business."

And Rep. Paul Findley (R-Ill.), an opponent of both the cotton bill and 14(b) repeal, said it would be "interesting" to see how many congressmen who voted against 14(b) repeal turned around and voted for the cotton assessment.

The bill, which finally squeaked through to 189-183 passage, also became involved in a "one man, one vote" debate. It permits the secretary of agriculture to impose the assessment if approved by a vote either of two-thirds of cotton farmers or by cotton farmers producing two-thirds of the nation's cotton crop. This was termed by critics a "one bale, one vote" election.

There is a clause in the bill permitting a cotton farmer to apply for a refund of his assessment if he doesn't want to contribute to the program, but the House voted down an amendment to simplify the procedure for a refund.

Unions Ask Stiff Law:

Sea Disaster Report Labeled Inadequate

Spokesmen of AFL-CIO maritime unions have assailed a recent Coast Guard report on the Yarmouth Castle cruise ship disaster as offering little hope of preventing future tragedies involving ancient and unsafe foreign-flag vessels carrying American passengers from U. S. ports.

The basic issue, they charged, is that "floating firetraps" exempt from rigid U.S. safety requirements because of their foreign registry are permitted to base themselves in American ports and conduct regular operations inviting American citizens as passengers.

"We don't need any more studies" before tightening federal laws to enforce high sea-safety standards for foreign-flag vessels, said Executive Sec.-Treas. Peter M. McGavin of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. in reference to a Coast Guard recommendation of such studies.

"We need a law forbidding any foreign-flag vessels from picking up American passengers at American ports unless they meet American safety standards," he said.

A parallel comment came from Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, who said that the report "does little to drive home the lessons of the Yarmouth Castle tragedy" and "fails to expose the real culprits ashore or the real cause of the tragedy."

Strict Laws Asked

"We must have strict laws requiring every ship carrying passengers out of U.S. ports to comply fully with U.S. safety standards," he declared.

The Yarmouth Castle, built in 1927 and a "runaway" from U.S. jurisdiction by virtue of registration in Panama, sailed Nov. 12 last year on a Miami-to-Nassau run and went down with the loss of 90 lives after catching fire at night.

The Coast Guard, which investigated the tragedy at the request of the Panama government, reported that the ship had a high content of combustibles.—forbidden since 1936 in U.S. vessels—and urged that the government seek agreements to upgrade the now minimal international safety standards for foreign-flag passenger ships.

Its report heavily emphasized, however, the element of human failure in the disaster, particularly singling out Capt. Byron Voutsinas and other officers for delays in organizing the crew to isolate the fire and combat it and to awaken and evacuate passengers.

It criticized the captain, also, for leaving the ship "to allegedly go to . . . a rescue vessel" to assure the sending of a radio distress message. The Yarmouth Castle's radio room was in the fire area and Voutsinas said he returned to his ship quickly to help evacuate passengers.

Agreements Sought

The Coast Guard report urged that pending the improvement of international sea-safety standards, the government seek bilateral agreements with individual nations and that Congress "study" the need for legislation to require that aged U.S. vessels be rebuilt to meet modern safety standards.

"This is a confession of helplessness," commented McGavin. "The Yarmouth Castle was not a U.S. flag ship. She was a runaway-flag vessel flying the Panamanian flag so that her owners could avoid paying U.S. income tax, avoid conforming to union conditions and avoid complying with U.S. safety requirements."

"We need a law abolishing the tax haven for runaway-flag vessels . . . we need a law permitting the National Labor Relations Board to take jurisdiction over runaway-flag vessels" so that their crews can be organized by U.S. unions which through collective bargaining would require "the highest safety standards," he added.

Curran said that no matter "how merited the criticism" of the Yarmouth Castle captain and other officers, the Coast Guard report would be "of little help in preventing similar tragedies" so long as "floating firetraps are permitted to sail with passengers out of our ports."

NEWSPAPER MAILERS picket the Boston Herald-Traveler plant in a dispute over contract terms. Mailers Local 1 and the Typographical Union, Local 13, voted to strike five Boston newspapers after trying for 15 months to reach agreement. The unions want the right to decide how a publishers' offer would be split between wages and fringe benefits.

Boston Papers Shut Down in ITU Walkout

Boston—Five Boston newspapers have shut down in the face of solid support by other unions for a strike by Local 13 of the Typographical Union and Local 1 of the ITU mailers.

The two locals posted picket lines at the Herald-Traveler plant, the Morning and Evening Globe and the Record-American to press their insistence on the right to determine how negotiated increases should be disbursed—in health and welfare benefits, or in the paycheck.

The strike was voted, 1,266 to 56, following a membership meeting of both locals addressed by ITU Pres. Elmer Brown.

With the appearance of the first pickets all traffic into the three publishing plants stopped. Within a matter of hours the Herald-Traveler announced it was suspending publication temporarily.

All Plants Closed

Neither the Globe Publishing Co. nor Hearst, which publishes the Record-American, made any formal announcement of suspension, but no effort was made at either plant to put a paper on the street Monday morning.

The publishers have offered the two unions $4.10 an hour for 1965 and $4.20 for 1966 but insist that the money go into a health and welfare plan.

The ITU and Mailers have rejected the offer in that form and demand a straight pay hike.

Four other unions—the Pressmen, Paper Handlers, Photo Engravers and truckers—have signed 1965-66 contracts which put their $8.30 package into health and welfare.

The publishers argue that to accede to the ITU and Mailers would mean scrapping the health and welfare plan, which was negotiated on the basis of including all six craft unions.

With 1,300 members, the ITU and the Mailers make up the biggest single bloc among the 4,500 newspaper workers in Boston.

Federal and state mediators have entered the dispute in an effort to bring both sides to a meeting across the table.

The strike is the city's third newspaper walkout in nine years. The Mailers struck for three weeks in 1957 and the ITU for eight days in 1959.

UAW Wins Election At Georgia 'Runaway'

Hartwell, Ga.—The Auto Workers, "buried" in effigy in a public ceremony here three years ago, came back to win a National Labor Relations Board election at the plant of the runaway Monroe Auto Equipment Co.

The vote was 342-264 in a repeat election. A previous loss by a 466-147 margin in 1964 had been set aside by the NLRB because of management and community interference.

The local plant originally came here as a runaway operation from Monroe, Mich., where UAW Local 878 had represented workers for many years. When six union organizers showed up to handbill the local plant in 1963, the UAW reported, company foremen rounded up a gang of men who roughed them up and warned them to "clear out or be killed."

The burial incident occurred during a later visit of the organizers.

The governor of Georgia, the State Highway Patrol and county officials had been warned of possible violence and were asked to provide protection. But police and deputy sheriffs made no move to intervene, the UAW said, when the union men were attacked by a rock-throwing, club-wielding crowd of 150 company partisans.

Leaflets were seized and burned and the organizers were threatened, cursed, and called "Communists" and "NAACPers," they reported, and when they refused to leave they were pushed, pummeled and kicked up a hill toward watching police.

UAW Vice Pres. Pat Greathouse, one of the six who were driven out of Hartwell, recalled that "we promised we'd be back."

The UAW did come back frequently, reinforced by members working in other Georgia plants, and obtained enough signatures to petition for an election, held July 23, 1964. The vote went heavily against the union, but the NLRB agreed that the company-community campaign had been unfair and ordered a new election.

On the day of the second election, a UAW representative reported, "the town paper printed a slanted editorial," a local clergyman "prayed against us on the radio," and a Viet Nam veteran, on leave from his job in the factory, "made a speech saying he was fighting the Communists in Asia and came home to fight them here, too."

This time the tactics didn't work, UAW Rep. Lew Eccles observed.

"We didn't run for cover—we stood up to fight," he said. "The workers sort of admire guts."

Retail-Wholesale Union Wins 5 Selma Votes

Selma, Ala.—The Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union has won five consecutive representation elections in six months in the Selma area, scene of historic civil rights demonstrations.

Nearly all of the newly-organized workers are Negroes, the union reported.

TWUA Spurs Campaign in Southern Mills

Charlotte, N. C.—The Textile Workers Union of America will expand its already intensive organizing activities in the Carolinas and Georgia, TWUA Pres. William Pollock announced here.

The expansion, Pollock told southeastern regional staff members at a meeting, is in response to appeals from southern workers "saddled with low wages and deprived of modern fringe benefits" at a time when the industry is reporting "record-shattering profits."

He called the industry's failure to share its profits "inexcusable" because, he said:

- Textile net income was 42 percent higher for the first nine months of 1965 than for the same period in 1964—more than twice the average U.S. rise for corporations.
- Textile companies averaged $1,500 a year profit before taxes for each production worker.
- The industry is operating at 99 percent of capacity with huge backlogs of orders, and some goods sold out a year in advance.
- Worker productivity rose by 64 percent more than the average of all workers in 1965 but wages now lag about $30 a week behind the national manufacturing average.

Rail Firemen Press Suit on Arbitration

Chicago—The Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen have asked Chief Judge William J. Campbell of the U.S. District Court here to rule that the "full force and effect" of the 1964 compulsory arbitration award on firemen expires Mar. 31.

The union, in a suit filed here Feb. 17, asked the court also to restrain railroad management from violating the former agreement "interrupted" by the arbitration ruling, and to declare unlawful rail management's recent notice of intent to abolish all firemen's jobs.

Judge Campbell gave the parties until Mar. 15 to file all briefs before he rules on the railroads' motion to transfer hearings to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

BLF&E Pres. H. E. Gilbert said the union's lawyers have advised him that a Mar. 3 opinion by U.S. Judge Alexander Holtzoff in the D.C. court is not binding on the BLF&E because it was not a party to the lawsuit before Holtzoff. The latter said he believes railroad operating unions are bound by the arbitration ruling until it is superseded by new contract terms negotiated under the Railway Labor Act.

The Holtzoff opinion came in a suit brought by rail management against the Railroad Trainmen, the Conductors & Brakemen, and the Switchmen.

The railroads, Gilbert said, "did not make the BLF&E a party to the suit . . . nor was the brotherhood represented before the court in any way." His union, Gilbert said, will press its case in the Chicago court because of "basic differences" between the position of the BLF&E and the other unions.

A presidential panel, appointed under a compulsory arbitration law passed by Congress to head off a strike on the railroads, ruled in 1964 that for a two-year period the carriers could lay off up to 90 percent of the firemen and brakemen employed in non-passenger service. The BLF&E has served notice that it wants to negotiate the rehiring of at least half the 17,500 laid-off workers when the law expires.

An Unfinished Job

THE WELCOME DROP in the unemployment rate to 3.7 percent in February and the President's emphasis on matching up men and jobs clearly illustrate the basic principle that full employment holds the key to national manpower policies.

As long as the country is afflicted with high levels of unemployment it cannot have a meaningful manpower policy. There can be programs—similar to those of the past four years—but in the absence of full employment these programs cannot have a major impact on the nation's needs.

Manpower programs help workers adjust to changed needs and changed conditions, but they are not a substitute for job opportunities nor do they lead to full employment.

The latest job report shows 3,158,000 persons unemployed—hardly full employment. It shows a teen-age jobless rate of 10.9 percent compared to the national overall figure of 3.7 percent and a non-white unemployment rate of 7 percent.

In these terms, while shortages of skilled help may turn up in a few localities, the problem is to find jobs for the unemployed rather than give major emphasis to possible shortages.

THE PRESIDENT'S manpower report properly emphasizes the progress made with manpower programs and the overall results to date are encouraging.

There is still a tendency, however, to view manpower problems and to operate manpower programs primarily as local activities without a broad national approach. The manpower problem is essentially a national problem and requires national policies and solutions.

To bring about a national approach requires federalization of the employment service so that it can meet the needs of workers and employers, needs that transcend state and local boundaries.

It requires also administration of manpower training programs in national terms to avoid the pitfalls of training workers for occupations in which there is unemployment and coordination of the many varied programs through one agency.

But improvement of manpower programs and giving a national scope to manpower policies is no substitute for the still unfinished job of achieving full employment. There is no basis for relaxing the drive toward jobs for all able and willing to work because the jobless rate is down to 3.7 percent.

THOSE WHO CRY shrilly of the threat of inflation are urging programs and policies that would slow down the economy and the gains that have been made toward full employment. They would cut back also on the manpower programs that are helping thousands acquire the skills and knowledge for gainful employment.

The drop in the jobless rate and the President's report on possibly developing labor shortages could lend themselves to the misinterpretation that the present need is to put on the brakes, that unemployment is a minimal problem and that manpower policies are unimportant.

This would be a serious and dangerous misreading of the state of the economy. The country needs more jobs and better manpower policies if the progress of the past year is to continue.

'Guidepost' Wage Limit Called 'Mockery' of Social Justice

TO THE UNINITIATED, the current dispute between the President and the AFL-CIO over "guideposts" and minimum wage might seem to be a case of trade union special pleading. In fact, the labor movement is posing the most profound issues of social justice. It acts here as a national conscience rather than as an interest group. This is particularly true on minimum wage, where the Administration is apparently determined to carry out a war on the poor with much more vigor than it devotes to the war on poverty.

The guideposts restrict the wage increases which may be negotiated to 3.2 per cent a year. As it is now set up, this is a magnificent device for perpetuating inequality in the society. The unorganized worker, or the union in a weak bargaining position, is not guaranteed a 3.2 percent annual gain. If the employer is strong enough, he can hold the most helpless employes down to 0.0 percent, or even decrease their pay. However, the union which is in a position to win a big settlement is not allowed to do so. And the corporation is held within some limits on raising prices, but all the wraps are off when it comes to profits. The latter have increased by about 64 percent between 1961 and 1965, a rate more than double that of wages and salaries.

Under such a scheme, the poorest among us are locked up at the bottom of the society and the organized workers are kept in their "place." The rich get richer.

But if the profits of yachtsmen were subjected to the same discipline as the wages of steelworkers, the guidepost idea would still be deficient.

Once upon a time Americans did not only believe that everyone should have enough to eat, or more than enough. They also sought a more just society. And central to this ideal of justice was a struggle for social equality.

Yet even if the guideposts were made much fairer, they amount to an abdication of this American dream of a nation of truly free and equal men. For if everyone advances at the same measured pace, the rich stay rich and the poor stay poor. Everyone gets better off each year; and everyone stays just as unequal as he was the year before. In a time when we talk of a war on poverty, and even of a Great Society, such a stagnant conception of social justice is a mockery. Our national economic guideposts should systematically favor the poor, and we should insist that those groups which have to catch up, the minorities, the working poor, the unorganized, etc.—should be guaranteed that they will move faster than anyone else.

IT WILL PROBABLY be a long time before we take such ideas seriously. That is what makes the Administration's current position on minimum wage all the more scandalous. The labor movement (and here it is clearly speaking for the organized and unorganized, for the poor as well as the union workers) has insisted on extending minimum wage coverage to the most oppressed in the land, and raising the level of payment so that we no longer legalize a poverty wage.

It is the position of Mr. Johnson's advisors that the richest economy in human history cannot afford to abolish sweatshop labor. We are told that a broad increase in minimum wage coverage and benefits will motivate employers to invest in a machine rather than to continue to exploit a human being, the latter having been made too expensive in the Great Society.

To which we should reply: Fine! There are, according to the President's Commission on Automation, 5.2 million human-care jobs for unskilled workers just waiting to be filled. So let us indeed use minimum wage to guide our technology so that it destroys all the stoop labor, all the miserable, routine jobs and frees those people for something useful.

But then, such a perspective would involve too much social justice. It would mean adopting priorities whereby dishwashers and fieldhands would not be the only ones required to sacrifice themselves in the fight against inflation. It would mean, not taking away from the rich, but having the wealthy not get wealthier at quite so fast a rate.

And it is to the everlasting credit of the American unions that they are the only powerful political force in the land speaking up for justice on these issues.

ANYBODY WHO READS the travel posters knows that Sweden has blondes and other beautiful scenery to recommend it. It also has something which should intrigue the hapless American citizen, particularly at this time of year when he is inundated by income tax forms, applications for automobile licenses and miscellaneous requirements demanded by an insatiable bureaucracy.

Morgan

If he finds these demands arrogant and written in unfathomable language there is little he can do except grind his teeth and suffer in silence or take his outrage out on his wife. But in Sweden he could write his ombudsman. The office of ombudsman, which in Swedish means "one who represents someone," is a kind of nationwide equivalent to a department store complaint desk, a sort of Mr. Fixit for the general public, as Washington has been finding out.

Congress has just had an enthusiastic but "soft sell" on the job from Sweden's ombudsman himself, a former judge, benign and 62, named Alfred Bexelius, who has been at his post 10 years. Parliament created the office in 1809 as an independent guardian of peoples' rights. It has become a remarkably effective clearing house for justice.

If a Swede has a grievance against almost any bureaucrat and feels he's getting nowhere with it, he can ask the ombudsman to investiagate. If the complaint is justified the ombudsman has the power to fine a judge for delaying suits, a policeman for failing to investigate a crime impartially, even a clergyman of the state religion for some unfairness.

"This wide area of penal responsibility of public servants," Bexelius told a Senate subcommittee, "—combined with the obligation to compensate for damage caused by an error—has restrained them from submitting to any undue interference or to neglect the rights of citizens."

Every citizen, he emphasized, has the right to complain to the ombudsman. Neither the government nor parliament can stop the ombudsman from investigating. No wonder Bexelius was able to testify that "the offiice, by its mere existence, counteracts tendencies to transgressions of authority and abuse of powers."

And no wonder that Congress, a jealous and tradition-ridden body, approaches the idea daintily, with the wariness of an inveterate smoker who thinks he's just been handed an exploding cigar. After all Congress contains the elected representatives of the people. So who needs an ombudsman? The answer is, they do, desperately, and so do their constituents. The bursting population has made the case load of voters' requests to senators and representatives for action back-breaking. In 1911, when the House membership was set at 435, the average size of a congressional district was less than 211,000 persons. Today it's nearly 448,000 and by 1980 it will be some 564,000.

Rep. Henry Reuss (D.-Wis.) has introduced a bill to create an ombudsman, American style,—an "administrative counsel to Congress." Sen. Claiborne Pell (D.-R. I.) has introduced a companion bill in the Senate. Reuss' counsel would be appointed by the Speaker of the House and the President Pro Tempore of the Senate for a term of at least two years.

But he would not get complaints directly. They would be filtered to him through the office of a senator or representative. Reuss reasons this would calm the fears of members that constituents' complaints would be taken out of their control. Also he doubts that due to the huge size and population of the United States the procedure could be run tidily any other way.

THERE IS A REAL danger here, however, of creating "just another bureaucrat." Britain is now actively considering a Swedish-style ombudsman. Norway, Denmark and New Zealand already have the system but without penalty powers. Bexelius does not think this is a weakness. The strength of the system is that any citizen who thinks he's been wronged has the right to go directly to the ombudsman with his grievance.

Bexelius is convinced that this access is the basis of the ombudsman's effectiveness, coupled with his authority to examine all documents, even secret ones, including committee testimony—with rare exceptions involving high levels of national security.

Would Congress or the executive branch stand for this? Perhaps they should be made to. A public official, elected or appointed, almost invariably comes down with an occupational disease which might be called defensive selectivitis. He knows better than anybody what the public should or should not be told. It might be a very healthful thing if he could be told: "The ombudsman will get you if you don't watch out."

Through AIFLD Projects:

Union Welfare, Pension Funds Aid Latin American Progress

AFL-CIO UNIONS have committed $67 million of pension and welfare funds as fully guaranteed loans for the development of worker-sponsored social advancement projects in Latin America, the administrator of the American Institute for Free Labor Development has reported.

Low-cost housing, credit and banking institutions and cooperatives for both consumers and producers are among the AIFLD projects operating or planned in 20 countries, William C. Doherty, Jr., said on the weekly AFL-CIO network radio program Labor News Conference.

For the first time Latin American workers "directly participate" in programs of social and economic development, Doherty said, noting that "had it not been for the Alliance for Progress . . . the AFL-CIO and the institute, the workers would have been left out."

He noted that during its three years of operation, the AIFLD—a joint effort of U.S. labor, industry and government—has also established and staffed leadership training schools in 12 countries of Central and South America. Some 37,000 workers have already attended these schools and the "advanced educational institute" in Washington, he said. Many graduates have in turn become teachers and have trained large numbers of their fellow workers, he added.

THE AIFLD "has probably been responsible for the training of several hundred thousand [Latin American] workers" to date, and this has resulted in an "over-all strengthening of organized labor" in those countries, he said.

Doherty declared that "Castroism, as such, is finished in Latin America. Castro is hated and detested by workers throughout Latin America," and can claim a following only among the "false intellectuals who are on his payroll," he added.

If the people are given "a free choice," Castroism will never gain a real foothold in Latin America, he said.

Reporters questioning him on Labor News Conference, the public service interview aired over the Mutual radio network, were Duane Emme of Labor Newspaper and Harry Conn, editor of Press Associates, Inc.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SEN. DIRKSEN'S proposed constitutional amendment to override the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" decisions on state legislative apportionment is expected to reach the Senate floor soon for a showdown vote. The Illinois senator, the GOP's floor leader, is not without friends and companions in his quest. Somebody has put up enough money to hire the high-powered public relations firm of Whitaker & Baxter to "educate" the people into support of the amendment.

Whitaker & Baxter is a California-based agency of undoubted genius in organizing grassroots campaigns, or what appear to be grassroots campaigns, for or against public proposals.

It now has a Washington office busily engaged in recruiting members of a front group labeled "The Committee for Government of the People" and in conducting an "intensive nationwide publicity campaign" to stir up supporters among "cooperating organizations."

Running the show in Washington for Whitaker & Baxter is Robert M. Smalley, who until last June served as public relations director of the Republican National Committee and previously held other GOP publicity posts. To sweeten the mixture "The Committee for Government of the People" is employing as a consultant Samuel C. Brightman, longtime Democratic National Committee publicist, whose wide first-name acquaintance with Democrats all over the country is presumably invaluable.

Brightman's letters to Democratic friends present the Dirksen amendment as a proposal subject to great "misunderstanding," and assure them it is "not an attempt to abandon the one man, one vote principle." Of course, that is exactly what it is—an attempt to amend the constitution to get rid of the requirement that both houses of a legislature be apportioned on one man, one vote principles.

The Illinois senator has watered down his amendment through various revisions, so that a popular referendum would have to be held before either house of a state legislature could be apportioned on some basis other than population, but it is still aimed at overturning the court.

Whitaker & Baxter stated with some bluntness, in a campaign plan submitted for "The Committee for Government of the People," the issues at stake. The state legislatures, the document pointed out, make decisions on highway planning and the distribution of gas tax funds; state planning and construction programs; state welfare, assessment and tax policies; severance and extraction taxes; consumer programs, labor relations policies, protection of workers.

THE WHITAKER & BAXTER campaign does not pretend, at least, that Dirksen's efforts and its own are being expended upon a mirage—that the purpose is not to "reinstitute" a method by which states could get around the effects of the one man, one vote decisions.

It simply sets up scare phrases and finely-spun historical parallels to try to persuade people—and thus persuade Congress—that Dirksen's amendment must be passed to prevent "radical revision of our government" as a result of the court decisions. It must be passed, the propagandists argue, to end "judicial chaos," to overcome the court's "dangerously sweeping reapportionment edict."

Whitaker & Baxter literature also contains one serious misstatement of fact: It says the Dirksen amendment has been "approved" by the Senate Judiciary Committee. It has not been "approved"; it was the subject of a tie vote in committee (which ordinarily kills a resolution), but one vote was switched, at the request of Sen. Mansfield, the Democratic leader, to get the immigration reform bill past a Dirksen blockade.

The Judiciary Committee report specifically declared that the Dirksen proposal was sent to the Senate "without recommendation," and Whitaker & Baxter can read the Congressional Record for Mar. 2, 1966, page 4439, to get verification.

SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT projects in Latin America are getting a $67 million boost in loans from pension and welfare funds of AFL-CIO unions, Administrator William C. Doherty, Jr., of the American Institute for Free Labor Development (center) told Duane Emme of Labor Newspaper (left) and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc., on the weekly radio interview, Labor News Conference.

GROUP MEDICAL CARE on a prepaid basis for union members in New Haven, Conn., was explored at a conference on New Ways to Good Health Care sponsored by the New Haven AFL-CIO. Speakers included (left to right) Acting Dir. Raymond Munts of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security; Bernard Greenberg of the Steelworkers; AFL-CIO Assistant Social Security Dir. Richard Shoemaker; Theodore Goldberg, Auto Workers; Robert McMillan, Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, and Professors I. S. Falk and John Thompson of the Dept. of Epidemiology & Public Health in the Yale School of Medicine.

Unions Weigh Health Center In New Haven

New Haven, Conn.—Some 250 local union delegates exploring the feasibility of a community prepaid group health center were told that "the ingredients for success exist in New Haven" by Acting Dir. Raymond Munts of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

Munts was one of the main speakers at a conference on New Ways to Good Health Care sponsored by the New Haven AFL-CIO.

"To obtain quality health services today," he said, "most union members have to be their own contractors, arranging separately for various specialties and technical services. Prepaid group practice, by bringing specialties together in a climate of scientific cooperation, assures quality medicine at a substantial reduction in cost."

Mayor Richard C. Lee, giving the project hearty approval, called the proposed center "an exciting approach to the problem" and described it as a place where labor, management and people in medicine "can begin to understand the full implication of community health care."

Assistant Dir. Walter Davis of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Action described how unions in Cleveland set up a group health center while he was stationed there.

Other speakers included Council Pres. Vincent J. Sirabella, Ruth Greenberg of the Connecticut AFL-CIO and Dr. George A. Silver, deputy to the assistant secretary of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

Panel discussions of various phases of the proposal were led by Albert Epstein of the Machinists, Bernard Greenberg of the Steelworkers; Theodore Goldberg of the Auto Workers, Robert McMillen of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, and Assistant Dir. Richard Shoemaker of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

Coast Guard Cites Seamen for Rescue

Houston, Tex.—The U.S. Coast Guard office here awarded silver lifesaving medals to two union seamen who rescued three shipmates when their vessel, the S.S. Smith Voyager, sank off Bermuda. The seamen, members of the National Maritime Union, are Donald J. Covert and James Wright.

Covert and Wright leaped out of a lifeboat when they saw three other crewmen, who had jumped overboard, being swept away in 20-foot-high seas. They swam 200 yards against 40-knot winds and helped rescue the trio. Four other NMU members were drowned.

Supreme Court Upholds Key Voting Act Sections

antee voting rights for Negroes in southern states that had systematically discouraged them.

He noted that in eight Alabama cases, nine Louisiana suits and nine Mississippi suits—tried on a case-by-case basis—discriminatory application of voting tests had been shown to be "the principal method used to bar Negroes from the polls." The record shows, he continued, that "in most of the states covered by the act" various tests and devices "have been instituted with the purpose of disenfranchising Negroes . . . and have been administered" to accomplish the purpose.

There were thorough hearings and debate in both houses of Congress on the Voting Rights Act, the court noted, and two facts emerge "vividly":

"First: Congress felt itself confronted with an insidious and pervasive evil which had been perpetuated in certain parts of the country through unremitting and ingenious defiance of the Constitution.

"Second: Congress concluded that the unsuccessful remedies which it had prescribed in the past would have to be replaced by sterner and more elaborate measures."

The law "reflects Congress's firm intention to rid the country of racial discrimination in voting" by remedies "aimed at areas where discrimination has been most flagrant," the court said, and this is both an "inventive" and "legitimate" application of congressional authority to enforce in the states the indisputable mandate of the 15th Amendment against racial discrimination in elections.

"Hopefully, millions of nonwhite Americans will now be able to participate for the first time on an equal basis in the government under which we live," the court said.

NLRB Orders 8 Reinstated For 2nd Time

The National Labor Relations Board has ordered an electronics firm to reinstate for the second time eight workers it fired after they testified at NLRB hearings into charges that their first dismissals were for union activity.

The order came shortly after the offending firm, Telecom, Inc., lost its fight to prevent unionization of its Lebanon, Ky., plant. Telecom workers voted 80-22 for the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, who had lost a previous NLRB election.

The IUE filed charges against Telecom after 12 union supporters were fired in 1964. The NLRB ruled that the firings were for union activity, and Telecom reinstated the workers. It posted a bulletin board notice, however, that employes with more service would have to be laid off to make room for the reinstated workers.

Within a few weeks, eight of those who had testified in support of NLRB charges against the firm were again fired or laid off and not recalled. Management gave various pretexts but the real reason for its actions, the NLRB ruled, was its "desire to rid itself of union supporters" among its employes.

50,000th Case Near For Arbitration Unit

New York—The American Arbitration Association is nearing its 50,000th case and its 40th anniversary as a referee for grieving unions and employers.

The first case, shortly after it was founded in 1926, was a wage disagreement between Actor's Equity and a theatrical producer. The 50,000th case still remains to be checked in, but AAA officials are sure it will be filed before the birthday is marked.

Labor grievance cases did not begin to flow to the AAA in heavy volume until the 1940s, according to Donald B. Straus, president of the organization, and the 50,000 cases "really represent a 20-year accumulation." They have averaged slightly more than 4,000 annually for the last few years, he added.

The most common issue, he said, involves a discharge or some other form of discipline and accounts for about 25 percent of all cases.

Next in order is the interpretation of seniority rules as they apply to such things as layoffs, recalls from layoff, and promotion. The more technical issues—work assignments, incentive rates, the abolition of old jobs and the creation of new ones—have come next in order.

Staff studies have shown increasing concern over out-of-classification work assignments, performance of bargaining unit work by supervisory and other out-of-unit employes, and subcontracting, Straus said. The rise reflects the concern of unions and workers with automation and job security, he feels.

The AA's facilities include the George Meany Arbitration Hearing Room, in the headquarters building here, named in honor of the AFL-CIO president. At the dedication in September 1964, Meany called arbitration "an essential element" in labor-management relations and hailed the AAA for helping to develop a body of men in whose skill and competence both sides can have confidence.

"In many ways," Straus said, "the most significant fact about the entire labor-management arbitration experience is that the process is voluntary.

"No law or government compels companies and unions to arbitrate grievances. If they do provide for arbitration, as well over 90 percent of union contract negotiators do, it is because labor and management alike realize that stoppages over contract interpretation matters would be destructive of the continuing relationship that federal and state laws, as well as logic, require of parties to collective bargaining."

Arbitration 'Really Works'

Straus asserted that proposals for compulsory arbitration that rise in Congress and state legislatures from time to time are usually dropped "mostly because the alternative of voluntary arbitration really does work."

"Arbitration has proved itself to be a practical means of solving employer-employe problems," he added. "But in a large sense it is more than that. One writer has referred to labor arbitration as the application to industrial relations of the due process concept which underlies our democratic society. One need not concur with this analogy to acknowledge that at the very least, the process of arbitration represents one of the many institutions through which justice is administered privately and rights are protected."

The association will observe its anniversary with a dinner in New York on Apr. 12.

Broad Manpower Role Urged For U.S. Employment Service

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz asked Congress to give the U.S. Employment Service a mandate to perform a broad range of manpower services and shed a tarnished image of an "unemployment office."

He proposed a rewriting of the 1933 Wagner-Peyser Act, which set up the network of the federally-financed, state-operated offices to administer the unemployment compensation program and try to match job applicants with job vacancies reported by employers.

At the same time, Wirtz spoke out against labor-supported proposals to federalize the employment service. A bill substantially strengthening the federal role has been introduced by the chairmen of the House and Senate Labor subcommittees which held a joint meeting to hear Wirtz, Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) and Rep. Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.).

Wirtz acknowledged that the recent report of the National Commission on Technology, Automation & Economic Progress also called for federalizing the employment service.

"I disagree squarely with that recommendation," he said.

Recommended by Task Force

Most of the proposals made by Wirtz stemmed from unanimous recommendations of a 15-member task force, drawn from public, labor and management ranks.

The task force did not take a position on whether the employment service should be transformed into a solely federal operation. But it did urge closer coordination of the 2,000 local offices, with greatly strengthened federal standards for staffing and training and interchange of personnel between federal and state payrolls.

Wirtz incorporated these recommendations into his legislative proposal. His draft bill also included:

- Separation of employment service functions from the unemployment insurance operations.
- A clear statement that employment services are available not only to unemployed and hard-to-place workers "but to all workers without limitation." Private employment agencies have for years attacked the government for "competing" with fee-charging agencies. The bill would, however, allow the government to contract with private agencies for specialized placement services.
- A directive to state employment offices to go out and look for persons in need of training to improve their employability rather than wait for such persons to come to the office for help.
- Development of "an effective system for the interstate recruitment and placement of workers." The Labor Dept. would establish clearance centers to pool information on jobs and workers seeking jobs.
- Establishment of procedures "for identifying and dealing with emergency employment situations, such as mass layoffs due to plant closings and unrest stemming from chronic unemployment, and assure that state public employment offices provide such services as may be necessary to meet these needs."

The Administration bill did not include one major recommendation of the task force—that the employment service be financed from general revenue rather than from the federal unemployment compensation tax.

AFL-CIO Revises Publications List

A list of nearly 50 titles of current AFL-CIO booklets, pamphlets and leaflets covering a wide range of subjects is currently available from the federation in a new and revised edition of the AFL-CIO List of Publications.

The current listing carries also, for the first time, the titles of 18 reprints of articles appearing originally in the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

Copies of the List of Publications are available without cost from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Division, 815 Sixteenth St., N. W., Washington, D. C. 20006.

In AFL-CIO Testimony:

Major Effort Urged To End City Blight

The AFL-CIO voiced "stout support" for a federally-financed program to revitalize blighted areas of large cities and urged Congress to expand on Pres. Johnson's legislative proposals.

Boris Shishkin, secretary of the AFL-CIO Housing Committee, warned that the nation's housing needs are not being met at the present pace of homebuilding and "central cities have increasingly become slum ghettos and decaying areas." He called for a massive effort, rather than the pilot-type program advanced by the Administration. Shishkin testified before a House Banking & Currency subcommittee headed by Rep. William A. Barrett (D-Pa.).

Pres. Johnson asked Congress for a program of demonstration grants to selected cities to show how neighborhoods can be revitalized through coordinated programs including housing, public transportation, better schools and recreational facilities.

Shishkin termed the proposal "an important and auspicious step in the right direction," but "unduly modest in magnitude." Its scope, he said, "should be enlarged to make possible a truly effective onslaught against urban blight in cities and towns, large and small."

He said slum clearance is "indispensable," but cautioned that merely tearing down old slums and building new housing developments is not the full solution.

The people living in the new developments, he stressed, must "have access to jobs, educational opportunities, medical care and hospitalization, recreational facilities and social services."

He said the cost of such broad-scale assistance must be measured against "the far greater costs to the community of relief and welfare loads to care for those of its disadvantaged citizens who are unable to help themselves."

In related areas, Shishkin urged:

- Liberalized relocation aid for families dispossessed by slum clearance and assurance of decent, low-cost housing "before these families are compelled to move."
- A step-up in construction of low-rent public housing "to a yearly rate of at least 125,000 dwelling units."
- "Prompt" appropriation by Congress of funds for the rent supplement program enacted last year.
- Enactment of a "new communities" program, with land acquired by a public authority "to accommodate a cross-section of families, in terms of both their income and racial composition." Shishkin stressed that this type of community "would not siphon out of the cities just the higher income families, as the suburbs now do, leaving behind the increasing proportion of low income people in the central city."
- Passage of the Administration-supported Group Practice Facilities bill providing for FHA mortgage insurance and loans to construct group practice facilities for medical or dental care.
- Maintenance of prevailing wage and other labor standards for construction workers "in any program involving federal financial assistance or mortgage assistance."

Shishkin noted that new housing starts have declined in each of the past two years as "residential building has failed to keep pace with our nation's economic progress."

He warned that the growth in urban population is continuing at a rapid pace. As a result, he said:

"The cities have exploded into unplanned metropolitan areas with water shortages, air and water pollution and inadequate mass transit, as well as shortages of schools, health-care facilities, recreational areas and cultural facilities."

While the central cities deteriorate, "the spread of sprawling suburbs and highways is gobbling up millions of acres with little, if any, planning for metropolitan area-wide needs."

It is against this background, Shishkin told the subcommittee, that the AFL-CIO urges an expanded housing and urban development program.

New Manpower Goals Stress Job, Skill Links

among specific groups—Negroes, teenagers and women—remains unacceptably high, he emphasized.

Basing his message to Congress on a manpower report from the Dept. of Labor, Johnson paid tribute to the effectiveness of job training and retraining, with special emphasis on the value of on-the-job training, as a proved technique for making "useful and productive citizens" from those previously considered beyond help.

In the year ahead, said the report from Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, some 250,000 people will participate in training programs, with 35 percent deliberately selected for their capacity to learn skills now in short supply and the remainder divided between disadvantaged young people and disadvantaged adults.

On-Job Training

Because on-the-job training has proved "effective and economical" and "a potent means of job development" for the disadvantaged, fully half of all manpower development and training operations for the coming fiscal year will be of this type, the report said.

Johnson coupled his manpower message with a warning to Congress that the task of building a healthy, fully operating economy, with adequate use of the skills of all available workers, is still "unfinished."

The labor force will expand by 1.6 million workers this year, which requires the creation of about 4,500 new jobs each day, he said.

Even though the overall unemployment rate is down, "there are millions employed in occupations and skills that do not fully utilize their capabilities," he continued.

"Our goal is not just a job for every worker," but an effort "to place every worker in a job where he utilizes his full productive potential, for his own and for society's benefit," he declared.

The root of most problems of unemployment and underemployment "lies in deficiencies in education," the President said, and our task is to "repair these deficiencies where we can" for present generations and to "prevent their recurrence in the next generation."

Specifically, Johnson called for passage of legislation to modernize and improve the existing federal-state Employment Service to provide adequate job guidance, counseling and placement services.

In addition, he asked for authorization of an assistant secretary of labor for manpower in the Dept. of Labor and said he was taking these further steps:

- Requesting a report by July 1 on a coordinated plan for all manpower activities of the federal government.
- Requesting a monthly report from the commissioner of labor statistics "on existing or threatening labor shortage situations."
- Requesting "appropriate recommendations" on manpower problems from the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy, and referring both to this group and to the Committee on Manpower the recent report of a special National Commission on Automation, Technology & Economic Progress.

The problems, the President said, include such issues as how to move the jobless and the underemployed to places where workers are scarce, how to mobilize older workers who although recently retired are still productive, how to break down barriers of discrimination that waste valuable manpower resources. He invited all agencies in the field "to think boldly about new approaches."

Major League Players Pick USWA Aide

Miami, Fla.—Marvin J. Miller, since 1960 assistant to the president of the Steelworkers, was chosen first executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association at a meeting of player representatives here.

He will take over the $50,000 a year job on July 1 subject to ratification of his selection by a majority of the players on the 20 teams in the National and American Leagues. If he is approved as the first man to hold the newly-created position, he will serve as the players' representative—much like a union business agent—in their relations with the club owners and Commissioner William Eckert.

Miller is 48 and a graduate of New York University with a degree of bachelor of science in economics. He joined the federal service as an economist following his graduation and during World War II was with the War Labor Board. Following the war he helped train conciliators for the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

In 1947 he became assistant to the president of the Machinists and three years later went to work for the USWA as associate research director. He became assistant to former Pres. David J. McDonald in 1960 and continued in the post when Pres. I. W. Abel took over in 1965. He has been active in the USWA Human Relations Committee and helped develop the union's agreement with the Kaiser Steel Co. under which members share in cost savings they help create.

Former President Of Teachers Dies

Maumee, O.—Raymond F. Lowry, national president of the American Federation of Teachers from 1932 to 1934, died in Toledo Hospital and was buried here after funeral services.

Lowry retired two years ago after a lifetime of high school and college teaching in Lima and Toledo, O., Paris, Ark., and the University of Yengching in Tientsin, China. His last post was head of the English department of Alpena, Mich., Community College.

Ex-Gov. Williams Enters Michigan Senate Race

G. Mennen Williams, six times governor of Michigan, returned to the political wars in his home state with announcement that he would seek the Democratic nomination for the Senate seat being vacated by incumbent Sen. Pat McNamara, who has announced his retirement.

Williams resigned as assistant secretary of state for African affairs, a post he has held from the beginning of the Kennedy-Johnson administrations, to make the political race. Detroit Mayor Jerome B. Cavanagh, who has considered seeking the Democratic nomination, has made no formal statement on whether he will oppose Williams in the primary.

On the Republican side, Rep. Robert P. Griffin has announced for the Senate and is considered certain of nomination. He was co-sponsor of the 1959 Landrum-Griffin Act.

In California, Mayor Samuel W. Yorty of Los Angeles announced he would run against incumbent Gov. Edmund G. Brown in the Democratic gubernatorial primary.

The prospect was thus created of bruising primaries in both parties—the maverick Yorty, charging "machine politics," against Brown for the Democratic nomination and Actor Ronald Reagan, fund-raiser for Barry Goldwater in 1964, against former Mayor George Christopher of San Francisco for the Republicans.

Arbitration Upheld Over Lockout Pay

Employes of the Baltimore News American, a Hearst newspaper that last year halted publication and locked out its workers when the Newspaper Guild struck a rival paper, the Baltimore Sun, have won the right to arbitration of their claim that the News American must pay them wages for the lockout period.

In a suit brought by six workers, members of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, their right to arbitration of the dispute was upheld by the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court denied review, thus leaving the appellate court ruling as final and binding.

Federal Pay Proposal Limited to 'Guidelines'

ercise continued leadership in the fight for price stability, then we must continue to practice what we preach. The government has the added responsibility of not contributing to inflation by its own actions."

The pay raise would apply only to salaried federal employes. An additional 564,000 workers are paid hourly rates based on prevailing wages in their area.

Federal employe unions, although reserving detailed comment for their testimony before the House Post Office & Civil Service Committee, were clearly disappointed at the rigidity of the guideline application. They pointed out that "comparability" data on federal pay are based on private industry statistics collected last spring—data which would be nearly two years old by the time the proposed pay adjustments would take effect.

While the employe unions are not opposing the President's wage proposal, they are urging an earlier effective date and elimination of inequities.

Pres. John F. Griner of the American Federation of Government Employes termed the 1 percent increase proposed for the lowest-paid group "incredible." With allowance for the higher deduction for retirement, the increase in take-home pay would come to less than one cent an hour for thousands of workers, Griner said.

The Administration bill would allow employes with 30 years of service to retire at full pension at age 55 instead of 60. But it would also permit the government to retire involuntarily persons in the upper pay grades—GS-13 and above—at age 55 with 30 years' service. Another provision would guarantee that retirement, disability and survivor benefits under civil service are at least equal to social security benefits.

The Administration also proposed to increase its share of the cost of health insurance from 30 to 38 percent over a two-year period and to extend medicare coverage to federal employes.

on a part-time basis for economic reasons dropped 300,000 from a year ago.

Non-farm employment reached 61.1 million last month in the face of an anticipated decline, with the largest gain taking place in manufacturing. At 18,418,000, manufacturing employment set a new record high. The over-the-year increase in factory jobs was 950,000, the largest year-to-year gain since 1952-53, the department said.

The workweek, at a seasonally adjusted level of 41.3 hours in February, was at its highest since World War II and included 3.7 hours of overtime, the highest figure since the series was originated in 1956.

Average weekly earnings edged up by 27 cents to $110.27 because of the increase in hours, the report said, but hourly earnings at $2.67 were unchanged from the record set in January.

Teen-agers, whose jobless rate dropped to 10.9 percent from 12 percent a month earlier and 14.5 percent a year ago, accounted for about half the decline in unemployment over the month. The pattern of a decline in school enrollment and a rise in the number of teen-agers in the labor force between January and February was reversed this year, the department said.

The unemployment rate for non-white workers remained unchanged from the 7 percent January level while the white rate moved down slightly from 3.5 to 3.3 percent. The non-white rate was down from 9.2 percent a year ago.

Commissioner of Labor Statistics Arthur Ross told a press conference there is every expectation that the overall jobless rate will go down as the year progresses and that it will reach 3.5 percent by the end of 1966.

In his message the President noted that earlier manpower reports were concerned with excessive unemployment—6 percent at the time of the first report and 5 percent two years later.

"An unemployment rate of 3.7 percent in February marks another milestone along the country's course toward full realization of its economic potential," he declared.

He noted, however, that there is no cause for satisfaction "when one out of every 14 Negro workers is without a job," and that the high rate of unemployment among teen-agers "still blocks far too many young men and women from beginning productive and rewarding careers."

The Labor Dept. report showed that in addition to the job gains in manufacturing, trade, services and state and local government showed seasonally adjusted increases of about 50,000 while contract construction employment declined by 30,000.

12-Month Record

The across-the-board improvement in jobless rates showed up in year-to-year comparisons. The 3.7 percent in February compared to 5 percent 12 months earlier; for men 25 years and over the rates were 2.3 and 3.2; for women 20 years and over, 3.6 and 5.1; for fulltime workers 3.3 and 4.6; blue-collar workers, 4 and 5.6; unemployed 15 weeks and over, .8 and 1.2.

The department said that nearly one-half the 700,000 unemployed teen-agers seeking work in February were looking for part-time employment; the same held true for one-fifth of the adult women.

The highest unemployment rate in February on an industry breakdown was for agriculture, with 11.6 percent jobless. Construction was close behind with 11.4 percent. By occupation, non-farm laborers had the highest jobless rate for the month with 10.2.

if they are already receiving more than $35 a month in state, local or federal pensions or in railroad retirement.

Both the Prouty and Hartke amendments were opposed on the Senate floor by Chairman Russell B. Long (D-La.) of the Finance Committee, the bill's manager.

Also dropped from the compromise bill was a less controversial amendment proposed by Long himself and approved by the Senate in a voice vote. It would have excused taxpayers from income tax liabilities of $5 or less, an estimated revenue loss of $12 million a year.

Accepted by the conferees for the House and Senate were two minor amendments affecting an inventory tax on automobile manufacturers and the duty-free shipment home of goods valued at $50 by members of the armed forces in Viet Nam.

Swift floor action by both House and Senate was expected to speed the conference committee bill to Johnson for approval by Mar. 15, the date by which he had requested the measure.

The Senate itself defeated what has become known as "the Ribicoff amendment"—to grant tax credits up to $325 a year for college expenses, at a revenue loss of $1 billion a year. Opponents argued that this would give a tax break to high-income families who send their children to expensive colleges and that the revenue would have to be made up by higher taxes on others.

In other congressional action:

- The House passed a bill liberalizing the special workmen's compensation program for federal employes, and raising the dollar ceiling on benefits. It also provides a "cost-of-living" raise for persons already on the compensation rolls and an escalator provision to cover future increases in living costs.

- The Senate gave final approval to a bill creating 45 new federal judgeships, clearing it for the President's signature. The legislation provides 10 new judges for circuit courts of appeals and 35 new district judges.

- The House passed and sent to the Senate a bill strengthening the re-employment rights of servicemen. Under existing law, a person entering the service is entitled to his old job back only if he remains in the service not more than four years. The House bill would extend this to five years.

It also provides clearcut job protection for reservists and national guardsmen during brief periods of active duty training. The new provision states that such persons "shall not be denied retention in employment or other incident or advantage of employment because of any obligation as a member of a reserve component."

3-12-66

- The Senate passed and sent back to the House with only a minor change the Administration bill providing $415 million in economic aid for South Viet Nam and other troubled nations. The bill was approved by an 82-2 vote.

'66 Election, Far Right Are Film Topics

Three new films, one aimed at stimulating political action at the precinct level and the others dealing with radical right wing activities, have been added to the AFL-CIO Film Library.

Precinct, People, Power: Arithmetic of Politics, is a 28-minute color film produced by the Auto Workers which dramatizes the threat to the Great Society program if the liberal edge in Congress is cut in the November election, and which emphasizes that elections are lost by apathy.

When Extremists Attack the Schools is a panel discussion, 30 minutes long, by five prominent citizens who have been under extremist pressure in their schools. Star-Spangled Extremists looks at the broad range of right wing activities in a community with Prof. Alan Westin of Columbia University giving the major characteristics of such organizations.

The films may be rented at $3 each from the AFL-CIO Film Division, 815 Sixteenth St., N. W., Washington, D. C. 20006. Precinct, People, Power may be purchased for $150 from the UAW, 8000 E. Jefferson Street, Detroit, Mich. 48214.

Where the Fighting Ends

Layoff Rate Drops To 13-Year Low

The layoff rate in manufacturing declined sharply in January, reaching a 13-year low after adjustment for seasonal changes, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics disclosed in its monthly report on factory labor turnover.

The seasonally adjusted rate dropped to 11 per 1,000 workers, the lowest for any month since April 1953. The unadjusted rate of 12 per 1,000 workers was down from December's 18 per 1,000, with especially notable declines in primary and fabricated metals and food, the report showed.

Total hirings rose from 31 per 1,000 workers in December to 45 per 1,000 in January, highest level for the month since the Korean War. The quit rate at 19 per 1,000 was up more than seasonally from 1.4 in December—indicating, the BLS said, "continued job strength" in manufacturing.

Situs Picketing Bill Cleared For Floor

The jobsite picketing bill, one of the AFL-CIO's top legislative goals, has been cleared by the House Rules Committee. It would permit a union with a dispute against a construction subcontractor to picket a multi-employer construction site without running afoul of the secondary boycott ban in the Taft-Hartley Act.

The bill was approved by the House Labor Committee in the last session of Congress. Its two key sponsors, Representatives Frank Thompson Jr. (D-N.J.) and Carlton R. Sickles (D-Md.), appeared before the Rules Committee to urge that the bill be cleared for floor action in the House. Rep. Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.) argued against granting a rule. The vote in the Rules Committee reportedly was 8-6.

N.Y.C. Bars Kingsport Books Purchase

School Unit Cites Strike As Factor

New York—The Board of Education of New York City voted against the purchase of any books produced at the strikebound Kingsport, Tenn., Press "in any instance where books of equal value" to public school pupils are available.

The historic vote was on a motion by School Board member Morris Iushewitz, member of the Newspaper Guild and secretary of the city's Central Labor Council, AFL-CIO. The motion also provided that publishers who have printing and binding work performed at Kingsport Press shall be informed by letter of the board's decision.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said labor is "deeply gratified" at the New York action and hopes school boards in other cities will pass similar resolutions.

"The board's decision," he said, "exemplifies the principles of equity which should be followed by all public bodies that spend public funds. It is clearly indefensible for a branch of government to subsidize one side in a strike dispute with tax money that has been raised from those who support the other side."

The school board action was supported by labor and consumer groups who called its passage a significant breakthrough in a nationwide campaign for similar action by other boards of education.

The board resolution, adopted 5-4, related that since Mar. 11, 1963, when members of five unions struck for better contract terms, Kingsport Press has been "operating with strikebreakers and hundreds of newly hired unskilled workers, paid but a few pennies above the U.S. minimum wage," now $1.25 an hour.

Unfair Competition

Noting that a large percentage of the nation's book manufacturing capacity is located in this city, the resolution asserted that New York's book manufacturers "cannot bid successfully against Kingsport Press," and the business community and workers here are thus denied "a fair opportunity to produce books for the school system."

The opinion of the five-member board majority was summed up in a statement read by Clarence Senior, board member who is a sociology professor at Brooklyn College. Disputing the view of the city's corporation counsel, Senior said the issue was

2-Stage Wage Floor Hike Gets House Unit Approval

AFL-CIO PRES. George Meany addresses eight-union Conference on National Collective Bargaining Goals, declaring that contract improvements at General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Corp. are long overdue.

Coverage Widened by 6.5 Million

By David L. Perlman

A House Labor subcommittee approved a new minimum wage bill raising the pay floor for nearly 30 million workers and extending coverage to an additional 6.5 million persons.

Those now under the $1.25 minimum would go to $1.40 on Feb. 1, 1967 and $1.60 one year later.

It would bring under the Fair Labor Standards Act some 1.5 million retail store employes, 1.4 million hospital workers, 580,000 construction workers and 500,000 in laundries. Some 485,000 farm workers—the first ever covered by the law—would be brought under a special minimum wage, starting at $1 and rising to $1.30.

Subcommittee Chairman John H. Dent (D-Pa.) said the bill, approved by voice vote, was backed by all but one of the nine members.

The bill is scheduled for quick action by the full Labor Committee on a timetable expected to bring the legislation to the House floor in late April.

The bill, sponsored by Dent, was hailed by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller as "a solid step forward" toward "economic justice for America's working poor."

The AFL-CIO will urge "prompt passage" of the measure by the House, Biemiller said, but emphasized that labor will not "relax our efforts" to make the wage-hour law —"the best single weapon in the war on poverty—completely effective."

"Our goal remains a $2 minimum wage and coverage for all workers," he said.

The new bill replaces a three-

8 Unions Set Goals In GE, Westinghouse

By Eugene A. Kelly

Eight unions representing 180,000 General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electric Corp. workers agreed on a five-point program of joint contract goals for 1966 bargaining that promptly drew AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's strong backing.

More than 300 delegates from 150 local unions voted at an all-day conference to abandon their long-time single-union approach and coordinate their efforts behind a joint "catchup" program of wage and benefit improvements.

Meany repeated the pledge of "full support and resources" voted by the 1965 AFL-CIO convention at San Francisco and challenged the two highly profitable firms to "prove where they stand" on the subject of "equal justice for workers as well as management."

Represented at the conference were the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the Machinists, Allied Industrial Workers, Flint Glass Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Technical Engineers, the Auto Workers and the IUE. Two other unions, the Carpenters and the Plumbers, sent observers.

In three separate votes, delegates decided unanimously to seek these contract changes in talks due to start Aug. 1 at GE and Aug. 15 at Westinghouse:

- A substantial wage increase, an end to geographic salary differentials, and a cost of living escalator clause.
- Holiday and vacation improvements on a par with those in other basic industries.
- Better income and employment security in the form of adequate layoff pay and other methods

New York—David Dubinsky announced his resignation as president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, the post to which he was first elected in 1932. His retirement from the 447,000-member union will become effective Apr. 12, marking a record of labor leadership that spans youthful exile in Czarist Russia and friendship with five Presidents of the United States.

While Dubinsky is resigning from his ILGWU office, he will continue his activities in the labor movement.

This includes the conduct of the Liberal Party of New York, of which he is vice-chairman, and the AFL-CIO, of which he is a vice president and to whose Executive Council he was recently re-elected for a two-year term. He said he will also stand ready to assist the ILGWU in every possible way and to take limited assignments from its new president.

Calling Dubinsky his "warm and good friend," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a statement praised the long-time ILGWU president for his achievements, declaring "there will be a 'D. D.' stamp on the future of American labor." (Text of Meany statement, Page 10.)

Passage of the jobsite picketing bill will be the top priority goal of more than 4,000 delegates to the 11th national legislative conference of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

The bill, which would give a union the right to picket a multi-employer construction site if it has a dispute with one of the contractors, was given a green light by the House Rules Committee. It may be acted on by the House while the building trades conference is in session, and two conference days have been set aside for delegates to visit their congressmen and senators.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will be the keynote speaker when the conference opens Mar. 21 at the Washington Hilton Hotel. The featured speaker at the closing session, Mar. 24, will be Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey.

Noting labor's historic support of public education, he added: "We are presented with an opportunity to express ourselves on behalf of an expansion of democracy in a region which is most benighted" in labor relations, has the "highest illiteracy levels" in the nation and the "most horrendous record for the denial of equal opportunity."

At public hearings preceding the vote, witnesses testified that some textbook publishers continue to place a portion of their printing and binding orders with the struck press, and that textbooks paid for with public money are entering the New York City school system to the detriment of local industry.

Among those who testified in support of the resolution were Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Printing Pressmen; Pres. Harry Van Arsdale of the New York City AFL-CIO; Pres. Raymond R. Corbett of the State AFL-CIO; Pres. Bertram A. Powers of Typographical Local 6; AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Michael Mann and Pres. Albert Shanker of Teachers' Local 2. Appearing in opposition were company Vice Pres. C. E. Fritschle; Herbert Brownell, Jr., company counsel, and Pres. John J. Lynch of the City Teachers Association.

The Cleveland School Board adopted a motion in February instructing the school superintendent to "place no further orders for bulk purchases of books printed by Kingsport Press without first reporting to the board in detail on the status of the strike." Action along similar lines has been asked of boards in Detroit, Chicago, Rochester, N.Y., Buffalo and other cities.

The Allied Kingsport Press Unions, representing 1,800 workers in the Printing Pressmen, Bookbinders, Machinists, Stereotypers, and the ITU, have been unable to get Kingsport Press management to conduct "meaningful" negotiations.

They launched a "don't buy" campaign with the strong support of the AFL-CIO in an effort to get management to resume bargaining. The federation's 1965 convention in San Francisco voiced strong opposition to school purchases of Kingsport books using tax funds drawn largely from union labor.

The strike is the first authorized walkout in the 43-year history of the firm, one of the largest publishers of hard-cover books. Company products include:

Eternal Light's Lehman Study Set for Radio

A radio version of the widely-acclaimed television drama, "The Moral Dimension," will be broadcast over the NBC network at 12:30 p.m. (EST), Sunday, Apr. 17, it was announced by Joseph D. Keenan, treasurer of the George Meany Foundation. Broadcast times in areas outside New York City will be indicated by local NBC stations.

The foundation, an arm of the Herbert H. Lehman Institute, each year underwrites the production of a program for the Eternal Light series, presented weekly on NBC by the Jewish Theological Seminary of America.

"The Moral Dimension" written by Charlott Marshall, was first released on NBC-TV last Dec. 5 and earned enthusiastic response, Keenan said. The program, a documentary tribute to the life and work of the late Herbert H. Lehman, former governor and U.S. senator from New York, features a moving interview with Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey.

Earlier presentations of the George Meany Foundation have dealt with events in the lives of Samuel Gompers, William Green and Phillip Murray, late presidents of the former AFL and former CIO, respectively, and the impact of automation on the concept of work as a social and spiritual good.

Pacesetting Pact Won In TWUA Woolen Talks

New York—A "package" of 13.5 cents an hour was indicated as the 1966 contract pattern for 18,000 woolen and worsted industry employes in 75 mills when the Textile Workers Union of America and the pacesetting Wyandotte Worsted Co. settled on a new three-year agreement. TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka, who headed the union negotiating committee, said other employers in that branch of the textile industry traditionally follow the pattern set by Wyandotte, which has plants in Waterville, Me.; Central Village, Conn., and Rochester, N.H.

The agreement calls for a general wage increase of 10 cents an hour effective May 2, the day after the current contract expires. This will raise average straight-time hourly earnings to $2.11 an hour, with the new minimum $1.74 an hour, the union said. Weavers, the sole piecework job classification, are guaranteed a minimum of $2.125 an hour, figured on a daily basis.

The settlement has provisions for reopening on wages next year and on wages and fringe benefits in 1968.

Other gains include improvements in employe hospitalization-surgical benefits and increased coverage for dependents at company expense. The required eligibility for life and health insurance benefits was cut from six months of service to three months, and all employes with 10 years of service were guaranteed two weeks of vacation at the rate of 5 percent of yearly pay.

In Civil Rights Suit:

Chemical Workers Charge Race Bias

an order directing the Clarksdale, Miss., firm to negotiate a contract guaranteeing employes freedom from all forms of race discrimination, and to make the pay rate for each job "dependent solely on the skills, hazards, workload and other qualities of that job without regard to the race" or identity of the worker.

The ICWU was certified by the National Labor Relations Board last May 14 as bargaining agent for 115 production and maintenance workers, but has been unable to reach agreement on terms which do not violate the Civil Rights Act, it said.

It charged that management refused to make wage adjustments for Negro workers, give them the same vacation benefits as whites or to include a no-discrimination clause in the contract.

When the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission refused to act on the union's complaint, filed last Oct. 19, five employes filed complaints Dec. 2. They were notified Feb. 17 that the commission is investigating and that they had 30 days to file suit in court.

Backpay Asked

The union's suit, filed jointly with the five workers, asks the court to direct the company to negotiate whatever changes in wages and working conditions are necessary to eliminate discrimination, and to award backpay to workers who have suffered losses from such discrimination.

"If we are successful," Mitchell said, "we will have established a precedent which can do much to eliminate substandard wages and working conditions in the South."

Discrimination based on race cannot be eliminated simply by requiring identical pay for identical jobs, he commented. To meet the requirements of the law, he said, differences in pay must bear some "reasonable relationship to the differences in the jobs."

These are among the company practices the ICWA cites in its suit:

- It has paid Negro employes, who perform work similar to that of white employes, much lower rates of pay than whites.
- It has paid Negro employes who perform work different from that of whites much lower rates than any differences in the work would reasonably justify.
- It gives Negro workers four vacation days a year, whites two weeks a year.
- It has permitted supervisors to treat Negro employes with less courtesy and respect than white employes, and has "permitted and condoned the use of abusive language" against Negroes.
- It has maintained segregated washrooms and drinking facilities.
- It has discriminatorily denied Negro workers the chance to perform overtime work.

The highest Negro rate at the Clarksdale plant is $1.35 an hour but most Negroes get the legal minimum of $1.25 while white workers earn an average of $2.01, the union charged. The plant processes cottonseed and soybean oil.

Union Right On Bias Clause Spelled Out

The refusal of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to entertain a union charge of race discrimination by an employer is wrong "both as a matter of law and as a matter of policy," Atty. David E. Feller, special counsel for the Chemical Workers, declared in a letter to the commission.

A union is different from other organizations in that it has the power, and the duty, of representing the individual employes in its bargaining unit, Feller wrote EEOC General Counsel Charles Duncan. His letter urging a change in commission policy followed EEOC refusal to act on charges by the Chemical Workers against the Planters Mfg. Co., a Mississippi employer. Five of the individual workers involved then filed charges, and when the EEOC took no action, the union filed a federal court suit against the employer.

Feller's letter to the commission pointed out that Title VII of the act makes it unlawful for a union to agree to a discriminatory contract. Charges can and have been filed against unions based simply on contract terms, he noted.

"The union therefore has a legally cognizable interest in obtaining a non-discriminatory contract and is aggrieved if the employer refuses to agree to one."

Convictions Overturned In Florida Rail Strike

New Orleans, La.—The 5th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals here has reversed the convictions of four railroad men accused of placing dynamite on a Florida East Coast Railway trestle in 1964.

Three appeals judges ruled that the men were deprived of their constitutional rights at hearings in Miami District Court. Charges against Hugh Winn, car foreman, and John Katsikos, car inspector, were dismissed. Charges against John W. Davis and Joseph L. Vedder, switchmen, were returned to the District Court for reconsideration.

The appellate tribunal ruled that the lower court should have dismissed a count in the charge against Katsikos and Winn as being too vague to permit them to prepare an adequate defense.

In the case of Davis and Vedder, comments by the trial judge were not only improper but unconstitutional, the judges said. They declined to rule on other errors charged by defense lawyers.

The four FEC workers were convicted at a trial in Miami two years ago, largely on the testimony of an informer. Defense lawyers introduced evidence that the informer was paid $1,400 by the FBI for "expenses and services" and that payment of another $5,000 was authorized if his testimony resulted in conviction of the accused men.

After the trial, the railroad paid him $5,000, according to union charges.

The FEC has been run by strikebreakers since its nonoperating employes walked out Jan. 23, 1963, for the same raise given workers by most other Class 1 railroads. It continues to run freight trains but has discontinued all passenger service except for one train a day, the strikers say.

UAW Seeks Review In Picket Line Case

By Willard Shelton

The Auto Workers will seek Supreme Court review of an appellate court decision holding, by a 4-3 vote, that a union is guilty of unfair labor practices in fining members who had crossed picket lines in three strikes.

Joseph L. Rauh, general counsel for the UAW, said the union would seek reversal of the appellate court ruling, which in turn was a reversal of a National Labor Relations Board decision and of an original decision by a panel of judges drawn from the same appellate bench.

The unfair practice charge was brought by the Allis-Chalmers Co. of Milwaukee, which was struck by Locals 248 and 401 of the UAW in 1959 and 1962. Of approximately 7,400 members then in the bargaining unit, about 175 went through the picket lines.

The unions warned the strikebreakers they were subject to discipline, under union rules, of fines up to a maximum of $100 a day for each time they crossed the picket lines and reported for work. The strikes were called after two-thirds votes of the locals by secret ballot and after approval of the UAW international executive board.

Formal charges were filed against the strikebreakers after the strikes were ended and union trial boards assessed fines ranging from a total of $20 to $100. Some refused to pay and the union in a test case sought to enforce payment by suing in state court.

The NLRB by a 4-1 decision rejected the Allis-Chalmers claim that although under the Taft-Hartley Act the UAW was clearly free to discipline strikebreakers by expulsion from the union, the imposition of fines, with the institution of suit to collect the fines, was illegal restraint or coercion of the strikebreakers under the same law.

This was upheld by a three-judge panel of the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which ruled that only by a "literal reading" could the Taft-Hartley Act be interpreted as providing that a union violated employe rights if its discipline of strikebreakers "takes any form other than expulsion."

The full seven-member court, on a rehearing granted Allis-Chalmers, reversed its own panel and the NLRB alike in its 4-3 decision, Judge Win G. Knoch holding for the majority that the reasoning of the panel lacked "validity."

No "recourse to legislative history" to determine the intent of Congress was required, said the Knoch opinion, adding that "a substantial fine" of a strikebreaker might pose "a greater threat" to his protected rights as an individual worker than "simple expulsion from the union."

"We should never forget . . . that in the all-inclusive, authoritarian state represented as the common enemy today," the right of both individual workers and unions "have been completely appropriated," wrote Knoch. He further wrote that under a union security clause in the Allis-Chalmers contract a "substantial minority" of the employes "may have been forced into" union membership.

The decision brought three sharp dissents. Chief Judge John S. Hastings pointed out that under the Taft-Hartley Act, the only requirement on workers operating with a union security contract is to pay the ordinary initiation fee and dues.

The strikebreaking Allis-Chalmers employes could merely have paid their dues, thus remaining outside the reach of union discipline, he said, but "they choose to associate themselves in full union membership."

Congress in the Taft-Hartley Act prohibited unions from enforcing their internal rules by forcing discharge of a dissident worker, but "otherwise refrained from exploring the area of internal union affairs," he wrote.

Even the later Landrum-Griffin Act conceded the right of unions to discipline members for "violation of reasonable rules or policies," and specifically recognized the system of fines as one of the means of discipline, he observed, and union fines have been upheld against members engaging in illegal wildcat strikes.

In another dissenting opinion, Judge Roger W. Kiley said that he rejected the theory that Congress intended the "absurdity" of providing that a union was exposed in internal disciplinary matters to the dilemma "of either permitting anarchy and dissension within its ranks or depleting its strength" by expelling members.

"Once the union voted to strike, the employes who were union members were bound" by that decision, he said, and members "must take not only the benefits but the burdens."

Kiley also pointed out that the UAW locals had not suspended or expelled any of the strikebreakers and that none of them had resigned during the disciplinary proceedings.

The third dissent, by Judge Luther M. Swygert, rejected the majority opinion comment that "consecutive fines" amounting to "thousands of dollars" might be imposed by unions. In fact, the UAW fines ran in the specific range of $20 to $100, he emphasized, and "this court should not consider hypothetical cases."

"When an employe voluntarily joins a union," Swygert said, "he may not join on his own terms, abiding only by those rules with which he is in personal agreement."

DELEGATES from 150 local unions draft coordinated bargaining program for new contracts with General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electric Corp. Conference in Washington, D. C., approved five-point wage and fringe benefit goals aimed at enabling 180,000 workers to "catch up" with gains won by unions at other major firms.

- The full union shop, a full arbitration clause, provisions for dealing with automation problems, and improvement in continuity of service clauses in contracts.
- Substantial increases in the benefit formula of pension and insurance programs and in the minimum pension and early retirement clauses to bring them into line with those of other major industries.

Program goals also include insurance improvements fully financed by the employer; better accident and sickness benefits and health-welfare programs for pensioned employes; a dental care program and increased benefits for workers on permanent layoff.

In addition to the national goals, each bargaining unit will be free to negotiate on its own local problems, IUE Pres. Paul Jennings reported in the keynote address at the first conference session.

Jennings said the unions decided to coordinate their bargaining goals for the following reasons:

"During the last six years, at the very time that corporation profits were rising at a fantastic rate, your real income and the income of the workers you represent was almost at a standstill due to increases that were too small, too far apart, and rising living costs."

Total increases for GE and Westinghouse workers during the period were 12 and 11 percent respectively, while living costs rose nearly 8 percent and "we have six more months of rising living costs before the present contract expires," Jennings said.

Profits Soar

He put the average increase in real income at less than half of 1 percent a year while GE profits rose 95 percent in six years and those of Westinghouse doubled in three years.

"In six years," Jennings told the delegates, "you have gained in wages what you should have gained in one year."

IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman opened the final conference session with an announcement that his union fully supports unity in bargaining.

Years ago, Freeman said, the IBEW "saw the need of coordinating our activities in 56 Westinghouse local unions" and united action of all unions this year "might well foreshadow coordinated bargaining on an international basis" in the future.

"Let it be clear," Freeman declared, "that our fair share is long overdue—six years too long."

Meany told the conferees "frankly, you who deal with Westinghouse and GE have a lot of catching up to do."

Noting that one General Electric official had congratulated the Council of Economic Advisers for its "brave" stand in keeping the so-called "guidelines" below "what their own figures on productivity had shown," Meany commented:

"We are told that if workers get benefits that are larger than 3.2 percent, that might create inflation. But if these executives get 25 to 50 percent increases on income that already runs into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, why, that simply adds to our investable funds."

Some economists, he said, have the "curious idea that wage payments have marked on them 'Danger, inflationary.' But theirs is stamped 'OK. Non-inflationary.' "

Meany suggested that officials of GE and Westinghouse have a "fine opportunity to show they want to do the right thing by recognizing that bargaining is not simply a legal ceremony they must go through," but means joining together in good faith to work out the best agreement.

5-Union Cigar Council Wins Gains for 2,000

Cincinnati, Ohio—A cigar workers council which coordinated bargaining efforts for five unions has won contract improvements for more than 2,000 American Tobacco Co. workers in scattered northern and southern plants.

Contract advances called by the unions the best in several years included wage hikes of 7 to 11 cents this year, 4 cents next year, with inequity adjustments up to 20 cents an hour; improved Blue Cross-Blue Shield hospitalization coverage, with full premium payments by management in the second contract year; two days' funeral leave, and strengthened job protection.

The council made history in American Tobacco's labor-management relations when workers from five plants sat in on negotiations in December between the Tobacco Workers and management at the Owensboro, Ky., plant. The process was repeated at four other plants until the final settlement was reached.

Council delegates represent Brewery Workers' Local 135, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; 1711, Philadelphia, Pa., and 1803, Trenton, N. J.; Tobacco Workers Local 316, Owensboro, and Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Local 15-A in Charleston.

The council was officially formed at a Wilkes-Barre meeting when delegates agreed to coordinate bargaining goals. Education Dir. James Wolfe of the Brewery Workers was elected council secretary with responsibility for setting up a system for the exchange of information.

The system worked so well that the council will remain a permanent organization, Wolfe said.

Negotiations were coordinated by Intl. Rep. George Ardelean of the Brewery union, Intl. Rep. William Lewis of the Tobacco Workers and Regional Dir. Irving Lebold of Retail-Wholesale.

A byproduct of the coordinated talks was a supplementary one-year agreement providing severance pay for Philadelphia plant employes who prefer not to move to a new company location.

Shoe Workers Re-elect Georgian

The United Shoe Workers re-elected Sec.-Treas. Angelo Georgian and five national directors without opposition to serve for three years, the union announced. The directors are James Cordova, John Giderian, Fileno De Novellis, Russell J. Taylor and Gene Barile.

The vote was conducted at meetings of 131 local unions. New officers, including the winner of a Canadian director's election scheduled for later, will take office at an executive board meeting in May. Pres. George O. Fecteau was re-elected in 1965 for a three-year term.

OCAW Parley Sets Chemical Contract Goals

Denver, Colo.—Long-range plans to guarantee job and income security will be demanded of the chemical industry "now, while employment is generally firm," Pres. A. F. Grospiron of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers announced.

The employers also will be asked to pay the full cost of group hospitalization insurance providing adequate coverage, Grospiron said. The cost is borne jointly by the workers and the industry.

The OCAW president's announcements came after a meeting of the union's National Chemical Policy Committee, which seeks to unify collective bargaining under contracts with the chemical industry.

He said that long-range planning before the job security issue becomes severe "makes more sense than waiting until we have a severe hardship on our hands," as happened in the oil industry. If the employers agree to pay the full cost of hospitalization, he said, the union believes they will work harder to hold down its "skyrocketing costs."

The committee in addition restated the union's intention of striving for four goals set up last fall—better pensions, wage increases, longer vacations and an additional holiday.

Apprenticeship Appeal Given New York Youths

New York—New York City youths were told "you are wanted, you are welcome" as apprentices in the city's building trades unions.

Pres. Peter J. Brennan of the New York Building & Construction Trades Council, principal speaker at a conference on Apprenticeship Opportunities for high school students told the youths, "If you have a skill you are needed, and while some crafts may be disappearing from our industry, others will be around for many hundreds of years and will need skilled workers."

Construction unions, Brennan declared, have an obligation to admit apprentices, including those from minority groups, and give them the same opportunities enjoyed many years ago by today's labor leaders. The industry can absorb them in a dozen and a half different crafts, he said, but he added a warning about job opportunities.

"Public works is the key to the whole problem of construction today," he declared. "Private industry can build only so much, and this is why the government must come in and pick up its proper responsibility.

We want the government in Washington, D.C., in Albany and here in New York City to know that we need more job opportunity. We want government officials to know that more public works building can not only fill the need for residential and commercial structures but also help keep employment in this industry at a high level."

He asserted that the present New York City administration has more than $3 billion worth of construction plans pending that should be put into operation.

Hope that the city's Board of Education would cooperate in making high school students aware of existing job opportunities was expressed by Bayard Rustin, director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute and conference chairman.

"We trust that the Board of Education will let us go into the schools and see that information about the apprenticeship program is brought to the attention of the thousands of young people who stand to gain," Rustin said.

He held that the Johnson Administration's war against poverty is linked directly with training young people in specific skills and with eliminating illiteracy.

Other speakers included Vice Pres. David Crockett of Local 6, Typographical Union; Thomas Van Arsdale, business agent of Local 3, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; and Myron Horwitz, a representative of the Bureau of Apprenticeship Training, New York State Labor Dept., who urged the students to "stay in school and get as much training as you can."

Steel Union, Kaiser Revise Sharing Plan

Los Angeles—Changes in the "long range sharing plan" of Kaiser Steel Corp. and the Steelworkers are expected to give workers at Kaiser's Fontana, Calif., plant a larger share in cost savings.

Nine members of the committee which supervises the plan announced changes including the following:

- A major revision to allow employes to draw a larger share of the savings resulting from higher production.
- Use of the Metals and Metals' Products Index of the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics to measure price fluctuations instead of the BLS Wholesale Price Index for Steel Mill Products. The change will "more realistically comprehend the effects of price fluctuations on the plan's material and supply standards," the committee said.
- A provision that employers working on certain key production units have the opportunity to earn additional income "based on that unit's incentive performance."

The new provisions, retroactive to Jan. 1, 1966, will be reflected in payrolls Mar. 31, said the committee, headed by Dr. George W. Taylor. Union committee members include USWA Pres. I. W. Abel, Marvin J. Miller and Charles J. Smith.

Participating employes in the plan have received an average of $1,500 in cash bonuses, in addition to wages and other benefits, since the plan was started 35 months ago, Taylor said.

Nearly 6,000 workers are covered by the joint program, which measures production costs against those of a base period and allots a share of any saving to employes.

AFT Local Wins Round In Chicago

Chicago—American Federation of Teachers Local 1 has scored vital legal victories against the Chicago unit of the National Education Association and the Illinois Chamber of Commerce, but still faces a long struggle before securing a collective bargaining election.

Judge Cornelius J. Harrington dismissed suits filed by the Chicago Education Association and the state Chamber of Commerce seeking an injunction against a union representation election ordered by the Chicago Board of Education. He upheld briefs filed by the Chicago Teachers Union and Chicago AFL-CIO claiming that the school board has the right to bargain with a union.

Judge Harrington also ruled that "memoranda of agreement" the board of education has with four teachers organizations are valid contracts.

The obstacle to a prompt election is the ruling that these agreements must be honored by the school board until they run out next Nov. 12. Board Pres. Frank Whiston has indicated he will wait until then to call for an election.

Pres. John M. Fewkes of the Chicago Teachers Union said the local will press for an election before the end of March. He said the local represents 12,500 classroom teachers whereas the Education Association has 4,000 members.

Judge Harrington ruled that a contract reached by the winner of a representation election and the school board must contain a no-strike clause. The union must agree not to picket or disrupt the board's administrative offices, the ruling said.

NLRB Settlement Wins Back Jobs

Springdale, Ark.—Tyson's Poultry, Inc., has agreed to reinstatement and backpay of $720 to James and Quentin Bowerman, brothers who charged they were fired because their mother is among the employes who struck the firm here last Aug. 27.

The company, in a settlement negotiated by the National Labor Relations Board, agreed also to post notices that it will not discriminate against union members.

Striking Meat Cutters Local 425 says has urged support of a consumer boycott of poultry produced by the firm.

Needed for Viet Nam:

$6 Billion Tax Bill Signed by President

Pres. Johnson signed the $6 billion Viet Nam tax bill less than three hours after it had cleared Congress and termed it "the right measure at the right moment."

The bill temporarily—for two years—increases the excise tax on telephone calls from 3 percent to 10 percent and the automobile excise tax from 6 to 7 percent of the manufacturer's price. It amounts to a rollback of excise tax cuts which went into effect Jan. 1, thus restoring the taxes to 1965 levels.

Tax Speedup

Most of the added revenue would come through a speedup in the collection of corportation taxes—a one-shot operation which will help meet the expenses of the Viet Nam war. There will also be a speedup in collection of individual income taxes through a graduated withholding formula designed to bring the amount of tax withheld closer to the actual amount due. Most persons in the middle-to-upper income brackets will have more money deducted from their pay each week, although their total tax bill is not increased.

Included in the bill is an extension of social security pensions to some 300,000 persons 72 or older who are not receiving any form of public pensions. They will be entitled to $35 a month for a single person, $52.50 for a couple.

The House voted 288-102 for final passage of the tax bill; the Senate vote was 72-5.

Debate centered largely on whether the Administration planned to seek another tax increase later in the session. The floor managers for the bill—Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) and Sen. Russell B. Long (D-La.)—indicated the question was premature. Mills said the need for additional revenues would depend on the cost of the Viet Nam war.

In what appeared to be a related move, Pres. Johnson asked all government agenices to submit revised budget estimates by Apr. 1, declaring that the need was "imperative" for tight spending curbs.

Pres. Johnson also signed a $4.8 billion supplemental defense authorization bill, which had passed the House 392-4 and the Senate 93-2. He hailed the overwhelming votes as a sign that Congress stands behind "our fighting men in Viet Nam."

The House also passed a $13.1 bililon appropriation bill containing funds for both a military build-up and increased economic aid for the current fiscal year.

Pay Hearings

As House hearings continued on pay increases for federal employes, the Administration indicated it would be willing to extend its proposed 2.85 percent average salary raise to military personel. Budget Director Charles L. Schultze revealed the change in policy under questioning by the Post Office & Civil Service Committee.

Schultze opposed making the 2.85 percent increase apply across the board to civilian employes. Government employe unions, which had been seeking a 7 percent raise, strongly protested that the "guidelines" pay formula proposed by the Administration gave the lowest percentage raise to the lowest-paid workers—only 1 percent for the bottom pay grades. Higher grade employes would receive as much as 4 percent.

Cancer Study Enlists Asbestos Union Aid

New York — A study aimed at determining if asbestos dust is as common a cause of cancer as it appears to be will be undertaken at Mt. Sinai Hospital with the cooperation of the Asbestos Workers and several of its locals.

It will be financed, the hospital said, with $324,000 in grants from the U.S. Public Health Service and the New York City Health Research Council, and will be under the director of Dr. Irving J. Selikoff, with whom the union has worked closely for some years.

High Rate

In previous research Selikoff and his associates, Dr. Jacob Churg and Dr. E. Cuyler Hammond, reported finding "an extraordinarily high" rate of cancer among New York City asbestos insulation workers, and finding asbestos fibers in the lungs of 25 percent of the general population.

"The research team has been studying a union group of insulation workers with 20 or more years of exposure to asbestos dust," the hospital announcement said. "They found six to seven times the 'expected' rate of cancer of the lung and three times the normal rate of cancer of the stomach, colon and rectum. Mesothelioma, a form of cancer ordinarily so rare that it is not separately coded among causes of death, was found to have 'extraordinarily high incidence' among asbestos workers."

Asbestos fibers also have been found in the lungs of persons working or living near where the mineral is used or mined, the earlier research showed—particularly among other building craftsmen and their families. The presence of the fibers in the lungs of the general population, determined by 1,100 autopsies in three cities, indicates a widespread distribution of asbestos dust in the atmosphere, the scientists said.

It apparently takes about 20 years after initial exposure for cancer symptoms to be detectable, the researchers said, adding that particles have been found in the lungs of affected workers even after a gap of 10 to 20 years in exposure.

If the tie between asbestos and cancer is proved conclusive, the cancer being discovered now is the outcome of exposure as far back as 20 years ago, when world asbestos production was about 500,000 tons a year, they said. It is now 3.5 million tons .

Widely Used

The material is used for fireproofing and insulating. It makes up about 50 percent of asphalt tile and in addition to its uses in construction is found in dental cement, brake linings, plastics, beer filters, gas masks and paper. Asbestos dust has been used instead of sand by some schools for children to play in.

In further studies, the Mt. Sinai team with the addition of Dr. Arthur M. Langer, believed the first mineralogist to join a hospital staff, will study the extent to which asbestos and other mineral dusts contaminate the air.

Kircher Analyzes Problems:

Changing Workforce Poses New Organizing Challenges

"Vast changes" in American society and the makeup of the workforce pose "new challenges" to the labor movement, declared William L. Kircher, recently named director of organization for the AFL-CIO.

Kircher uses no rose-colored glasses in his analysis of labor's organizing problems, appearing in the March issue of the American Federationist.

He acknowledges the obstacles to union growth, including a contraction of the blue collar workforce and an expansion of employment in fields where unions have been weak. But he is convinced that these obstacles can be overcome, that the labor movement can and will continue to grow.

The claim that workers no longer need or want unions, Kircher declares, is "pure hogwash." Employers obviously don't think so, he points out, because they're spending vast sums to keep unions out.

As a starting point, he asks his fellow trade unionists to take a new look at the men and women they are trying to organize.

They're mostly young, the "baby boom" of postwar years come of working age.

They have no memory of the depression era, of the great labor struggles and triumphs of the late thirties and early forties.

What's more, they're not greatly interested.

The answer, Kircher is convinced, is not to try to give a short course in labor history to the workers you're trying to organize. "Hardly anyone joined unions in the late thirties and early forties just because the Knights of Labor had a difficult time," he points out.

As far as today's young worker is concerned, "before he accepts unionism, he is going to have to recognize it as a helpful method of getting at the things bothering him today."

One of the facts unions today must face, Kircher notes, is the changed economic conditions of the typical worker.

"Many, if not most, paychecks are committed before they are received. The worker who is meeting house payments, television payments, car payments, education bills, etc., is in hock so far in advance that he is apprehensive about anything that might rock his personal economic boat. The forces who are not interested in seeing unions grow do a fairly good job of equating unionism with boat-rocking."

Linked to this is the propaganda effort of employers to portray unionism as an institution, rather than as a movement of people, Kircher declares.

"The greatest thrust of the management resistance campaign," he writes, "is the effort to psychologically separate the worker from the union, to make him think of the union as a third-party entity. It is almost as though the employer would like the worker to sit up in the grandstand while management fights the union."

To organize successfully, he says, unions must develop "methods of penetrating the network of fear and misunderstanding that has been carefully woven around workers' attitudes toward unions."

There is no general "recipe" for organizing, he points out, because "organizing is a personal business" . . . the two-way communication between a union member and a non-member.

Help Available

But the resources for organizing successfully are available, Kircher emphasizes. There are the 128 national and international unions in the AFL-CIO which can "beef up" their organizing efforts. There are the 60,000 local unions, many with offices, meeting halls and fulltime personnel. There are some 800 local central bodies and 50 state bodies, six national departments of the AFL-CIO and many subordinate councils.

"It should be utterly impossible to look at the broad network of union representation spread over this nation and the vast source of talent and energy that it contains and shrink from the union growth challenge as an unattainable task," Kircher declares.

Added to these factors, he notes, is "the unique effectiveness of collective bargaining itself as a means of meeting the needs of workers." When workers see in unions the embodiment of the collective bargaining process "and at the same time understand their role in directing this process toward their problems, they become very firm in their determination to organize."

Domestic Needs Cited At Defense Dept. Parley

There is "no foundation" for "mutterings" that defense requirements may make it necessary to cut back the new economic and social program, Sec.-Treas. Newell J. Carman of the Operating Engineers told the first in a series of Planning Briefings for Industry sponsored by the Defense Dept. and the National Security Industrial Association and held in Boston.

At the second meeting in the series, in Atlanta, Ga., Pres. Edward J. Leonard of the Plasterers attacked as sheer "gimmickry" the abandonment by the Council of Economic Advisers of traditional standards that kept the wage increase "guidelines" from rising to 3.6 percent. He emphasized the need for adequate purchasing power and for prosecution of the war on poverty, and expressed pleasure that trade unions are participating in advanced planning programs.

Leonard suggested that "if our nation can plan and spend billions of dollars to defend our citizens and our institutions," it should also be the country's purpose "to plan and spend billions more to overcome our short-comings, relieve our suffering at home and build a better society."

If because of defense requirements and inflationary pressures "a comprehensive program of restraints is necessary," he said, it should include costs, prices, profits, dividends and corporate executive salaries instead of "a totally unilateral and unfair restraint on one particular segment of our society at a time when we are undertaking federal programs to lessen this inequality."

Carman declared that "any serious consideration of postponing, reducing or eliminating national programs for progress at this time could have harmful effects on our nation's internal stability—and our future national defense potentialities."

He insisted that "there is no issue of 'guns or butter' before our nation."

He declared that the United States has unused material and human resources vast enough to meet its "commitment to fellow Americans" and its "commitments to emerging nations, to beleaguered nations and to our allies in defense of the free world."

The foreseen demand for skilled craftsmen and professionals, Carman said, shows the need for maintenance of the expanded federal programs of aid to education. The very size of the programs, he added, indicates the scope of the nation's need.

Additional briefings are scheduled for St. Louis, with Pres. John H. Lyons of the Iron Workers as labor speaker; San Francisco, with Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists, and Washington, with Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers.

Screen Actors Score Network Programming

Hollywood, Calif. — The major television networks have a virtual monopoly of all phases of network broadcasting and its byproducts, the Screen Actors Guild charged in a brief filed with the Federal Communications Commission in support of a proposal to limit network control of programming.

The result, the SAG declared, is that the market available to independent producers has been restricted. As network control has been increasing, the union added, the quality of TV programs has dropped sharply and there has been an increase in "unimaginative stereotyped programs which are little more than 'attention holders' for commercial advertising."

The SAG pointed out that its more than 16,000 members, actors and actresses in the motion picture and TV industries, are "deeply concerned when conditions arise . . . which impede the free competition essential to healthy economic life."

"As creative artists," it added, "they are also disturbed when they see their professional talents being dissipated in an abundance of inferior television programming."

Auto Union's Rolls Set Record at GM

Detroit—Auto Workers' membership in General Motors plants in the United States stood at 401,861 at the end of January—the highest mark since 1937, when the union first won bargaining rights.

UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock called the total "historic" and said it "emphasizes what movement toward a full employment economy can achieve."

UAW's overall membership total stands at 1.46 million, Woodcock reported. In January 1953, when the total was 1.6 million—an all-time high—its membership at GM numbered 325,000.

Maritime Trades Score Transportation Message

Pres. Johnson's "deeply disappointing" transportation message contains "glaring errors of omission" and "no shred of a new national maritime policy," the newly-created legislative committee of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. charged following its first meeting. The message, the committee said, "cannot be considered a substitute" for the maritime policy the President promised to submit to Congress when he gave his State of the Union Message 14 months ago and for which "we are still waiting."

The committee statement recalled that on June 17, 1964, Johnson set up a Maritime Advisory Committee to propose long-range solutions "for the increasing ills" of the industry. Instead of acting on the report, which included rebuilding the U.S. flag merchant marine to the point where it could carry 30 percent of the nation's commerce, the President in his new message passed it over, it said.

"All his transportation message suggests," the committee added, "is further studies of the maritime industry, which already has been studied almost to death."

The statement called Johnson's comments on safety at sea "totally inadequate" and urged legislation "forbidding any foreign-flag ship which fails to meet American safety standards from picking up passengers at any U.S. port."

Joint Bargaining's Promise

MODERN CORPORATIONS, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the eight-union conference planning coordinated bargaining with GE and Westinghouse this fall, are expanding into all forms of activity.

"Frequently," he said, "you cannot tell from the name of a company whether it makes paint or airplanes or electronics or underwear. And sometimes, it makes all of them."

To bargain effectively where multi-plant and multi-product companies exist, or where there has been historically more than one union, unions must be able to work together.

This is the promise and opportunity of the joint approach to bargaining with the major companies of the electrical industry. Meany noted the action of the recent AFL-CIO convention strongly supporting the eight-union approach, adding, "The delegates of the convention meant it, and we will not be found wanting."

THE NATIONAL Industrial Conference Board has come up with some figures indicating that the unit costs of building one-family homes increased very little, if at all, between 1955 and 1964.

The business research organization notes that in housing the cost indexes obscure "gains in construction productivity"; that of the 34 percent price rise for a one-family house in the 10-year period nearly half stems from higher land costs. The average number of rooms rose 12 percent and the number of square feet per home climbed 15 percent. "Thus," says the NICB, "higher prices do not necessarily imply higher unit costs."

What it comes down to is that increased efficiency in housing construction offset almost all of the increases in wages and benefits and that the higher land costs and bigger homes account for the higher prices.

The Administration might well do some research of its own before assailing "out-of-line" wage and benefit increases in the construction industry.

Justice Delayed . . .

LEGISLATION to give building trades workers the same basic economic rights enjoyed by workers in other industries has finally made its way to the House floor for a decisive vote.

Since a National Labor Relations Board decision in 1949, building trades unions have been restricted in their right to picket. Four presidents of the United States—Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson—have proposed that this discrimination be removed by adoption of what has become known as a situs picketing bill.

The House Rules Committee has cleared the measure for floor action. The bill has the long-term support of both Democrats and Republicans. It has the full and complete support of the AFL-CIO and all its affiliates and departments.

The time has come to correct this inequity and restore to building trades workers the rights denied them these many years.

Unions Doing Better Job Today, Survey of Members Reveals

Most members feel their union "is democratically managed and that the leadership is sensitive to their desires," the University of California's Institute of Industrial Relations discovered in a survey of union members' attitudes.

The study was conducted among East Bay, Calif., union members at the request of the Alameda County (Oakland) AFL-CIO with the cooperation of the central body, its member locals and the staff of the East Bay Labor Journal. It is reported in the Labor Dept.'s Monthly Labor Review. The survey was undertaken because union leaders were concerned about the attitudes and opinions of members who seldom attend meetings of their locals.

"A large majority of union members feel that unions are responsible for job security, have improved living standards, and are doing a better job now than five years ago," the report said. "Those members who are more active in their unions are more strongly of these opinions than those who are less active, and older workers are also more strongly of these opinions than younger workers. . . .

"Incidentally, those unions which have been most successful in obtaining economic benefits fell below average in the number of members indicating they felt their union was democratically managed."

Communication from the rank-and-file to the leadership appears to be no problem, the study suggested, but many members "indicated they do not know what is going on in their union." The uncertainty of leaders about the effectiveness of communication downward was one of the factors sparking the survey.

The researchers sent questionnaires to 2,139 members of 16 locals chosen from three groups ranked according to size. The results are based on two mailings. Slightly more than one-third of those in the sample replied, and a third mailing was sent to members of 11 locals who had not replied.

The returns showed:

- Older members attend union meetings most frequently, and the oldest attend twice as regularly as the youngest.
- Members with less education attend more often than those with more schooling, "but the differences between the lowest and highest groups are not very great."
- Those who go to meetings most often feel the membership is better informed about what is going on in the union than those who attend less frequently. A breakdown of the replies showed that 27.2 percent felt all members are "very well informed," 28.6 percent held that "over half are well informed," 36.8 percent said "only a few are well informed" and only 7.4 percent held that the leadership alone knows what's going on.
- Despite the concern of the leadership and the added fact that the Oakland area has been designated as "depressed," 48 percent of those who replied felt their jobs were not in any danger from automation, and another 24 percent "never really thought about it." Twenty-one percent felt their jobs were imperiled, and that their union "will probably not be able to protect" them. Seven percent felt the danger was there, but that their unions will protect them "adequately."

'Other Issues' Secondary

"The general conclusion might be drawn from the survey that member interest and support on a specific issue declines as the issue gets more abstract or further removed from the place of work," the report said.

"There seems to be a firm relation between what members want and what the leadership does in the 'bread-and-butter' areas, but on other issues—automation, support of candidates friendly to labor, and the like—much of the membership either does not understand or does not sympathize with the positions of the union and its leadership. On the other hand, those members who are more active in their unions—as measured by reported meeting attendance—are generally in accord with the union and its leadership on the broader issues."

On the "other issues," the survey disclosed:

- Most members, despite favorable attitudes toward unions generally and toward accomplishment in specific areas, feel dues are too high; those unhappy over their union's achievements in "bread-and-butter" areas "are in general more willing to have their dues raised."
- Most respondents must be "strongly motivated" before striking, with the more active members generally more willing to walk out under various hypothetical conditions than the less active.
- Half of those who replied felt unions have "just the right amount of power in society"; the rest are evenly divided between those who feel unions have too much power and those who think they haven't enough.
- Most members support union political activity and vote for endorsed candidates, but the returns "reflect considerable diversity" on political and social issues, and "only a very small fraction" reported participation in COPE.
- Many members, despite the policies of the AFL-CIO and most international unions, "continue to reflect community prejudices against Negroes."

"Those individuals who are active in their unions and those who have a stronger attachment to unionism," the report said, "are much less prejudiced than those who are not as active and those who are less sympathetic toward unionism."

Isn't It Time the Auto Industry Made Our Cars a Little Safer?

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

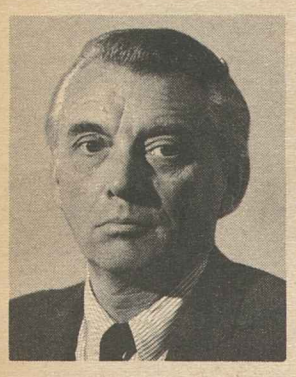
THE FAMILY CAR is, potentially at least, a murder weapon and the question before the House—and for that matter, the Senate—is: who is the guilty party? Though the testimony is not all in, the automobile manufacturers—by their actions and their neglect to act—have in large measure condemned themselves.



Morgan

As the House Commerce Committee opened hearings on the President's traffic safety legislation, several witnesses underscored the urgency of the problem. Rep. Leonor Sullivan (D-Mo.) pushed her own bill to require federal standards for tires. Another Democrat, Rep. John Mackay (Ga.), urged a National Traffic Safety Agency.

The Johnson Administration, with astonishing optimism, expects only minor opposition to its package including not only a $700 million, six-year traffic safety program but creation of a new cabinet post for transportation.

In any case, as far as safety is concerned, it may take far more federal pressure than currently conceived to get the motor car industry to act. For instance, if Detroit doesn't voluntarily adopt satisfactory safety provisions, the secretary of commerce would be authorized to prescribe mandatory standards but all this could take five years or more.

The industry's attitude toward the issue thus far has been both irresponsible and sinister. It has taken some half-way safety measures, but it argues the buying public isn't interested in safety as a sales point so why bring it up? Instead the answer is advertising which emphasizes power and speed. The industry's answer to the provocative book "Unsafe At Any Speed," detailing the designed-in dangers of the American car, has been harassment of the author, Ralph Nader.

General Motors has admitted inquiring into the "background" of Nader, the Justice Dept. is investigating his alleged intimidation, and GM has been invited by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.) to explain itself before his Senate subcommittee. Nader has already been a witness on Capitol Hill and some of his testimony and points in his book are well worth noting.

Safety, he argues, should be a built-in part of the car's quality, not an accessory. He describes the interior of today's car as "a room of knives." It would be cheaper, he insists, in the long run to build a well-padded instrument panel than to retool every model year so that more chrome or sharp edges can be added to the dash for sales appearance.

To Nader a key point is this: three of every four deaths or serious injuries in auto accidents occur at impact speeds under 45 miles per hour; yet it would be economical to build a car that would protect occupants at speeds over 50 miles an hour.

In "Unsafe At Any Speed," Nader severely criticizes manufacturers for not taking the lead in traffic and driving safety. According to figures produced by Mackay, for every person killed in a plane crash last year $100,000 was spent to discover the causes of air accidents. But in highway deaths, less than 5 cents per casualty was spent on traffic accident research.

The automotive giants, Nader charges, have infiltrated and so thoroughly dominate a White House committee on traffic safety that they have pretty well succeeded, up to now, in keeping the federal government out of the field, and in preserving undisturbed "the entrenched views of accidents and injuries as being due to driver behavior."

FURTHERMORE, Nader says, although taxpayers' dollars help support a crash injury research project at Cornell, now under the Cornell Aeronautical Laboratory, the research is available to the automobile industry but not to the public. The Public Health Service is entitled to the findings but, as one official put it, "What would we do with it?"

Last spring in a letter to the industry, Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther said the automobile excise tax cuts could be invested in anti-smog and other safety equipment and still leave enough margin to reduce the over-all price of cars. The industry was unimpressed and in view of action in Congress restoring the excise tax in stages, it will undoubtedly try to bury Reuther's argument for good.

In the ghastly arena of daily traffic slaughter, driver competence is admittedly a key element.

One wonders, however, where the manufacturers' responsibility to the public begins. Last year the New York legislature authorized $100,000 for preliminary designs of a "crash proof car." The experiment itself is estimated to cost $4 million. The federal government, apparently, is preparing to pick up the major portion of that tab.

Excuse me, but where does Detroit fit into this picture? If it is too much to expect an industry that is enjoying the highest production and highest profits in history to initiate a safety-car project on its own, must it be allowed to outfumble the taxpayers for even a piece of the check?

Repeated Offers Made:

FEC Rail Strike Prolonged As Company Balks Arbitration

MANAGEMENT'S refusal to arbitrate has forced the longest strike in the nation's railroad history into its fourth year, the chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association declared.

Despite the recommendations of four government agencies, the Florida East Coast Railway has rejected repeated offers from striking rail unions to arbitrate the questions that led to the walkout in January 1963, Pres. George E. Leighty of the Transportation-Communication Employes said on the nationwide radio interview, Labor News Conference.

Leighty said that even though the line continues to operate on a limited basis, "the entire east coast of Florida has been deprived of essential services." He pointed out that the FEC accepts only certain carload shipments, refuses less than carload lots and has dropped mail and express services. He said that the railroad "completely ignores" the fact that as a public utility it has obligations and responsibilities to the public and to its employes.

Returning the FEC to receivership, as the City of Miami and others have urged, would improve prospects for an early settlement of the strike, Leighty said. "I think that any receiver appointed would take a realistic view of the situation and work out an acceptable settlement of the dispute," he added.

LEIGHTY SAID that "realistic" labor-management relations, not changes in the Railway Labor Act, are the best way to avert major rail tie-ups.

"The emergency board method that has been in operation on the railroads for many years is probably as good a system as we have ever had," he noted, adding that "if the parties want to make it work, it will."

Reporters questioning him on the AFL-CIO-produced public service program, aired weekly over the Mutual radio network, were Alan Adams of McGraw-Hill publications and Stanley Chapman of Traffic World magazine.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

CALIFORNIA'S GOV. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown after a pleasant three-day visit in the nation's capital departed hastily for Los Angeles, where some 600 Negro rioters erupted for several hours in the battle-scarred Watts area that was the scene of last August's wreckage. The result: two dead, 26 injured, some arrests.

A Watts-type riot, common sense tells us, might occur in the ghettoes of other cities—as indeed it has done earlier in New York and Philadelphia, although with relatively less raging virulence, death and permanent destruction.

It is a fact, however, that what happens in Watts at any moment might have some bearing on California's gubernatorial election this year. Los Angeles Mayor Samuel H. Yorty, blaming the state government for failure to intervene promptly enough last August, is running against Brown in the Democratic primary. Brown, who is seeking a third consecutive term, seems untroubled by this challenge.

The Republicans have a primary contest, too, and the opinion surveys as of now indicate that former San Francisco Mayor George Christopher might beat Brown in November, that the TV entertainer Ronald Reagan would lose, but that Reagan is leading Christopher among Republican voters.

This suggests that everything is normal in California politics—to wit, confused.

BEFORE DEPARTING for Los Angeles and the new Watts crisis, Brown managed in one speech to say something about the value of the states in our federal system that was a refreshing departure from the usual cliches muttered by those who merely oppose federal programs and spending.

The state governments, declared Brown, are not universally lazy, greedy, inefficient and moribund as was charged in a recent magazine article, nor universally afraid to stand up to large private interests to provide adequate public protection.

Gov. Breathitt of Kentucky put through the "toughest regulations of strip-mining" in the country, Gov. Rockefeller of New York began a "bold program" on water pollution before the federal government moved, California itself challenged telephone rates before the Federal Communications Commission began showing interest, he said.

California again, he pointed out, required anti-smog devices on automobile exhausts before the federal government, New York challenged the safety standards of automobiles earlier than the federal government, and Wisconsin under then Gov. (now Sen.) Gaylord Nelson started a broad state park program without waiting for federal help.

California, he said, has asked the space industry's system engineers to work out possible solutions to problems in transportation, waste disposal, crime and public information.

BROWN'S LIST of progressive and imaginative governors, it may be observed, is rather brief. But it is a valid point that a state's proper business may be administered with responsibility.

Indeed, Brown's own record in expanding the college system, the highway system, the state services generally, is the strongest possible argument for his re-election. Presiding over a state with a literally exploding population—"nearly as large as Canada's," growing enough each year "to fill a city the size of New Orleans" —he is nationally recognized as having led it effectively.

He is shaking up the bureaucratic structure now to set up service centers in a dozen areas, where citizens can obtain information and help in the "full range of state services" instead of having "to apply for a job in one building and then travel across town to apply for training so he can take the job." The concept, Brown said, "grew out of the tragedy of Watts," disclosing that although vast sums were spent on public health, welfare, education and employment services in "tension areas," the state had failed to prevent such a tragedy.

ARBITRATION could end the nation's longest rail strike, George E. Leighty (center), chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, said on Labor News Conference, but the Florida East Coast Railway has rejected every such suggestion. He was questioned by Stanley Chapman (left) of Traffic World magazine and Alan Adams of McGraw-Hill publications on the AFL-CIO public affairs program.

How to Buy:

A Budget Can Help Save Money But Shouldn't Be a Straitjacket

By Sidney Margolius

SOME FAMILIES which think they have a system of handling money actually don't.

Many others shy away—they think a budget is a kind of financial straitjacket to keep them from spending or make them conform to other people's notions of how they should spend their money. Another fear is that a budget is time-consuming to keep.

None of these fears is fact. The only workable kind of budget is one that you plan with your family according to your own family's needs and goals, not one that follows somebody else's pattern. Nor need budgeting and record keeping be complicated. If it is, it defeats itself.

The real fact is that few moderate-income families can make financial progress without planning how they will spend their money, keeping a record to see how they do spend it, and making needed adjustments in the light of experience.

One of the most important ways a budget or "spending plan" can help a family, in this writer's opinion, is by setting aside each month money for appliance and car replacements and repairs, and medical care. This method will help save the finance charges that drain family income when you don't have the cash to pay for the inevitable replacements and repairs.

For example, with this article we show a sample budget for a family of four with income of $500 a month after income taxes.

Notice that this budget sets aside certain amounts for car expenses, furniture and repair, and medical care—the three big debt-makers. The months you don't actually use these allowances—they should go into savings accounts labeled for these specific purposes. If you already owe debts, your own budget would have to provide allowances for repaying these before you establish new allotments for reserves.

This particular budget is offered only as an example—and is not for imitating. We based these figures in part on the "modest but adequate" budget worked out by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics. However, we made several adjustments. These consisted mainly of trimming the food allowance down to $120 a month.

IF YOU HAVE comprehensive health insurance paid for by an employer, you may be able to trim the allowance for medical care.

First step in making up your own budget is to make a tentative plan of how you expect to spend your money. This is simply a rough estimate of your basic expenses, plus a family discussion of how much of the remainder to allot to special family goals, such as children's education, new appliances, etc.

While it is vital to keep a spending record at least for a while so you really know where your money is going, continuing to keep that record can be one of the most valuable tools at your command for financial advancement—if you use those records knowledgeably.

The way to use a spending record is to analyze it to see where you can cut down on unplanned spending. For example, compare this month's spending for food, utilities, etc., with previous months, with the same month a year ago, and so on. You'll discover a lot of leaks that way.

| | Monthly Cost* | Percent |
|---|---|---|
| Food and beverages | $120 | 24 |
| Housing, including heat, utilities, operating expenses | 120 | 24 |
| Home furnishings and repairs | 18 | 3.6 |
| Clothing and upkeep | 45 | 9 |
| Medical and health insurance | 34 | 6.8 |
| Transportation, including car | 47 | 9.4 |
| Reading, recreation | 21 | 4.2 |
| Personal care, barber, beauty | 12 | 2.4 |
| Gifts, contributions | 12 | 2.4 |
| Communications, job expenses, misc. | 35 | 7 |
| Life insurance, savings | 36 | 7.2 |

Claims Not Proven:

FDA Cracks Down On Ineffective Drugs

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT has taken broad action to remove from commerce a number of preparations that claim to be effective against sore throats—but aren't.

Antibiotic lozenges promoted for the treatment of sore throats and throat pains associated with coughs and colds and sold without prescription are being taken off the market—some immediately, some after a 30-day period in which legal objections can be made.

The Food & Drug Administration announced that such lozenges and many other antibiotic preparations have not proved effective. The agency based its announcements on the lack of any substantial medical evidence of effectiveness, despite up to 15 years' experience with the antibiotics.

Before the Kefauver-Harris Drug Amendments of 1962, the law required that preparations containing five antibiotics and their derivatives be given premarketing clearance by FDA on a batch-by-batch basis to prove safety and efficacy. (The five antibiotics: penicillin, streptomycin, chloretetracycline, chloramphenicol, and bacitracin.)

Other antibiotics were introduced to the market prior to 1962 through the new drug procedure. This required only that each preparation be shown to be safe before the firm started marketing.

The 1962 amendments, however, provided that all antibiotic products for human use be approved by FDA for both safety and efficacy and be subject thereafter to batch-by-batch certification.

The FDA estimates that its order will have an immediate effect on approximately 70 manufacturers of products in the so-called "me-too" category. In some instances there is only one product per manufacturer involved; others may have up to 10 products affected.

"Effective immediately, the FDA will no longer release for marketing any of these 'me-too' antibiotic products—prescription or non-prescription—for which we do not have substantial evidence of effectiveness," said FDA Commissioner James L. Goddard.

The FDA action covers all non-prescription antibiotic lozenges and some other over-the-counter antibiotic preparations. It also covers all pre-1962 antibiotics, both prescription and non-prescription, that came on the market without going through the batch certification or new drug procedures.

The agency also halted clearance of a number of antibiotic lozenges containing bacitracin, which were certified before Congress passed the Kefauver-Harris amendments.

If It's Silly Question—You Know What the Answer Will Be Like

By Jane Goodsell

Should auld acquaintance be forgot
And never brought to mind?

YES, MR. BURNS, it should. Having recently attended a high school class reunion, I feel particularly qualified to answer this question. Believe me, it's pretty upsetting to find out that Herbie Fenwick, the weebly little kid with the bad case of acne who could not remember his locker combination, is now a member of the New York Stock Exchange, drives an Alfa Romeo, owns five Picassos and recently spent a weekend at the LBJ ranch. It's maybe even worse to discover that the stout lady in the flowered hat who's president of her DAR chapter used to be Ginger Harney, queen of the Rose Festival.

If winter comes, can spring be far behind?

It sure can. If you're thinking of letting the oil supply for your furnace run low, Mr. Shelley, you'd better reconsider.

Did the harebell loose her girdle
To the lover bee?

Why, Miss Dickinson! What a question for a maiden lady to ask! I really haven't the faintest idea and, frankly, I don't think it's any concern of yours and mine. Live and let live is my motto.

Ah, why should life all labor be?

But, Mr. Tennyson, it isn't! Quite the opposite. Now, stop wringing your hands about imaginary problems and concentrate on the real area of concern: What are we all going to do with ourselves during the 30-hour work week when television palls?

Who is Sylvia, who is she
That all our swains commend her?

Darned if I know. Never heard of her. Are you sure you have the name right, Mr. Shakespeare? I'll admit that I don't know many swains, but I do try to keep up with what's going on. I often glance through Playboy at the corner drugstore, and my dentist subscribes to Esquire. So if Sylvia were the In girl you claim she is, how come I've never heard of her? Now, if you'd mentioned Elke or Romy or Baby Jane Holzer or Elizabeth or—

What men or gods are these? What maidens loth?
What mad pursuit? What struggle to escape?
What pipes and timbrels? What wild ecstasy?

Don't ask me, Mr. Keats! It's your party. The people I know usually play bridge after dinner.

Have you got a brook in your little heart
Where bashful flowers grow?

Oh, it's you again. Look, Miss Dickinson, why don't you just lie down for a while?

Constitutional Government:

ILO Sets Conditions On Aid for Rhodesia

Geneva—The Intl. Labor Organization has pledged all possible aid for the training of Rhodesians "of all races" when the present white-controlled rebel regime in Rhodesia has been replaced by a constitutional government.

At the same time the ILO decided to place before the United Nations as a "matter of urgency" the violations of human rights that have resulted in the arbitrary arrest and execution without trial of labor leaders in Burundi.

The ILO's Governing Body, or executive council, took the action concerning the two African states by unanimous decisions—of its 48 worker, government and employer delegates at a session just completed here.

The council said it would welcome active participation of Rhodesia in the U.N. specialized agency's work "as soon as a constitutional government pledged to upholding basic human rights and freedoms embodied in ILO standards has been established there." Last November the executive group denounced the government that proclaimed its independence from Britain as an "illegal regime" with which it refused to have any form of contact.

The aid now promised once a representative government has taken over in Rhodesia would be aimed at assisting Rhodesians irrespective of race to prepare for the "assumption of responsibilities in administration, industry and industrial relations."

Jean Moeri, leader of the workers group in the Governing Body, assailed the "barbarity" that was revealed in Burundi by complaints filed with the ILO's Freedom of Association committee. These detailed the slaying of four labor leaders, the execution of two others without trial and the jailing of additional trade unionists whose lives were similarly threatened.

The failure of the government of Burundi to reply to any of the numerous ILO requests for information concerning the complaints led to the decision to submit the issue to the UN Human Rights Commission.

ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse was instructed at the request of the workers to forward to the UN at the same time a report that would emphasize the Governing Body's "unanimity" in denouncing Burundi's conduct.

Rudolph Faupl of the Machinists, the spokesman for American labor at the ILO, urged the allotment of more funds for the work of the agency's industrial committees. These committees, Faupl said, often do the groundbreaking work that results in the drafting by the ILO's annual conferences of the labor and social standards that "now apply throughout the world."

"We workers will keep on emphasizing the need for more funds," he said, recalling that American labor had often succeeded in persuading the U.S. government to increase its ILO contributions.

The Governing Body set the 1967 ILO budget at $22,472,398, an increase of $2,134,527 over that of the current year. Final action on the budget will be taken at the annual June conference of the ILO's 115 member states.

Boston Press Walkout Enters Second Week

Boston, Mass.—The Boston newspaper strike went into its second week with the possibility of a speedy settlement regarded as dim, a mediator said.

The walkout was called by Typographical Local 13 and Mailers Local 1 against the Herald and the Traveler, the Morning and Evening Globe and the Record-American to enforce their position that improvements in a new contract be in the form of wage increases rather than as health and welfare benefits.

A mediation panel set up a meeting with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), Gov. John A. Volpe (R) and Mayor John F. Collins (D) to seek a way out of the impasse. Commissioner William Rose of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service said success was unlikely unless there is a change in the "adamant" position of the publishers and formation of "something like" a unity committee of all affected unions.

The newspapers have signed contracts with the Pressmen, Plate Handlers, Photoengravers, Drivers and Garage Mechanics on the basis of no pay hikes but $4.10 a week for last year and $4.20 for 1966 in health and welfare benefits. The Newspaper Guild settled for $7 in wage increases plus $1 to improve pensions. Negotiations are under way with the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Stereotypers, Machinists and Teamsters.

The striking unions, whose picket lines are being honored by members of the other unions, want $6 in cash in each year of a two-year agreement. The publishers insist that any money agreed upon for 1965 and 1966 be allocated to health and welfare claiming that to do otherwise would be to upset the actuarial basis of the plan, which was designed to cover all 11 mechanical unions.

Hotel Union Reaches Pact At Royal York

Toronto, Ont.—The Royal York Hotel, which forced the Hotel & Restaurant Employes into a bitter strike to avoid wage cuts and slashed standards, has signed its first contract with the union since the 11-month walkout was called off in April 1962.

The three-year agreement gives the union bargaining rights for nearly 1,200 employes, including more than 200 part-time workers, and provides three-stage wage increases of 10 cents an hour to those who get tips and 13 cents for others retroactive to Apr. 8, 1965. Present rates range from $1.15 for chambermaids and waiters to $1.80 for bartenders, with a few tradesmen getting $2.

The union restored the checkoff of union dues, and also the equivalent of 2 cents an hour this year and 1 cent in 1967 to eliminate wage inequities in some job classifications.

State Blue Cross Scored For Attack on Wage Floor

Birmingham, Ala.—Hospital care should not be subsidized by employes working for substandard and minimum wages, Pres. Barney Weeks of the Alabama AFL-CIO declared in protesting an Alabama Blue Cross-Blue Shield official's attack on minimum wage coverage for hospital workers.

"If there is any group of workers anywhere more sadly in need of minimum wage protection, or more richly deserving of this protection, than the miserably underpaid workers in hospitals, I certainly would like to locate them," Weeks wrote Pres. H. F. Singleton of the state Blue Cross-Blue Shield plans.

His protest was based on a speech by Joe Vance, state Blue Cross-Blue Shield vice president, at a hospital and nursing home food service conference at University, Ala. Vance said that a boost in minimum hospital pay to $1.40 an hour, as provided in legislation pending in Congress, would raise the price the average Alabama hospital patient has to pay by about $6 a day, and that "increasing the minimum wage increases inflation."

Weeks disputed both claims. Labor Dept. studies, he pointed out, "have found no sign of an inflationary trend due to increases in minimum wages." If a $1.40 per hour minimum wage would hike hospital costs by $6 a day, which he said he seriously doubted, it would be "to admit that these people are practically working for nothing now."

"I know of no organization in Alabama which has prospered more than yours because of the tremendous patronage you've received from members of organized labor," he wrote Singleton. "For that reason, I could not comprehend Blue Cross-Blue Shield adopting such a cruel and heartless position toward such a large segment of Alabama workers."

Reuther Asks Higher Social Security Base

Detroit—Top priority in the war on poverty should be given to complete revision of a social security system that chains millions of older Americans to a life of deprivation, Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther said here.

The first step toward giving older Americans "the dignity and security they deserve," said Reuther, "would be to raise the minimum social security benefit from $45 a month to $150.

"If we can afford to put a man on the moon," he told delegates to the annual meeting of the National Council on the Aging, "we can certainly afford to spend more than 3 percent of our national income on meeting the needs of retired Americans."

His speech followed the council's presentation to him of its Ollie A. Randall award for outstanding service to older people.

Reuther said the United States, as the richest nation in the world, spends less on supplemental payments to older people than any other democratic country. He said Sweden sets 4.6 percent of its national income aside for benefits to the aged; Switzerland, 4.7 percent; Italy, 5.1 percent; Denmark, 5.3 percent and Germany, 8 percent.

Gain 'Microscopic'

"The recent 7 percent increase in social security is microscopic," Reuther declared. "It merely offset the erosion of the cost-of-living."

To abolish the inequities of social security benefits that keep two-fifths of all older Americans in poverty and 30 percent in substandard housing, he recommended:

- A minimum monthly benefit of $150.
- Lifting the $6,600-a-year ceiling on credited earnings.
- Financing through general taxation.
- Reduction of the age level to provide benefits to workers displaced from jobs by automation and unable to compete for new jobs.
- Provisions for cost of living increases.

"We have built-in cost of living protection for the wages of workers," said Reuther. "Wouldn't it make more sense to protect the limited income of retirees?"

He also suggested government reinsurance of benefits for all private pension plans.

"Automation is putting thousands of small companies out of business," he said, and workers affected by these closings lose the equity they've built over the years."

Reuther also urged federal legislation requiring vesting of the worker's equity in all private pension plans. This, he said, would allow workers to move from one job to another and still maintain rights to their pensions.

"As it is," he observed, "many workers are chained to their jobs. They can't move to a better job for fear of throwing years of equity down the drain. This is inexcusable in a free society."

Rigid Use of 'Guidelines' Assailed by Rail Unions

The "wage guidepost" recommendations of the President's Council of Economic Advisers were attacked by a railway labor spokesman as unsound, unclear and out of line with other federal approaches to wage regulation.

Detailed criticism of the Administration's guidelines was made by Chairman George E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association in a statement filed with the Joint Economic Committee of Congress. The RLEA represents 22 railway labor unions.

Railroad workers are "particularly hurt" by the guidelines, Leighty declared, because their progress on pay and fringe benefits often is determined by the recommendations of special presidential emergency boards. These boards, he noted, at times seek to apply the guidelines without any consideration of the real equities.

As a result, he said, off-train workers—about two-thirds of all railroaders—have had "real wage increases from December 1958 to 1965 of 6.8 percent—almost exactly 1 percent a year."

During the same period, Leighty said, the productivity of railroad workers has risen 55 percent—approximately 7.5 percent a year—while rail labor costs per unit of output have dropped more than 20 percent. This has permitted the railroads to cut the price of their freight service an average of 12 percent while boosting their net profits by 33 percent, he declared.

Wage Inequity

Reporting that rail unions are now in the process of shaping new pay requests, Leighty said "every factor in the economic condition of the railway industry—its declining labor cost, its extremely high rate of increase in man-hour productivity, its growth, and its reduced price to the shipping public—supports the wisdom" of correcting the "gross inequity" in wage treatment of its employes.

The rail spokesman, who is president of the Transportation-Communication Employes, called it "manifestly unfair that presidential emergency boards, and other agencies and officials, should so interpret the 'wage guideposts' as to deny the just requests of railway workers."

IAM Reports Deadlock in Airline Talks

The Machinists, charging five airlines with stalling for five months on negotiations, have notified the National Mediation Board that efforts to settle the dispute have failed.

Union negotiators asked the NMB for a "proffer of arbitration." If either side in the dispute refuses arbitration, further action may be taken after a 30-day waiting period required by the Railway Labor Act.

The IAM represents 34,000 mechanics and other ground personnel employed by Eastern, National, Northwest, Trans World and United airlines. Members previously voted overwhelmingly to strike if necessary to win a fair industrywide settlement.

The union and the airlines agreed last August to conduct joint negotiations, the first in airline history. Union negotiators gave eight proposals on wages, pensions and other contract subjects but company spokesmen "consistently refused" to submit a comprehensive counteroffer, according to IAM Vice Pres. Joseph W. Ramsey. Two last-minute offers were "hardly worthy of consideration" as a sincere counterproposal, he said.

Each of the five lines involved broke all profit records in 1965, according to the union—nearly $200 million after taxes, with another record-breaking year predicted for 1966.

Odell Leaves UAW For Federal Post

Detroit—Charles E. Odell, since 1957 director of the Auto Workers Older & Retired Workers Dept., has resigned to return to the federal service as special assistant to the director of the U.S. Employment Service for services to disadvantaged workers.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, accepting the resignation with regret, praised Odell for contributing "immeasurably to improving the economic and social position of UAW retirees," and said his "personal commitment and dedication were of particular significance" in winning the medicare fight.

NATIONAL LEGISLATION to improve the lot of domestic farm workers was urged before the Senate Subcommittee on Migratory Labor at a hearing in Sacramento, Calif., by California AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. J.), the subcommittee chairman.

Stiffer U. S. Drive Set On School, Hospital Bias

The government has stepped up its drive for desegregation of schools, hospitals and nursing homes receiving federal financial aid.

New and stricter antidiscrimination guidelines were announced by the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare. Violation of the guidelines means a cutoff of federal aid under Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Southern school districts which have achieved only token desegregation under "freedom of choice" plans allowing students to transfer to any school were warned that they must make "significant progress in eliminating the dual school pattern." In addition the free choice system will be allowed only where there is assurance "that students and parents can choose in safety and without fear of reprisal."

For the first time, the government will require desegregation of teaching staffs, with at least some Negroes teaching in previously all-white schools and white teachers at predominantly Negro schools. Discrimination in hiring, firing, promotion and tenure are specifically barred. All school-related programs, including extra-curricular activities, must be non-discriminatory.

In a letter to hospital administrators, U.S. Surgeon Gen. William H. Stewart served notice that federal aid will be given only to institutions which assign patients to all rooms and facilities without regard to race and which do not discriminate in hiring of staff and in granting staff privileges to private physicians. Hospitals will be required to report the racial makeup of their physicians and patients.

AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Donald Slaiman praised the new Health, Education & Welfare guidelines as "welcome moves." He noted that the federation's Executive Council at its recent meeting had urged "more efficient enforcement" of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act "to insure that equality under the law and equal opportunity become fully realized."

U.S. Education Commissioner Harold Howe 2nd told newsmen he expected the new guidelines to double the amount of school integration in the South. He said his agency would continue to concentrate for at least another year on breaking down the formal pattern of dual school systems in southern and some border states as contrasted to the "de facto" neighborhood segregation pattern in many northern cities.

He came under sharp criticism from Chairman Adam C. Powell of the House Education & Labor Committee who complained that the guidelines are "totally inadequate" to bring racial integration of northern schools.

Meany Lauds Dubinsky As 'Warm, Good Friend'

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany issued the following statement:

David Dubinsky has been my warm and good friend throughout nearly all my life in the trade union movement. Those are the words—warm, good, friend—that I think best describe this unusual man.

All his life has been devoted to helping people and he has approached every opportunity with an eagerness to do good that has been contagious.

No one, I suppose, will ever completely tabulate all the good that David Dubinsky achieved in his lifetime and he would be the first to say no one should try. For it was the deed that always counted with him, not the plaudits.

I am positive that David Dubinsky will never retire from the field he chose in his youth—the trade union movement, the brotherhood of workers dedicated to helping themselves by helping each other. David Dubinsky does not need the title of president of the ILGWU to make his impression on the trade union movement and on America. Even without it, there will be a "D.D." stamp on the future of American labor.

Social Legislation Coverage Urged:

Unionization Called Answer To Plight of Farm Workers

Sacramento, Calif.—Union spokesmen joined in an urgent call for federal legislation to bring the farm worker into "the mainstream of American economic life" and relieve his "deplorable economic and social plight."

Dramatic evidence of the urgency was added by leaders of the 6-months-old strike of vineyard workers in the Delano area in California's fertile San Joaquin Valley.

Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D) added his support to five bills now before Congress on which the Senate Subcommittee on Migratory Labor opened three days of hearings in the state.

The bills would bring farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act and the Fair Labor Standards Act, stiffen child labor restrictions, and create a new system of farm labor recruitment and a National Advisory Commission on Migratory Workers.

Speaking for AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Dir. of Organization William F. Kircher endorsed all five measures.

Collective bargaining, Kircher told the subcommittee, offers the best machinery to deal effectively with the problems of both worker and employer. The whole point, he said, is that the solutions are best developed by the people who have the problems.

Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts of the California AFL-CIO argued that farm workers "are likely to remain second-class citizens in an affluent economy unless the social and economic legislation applicable to most of the nation's workers is extended to them."

In endorsing the five bills, Brown declared that "we cannot put off forever what must be done to correct the deplorable economic and social plight of many of our farm workers" and to relieve their "abject poverty."

Kircher told the subcommittee that present government policy makes the strike "an inextricable component" of agricultural workers' efforts to achieve collective bargaining status.

The agricultural worker today is in a somewhat similar position with regard to his organizational and collective bargaining rights as were factory workers 35 years ago," he said. "Agricultural employers likewise are in the same position as were the factory employers of those days prior to passage of the Wagner Act.

"The use, in those days, of such devices as the 'yellow-dog contract,' 'blacklist' and 'labor spies' is a well-established fact. Similar practices, more subtle but just as diabolical in nature, exist today in the agricultural industry. They exist for the same purposes. They are made possible by the same kind of legislative vacuum."

What Congress has to decide, Kircher said, is whether two citizens living side by side, paying the same taxes and subject to the same requirements of law, "become different classes of citizens with respect to the application of the national labor policy simply because when they go to work one walks through the door of a winery to process grapes while the other remains outside in the fields to pick them."

He warned that no group of people bound together by common problems "is going to accept exclusion from the greater society," and predicted that farm workers "are going to pursue their right to organize." He said:

"The only question is — are they going to do it within the framework of a system that provides an orderly, logical, reasonable means of demonstrating their organizing desire, or are they going to have to demonstrate their determination by direct action that of necessity means interruption of the agricultural process? Are we going to encourage agricultural stability . . . or encourage conflict and strife?"

The subcommittee also got a close-up look—to be amplified in subsequent hearings—at a case history of the need for extending social legislation to the farm worker.

Delano Report

C. Al Green, director of the AFL-CIO Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee, and Larry Itliong, AWOC business representative, gave a first-hand report on the Delano vineyard strike.

Itliong told how AWOC, representing thousands of workers in the grape harvest, asked for meetings with the growers and how their refusal to negotiate left the workers no alternative but to strike.

Cesar Chavez, general director of the unofficial Farm Workers Association which also represents many workers involved in the Delano strike, put their demands simply: "What the farm workers in our country are asking for is equality. . . ."

Dubinsky Announces His Retirement After 34 Years as ILG President

the 74-year-old labor leader to the ILGWU executive board at its regular semi-annual meeting in the Americana Hotel here.

In the letter dated Mar. 16, Dubinsky said that he had considering retiring shortly before the union's 1959 convention. However, he had felt that a number of problems then developing required his continued attention "irrespective of my personal needs and wishes."

Since then, the letter explained, the ILGWU has dealt successfully with an anti-trust charge, the merging of its retirement funds, the divisive effects of a union-within-the-union and an unfounded charge of discrimination.

"I feel justified in turning again to personal considerations," Dubinsky told the board.

He was born in Brest-Litovsk, Poland, on Feb. 22, 1892. At 15 he became a master baker and was elected assistant secretary of the bakers' union. At 16 he was arrested for union activity, imprisoned, sent off to Siberia, managed to escape and make his way back to Russian Poland and to set off for the United States, where he landed in New York City on Jan. 2, 1911.

During the first five months in his new homeland he worked as dishwasher, knee-pants operator, buttonhole maker. Then in June 1911 he joined Cutters' Local 10, ILGWU. By 1918 he was a member of its governing board and had begun his rise up the leadership ladder, becoming in turn, president of the local in 1920, vice president of the ILGWU in 1922, secretary-treasurer of the ILGWU in 1929, president of the ILGWU in 1932, vice president of the former AFL in 1934 and a founder of the AFL-CIO in 1955.

The half century of his union service has been rich in incident and purpose. In the mid-Twenties he led in beating back the Communist attempt to seize control of the ILGWU. In the Thirties he directed the rebirth of the garment union, rebuilding its membership from 25,000 to 200,000 in one year and reestablishing it on a sound financial basis. In the same decade, he championed industrial organization in the AFL, led the Garment Workers out of the federation, then returned in 1940 with an AFL commitment to encourage organization and to fight racketeering.

DAVID DUBINSKY

After World War II, as a representative of the AFL, he helped found the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at meetings in London in 1948 and 1949, in opposition to the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

In the Fifties, as a member of the AFL Executive Council, he strove for clean unionism, for the reunification of the organized labor movement and the formulation of a code of ethical practices. He broke tradition by being the first to support legislation involving the government's power to investigate unions and to safeguard their growing welfare funds.

Under his guidance the ILGWU has made many notable gains. These include the first industry agreement to provide for a 35-hour work week (1933), the first industry agreement to set up an employer-financed pooled fund for workers' vacations (1937), health and welfare funds (starting in 1938), retirement funds (1943), severance pay (1950).

He launched a fleet of mobile health clinics; was the first to publish a public union financial report which won high praise from Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt; set up the first union engineering department; the first union political department; initiated vast housing and redevelopment programs with fund reserves; and fought tirelessly for higher minimum wages.

Coverage Broadened:

House Panel OK's Higher Wage Floor

step measure approved by the Labor Committee last year which would have brought the minimum to $1.40, $1.60 and $1.75, but which was blocked in the House Rules Committee.

As has been the case under previous wage-hour legislation, there will be a time lag before newly-covered workers reach the level of those already covered.

With the exception of the farm workers, those newly covered will begin with $1 an hour and advance in annual steps of 15 cents to reach the $1.60 level on Feb. 1, 1971. Those covered by the hours ceiling for the first time must be paid overtime rates after 44 hours the first year of the law, after 42 hours the second year, and after 40 hours the third year. Farm, hotel and restaurant workers and transit drivers are not covered by an hours ceiling.

Here's how some of the major occupational groups would fare under the subcommittee bill:

Retail Employes: Coverage is extended to 1.5 million additional workers in two stages. Presently coverage is limited to employes of an enterprise with sales of $1 million a year who work in a store doing at least $250,000 worth of business. (Thus an employe in a branch store of a large chain may be covered even though employes in a similar-size independent store are excluded.) On Feb. 1, 1967, the sales test for a covered enterprise drops to $500,000 and two years later to $250,000.

Hospital Workers: All employes of hospitals and nursing homes, including state and local government institutions, would be covered for the first time—more than 1.4 million.

Construction: All construction workers would be included, adding 580,000 to those now covered. Present law excludes employes of firms doing less than $350,000 a year business.

Restaurant, Hotel: Some 425,000 restaurant workers and 275,000 hotel and motel employes would be covered for the first time, although for wages only. An elaborate formula deals with tipped employes, defined as those who regularly receive more than $20 a month in tips. For the first two years the law is in effect, the employer can pay a worker 65 percent of the minimum wage—if his tips make up the difference. The third and fourth year (as the minimum wage goes up) the amount the employer must pay is 60 percent, and thereafter 55 percent. However a worker who contends that his tips plus pay do not equal the minimum wage may appeal individually or through his union to the secretary of labor.

Laundry: All workers, would be covered, adding about 500,000 to the 18,000 now covered.

Transit and Taxi: Wage coverage would be extended to all local transit systems, including previously exempt non-profit systems, and for the first time to taxi employes. Drivers remain excluded from overtime requirements, but maintenance and clerical employes are covered for hours.

Canneries & Agricultural Processing: An additional 90,000 workers are covered and previous overtime exemptions for seasonal industries are reduced. Previously employes could be worked up to 12 hours a day and 56 hours a week without overtime for 28 weeks out of the year. This is reduced to 14 weeks and the straight-time limit comes down to 10 hours a day and 48 hours a week.

Logging: Logging crews of 12 or under had been exempt; the bill would drop this cutoff size to 8.

Agriculture: The nation's first coverage of farm workers would protect an estimated 485,000 persons on large farm operations. The minimum wage would go from $1 the first year to $1.15 the second year and $1.30 thereafter.

Puerto Rico: Persons already covered by industry wage board rates would have their minimums raised 12 percent the first year and 16 percent the second year. Rates for newly-covered workers would be set by wage boards.

Strike Right Defended For Public Employes

Chicago—"Without the right to strike, there can be no true collective bargaining for public employes," Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes told 100 participants at a two-day conference on Public Employment and Collective Bargaining at the University of Chicago's Center for Continuing Education.

Wurf said no-strike clauses are unacceptable to his union because "if you eliminate the freedom of employer and employe, you are tampering with the basic premises of our society."

He criticized the daily press for attacking the rights of the American Federation of Teachers to press for bargaining elections and to strike in disputes with school boards. But, he said, the hostility of the press will not stop unions from seeking "first-class citizenship for public employes."

Wurf said the United States is behind all other nations of the Free World in unionization of government employes, although the late Pres. Kennedy's executive order supporting collective bargaining for federal workers is helping the U.S. catch up. Bargaining rights also have been won for public employes in a few states where reapportionment has brought a shift in attitudes of the the legislatures, he told the conference.

Wurf supported fact-finding by a third party in public employe disputes, but he said compulsory arbitration has been one-sided against labor.

Assistant Sec. of Labor James J. Reynolds argued that public employes should not strike, but said a method should be established to settle their disputes.

"When an impasse is reached in bargaining, and there is no right to strike, fact-finding and referral to higher authority should be used to a greater extent," he said.

Ida Klaus, director of staff relations for the New York City Board of Education, said gains for public employes scored through collective bargaining have made the public service more attractive. She declared that rising expectations among government workers are exerting pressure for affirmative rights for public employe unions, not just tolerance of these organizations.

Mrs. Klaus also took the view that public policy is against strikes by government workers, but that public bodies will have to devise methods of averting them.

Robert G. Howlett, chairman of the Michigan Labor Mediation Board, said that public employers must recognize that government workers have the same desires for better wages, hours and working conditions as workers in private industry. For their part, he said, public employes must recognize their responsibilities as citizens as well as workers.

Indiana Court Upholds State Rail Crew Law

Indianapolis—Indiana's safe crew law setting minimum train crew sizes was upheld by the State Supreme Court in a 3-0 decision reversing a lower court.

The decision, according to the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, will mean restoration of more than 600 fireman and brakeman jobs on 16 railroads operating in Indiana. The positions were left vacant while the railroads sought a court ruling that the full crew law conflicted with the 1964 award on train crew sizes by an arbitration board set up by Congress. A Superior Court judge agreed with the carriers and enjoined the Indiana Public Service Commission from enforcing the state law.

The full crew law requires the use of five-man crews as well as an extra brakeman on 70-car trains.

The appeal had been pressed by the BLF&E and the Railway Conductors & Brakemen, unaffiliated. BLF&E Pres. H. E. Gilbert said the ruling was the fifth victory in a row in his union's fight to preserve the right of states to set safety standards on the rails.

Previous verdicts upholding similar state laws were won in the U.S. Supreme Court and the Wisconsin courts, and harmful changes were fought off in the New York and Ohio legislatures, Gilbert said.

Ogar Joins Staff Of UAW Paper

Detroit—Thaddeus (Ted) Ogar has resigned as editor of the Michigan AFL-CIO News to become news editor of Solidarity, the Auto Workers' newspaper. His successor as editor of the State AFL-CIO's weekly paper is Aldo Vagnozzi, previously its managing editor.

Ogar, a former education director and editor for UAW Local 174, edited the Michigan AFL-CIO News and its predecessor paper since 1947.

'Little Evidence' Found Of Manpower Shortage

While "there is little evidence of general shortage" of manpower at present, a long-range solution to tightening labor supplies lies in the greater utilization of employed workers, according to a Labor Dept. report.

The report, "The Unemployed in a Tightening Labor Market," was included in the department's detailed job report for February. It said there are indications of developing labor stringencies in a few industries and areas, but no general shortage.

The report, which described the characteristics of the unemployed in February 1966, emphasized the need for greater eflorts to match the unemployed with available jobs. It pointed to evidence of workers being upgraded from unskilled to semi-skilled jobs and said this was the most practical way of meeting potential labor shortages.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, in a separate development, declared it was "cockeyed" to worry that the jobless rate was getting too low.

Wirtz said the decline of the rate to 3.7 percent in February contributed to a tighter manpower situation. But, he added, proper training could meet that problem. He expressed the view that full employment would not be reached until the rate fell to "about 2.5 percent."

The Labor Dept. report made these key points:

- The unemployed are not without skills or significant work experience. Some 2.6 million jobless were seeking full-time work in February and all but 200,000 could show previous full-time job experience.
- Very few of the unemployed in the present tightening market are "hard-core" or unemployable. This is indicated by the sharp decline in the proportion of long-term unemployed.
- About a third of the unemployed are adult men seeking full-time work, aside from those on seasonal layoff.
- Additional sources of labor will come from new entrants into the work force. The labor force will rise by 1.6 million over the year, about 300,000 more than expected. These 300,000 will be made up mainly of women and teenagers drawn into the labor force by abundant job opportunities.

Training Director Named by LPIU

New York—Pres. Kenneth J. Brown of the Lithographers & Photoengravers has announced the appointment of Business Rep. William A. Schroeder of Chicago Local 4L as director of the program of training and retraining the members authorized in a referendum last fall.

Schroeder has been a member of Local 4L since 1936 and while serving as special assistant to Brown in 1964 made a comprehensive study of the growth of web offset. Since last June he has been conducting another study for the international. In his new post he will develop training and retraining courses for each craft, and administer them. The program is financed by a 25-cent monthly per capita payment.

Congress Urged to Spur Group Medical Practice

The growth of group medical practice in response to technical advances is "so important" in the efficient utilization of medical manpower and the providing high-quality medical care that every effort should be made to stimulate an even faster rate of growth, AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. James F. Doherty told the House Subcommittee on Housing.

Doherty testified in support of proposed amendments to the National Housing Act to provide mortgage insurance and direct government loans for construction and equipment of group practice medical and dental facilities.

Enactment of the bill he declared, "will significantly help to lower the cost and to raise the quality of medical care." With the effective date of medicare there will be "tremendous pressure" on medical services, he predicted, as millions of senior citizens for the first time will be able to afford the care they need. He listed some of the advantages of group practice, particularly when it is on a prepaid basis, to show the efficiency with which it operates.

"Quite literally, the consumer pays so much per month to the medical group to keep him well," Doherty said. "Under this type of arrangement, the medical group has an incentive to practice preventive medicine because the patient who becomes sick becomes the financial as well as the medical responsibility of the prepaid health plan."

In the typical sickness insurance plan, he noted in contrast, early diagnosis and treatment are "effectively deterred" through the use of "deductibles and co-insurance."

In view of the many advantages, Doherty said, the AFL-CIO believes the objective of the bill, to assure the availability of credit for group practice plans, "deserves wholehearted support."

Should Do More

"In fact, we believe Congress should do much more to promote the growth of more rational methods of organizing health service," he added.

"Therefore, we ask specifically that Congress soon give consideration to the need for additional support and encouragement for group practice prepayment plans through grants-in-aid for construction of necessary facilities and initial staffing similar to the Community Mental Health Centers Act as amended in the 1965 session."

American Medical Association opposition to Patman's bill was expressed by Dr. Harvey Renger of Hallettsville, Tex. He called government financing for group practice clinics "discriminatory . . . unnecessary . . . and unwarranted."

To Counter Inflation:

Investment Tax Aid Suspension Urged

An immediate suspension of the 7 percent investment credit and a stand-by tax program were urged by the Democratic majority of the Joint Congressional Economic Committee to keep the nation's economy on an even keel.

The recommendations came in the committee's report on the President's Economic Report to Congress. They called also for revision of the tax laws including possible increases in personal exemptions to eliminate taxation of low-income families.

The report was released with a statement from Rep. Wright Patman (D-Tex.), chairman of the joint committee, and Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), ranking minority member, that greater reliance should be placed on fiscal policies to meet "inflationary pressures" and that the wage-price guidelines, "while useful," cannot be a substitute for sound fiscal and monetary policies in the maintenance of a stable price level.

Noting the areas of agreement, the statement added that there are significant "differences in our estimates of the degree and character of the actions that are now needed as, for example, to deal with the inflationary danger."

The investment tax credit, adopted during the Kennedy Administration to spur expansion of new plant and equipment, gives firms a credit of 7 percent if they invest certain sums in this area. The majority said there was an "extraordinary exuberance" in investment programs and that "this is one of the major inflationary threats of this year."

Tax Credit Action

It urged action to put the tax credit back on the books at a "fixed future date" unless Congress acts to extend the suspension.

The AFL-CIO has urged similar action coupled with possible increases in the corporate tax rate and/or the adoption of an excess profits tax.

On the stand-by tax program, the committee majority urged immediate enactment with the provision that the program go into effect with adoption by Congress of a joint resolution and Presidential approval.

The majority views pointed to shortcomings in the handling of government monetary policy and the need for selective credit measures such as restraints on consumer credit. They opposed lifting the long-standing 4.25 percent ceiling on interest rates for long-term government bonds.

The majority said there were good possibilities that the economy will go beyond the $722 billion gross national product projected for 1966 and that there are "signs that price pressures may prove stronger than the Administration expected."

If its recommendations are adopted, the majority said, there should be "ample room to find adequate funds for the new programs for our least fortunate citizens. . . ." The burdens of the Viet Nam war should not be placed "on those least able to bear them. . . . We cannot in good conscience ask the poor, the sick, the aged, the infirm, nor the discriminated against, to carry the major burdens of preventing inflation. . . ."

On wage-price policies, the majority suggested a continuing review of Administration guidelines, possibly by a congressional committee, and requirements for advance reports of wage and price decisions on a selective basis.

It recommended that Congress enact at the current session amendments to the wage-hour law extending its coverage "to as much of the labor force as possible and provide for planned raising of the minimum wage toward a level of health and decency over the next several years."

The Republican minority report stressed "speculative excesses" and an emerging "inflationary psychology" that could lead to a recession next year in the absence of anti-inflationary action by the Administration. It urged deferral of "non-essential and low priority" civilian spending and warned a tax increase would be necessary if the Administration did not curtail spending.

They urged the lifting of the interest rate ceiling on long-term government bonds and said the "selective, arbitrary and punitive enforcement" of wage-price guidelines would be "inequitable and damaging to our economic system."

The minority warned also that "careful consideration should be given to the possible inflationary impact of pending legislation to increase the minimum wage."

Nine Democrats signed the majority report with supplemental views filed by Senators William Proxmire (D-Wis.) and Herman E. Talmadge (D-Ga.), Sen. J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.) did not participate. All six Republicans on the committee signed the minority report with Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R-Mo.) filing supplemental views.

Arnold Mayer Named To Rural Advisory Unit

Legislative Dir. Arnold Mayer of the Meat Cutters has been appointed to the National Advisory Committee on Rural Development by Sec. of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman.

Mayer has worked for farm labor reform, consumer protection, minimum wage, civil rights and other social legislation.

PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT SERVICE should be wholly federalized, AFL-CIO spokesmen told a joint House-Senate hearing. Shown, left to right, are Chairman Elmer J. Holland of House subcommittee engaged in joint hearings, Federation Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, Research Dir. Nat Goldfinger, and Raymond Munts, acting director of the Dept. of Social Security.

Federalized Employment Service Held Vital to Manpower Program

The AFL-CIO asked Congress to federalize the public employment service rather than merely "paper over the weak spots" of the present network of 50 state-operated agencies.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told a joint House-Senate hearing that an Administration bill to improve the existing program with only minor changes in the federal-state relationship "leaves much to be desired—too much to warrant our support."

He said "it makes little sense to talk about national manpower policies in a highly-integrated, mobile and national economy, and then to turn over to the 50 individual states the major role in the operation of the program."

Much closer to labor's goal, Biemiller said, is the bill introduced by the chairmen of the two subcommittees conducting the joint hearing—Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) and Rep. Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.).

The Clark-Holland bill would make the secretary of labor responsible for operation of manpower service centers throughout the nation. He would be authorized to contract out the operation of the centers to state agencies under specific federal standards, with the right to withhold funds for any portion of the state operation which does not meet such standards.

Biemiller stressed that labor has for many years urged federalization of the employment service as the key to meaningful improvement. The same view has been expressed by many outside the labor movement, he noted, most recently in the recommendations of the National Commission on Technology, Automation & Economic Progress.

Contracting Out

The AFL-CIO objects "strenuously" to a provision of the Administration bill which would allow states, with the approval of the secretary of labor, to contract out part of their placement services to private employment agencies, Biemiller declared.

"The placement activity of the public employment service," he said, "belongs in the public employment service, and no place else. . . . This is an issue we do not take lightly."

The Clark-Holland bill permits contracting out of some functions at the initiative of the secretary of labor—when states are unable or unwilling to do the necessary job. But even there, Biemiller said, contracting should be limited to non-profit agencies.

He cited the inadequacy of state regulation of private, fee-charging agencies and test surveys which showed that more than 90 percent of private employment agencies in six cities accepted discriminatory job orders—even though each of the states had anti-discrimination statutes on its books.

"We do not think such performance merits consideration as potential government contractors," he said.

Biemiller welcomed provisions in both bills designed to separate the employment service operations from activities relating to unemployment insurance.

Combination of the two operations, he said, "has led so often to the public employment office being characterized as 'the unemployment office.' With such an image, it is not at all surprising that the service has had difficulty attracting more clients—from among workers or employers—for the more-skilled positions."

Both programs are "essential," Biemiller stressed, but are "different programs." While the Administration bill would assure that the two offices are physically separate, the Clark-Holland provision to create a separate Bureau of Manpower Services to administer the employment program was deemed superior.

In one area, he said, the Administration bill is better. It more explicitly forbids referral of workers to jobs or training at firms where there is a strike or lockout.

He urged that any legislation also provide relocation allowances for workers referred to jobs in other areas of the country and asked that broad-based advisory committees be established in every state and labor market area.

Speaking for relocation allowances—not provided by either bill—Biemiller said a worker's willingness to take a job at a distant place "is to society's advantage, and we believe that society ought to be willing to share some of the financial burdens."

Building Trades Parley To Press Picketing Bill

B. Long (D-La.); Representatives Carlton R. Sickles (D-Md.), William H. Ayres (R-O.) and Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.); Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Under Sec. John F. Henning and Labor Dept. Solicitor Charles Donahue; AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, and BCTD Counsel Louis Sherman.

Site Picketing Moves

The jobsite picketing bill moves to the House floor with an impressive array of bipartisan endorsements, including Presidents Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson and the secretaries of labor during their Administrations.

Intent of the legislation is to nullify a 1949 National Labor Relations Board ruling, known as the Denver Building Trades Case, which found picketing of a subcontractor at a common construction site to be a violation of the Taft-Hartley Act's ban on secondary boycotts. Sponsors of corrective legislation over the years have included such disparate figures as then-Senators John F. Kennedy and Barry Goldwater.

The Associated General Contractors and other employer groups have launched an all-out fight to defeat the jobsite picketing bill. In addition, Rep. Charles E. Goodell (R.-N.Y.), who says he supports "the general purpose of the legislation," announced he will seek to substitute a bill which would qualify picketing rights at construction sites.

Among other things, the Goodell substitute would prohibit picketing a contractor whose principal business is not construction. It would also make the National Labor Relations Board a judge of whether unions are in violation of the Civil Rights Act ban on racial discrimination—a function vested by law in the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission and the courts.

The AFL-CIO convention last December declared labor's "complete and undivided support" for the situs picketing bill "to grant the long-delayed relief to which building and construction workers are entitled."

Delegates to the BCTD conference, representing 3.5 million members of 18 affiliated unions, will also press for congressional action to improve the wage-hour law, strengthen unemployment compensation, extend coverage of the Davis-Bacon Act, strengthen civil rights, expand public works, housing and school programs.

Rabbi Adler Dies; Headed UAW Panel

Detroit—Rabbi Morris Adler, chairman of the Auto Workers Public Review Board since its establishment in 1957 and one of the country's outstanding Jewish leaders, died in a Detroit hospital a month after being shot during a service in his synagogue.

His assailant was Richard Wishnetsky, 23, a scholar whose writings revealed a brilliant but twisted mind, who then shot himself. Rabbi Adler, 59, underwent two brain operations but never regained consciousness.

"Rabbi Adler was that rare and beloved human being who represented a successful synthesis between the idealist and the realist," said UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a statement mourning his death. "He walked in quiet nobility as a man among men. His good works will live long after him. And we who grieve for him are better for having shared his friendship, his compassion and his affection."

Meany Spurs COPE Drive To Aid Bipartisan Liberals

4,000 at Parley:

Crafts Push Fight For Site Picketing

By David L. Perlman

More than 4,000 building trades leaders from all parts of the nation spearheaded a drive for passage this year of the on-site picketing bill and other major legislative goals.

At a four-day legislative conference of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., they heard their program strongly supported by top Administration officials and by congressmen and senators from both parties.

The delegates talked as well as listened, calling on members of Congress from their home states to urge support also for such key bills as minimum wage expansion and unemployment compensation improvements.

Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey picked up the theme of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's keynote to the conference—that labor should support its friends in Congress to the hilt regardless of party label, and oppose those who vote against its programs.

"I'll buy that any day," said Humphrey. "That's good doctrine." Later, speaking of the drive to pass the site picketing bill, the Vice President commented:

"If the word gets around that you're going to remember your friends and not forget your enemies, I have the feeling that there will be a great spiritual revival amongst the brethren."

"Support COPE," he said. It's doing a "great job."

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz told the delegates "it is long past time" to correct the Taft-Hartley Act "so that it recognizes that the right to picket peacefully applies equally at a construction site, as it does wherever else there is a labor dispute."

The secondary boycott ban in the Taft-Hartley Act has been held to prohibit picketing at a multi-em-

Wage Bill Held Vital Rights Aid

Seven prominent civil rights leaders termed the wage-hour bill approved by the House Education & Labor Committee "a significant step toward bettering the economic lot of millions of Americans" and the most "crucial" civil rights issue before Congress.

The committee bill, which picked up bipartisan sponsorship, would raise the minimum wage in steps to a top of $1.60 and extend coverage to seven million additional workers.

The civil rights leaders said they were not speaking only on behalf of Negro workers.

"A living wage should be the right of all working Americans and this is what we wish to urge upon our congressmen and senators," they declared.

The proposed rise in the minimum wage and the "just as important" broad extension of coverage "will help make many other civil rights gains meaningful," the statement said.

NLRB Finds Unanimously:

Textile Chain Guilty Of Anti-Union Drive

The J. P. Stevens Co., one of the nation's largest textile chains, has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board "to undo the effect of massive and deliberate unfair labor practices" by notifying all workers in its 27 Carolina plants that it will no longer fire, spy on or coerce employes to break down Textile Workers Union of America organizing campaigns.

The NLRB in a unanimous decision ordered the reinstatement with backpay and interest of 71 former employes at three Stevens plants. The board directed the company also to take further steps to assure workers at other plants it will no longer interfere with their rights of self-organization.

These include orders that the company:

- Mail to employes at all Carolina plants—not only the three directly involved—a copy of the labor board order requiring that the company state it would not hereafter "discharge or otherwise discriminate against" workers to discourage union membership.
- Post copies of the NLRB order in all its plants.
- Read the order at meetings of its employes in all plants.
- Make available to the TWUA, for one year, "reasonable access" to company bulletin boards where notices to employes are customarily posted.

About 40,000 workers are employed at the J. P. Stevens plants in North and South Carolina.

Hailing the NLRB decision as confirmation of union charges of "massive and deliberate violations" of national labor law by J. P. Stevens, TWUA Pres. William Pollock said his union and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. would "continue to service appeals of workers for help in organizing."

"The NLRB has finally turned to new remedies" to halt the company's "persistent brainwashing and terrorizing" of employes, Pollock added, "as we have long urged."

Record Key To Support —Not Party

Labor will shun party labels and work harder than ever to elect Democrats and Republicans who support its programs and principles, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared.

Meany stressed labor's traditional non-partisan political stance in a major address to 4,000 delegates to the building trades legislative conference.

If a two-thirds vote is needed to pass a labor bill in the Senate, where a Dirksen filibuster blocked 14(b) repeal, "we have to go out and get the two-thirds vote," Meany said. "We are going to concentrate on more and better political action. We are not going to spend a lot of time crying over spilt milk."

He called for strengthening of COPE—the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education — so that "we can defend ourselves against those who would use the legislative process to hamper or destroy the trade union movement."

While most liberals in Congress are Democrats, the party label is also worn by some who are "100 percent against everything we stand for," Meany said. And the Democratic Party as a whole has shown it "can't deliver." He added, "I don't buy the idea . . . that labor needs the Democratic Party. I am sure it is the other way around."

There are some progressive Republicans in the House and Senate, Meany noted, but the party line is still set by "financial interests" and the filibuster against 14(b) repeal was led by the GOP leader, Sen.

Major School Aid Expansion Urged To Meet Rising City, Rural Needs

The level of federal funds for support of elementary and secondary schools should be raised to "approximately 25 percent of total school expenditures," the AFL-CIO told a House subcommittee.

The present federal expenditure averaging 7.8 percent of the total cost, following passage of the school aid bill last year, represents a "significant improvement over the situation in the recent past, but it is still not enough," Federation Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told the House unit headed by Rep. Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.).

Spokesmen for "large cities" have been seeking additional funds to offset the heavy expenses of urban education, suburban areas ask more money to meet the costs of rapid growth, rural areas ask funds to speed up consolidation of school districts, Biemiller noted.

"All of these arguments are convincing and the needs they have outlined must be met," he continued. "The only way to meet these needs is by increasing the amount of money available."

"No organization has given more uncompromising support to the Administration in its Viet Nam policy than the AFL-CIO," he pointed out.

"First, we do not accept for one moment the argument that the war in Viet Nam necessitates lower public expenditures for the health, education and well-being of our people. We do not see any crisis in federal expenditures that justifiies cutting back programs for the welfare of the American people."

Biemiller, testifying on an Administration-backed bill to strengthen the Elementary & Secondary Education Act of 1965, made these

Stulberg Set As Successor To Dubinsky

New York — Sec.-Treas. Louis Stulberg of the Ladies' Garment Workers, a member of the union for some 50 years and an officer and staff member since 1924, has been named to succeed David Dubinsky as ILGWU president.

Stulberg, elected by unanimous vote of the union executive board, was given the oath of office by Dubinsky, who retires officially on June 15, the 34th anniversary of his installation as ILGWU president. Stulberg has been secretary-treasurer since 1959.

Dubinsky notified the board in a surprise announcement Mar. 16 that he planned to step down as president Apr. 12 but he later agreed, at the request of a special board committee of which Stulberg was a member, to extend the date.

The board named Dubinsky honorary president and heard him report that he and Mrs. Dubinsky are planning an extended vacation trip this spring.

Stulberg declared it would be "almost impossible" to fill Dubinsky's shoes but that he would give the job his best efforts. One of his major objectives, he said, will be to continue the drive to organize the unorganized workers in the industry.

Praising Dubinsky for his devotion to the union and its members, Stulberg noted that the ILGWU had grown under Dubinsky's leadership from a position of "no influence" and "no affluence" to its present membership of nearly 500,000 and some $571 million in operating and reserve funds.

Stulberg thanked Dubinsky for having given him his first union job and said the retiring leader had become a "living legend" to garment workers.

Born in Poland on Apr. 14, 1901, Stulberg moved to Canada at an early age and, after starting work in Toronto, joined the ILGWU. After graduating from Harbord Collegiate Institute, Toronto, he studied at the University of Chicago but quit before graduation to take a job as a garment cutter.

He became active in the union and served as an organizer in the Midwest from 1924 to 1927. Moving to New York, Stulberg was named a business agent for Cutters Local 10 in 1929 when Dubinsky was manager of the local, and in 1933 became assistant manager.

As head of the ILGWU cutters' dress department in 1941, Stulberg played a major role, his associates recalled, in an Eastern Seaboard organizing campaign which brought several thousand new members into the union.

He served as assistant executive secretary of the ILGWU from 1945 to 1947. In the latter year he became manager of New York Undergarment Workers' Local 62 and an ILGWU vice president.

Problem-Solver

Shortly afterward Dubinsky, impressed with Stulberg's ability to handle "knotty" problems, asked him to function to a large extent from the general offices here. When the executive board created the new post of executive vice president in 1956, Stulberg got the job. He kept it until his election as secretary-treasurer three years later.

He is also a vice president of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., a leading figure in the Liberal Party of New York, and is active in numerous other civic organizations. He and his wife, the former Bebe Friedman, who was once Dubinsky's secretary, have one daughter, Mrs. David Crystal.

UAW, Deere Integrate Pact With Medicare

Detroit—The Auto Workers have reached agreement with Deere & Co. integrating the hospital-medical benefits of the union's contract with the medicare program, UAW Vice Pres. Pat Greathouse, director of the union's Agricultural Implement Dept., announced.

The pact applies to pensioners and their spouses as well as to all active workers 65 years and older. It provides that the company reimburse those who enroll in Part B of medicare for the $3 monthly fee and that it pay the deductibles or co-insurance features of Parts A and B, effective July 1.

In a joint letter to retired employes, the union and the company advised them that the revised plan "will maintain combined benefits at least as good as those provided by the present Deere-UAW plan," and that it "will not duplicate any payments an individual is entitled to under Parts A or B."

The UAW represents Deere workers in plants at Des Moines, Dubuque, Ottumwa and Waterloo, Ia., and Moline and East Moline, Ill.

Medicare Deadline Warning Sounded

Millions of persons over 65 may lose out on medical insurance protection unless they sign up by Mar. 31 for the $3-a-month supplementary medicare coverage.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has urged that the registration deadline set by Congress be extended, but strongly recommended that all eligible persons enroll. Under present law, those who fail to meet the deadline will have to wait two years for their next opportunity and then pay a higher premium.

Aid Pledged Office Union In Organizing

Chicago—Help in organizing drives from the AFL-CIO was pledged to some 80 international and local representatives of the Office & Professional Employes at a meeting here by AFL-CIO Organization Dir. William L. Kircher.

Emphasizing that "we are not going to impress workers by repeating the past history of the labor movement," Kircher said organizing efforts must be geared to "the thoughts of young workers" and that organizers "must tailor-make house calls to existent problems" without reliance on a "patent approach."

"The unemployment and insecurity which existed during the depression years," he said, "are not present after a quarter-century of relatively high economic stability and security in the work force. Young people do not have the economic fears of the past.

"The challenge of reaching and enthusing workers is greater than ever before. The science of organizing lies in the art of communication."

Kircher urged the union to take advantage of the recent National Labor Relations Board ruling which allows a union a mailing list of employes, and urged OPEIU representatives to become better acquainted with the facilities of AFL-CIO regional offices.

Machinists Slate Airlines Walkout

The Machinists, rejecting a proffer of arbitration by the National Mediation Board, set 12:01 a.m. Apr. 23 as a strike deadline for nearly 35,000 airline mechanics and other ground personnel employed on five major airlines.

IAM Vice Pres. Joseph W. Ramsey said the lines "refused to make any sincere counter-offer" in negotiations that started last October.

To Safeguard Jobs:

Newspaper Unions Ask Merger Delay

New York—Newspaper unions asked the U.S. Dept. of Justice to withhold any decision on a proposed merger of three daily newspapers here until they can take steps to protect the jobs of some 5,600 employes.

Typographical Union Local 6 urged that the publishers planning the merger of the Herald Tribune, the Journal American and the World-Telegram & Sun into one new publishing firm be restricted temporarily from disposing of any equipment or plant.

Such a restriction would make it possible for other publishers to come into the New York area, said Pres. Bertram A. Powers of Local 6. In a letter to the head of the U.S. antitrust division, Powers noted that in past mergers printing facilities were immediately sold to out-of-town buyers and no prospective publisher could "buy a going concern."

Representatives of two other unions, the ITU Mailers and the Newspaper Guild, asked the Justice Dept. to give them a hearing before acting on the merger proposal.

Guild contracts with the three papers are the only contracts open. The Guild and the nine other unions involved announced that they consider the merged firm—World Journal Tribune Inc.—a "new entity with which no contracts exist."

10-Day Notice

A notice of intent to merge was filed by the three publishers Mar. 22 in line with a promise to give the Justice Dept. 10 days' notice of any such intent. The promise was made last June and the government then abandoned its demand to see company records pertinent to merger talks.

The Justice Dept.'s advance approval is not needed, but the government could take legal action to block the merger if the consolidation appeared to be in violation of antitrust laws.

The publishers asserted the merger was "forced by the economics of the industry" here. They did not give a date when the new combine would go into operation, but speculation ranged from April 1 to 11.

Industry sources estimated that as many as 2,000 jobs might be eliminated.

The publishers want to combine the Journal American and the World-Telegram into an afternoon paper called the World Journal. The Herald Tribune would continue as a morning newspaper but its Sunday edition would be combined with the Sunday Journal American to become the Sunday World Journal & Tribune.

The publishers began meeting with the Guild Mar. 23, with ANG Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson sitting in, and said they would also meet with the other newspaper unions involved.

The Guild kept its contracts with the three papers open as a result of the publishers' refusal to provide protection against job losses in the event of merger. Last January the Guild filed charges with the National Labor Relations Board stating the firms refused to bargain on the job-protection issue.

Spokesmen for that union and others said they hope a strike will not be necessary. Executive Vice Pres. Thomas J. Murphy of the New York Guild said his union "sees no reason for anybody losing his job." Publishers, he said, will be called on to "justify any contemplated dismissal."

Merit Scholar Graduates After 3.5 Years Study

Greensboro, N. C.—Mrs. Mary Ellen Robinson Young has been graduated from the University of North Carolina Teachers College here—the third holder of an AFL-CIO Merit Scholarship to receive a degree after 3.5 years of study. She also was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, scholastic honor society.

Mrs. Young was awarded her scholarship in 1962 while a high school student in Hickory, N. C., and led her class from the first year. She expects to continue her studies through a Woodrow Wilson fellowship which provides for study abroad.

Dubinsky Still in Harness As ILGWU Negotiator

New York—David Dubinsky's duties as president of the Ladies' Garment Workers will get his attention right up to the date of his retirement, June 15, he demonstrated in working out final terms of a new three-year agreement benefiting 5,000 workers in 12 states.

A day after his announcement of plans to step down as ILGWU president, Dubinsky held an 8 a.m. meeting in his office here with Pres. Richard Schwartz of Jonathan Logan, Inc., to complete negotiations on a contract covering 27 plants outside the major clothing centers.

The union described Logan as the "world's largest outwear firm." The contract renewal contains these terms:

- Wage increases totaling 12 percent in three installments beginning Mar. 1, 1966.
- Immediate elimination of any limit on make-up for piece workers.
- Minimum hourly rates for operators rising from $1.70 to $1.75 as of Mar. 1, $1.80 a year later and $1.85 a year after that, and average hourly piece rate yields for operators increasing from $2 to $2.10, $2.16 and $2.22 on the same dates.

Packers' minimums raised from $1.56 to $1.67 as of Mar. 1 and to $1.79 after two years; minimum for all other crafts increased, and inequities corrected.

Other contract changes include an increase in number of holidays to six in some plants, seven in others; and revisions in the basic master agreement including cost of living adjustments and maintenance of employment levels at existing plants when new plants are built.

To 'Lay Groundwork':

Early Talks Sought In GE, Westinghouse

Eight AFL-CIO unions which have adopted a program of coordinated bargaining with General Electric Co. and the Westinghouse Electric Corp. have sent requests to the two firms for early meetings to "lay the groundwork" for scheduled contract negotiations.

In similar telegrams to GE Pres. Fred J. Borch and Westinghouse Pres. D. C. Burnham, the presidents of unions noted that delegates representing 120,000 workers at GE and 60,000 at Westinghouse had adopted joint bargaining goals for 1966 at a meeting in Washington Mar. 15.

The contracts of the unions on the major issues considered by the conference are the same, the union officials wrote, "and we naturally have developed a common program to improve our agreements."

"We believe these goals are realistic and equitable," they continued. "We are confident that our belief will be confirmed by calm, considered examination of all the facts."

Noting press statements by GE and Westinghouse officials that union "demands" are "excessive and unrealistic" and aimed at "crisis bargaining to force a strike," the telegrams declared:

"To the contrary, we believe that both management and unions have the responsibility to do everything possible to arrive at a peaceful settlement that will serve the best interests" of the parties and the public.

Observing that issues in this year's bargaining are "difficult and complicated," the union leaders said "we need a method by which we can freely explore these issues common to our unions in an unhurried manner, and effectively prepare the way for the kind of collective bargaining that would avoid last-minute crises."

They proposed an early meeting which would be informal, and would involve "no commitments as to future action by either group."

The message to GE was signed by Presidents Edward F. Carlough of the Sheet Metal Workers, Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Carl W. Griepentrog of the Allied Industrial Workers, Paul Jennings of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; George M. Parker of the Flint Glass Workers; Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers; P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists and Russell M. Stephens of the Technical Engineers.

The letter to Westinghouse was signed by the heads of the five unions which represent that firm's employes—the IBEW, AIW, IUE, IAM and the Flint Glass Workers.

At the Mar. 15 meeting more than 300 delegates from 150 local unions voted to abandon their single-union approach and establish a coordinated program aimed at helping GE-Westinghouse workers to "catch up" with the gains made recently in other industries.

Included in the goals of talks due to start Aug. 1 at GE and Aug. 15 at Westinghouse are a substantial wage increase, with no geographic differentials; strengthened income and job security; the full union shop; and major improvements in pensions, insurance, and other benefits.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the eight-union committee that "you have a lot of catching-up to do." He repeated the pledge of full support voted by the federation's 1965 convention at San Francisco.

The action of the New York City Board of Education in voting against buying textbooks produced by the struck Kingsport, Tenn., Press should encourage union members everywhere in their efforts to dissuade boards of education "from spending public funds to subsidize strikebreakers," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a message to all state and local central bodies.

"This victory in the nation's largest school system should encourage you in your own efforts," Meany wrote. "It is our opinion that tax money collected from all segments of the population should not be used to support one party in a strike."

The New York labor movement's education and information campaign, carried on for more than a year, stressed that substandard Kingsport wages constitute unfair competition for the city's own publishing houses—a point, Meany noted, that may be applicable elsewhere.

"I hope this good news will inspire you to even greater efforts in support of this strike, which simply must be won," he declared.

The school board held a public hearing in February at which proponents and opponents were heard on the proposal to bar buying books produced at Kingsport Press. On Mar. 16 the members voted 5-4 to ban the purchase where books of equal value are available and also to send word of the board's position to all publishers who have printing and binding performed at the plant. Five unions have been on strike for a contract with Kingsport Press since Mar. 11, 1963.

Board Enjoined

Attorneys for the publishers asked the board to delay the effect of its action and, when it refused, obtained a temporary injunction in New York Supreme Court. Justice William C. Hecht, Jr., was to hold a hearing on whether the injunction would become permanent.

School Board Member Morris Iushewitz, who introduced the Kingsport Press resolution, said in urging its adoption:

"We have a million organized workers in New York City. It is their money and their children that are being taught by these textbooks and they object to this money going to a place . . . where there are no unions and where the standards set by the unions and achieved in New York City cannot be achieved."

Member Clarence Senior, who seconded Iushewitz's motion, said it should not be dealt with "on a narrow legalistic basis" but in the broader context of history and economic reality.

"We often forget," Senior said, that "it was the labor movement through mass meetings, petitions, letters and other pressures on public bodies" which helped overcome the opposition to public education and that labor "is one of our brightest hopes for a future which will see the Great Society become more than a slogan."

Member John H. Lotz, who voted yes, said the business of the board would "come to a standstill if we waited for new precedents" and "this is a simple matter of a decision based . . . on social justice."

Two other members voted for the resolution—Dr. Aaron Brown and Mrs. Rose Shapiro. Four voted against—Pres. Lloyd K. Garrison, Vice Pres. Alfred A. Giardino, Joseph G. Barkan and Thomas C. Burke.

Giardino said the motion if approved would set a dangerous precedent, propel the board into an "administrative quagmire" and "violate the basic principle of the selection of books on the basis of editorial content and excellence."

Laid-Off Workers Key To NLRB Election Win

An employer who kept laid-off workers on the house organ mailing list and told them to stay on the company bowling team, with all fees paid, was hardly justified in claiming they had "no reasonable prospects of recall," the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

Laid-off employes of the Master Vibrator Co. voted in an NLRB election Jan. 27, 1965, at Bowling Green, Ky., but their votes were challenged by management. The board overruled a regional director who had sustained the challenges, and ordered the ballots counted.

The result was a gain of 24 votes for the Sheet Metal Workers, giving the union enough to force a runoff election. The revised vote tally was Sheet Metal 61, no union 54, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers 9.

The company had moved its space heater manufacturing operations from Dayton, O., to Kentucky, where the representation election was held.

The employer laid off 36 employes twelve days before the vote and 26 more five days later. The board accepted management's assertion that the layoffs were all for economic reasons, noting that demand for space heaters by dairy farmers and construction contractors slackens at about the same time every year.

The issue was whether 32 laid-off workers, who voted challenged ballots, had a "reasonable expectancy of recall in the foreseeable future and were therefore eligible to vote."

The board found no merit in the firm's claim that it had decided to stabilize its workforce at 95 employes through the year and said there was "no basis for concluding" that the laid-off employes would not be recalled. The board noted these other factors:

"The plant manager told laid-off workers they were eligible for recall, in which event they would be reinstated with seniority; that they should keep him informed of any change of address; that the employer would continue to send them news of new products; that they should remain on the company bowling team, with shirts, equipment and fees paid by the employer; and that they were eligible to vote in the coming election."

Hawaii House Lauds New Federation

Honolulu—The House of Representatives of the Hawaii Legislature has adopted a resolution commending Hawaii unions and their members for establishing the Hawaii Federation of Labor.

AFL-CIO unions have made "outstanding contributions" toward the goal of an enriched life for every citizen and have helped create a stable environment in labor-management relations, said the resolution adopted Mar. 15.

Board Sets New Rule On Majority Challenge

The National Labor Relations Board, in a change of policy, has ruled that an employer challenging an incumbent union's bargaining rights must have "some reasonable grounds for believing that the union has lost its majority status since its certification."

The new rule was applied to a petition by the United States Gypsum Co. for an election in its Montevallo, Ala., quarry, mine and lime plant to decide whether employes still want to be represented in collective bargaining by the Steelworkers.

A three-member panel of the board dismissed the petition after concluding that there is "no objective evidence" that could "furnish a reasonable basis for the employer to believe that the union might have lost its majority status."

The Steelworkers have since 1958 held bargaining rights at Montevallo. The former plant owners, United Cement Co., Inc., sold out to U.S. Gypsum a year ago.

The board noted that the new owner "produced the same products as United, used the same property and machinery, and continued the same terms and conditions of employment." But it refused to check off dues, declined to deal with the union on grievances, and asked for an NLRB vote.

Under the old rule, the employer could go to the NLRB without any showing of a good-faith doubt and had the choice of deciding whether to ask for an election or to fight a refusal-to-bargain charge. Said the board:

"In either case the rights of the employes to be represented are jeopardized, and the union is put to the choice of utilizing the time-consuming unfair labor practice route" or be compelled to "engage in endless election campaigning" at the end of each contract term or whenever the company changed hands.

Under these circumstances, it said, "uninterrupted and stable bargaining relationships would be impaired and unions would be tempted to make unreasonable demands . . . to retain the allegiance of the employes."

Printing Trades Hikes Average 10c in 1965

Union workers in the printing trades in cities of 100,000 or more gained wage increases averaging 10 cents an hour, or 2.8 percent, during the year ended July 1, 1965, the Labor Dept. reported.

The results of the survey, made by the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics, compared with a rise of 9 cents an hour, or 2.6 percent, in the previous year.

Rates averaged $3.73 for all workers in the industry, the study showed, with July 1 scales of $3.58 in book and job shops and $3.94 in newspaper establishments.

California Bishops Join to Support Bargaining Rights for Farm Labor

Delano, Calif.—Substantial support for organized labor's call for new legislation to help farm workers has come from the top hierarchy of the Catholic Church in California.

It was set forth during a dramatic series of hearings in Sacramento, Visalia and Delano held by the Senate Subcommittee on Migratory Labor. The hearings produced these other developments:

● Sen. George Murphy (R-Calif.), voicing dismay at the poor condition of one farm labor housing facility the subcommittee visited, promised to help get more federal funds to clear out rural slums "even though I am not known as an advocate of big government spending."

● Leaders of the Tulare-Kern County Independent Farm Workers Association, which labor representatives have called a "company union," were pressed into admitting they are employers, but then surprised the subcommittee by saying they favored a minimum wage and collective bargaining rights for farm workers.

● Testimony from AFL-CIO leaders; Benjamin Aaron, head of the Institute of Industrial Relations at the University of California at Los Angeles; Gov. Edmund G. Brown, and the migrant ministry of the National Council of Churches all joined to emphasize their own strong support of pending legislation.

The package of bills before the subcommittee would bring farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act and the Fair Labor Standards Act, stiffen child labor restrictions, and create a new system of farm labor recruitment and a National Advisory Commission on Migratory Workers.

The major development of the hearings came when Bishop Hugh Donohoe of Stockton asked to be heard—for himself and on behalf of James Francis Cardinal McIntyre, and six other Catholic bishops of the state.

The state's Catholic leaders had not spoken out as a group on the grape strike in the Delano area called last September by the AFL-CIO Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee and the unaffiliated National Farm Workers Association, although some priests acting individually had joined in support of the strikers.

Growers had charged that the strike was the work of "outside agitators," but the joint statement of the Catholic leaders said "those who seek to organize farm laborers are not to be looked upon as outside agitators."

"It is becoming evident," they said, "that unless farm workers are given the chance to organize, they are going to become wards of the state.

"This one act (legislation giving collective bargaining rights to farm workers) will not solve the farm labor problem, but it will be a first and giant step toward a solution."

Growers, too, the churchmen said, should organize into their own associations so that then they "can bargain from a position of strength not only with the workers associations for a just contract, but also with the whole economy for a just share of the national wealth."

Senators Applaud

When the bishops' statement was concluded, the three senators, Williams — Subcommittee Chairman Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N. J.), Robert F. Kennedy (D-N. Y.) and Murphy—led the applause in violation of their own rules of procedures.

Williams is author of a number of bills to give farm workers equal protection under federal labor laws, and Kennedy is a strong supporter of the measures. Murphy has not committed himself yet, but did emphasize that he is in favor of collective bargaining for farm labor. He is a former president of the Screen Actors Guild, and said he is familiar with other casual workers in Hollywood, especially extras, who have problems akin to those of migrant farm workers.

"We were able to work out something for them," he said, noting that the film extras are covered by the federal labor laws.

The key objection from growers to the idea of NLRB elections for farm workers was that the work force is not steady enough to permit creation of a system for such elections. Nevertheless, Martin Zaninovich, chief spokesman for the grape growers, said that "there is no strike in Delano" since "more than 5,000 of the people who regularly, year after year, have picked our crops, stayed on the job."

Kennedy challenged Zaninovich to explain how there can be 5,000 regular workers and, at the same time, such an unsteady work force that no election system is possible.

Zaninovich said the workers "voted with their feet, so to speak," when they went through the picket lines to work in the vineyards.

Let Them Vote

Kennedy noted that "in Mississippi, I have heard some people say Negroes don't want to vote and so there was no need for the voting rights bill—all we say is give them an opportunity and let them vote with secret ballots if they want to."

Sheriff's deputies and police denied union complaints that they had harassed pickets, but Kern County Sheriff Leroy Gaylen told the committee his deputies regularly took pictures of all pickets. Once, he said, they arrested 40 pickets on charges of unlawful assembly as they marched peacefully in front of a grape vineyard along a public road. He did it, he explained, because "some workers in the field said they would cut the hearts out of the pickets if we didn't do something, so we just removed the cause of the problem."

Kennedy suggested that the sheriff "take this opportunity to read the constitution of the United States."

After the hearings ended, many of the grape strikers joined in a dramatic, 300-mile pilgrimage from Delano to Sacramento to call attention to the strike and protest the wages and working conditions of all farm workers. The pilgrimage is scheduled to end with a high mass on Easter Sunday in Sacramento.

New Committee List Issued by AFL-CIO

A new roster of AFL-CIO standing committees was issued Mar. 18 with the following officers listed as chairmen:

Civil Rights, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Education, Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann; Ethical Practices, Vice Pres. George M. Harrison; Legislative, Pres. George Meany; Economic Policy, Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Housing, Vice Pres. Harry C. Bates; Political Education, Meany; Organization, Reuther; Intl. Affairs, Harrison; Public Relations, Vice Pres. Herman D. Kenin; Veterans Affairs, Vice Pres. Lee W. Minton; Social Security, Vice Pres. M. A. Hutcheson; Safety & Occupational Health, Vice Pres. Richard F. Walsh; Research, Schnitzler; Community Services, Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne.

Farewell to Farm Union:

Patton Urges Drive For Lasting Peace

Denver, Colo.—Mankind's first job is to build a lasting peace based on psychological change, not power, James G. Patton declared in his farewell address as president of the National Farmers Unions.

"An empty belly, a diseased body and an ignorant brain know no politics," Patton told the NFU's 64th convention here. "In a road to peace, it must be the job of mankind to close the gap of poverty, a poverty which grew out of colonial materialism.

"We in America can't live as an island of plenty—a big, white house on the hill with all the poor people living around in the malaria-ridden mud huts in the valley—or the poor people will rise and destroy the big white house. And the rich who live in the big, white house will have their heads beaten into the ground."

Patton stepped down at 63 after 25 years as president during which the NFU tripled in membership while the number of farmers was declining sharply, increased its resources, gained fame as a progressive force, helped shape legislation and served as a link between the nation's farmers and organized workers.

In his place the convention elected Tony Dechant, who for the past 20 years has been NFU secretary-treasurer.

Farewell Dinner Set

Organized labor will bid farewell to Patton at a dinner in Washington on Mar. 28. The sponsoring committee includes all members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council with Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists as chairman.

The delegates adopted policy statements urging extension of the minimum wage law to cover "all employes;" improved unemployment compensation legislation; enforcement of immigration laws so as to eliminate illegal entrants, and a migratory farm labor program that includes wage, health, safety and housing guarantees for the workers themselves and education for their children.

Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey sent a filmed address to the convention in which he said that if South Viet Nam and its neighbors had had the family farm system and farm cooperatives of the United States, "I doubt that the Communist movement would make any progress."

Dir. Al Barkan of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education said that farmers and workers must stick together to enact the "big, unfinished legislative programs that will benefit all the people."

The people who fight organized labor, he pointed out, are the same ones who fight effective farm programs.

"Farmers and workers have both learned the hard way," he added, "that failure to wage our struggle in the political arena exacts a bitter price in good legislation that fails or bad legislation that passes."

Chairman Wright Patman (D-Tex.) of the House Banking & Currency Committee, another speaker, sharply attacked the recent action of the Federal Reserve Board raising interest rates on short-term Treasury financing.

The convention adopted a resolution calling for FRB reorganization to include farm, labor and small business representation.

Other speakers included Sec. of Agriculture Orville Freeman, who discussed domestic farm programs; Sen. Gale McGee (D-Wyo.), who predicted that extreme right-wingers will spend $12 million in the November election; and Mrs. Esther Peterson, special assistant to the President for consumer affairs, who urged NFU support for enactment of the fair packaging and labeling bill sponsored by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.).

Walter Schevenels, ICFTU Leader Dies

Walter Schevenels, general secretary of the European Regional Organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, died at his home in Brussels at the age of 71.

Pres. George Meany sent a cable expressing the "deepest sympathy" of the AFL-CIO to his widow.

The son of Jules Schevenels, one of the founders of the Belgian metalworkers' federation, he joined the union when he started work in Antwerp after attending Ghent University. He held union posts while still in his 20s, and in 1929 was elected general secretary of the Intl. Federation of Trade Unions.

When the World Federation of Trade Unions was founded in 1945, he was placed in charge of its industrial field operations. He took over the ERO post soon after the ICFTU was organized in 1949 after free world labor bolted the WFTU.

Textile Chain Guilty Of Anti-Union Drive

The board's refusal to issue an order awarding bargaining rights to the TWUA in the three plants directly involved would be carried to federal court, he said.

A Stevens Co. spokesman, without commenting on the board's finding of "flagrant unlawfulness" in the company's resistance to worker organization, noted that in eight NLRB elections since the TWUA campaign began in 1963 the union had been defeated.

The three-plant case carried to the labor board was a consolidation of numerous unfair labor charges filed by the TWUA involving J. P. Stevens Co. mills in the Roanoke Rapids, N. C., and Greenville and Rock Hill, S. C., areas.

In a six-month hearing, Trial Examiner Horace A. Ruckel compiled a 12,000-page record involving the testimony of 384 witnesses on scores of incidents. Ruckel in an intermediate order directed the reinstatement with backpay of 69 ousted employes; the NLRB ruled that a 70th worker was illegally discharged and a 71st illegally refused reinstatement.

The NLRB decision cited these "wholesale" anti-union firings and also found the existence of company spying on union activity, threatened reprisals for union adherence, intimidation of employes because of statements to the labor board, the altering of working conditions to thwart union activity, a pattern in which some employes were barred from pro-union conduct while others were stimulated to anti-union activity.

Noting that the company's tactics had included the posting of the names of union members, then scratching off the names of employes persuaded to withdraw, the NLRB upheld the examiner's ruling that this was clearly "an intimidatory tactic which was deliberately calculated to, and did, coerce and restrain employes" in their exercise of self-organizing rights.

Protest Denied

The NLRB also upheld the examiner—over company protests—in ordering the posting of notices in all J. P. Stevens' Carolina plants rather than merely the three plants directly involved in the case.

"We find no merit" in such a protest, the board ruled.

"The unfair labor practices were so extensive and so well publicized that they must inevitably have had a coercive impact" on workers in other plants in the area, it declared. "We find that this posting is necessary in order that such employes may be reasonably secure in the exercise of their . . . rights and to remedy this atmosphere of fear."

New Tax Law Means Change In Pay Checks

The amount of federal income taxes withheld from each worker's pay will be changed under the new tax law effective May 1.

The new law neither increases nor decreases the amount of tax actually due. Its purpose is to bring the amount withheld from workers' paychecks closer to the tax owed at the end of the year. The effect will be to reduce withholding, and increase take-home pay, for the lowest-paid workers, and to increase the deduction for those in the higher pay brackets.

Below are examples of what the change in weekly withholding rates will mean to typical wage earners, as drawn from information in the Internal Revenue Service's Employer's Tax Guide:

For a married taxpayer with two children claiming four exemptions:

| Weekly Earnings | Old Rate | New Rate |
|---|---|---|
| $ 50 | none | none |
| 60 | $ 1.40 | $ 0.50 |
| 70 | 2.80 | 1.90 |
| 80 | 4.20 | 3.30 |
| 90 | 5.60 | 4.80 |
| 100 | 7.20 | 6.50 |
| 150 | 14.50 | 14.70 |
| 200 | 20.80 | 23.20 |
| 250 | 27.80 | 32.70 |

For a single taxpayer claiming one exemption for himself:

| Weekly Earnings | Old Rate | New Rate |
|---|---|---|
| $ 50 | $ 5.30 | $ 5.20 |
| 60 | 6.70 | 6.90 |
| 70 | 8.10 | 8.60 |
| 80 | 9.50 | 10.30 |
| 90 | 10.90 | 12.00 |
| 100 | 12.60 | 14.10 |
| 150 | 19.90 | 24.60 |

Mississippi Vote Won by ACWA

Richton, Miss. — The Clothing Workers climaxed an organizing campaign here by winning a National Labor Relations Board election, 182-47, among employes of the Mid South Mfg. Co.

The union held its meetings—possibly the first ever held in Perry County—in a store with a window open to public view.

AFL-CIO Assistant Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes, who worked with the ACWA on the drive, reported the firm, which makes pants and uniforms, held several "captive audience" meetings in the plant urging "no" votes.

Tax Dodge Guide Shows How the Rich Get Richer

"Are you getting tax-free dollars from your company?

"Have you been combining your pleasure trips with business for maximum tax savings?

"If you already have $50,000 insurance coverage paid for by the company, are you aware of a way to bypass the new $50,000 tax-free limit?"

Unless you can answer "Yes" to these and similar questions, the Research Institute of America advises, you should get their special report, "Tax Breaks That Lead to Executive Wealth."

There's only one rub. You sort of have to have some wealth to start with before you can take advantage of what the firm describes as "100 percent legitimate" methods of avoiding taxes. Chapters such as "The Extra Investment Credit in a Nutshell" aren't likely to be of much help to a wage-earner who pays the full tax rate on his weekly paycheck.

HONORARY FELLOWSHIP was bestowed on Pres. Joseph N. Curran of the National Maritime Union by the Hebrew University of Jerusalem on his 60th birthday. Acting on behalf of the university was Justice Haim Cohn (right) of the Israel Supreme Court. The honor was given at a dinner in New York which raised $100,000 to establish a Joseph Curran Fund for the Humanities at the university. At left are Mrs. Curran and Pres. Nathaniel L. Goldstein of the American Friends of Hebrew University.

New Candidates Enter Coast Primary Races

The uncertainties in California's bubbling political races became more complicated when Lloyd N. Hand, recently protocol chief for the Dept. of State, resigned to enter the Democratic primary as a candidate for lieutenant governor.

Democrats already had two candidates for nomination for the post—Glenn M. Anderson, the two-term incumbent, and Thomas Braden, newspaper publisher and president of the state school board.

A three-candidate race for the Democratic nomination for governor also shaped up as Carlton B. Goodlett, a Negro publisher, announced he would run against incumbent Gov. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown and Los Angeles Mayor Samuel W. Yorty.

On the Republican Side, Robert Finch, campaign manager for Richard M. Nixon in the 1960 presidential race, is considered certain of the GOP nomination for lieutenant governor. The battle for nomination for governor is strictly between Ronald Reagan, movie and TV actor, and former Mayor George Christopher of San Francisco, although Warren Dorn, a Los Angeles County supervisor, is a late entry.

A sharp fight is shaping up also in Oregon, where Rep. Robert B. Duncan, with a liberal voting record and openly supporting Pres. Johnson's Viet Nam Policy, is challenged for the Senate nomination by former Federal Power Commissioner Howard Morgan, a critic on Viet Nam issues. Gov. Mark O. Hatfield, also a critic, is the certain Republican nominee.

In South Carolina, former Gov. Ernest F. Hollings announced he would run for Democratic nomination for the Senate to fill the last two years of the late Sen. Olin D. Johnston's unexpired term. The incumbent is Sen. Donald S. Russell, who resigned as governor last year.

Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas, six times elected, said in Little Rock that he would not seek the Democratic nomination and re-election to a seventh term. He qualified his statement by saying he might re-enter the race if his party failed to come up with some other candidate against Republican Winthrop Rockefeller.

Chicago SIU Local Wins Unit of 600

Chicago — Local 300 of the United Industrial Workers, a Seafarers' affiliate, cracked the Marriott-Hot Shoppes' non-union stronghold by winning bargaining rights among nearly 600 employes of Marriott In-Flite Services here.

The vote in a National Labor Relations Board election was 299 for Local 300 to 203 for no union, with 60 ballots challenged and one void. The union, after certification, will bargain for chefs, dispatchers, food preparation workers, drivers, factory clerical workers and others who help supply food to eight airlines from kitchens at O'Hare Field and nearby Schiller Park, Ill.

During a campaign that started in January, Local 300 filed a series of unfair labor practice charges against hostile management actions, but waived hearings on them to expedite the election.

Postal Union Votes Merger With Clerks

Members of the National Postal Union voted 7-1 approval of a merger agreement with the AFL-CIO-affiliated United Federation of Postal Clerks.

The mail referendum, tallied under supervision of the Honest Ballot Association, brought 29,156 votes for merger, 4,153 opposed, and 192 invalid ballots. Two-thirds of the union's members voted in the referendum.

A special convention of the Postal Clerks will open in Cleveland Apr. 1 to act on the merger. If approved by convention, as the UFPOC board has recommended, the agreement will be formally signed. The combined union, with nearly 200,000 members, will hold its convention Aug. 8-13 at Louisville, Ky., under the name of the United Federation of Postal Unions.

Conclusion of the merger would heal an eight-year split in postal clerks' ranks, stemming from a 1958 convention dispute which led to the establishment of a rival union. The Postal Clerks hold nationwide exclusive bargaining rights for the country's 240,000 post office clerks. The NPU has local bargaining rights at a number of big post offices, including New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Detroit, Los Angeles and St. Paul.

Both UFPOC Pres. E. C. Hallbeck and NPU Pres. Sidney A. Goodman gave strong support to the merger effort. Conventions of the two unions in 1964 authorized negotiations and a joint merger committee reached an "agreement on principles" last year. Executive boards of the two unions concurred and a special NPU convention in February voted 45,091 to 3,486 approval, subject to referendum ratification.

Labor Hits Budget Cuts For Key Departments

A House Appropriations subcommittee was urged by the AFL-CIO to restore funds cut from budget proposals for financing the Dept. of Labor, the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare and several related agencies.

Federation Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller cited specific Budget Bureau slashes in proposed HEW programs:

- A $6.7 million reduction for research and enforcement of existing regulations in the occupational safety field. "This is ridiculously shortsighted economy," Biemiller said, allowing "avoidable industrial diseases to plague and afflict American workers." He was particularly concerned, he said, that no funds were proposed for implementing a five-year program "to eliminate or control job factors harmful to workers' health."

- A group of "substantial cuts" in the education field, including a reduction of $69 million below the amount authorized for vocational training, a $12 million reduction in federal support of teaching programs in land grant colleges, and reductions in student loan funds under the National Defense Education Act.

Biemiller also sharply criticized proposed Administration reductions in money appropriated for so-called "federally impacted" school districts—districts in which children of federally employed families live.

"In many communities, the proposed cuts very nearly offset the increased aid provided in the 1965 Elementary & Secondary Education Act," he observed. "To provide new funds and then take away existing funds is no different from failure to provide funds for education in the first place."

On the Dept. of Labor budget, Biemiller gave particular emphasis to the failure of budgetary officials to provide additional field investigators to step up enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Equal Pay Act and the Service Contracts Act.

Some 2,500 investigations are planned for the current wage-hour enforcement arm under the new Service Contracts Act, he observed, but the staff is already undermanned and "at least 40 more investigators" should be added.

Citing a $50,000 reduction item pared from the Labor Dept. budget for listing of foreign trade union organizations, Biemiller said "this is false economy indeed." The AFL-CIO, he remarked, devotes "nearly a quarter of its income to help and strengthen development of free trade unions in other lands" and finds the Dept. of Labor directories a "vitally important basic tool."

Jewelry Union Chosen At Cincinnati Plant

Cincinnati, O.—The Jewelry Workers won bargaining rights for employes of the I. B. Goodman Co. here, 34-11, in a National Labor Relations Board election. The firm of manufacturing jewelers, one of the largest in the Ohio Valley, had resisted union organizing efforts for many years.

Weapon Against Poverty

THE WAGE-HOUR BILL voted out by the House Labor Committee is probably the single most important new weapon in the war on poverty, in the struggle for social justice.

By extending coverage of the minimum wage law to an additional 7 million persons—bringing the total to 37 million—the bill gives new hope to the working poor for a way out of poverty.

By raising the wage floor for those 30 million now covered to $1.60 in February 1968, it provides the difference between nagging need and a small measure of decency.

The bill is a beginning, a down payment and a welcome improvement in the law. But while it may smooth some of the raw edges of poverty, the job is not complete. To secure a full measure of social justice for all workers, coverage must in the future be extended to all and the hourly wage set at $2 an hour.

We urge prompt passage in the House of the committee bill. But the task of overcoming poverty, want and deprivation is not finished. The struggle will go on with labor in the vanguard.

Labor and the Schools

THE ACTION of the New York City Board of Education barring purchase of textbooks from the struck Kingsport Press if books of equal value are available is a milestone in the historic relationship between the labor movement and education.

This point of view was eloquently expressed by Board Member Clarence Senior. He said in voting for the resolution:

"The history of the public school system in the United States would be much shorter if it had not been for the labor movement. We often forget that there was widespread opposition to education.

"The argument was that our republic would be wrecked if the common man were given an education, and it was the labor movement through mass meetings, petitions, letters and other pressures on public bodies which helped magnificently in supplying the steam without which this opposition would not have been overcome for decades.

"Second, the same interests who opposed education for the people also opposed unions and for the same reasons; they threatened the establishment. In most of the country this opposition has been overcome but the South still fights the organization of workers.

"Third, the labor movement, with its attempts to build an industrial democracy to complete and strengthen our political democracy, is one of the brightest hopes for a future which will see the great society become more than a slogan.

"Fourth, we are presented in this case with an opportunity to express ourselves on behalf of an expansion of democracy in the region of the country which is most benighted in regard to modern labor relations, has the highest levels of illiteracy in the nation and the most horrendous record of denial of equal opportunity in our democracy.

"And finally, I do not believe that these are non-educational matters that we are asked to deal with and vote on. On the contrary, a strictly legalistic view would confine us always to the type of education which so often dooms schools to a self-defeating aloofness from the realities of the social struggle.

"Without an expansion of the participation of people in the improvement of their own lives and their own fortunes, we will never build a real functioning democracy."

Meany Cites Labor's 'Power' As Instrument for Nation's Good

The following is excerpted from an address by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to the legislative conference of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. in Washington.

I WOULD LIKE to review the present picture of American labor in relation to government, in relation to the public as a whole, as it presents itself at the present time.

There is a vicious propaganda campaign going on, spearheaded by the employer organizations. This campaign is directed against the American trade union movement. The public is being told, from editorial pages, from slanted news, from articles in our slick paper magazines, that American labor is too powerful, that it has too much political power, that it is a bad influence on the economy of the country as a whole.

They hold over the heads of the American people the threat of inflation and they tie that to what they call the unrestricted power of unions to exact exorbitant wage demands. In other words, the country is facing a catastrophe, we are told, and the culprit is the organized labor movement.

Let me say something about power. We know what power is. We meet it across the bargaining tables. We see it in the management structure from one end of this country to another. I have no objection to a powerful trade union movement and I don't see why anyone else should have an objection so long as that power is directed toward the good of the country as a whole.

I contend that when we improve the standards of life of all of the American people, when we build up the purchasing power that keeps this dynamic economy of ours the envy of the entire world, when we fight to eliminate disease and poverty, when we struggle to bring millions of people under the minimum wage law—people who do not belong to our unions—when we use our dollars and our prestige and our time in order to build up democracy in South America and Africa and Asia on the very simple theory that by building up democracy in those lands we make democracy a little safer here at home—when we do all of these things, when we contribute one-third of the money contributed to the great charitable organizations in this country, through our machinery, yes, when we do all of these things I submit that we are using our power for the good of the country as a whole, not selfishly for ourselves.

WE ARE THE LARGEST group of private citizens in this country. Twenty-four percent of the income of the AFL-CIO is spent outside this country, spent to help workers in other parts of the world develop trade unions on the very simple theory that where free trade unions are developed there can be no dictatorship, and also on the very simple theory that the more freedom there is in the world and the less dictatorship there is in the world, the safer we are here in the United States of America in pursuing and preserving our democratic way of life. So we are going to continue to do our job—the simple job of advancing the standards of the American wage earner, improving life for himself and his family. We are going to continue to meet our responsibilities to the nation as a whole.

And we are going to concentrate on more and better political action. We are not going to spend a lot of time crying over spilt milk. If we need a two-thirds vote to pass a labor bill, we have got to go out and get the two-thirds vote and get them over there on Capitol Hill. This is the way to meet the Dirksen challenge.

I am not the least bit pessimistic about what has happened. After all, in the field of labor legislation, going back over the years, we find that you get a setback now and a setback then. But, in the final analysis, when you look at the picture from the very inception of the American trade union movement, right up to this minute, it has been a picture of constant progress, constant advance, constant improvement in the conditions of life and of work for the American wage earner and his family. And I am sure that it is going to continue to be that way.

I am sure that in this fight the representatives of the building trades who are present in this room are going to make a significant contribution, a contribution that will result in a better and more representative group on Capitol Hill who understand what poverty means, who understand what we are trying to do when we say we want to drive poverty, disease, degradation from the American scene. And who understand that there is nothing wrong with power when power is used for human good.

Morgan Says:

Justice 'A Little More Equal' With Warren Heading Court

By Edward P. Morgan

SPOKANE, WASH.,—Color this warmly and call it, if you like, a transcontinental birthday greeting card.

Over the entrance to the glistening white marble Supreme Court building in Washington is carved the legend, "Equal Justice Under Law." Given man's persistent weaknesses in a society which is still a bit short of perfect, maybe that phrase will always have to be more a sought ideal than a realized fact. But justice across this land from Spokane to Savannah is a little more equal than it was a decade ago, so it may not be amiss to add a public salute to one of the men most instrumental in this development, the Chief Justice of the United States. According to unimpeachable sources, Earl Warren is now 75.

Morgan

Prof. Fred Rodell of the Yale Law School has already rated Warren as the greatest chief justice in the nation's history. Some historians, of liberal as well as conservative bent, may insist on qualifying that judgment and ask what happened to John Marshall but few historians, if any, are likely to challenge seriously the conclusion that no head of the nation's judicial branch has ever held human values higher than this big, soft-spoken but sometimes quick-tempered native of California who has been Chief Justice for nearly 13 years.

To the axiom that ours is a "government of laws, not of men", Warren has joined the equal truth that laws are made by men and that infallibility does not invariably attach to either. The thrust of his whole legal philosophy is fairness, which, come to think of it, is not a bad synonym for justice. Warren has exasperated many a literal-minded lawyer by cutting through learned briefs with long citations to demand simply whether justice was actually served in the case. "Were you fair?" he persists.

Once, a visitor to his chambers raised the question of why we Americans take so little time to think about the law and the value of our judicial system, and why it is we seem to pay so little attention and respect to the Bill of Rights.

(The Chief Justice earlier, at a time when the McCarthyite Communist-in-government scare was still in strident cry, had suggested in a speech that citizens might not ratify the Bill of Rights if it were then put to a popular vote.) Warren mused that it was an odd thing about the Constitution and its amendments, we pay lip service to it, we talk about this structure as the Palladium, safeguarding the nation, yet when it is assaulted we are apt to be looking the other way. Or indeed we may join noisily in the assault in a narrow, selfish reaction obscuring the interests of society as a whole.

This was the kind of outcry which greeted the first landmark decisions of the Chief Justice's tenure, in which he quietly persuaded a dubious and divergent court to converge in a unanimous opinion proclaiming segregation in public schools unconstitutional. This was the kind of outcry heard again and again as the Warren Court, as it was increasingly becoming, fortified in decision after decision (though by no means unanimously) its majestic insistence that equal justice under law means what it says or it means nothing. So came the rulings that there could not be one system of justice for people suspected of being Communists, or Negroes, or Mexicans and another system for the rest of us. This shattered the private worlds of a lot of people who, consciously or unconsciously embraced the theory expounded in George Orwell's "Animal Farm" that all persons are equal but some are more equal than others.

No wonder that many little old ladies (and gentlemen) put on their tennis shoes, donned their sheets, seized their Birch rods of fear and prejudice and hurried off to impeach Earl Warren. He and his high bench had destroyed their values.

AND THE END is not yet, either of change or resistance to it. Already the complexion of state legislatures is beginning to change from rural to urban under the force of the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" reapportionment decisions. Chief Justice Warren considers these the most profoundly important opinions handed down since he resigned as three-term governor of California in September 1953 to head the Court. And another spate of decisions impends involving safeguards to the rights of suspects and prisoners.

The pandemonium of protests ("soft on communism;" "coddling criminals") has not pleased Warren, but perhaps his personal pain has been held to a minimum in part by the hope that out of this turmoil may emerge a national attitude more inclined to accept the wisdom of Solon, the Athenian lawgiver, who said, in effect, if the public will be as outraged over a wrong as the person wronged, it will have a system of justice.

In a real sense the improvements in American justice are a monument to Earl Warren at 75. But the monument is not finished. The work of a democracy never is.

The Dirksen Amendment:

Bid to Kill 1 Man, 1 Vote Rule Seen Headed for Third Defeat

DESPITE a well-financed nationwide publicity drive aimed at overturning the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" ruling, the so-called Dirksen Amendment is headed for its third defeat in as many years, a union spokesman has predicted.

All the evidence points to rejection "by an even larger margin" this year than in the past, Jack Beidler, legislative director for the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., said on the network radio interview Labor News Conference.

All but 11 states have now reapportioned their legislatures on a strict population basis, Beidler noted, and 15 have held legislative sessions without any tendency to neglect the needs and interests of the once-dominant rural areas. "The rural areas have done as well—or better—in the reapportioned legislatures as they did before," he added.

Beidler cited the case of Virginia, where, he said, the "one man, one vote" principle has brought about a dramatic change in state government and has "considerably boosted the interests" of education, child development and mental health. "I believe the change has all been for the better—for the best interests of Virgina and Virginians," he said.

HE CHARGED that the Committee for Government of the People, the organization conducting the campaign in behalf of the Dirksen Amendment, has been circulating "thoroughly misleading" and false claims. One such claim is that the proposed amendment "was approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee," Beidler said.

"This is simply not true," he declared, "it was not approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee," but instead was reported "without recommendation," and then only because its sponsor, Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R-Ill.), threatened otherwise to filibuster the Immigration Reform Bill.

Reporters questioning Beidler on the AFL-CIO produced public service program, aired weekly over the Mutual radio network, were Julius Duscha of the Washington Post and John Averill, congressional correspondent for the Los Angeles Times.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE SYSTEM of state poll taxes—a subject of intense controversy and an enormous amount of hairsplitting for at least a quarter of a century—fell like a stone when the Supreme Court ruled 6-3 that Virginia's state tax is unconstitutional.

The majority opinion, written by Justice William O. Douglas, relied squarely on the 14th Amendment, declaring that no state can deprive a person of the equal protection of the laws.

A state violates the equal protection clause, he said, whenever it makes "the affluence of the voter or payment of any fee an election standard."

"Wealth or fee-paying has no relation to voting qualifications," he declared. "The right to vote is too precious, too fundamental, to be burdened or conditioned."

This is the third significant federal court ruling this year on state poll taxes, and the poll-taxers have lost them all. In a suit brought by the Dept. of Justice, a three-judge court knocked out the Texas tax as a qualification for voting in state elections. In another, also a Justice Dept. action, a three-judge court split 2-1 in voiding the Alabama tax.

In the Alabama decision, the court held that the tax was intended to discriminate against Negro citizens, and did. In Texas, the court held that discrimination was the original purpose but ruled out the tax on other grounds, as comparable to a state's attempt to tax freedom of speech.

The Virginia case was brought by private persons, residents of the state, although the Dept. of Justice joined in arguing the case in behalf of the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court pointed to its earlier "one man, one vote" decision on the apportionment of state legislatures, in which it had said all voters were entitled to equal protection under state laws, and Douglas said:

"We decline to qualify that principle by upholding this [Virginia] poll tax."

The poll tax was ended as a requirement for voting in federal elections by the adoption of a constitutional amendment. Texas, Virginia, Alabama and Mississippi, however, held on to the system as a requirement for participating in non-federal elections. Now the system is swept aside in its entirety, for state and local elections as well.

THE VIRGINIA DECISION is another of the many events—the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 are others—that have cleared the way for an expansion of the electorate among groups that for practical purposes have been disenfranchised.

The court decision in Texas led the way for a special two-week registration period, and more than half a million citizens took advantage of their new freedom from restrictions to qualify as voters. The influx of new voters—among Negroes, those of Mexican descent as in Texas, the low-income groups generally—is bound to have an effect in future elections.

It may be conceded, as Justice John Marshall Harlan stated in dissenting in the Virginia case, that property qualifications and poll taxes were once a traditional part of the nation's political structure. Alexander Hamilton certainly believed that people with property are "more responsible, more educated, more knowledgeable" than others, and in many states early in our history there were property or tax-payment qualifications on the right to vote.

The people have gradually got rid of them—by state legislative action, by congressional action, by whatever means have been found available and useful. And city workers for generations played a part in this rejection of the tradition that the franchise may be restricted by improper and irrelevant means.

The Supreme Court action, applying the equal protection clause as a test on state poll taxes, ends another improper restriction.

THE DIRKSEN AMENDMENT to kill "one man, one vote" reapportionment of state legislatures is headed for its third defeat, Legislative Dir. Jack Beidler (center) of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. predicted. He was questioned by John Averill (left) of the Los Angeles Times and Julius Duscha of the Washington Post on Labor News Conference, the AFL-CIO weekly public affairs program on the Mutual Radio Network.

Food Industry Attacks Plans To Aid Consumers, Farmers

By Sidney Margolius

AFTER A YEAR of study, the staff of the National Commission on Food Marketing has made several recommendations that can help you keep down the cost of food.

But it didn't take long for the food industry to launch a bitter attack on these few proposals that would benefit both consumers and farmers. In fact, food-industry spokesmen were slamming back the next day.

Now it remains for the commission itself to decide whether to endorse or ignore its staff's recommendations. These include:

- The development of simple grades, such as A, B and C, to appear on all cans and packages. These would tell you just what quality you can expect.
- Passage of the bill urged by Sen. Philip Hart (D-Mich.) which would require clearer labeling of net contents, and in general bar packaging which may tend to deceive.
- Elimination of trading stamps.
- Prohibiting manufacturers from selling the same goods under different brand names at different prices.

The commission started its study because consumers have been paying more for food while farmers have been getting a decreasing share of the food dollar. The "marketing spread"—the difference between what you pay and what the farmer gets—used to be about 50 cents, what the food industry took for processing and selling the food. But in recent years it has expanded to 60 cents, and sometimes more.

For one reason, families have been buying more of the ready-to-eat foods on which manufacturers and stores usually get a higher mark-up. In fact, processing has got to the point where housewives don't even buy foods by their own name any more. Instead of oat, wheat or corn cereal, they buy "Kix," "Jets," "Puffs" and "Twinkles." Such sugar-sprinkled or cocoa-flavored cereals can cost as much as 96 cents a pound.

Too, manufacturers have been spending more of your food dollar on packaging and advertising. In just 10 years the amount spent on food advertising almost tripled and by 1964 totaled $2.2 billion, according to Service, the U.S. Agriculture Dept. newsletter.

NOR ARE higher wages really to blame for today's higher food prices. Experts testified before the commission that labor costs in food stores remained at the same 7 cents of your dollar from 1954 to 1964. Increases in hourly earnings were exactly matched by increases in output.

Another reason for the higher food prices is that gross margins of supermarkets now average about 20 percent compared to 12 percent when supers first appeared, Pres. Jerry Voorhis of the Cooperative League told the inquiry. Biggest increases in expenses have been in rents (quadrupled), interest payments (tripled) and advertising and promotion, Voorhis pointed out.

One of the most useful recommendations is that manufacturers be required to show an official grade on cans and packages. Then you would know that a particular brand meets an established standard for that grade, and have an intelligent basis for comparing values.

We did have such grades during World War II, but canners got this requirement eliminated as soon as they could after the war. The Agriculture Dept. has many such quality designations. Food processors and distributors usually use official grades in their own purchasing, but not often on their retail packages.

Agriculture Dept. grades are shown in a shield and say "U.S."; for example, "U.S. Grade A". Unofficial grades such as just "Grade A" or "Fancy" may be merely the manufacturer's own idea of the quality. Here are official grades sometimes shown on foods, in order of descending quality:

Beef, veal lamb: U.S. Choice, Good, Standard.
Poultry: U.S. A and B.
Eggs: U.S. AA, A and B (or may show state grades such as A, B and C).
Canned and processed fruits and vegetables: U.S. Grade A or U.S. Fancy; U. S. Grade B or U.S. Choice; U.S. Extra Standard; U.S. Grade C or U.S. Standard.
Cheddar cheese: U.S. Grades AA and A.

Gains Scored in War On Mental Illnesses

GOVERNMENT SURVEYS show that at least one person in 10 has some form of mental or emotional illness that requires psychiatric treatment.

Despite the new advances in therapy, greater numbers of patients were admitted to state hospitals last year than any other year in history. What is even more startling, the number of adolescent patients increased markedly.

What have scientists learned about this problem that affects so much of our population?

Studies of the chemistry of the human body have confirmed certain fundamental facts. Mental and emotional disorders are sicknesses. Some are disturbances of functions in the body, just as are physical illnesses. Like physical illnesses, too, the earlier many of the mental illnesses are treated the better the chances of recovery.

There are many different types of mental illness and many different degrees of sickness. An emotional or mental disorder may be as mild as a head cold or as severe as a coronary. It can affect anyone of any background, nationality or age.

Thus, research must span every area of the sciences concerned with man to determine the causes of the different types of disorders, the methods of treatment and the path to possible prevention.

With grants from the Research Foundation of the National Association for Mental Health, scientists are forging ahead probing the many factors and developing new clues. Explorations cover biological, psychological and social science areas.

Many studies of childhood schizophrenia are in process. This tragic psychosis in the young accounts for 23 percent of the new admissions to mental hospitals, with a majority of victims in the 15-30 year age group. Research has now demonstrated that even infants can develop childhood schizophrenia. With proper treatment, however, many can be restored to normal or nearly normal living.

Not so long ago children with schizophrenic symptoms were classified as brain damaged or mentally retarded and were relegated to a lifetime of custodial care. Now, because of earlier and more effective treatment, the rate of total or partial recovery has increased from 20 percent to 60 percent since 1920.

In the area of behavioral and environmental science, researchers are exploring a wide range of factors in mother-child interactions, in family relationships, in reactions to stress and in adjustment to group or work situations.

One important study bearing on rehabilitation focussed on work performance of discharged mental patients. The study disclosed that those who returned to their former occupations had work performances that are good and sometimes superior. Only with such evidence, accumulated in an authoritative, scientific study, can avenues be opened for rehabilitation of the mentally ill.

Stars May Incline, Not Compel, But How They Can Panic a Girl!

By Jane Goodsell

BEING AS EAGER as the next person to make the most of my opportunities, I bought an astrology magazine which promised to show me how to meet life's challenges armed with vital knowledge of my planetary aspects. Thus enlightened, I could—so the magazine assured me—"play a starring role in the magnificent daily theatre."

These were glittering promises, and I was feverish with anticipation when I opened the magazine to the table of contents. Two hours later, when I threw it across the room, I was trembling like a leaf. Far from being prepared to meet the future with assurance and decisiveness, I was ready to jump into bed and pull the covers over my head.

The first article I read, titled "Safety First," expounded the theory that the configuration of the planets makes certain days susceptible to particular disasters. Safety First depends on knowing which perils to avoid when, say, Scorpio and Taurus are in conjunction or when Pisces is in the ascendant.

Doubtless the article was meant to be helpful, but it scared me more than anything I've read since "Dracula."

I'M SORRY I can't tell you much about the essay called "Here's Power You Can Grasp" because I couldn't grasp it myself. I went under for the third time on the sentence: "The importance of the event is commensurate with the strength of the lunar aspect that precipitates it in the light of the significance of the major progression." Egad!

And incidentally, you'd better check the lunar chart before you go shopping. If you buy anything except leather goods when the moon is in Scorpio, it won't wear well. Although I can't say for sure, I'll just bet the moon was in you-know-where when I bought a new spring coat last week.

What really upset me, though, was my horoscopic character analysis. It accused me of being aggressive and temperamental, and cautioned that the Sun in my 12th lunar house showed a need for slowing down my normal activities and playing a behind-the-scenes role. Can you beat it? I'd been assured a starring role in the magnificent daily theatre, and instead I'm told to stay behind the scenes and catch up on my correspondence.

That's when I hurled the magazine across the room.

Federationist Report:

Benefit Gaps Seen Growing In Workmen's Compensation

Shortcomings of state workmen's compensation laws and vast differences in benefits from one state to another are scrutinized in the March issue of the AFL-CIO magazine, The American Federationist.

Lawrence Smedley, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, details the growing gap between the purpose and the actuality of workmen's compensation.

The purpose of the laws is to compensate employes for loss of earning power because of temporary or permanent disability from an on-the-job accident or occupational disease—and to compensate his family for the loss of a breadwinner if the worker dies.

But as with other state-determined social insurance programs, the adequacy of protection has declined over the years.

Smedley points out that when workmen's compensation laws were first enacted during the 1910-1916 period, a large majority of workers was eligible to receive two-thirds of wages during disablement.

While the two-thirds formula is still common, dollar ceilings on maximum benefits make this meaningless for most workers, he asserts.

At present, only three states provide a benefit ceiling equal to two-thirds of the state's average weekly wage. More than half the states have maximum benefits less than 50 percent of the average wage.

In contrast, Smedley ponts out, in 1940 only 10 states had maximum benefit levels for temporary total disability less than two-thirds of the state's average wage and none less than 50 percent.

What is the cost of an eye, an arm—or a life?

It depends, Smedley notes, on what state you happen to live in.

Under state laws setting varying price tags, a worker who loses an eye in Arizona can receive up to $16,800. But a similar disability in Mississippi carries a dollar ceiling of only $3,000.

The loss of a hand in Hawaii will bring more compensation than the loss of an arm at the shoulder in every other state but one.

Medical care payments and rehabilitation facilities also vary enormously from one state to another. Some states have no provision at all for rehabilitation of permanently disabled workers even though experience has shown that amazing accomplishments can be achieved with proper training.

21 Standards

The Federationist article lists 21 standards which should be met by a good workmen's compensation law. These include such points as compulsory coverage of all employers, with no exemptions, full medical benefits and choice of physician, complete coverage of occupational diseases, a rehabilitation program including maintenance benefits. Ceilings on benefits should be not less than two-thirds of the state's average weekly wage, and benefits should be paid during the entire period of disability. Also recommended is coverage under an exclusive state compensation fund.

Except for the exclusive state fund, all of the standards listed in the Federationist article have been recommended by the U.S. Dept. of Labor and the Intl. Association of Industrial Accident Boards & Commissions.

Yet no state meets all these standards and only 18 states meet more than half of them, Smedley notes.

OLLIE A. RANDALL AWARD of the National Council of the Aging for distinguished service to older people was presented to Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers and the union by Edwin F. Shelley (center), vice president of the council, and Charles Odell, board member of the council, who recently resigned as director of the UAW Older & Retired Workers Dept.

Sanctions Urged to Fight South Africa's Apartheid

The American people do not want to be "defiled by the dirty profits" from a nearly-slave economy in South Africa, Kenneth Robinson, Auto Workers executive board member, testified before the House Subcommittee on Africa in calling for sanctions against that nation.

Robinson appeared for UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther. He was a member of a UAW delegation sent to South Africa last November on invitation of the Metal Workers Union and the South African Trade Union Council which was denied admission by the government.

"It is our view," he told the subcommittee, "that the American people, if they knew what this committee knows . . . would indignantly demand . . . immediate and decisive action to exert every possible pressure to end the vicious system of apartheid."

Specifically Robinson called for support of UN sanctions. In advance of such action, he urged that the United States refrain from giving any financial support to South Africa, that all U.S. purchases there be stopped, that export controls be utilized to stop all sales by U.S. companies to the Republic of South Africa; that the secretary of the treasury study the possibility of barring from this country South African products made under conditions of forced labor, and U.S. companies that operate under conditions of apartheid be denied tax benefits.

Lowest Wages

"What attracts business corporations to South Africa is the opportunity to couple the most advanced technology and production processes to the lowest wages paid in any industrial country of the world.

"This linking in turn is made possible by the totalitarian tyranny of apartheid, the pass laws, the suppression of the right to organize, the suppression of civil liberties and the denial to more than 12 million men and women of their basic humanity."

He also called apartheid—the rigid separation of races—"intolerable in a civilized world, an abrasion on the consciences of the international community, a threat to world peace, and a monstrous economic growth which concerns every wage-earner."

Labor Protests Scrapping of Income Survey

The AFL-CIO has strongly protested the failure of the Commerce Dept. to ask for funds in its budget proposals to resume compilation of the statistical series on size distribution of family personal income.

The series, prepared in the past by the Office of Business Economics, was discontinued last year, and the AFL-CIO was advised then that publication had been dropped temporarily pending a comprehensive revision.

"No other income series gives so complete an accounting of total personal income received by individual families," AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nat Goldfinger wrote Sec. of Commerce John T. Connor. "The income picture it delineates cannot be disregarded or attacked on the grounds that it omits any significant source of income. . . . [the] series ranks as a major statistical weapon in the war on poverty, and the development of public and private policies in waging this war. . . .

"We believe that none of the statistical services rendered by the federal government is of greater importance than those developed for the measurement of the economic condition of American families. We are deeply concerned at the erosion which has been permitted to take place in this work."

Appalachia's Needy Aided by Retirees

Plainfield, N. J.—Members of the Golden Thread Club for Senior Citizens, composed of former needle trades workers retired under the Ladies' Garment Workers pension plan, have sent their first shipment of used clothing to the Appalachian region of West Virginia.

Operation Help the Needy, under way for a month under the direction of Mrs. Rose Scarano, collected used garments from area dress shops, repaired them when necessary and shipped them to destinations chosen with the aid of the AFL-CIO Community Services Activities and Pres. Miles C. Stanley of the West Virginia AFL-CIO.

The club members, who meet regularly in headquarters of ILGWU Local 149 here, sent the clothing to the Clay County Development Corp., Clay, and the West Virginia branch of the Council of the Southern Mountains, Welch.

500,000 Find Work In Neighborhood Corps

The nation's disadvantaged young people have been given a half-million jobs during the first year of the Neighborhood Youth Corps, according to a report on the first 12 months of operations.

Hope and pride have been aroused where none existed before; social values and living standards have been aroused, and crime rates have dropped, the Labor Dept. notes in the report, "From a World of Poverty to a Life of Hope."

"The NYC has identified the poor —those most in need of special help —has reached them and is drawing them surely, and in large numbers, into the mainstream of social and economic life," said Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz.

"The NYC has been remarkably active and effective in its one year of operation. Recognizing that what happens to the enrollee at the termination of his enrollment is the crucial measurement of the success or failure of the program, NYC has taken the initiative in job development. Thousands of NYC-trained youths are now working at permanent jobs with private employers. And those jobs are testimony to the fact that we will win the war on poverty."

The report shows that about 200,000 youth have been graduated. At least 30 percent of the enrollees, it adds, have gone into full-time jobs and another 27 percent either have returned to school or entered advanced training programs. Many later enter the Job Corps, undertake work-study programs, or go into the military service.

During the year the NYC opened 1,446 home-town, private non-profit organizational projects which provided the approximately 500,000 jobs, the report says. At the end of the year 699 projects were giving employment to 195,000 young men and women.

The report cites individual and group success stories and observes:

"When a 'failure' succeeds at something for the first time in his life, his world will never be the same again.

"This is particularly true when the person is young and learns, through succeeding, that his future is something he can help to mold to his own liking."

The NYC is open to youth from 16 to 21 years of age from families with gross earnings of $3,000 or less a year.

"Some were in school, on the verge of dropping out," the report says. Others were already dropouts—social rejects, school misfits, jobless, often fatherless, sometimes dabblers in juvenile delinquency, or, in many cases, youths who thought that being poor was their inherited, inescapable role in life."

The NYC is headed by former Vice Pres. Jack Howard of the Newspaper Guild.

AIFLD School Moved, To Emphasize Teaching

The training school of the American Institute for Free Labor Development has been moved from Washington to Front Royal, Va., and its emphasis shifted to teacher education, Administrator William C. Doherty, Jr., has announced.

The new quarters, called the AIFLD Front Royal Institute, formerly was used as an educational institute by the Communications Workers.

The school will be directed by John P. Caldwell, former vice president of the State, County & Municipal Employes and a one-time international representative of the Woodworkers. He succeeds Sam Haddad, now director of the AIFLD education department.

The facilities are large enough to instruct, house and feed the trainees under one roof in contrast to Washington, where the students attended classes in midcity, were housed in nearby hotels and ate in restaurants. One of the reasons for the relocation, Doherty said, was the rising cost of housing and feeding the trainees in Washington.

Front Royal is close enough to Washington to permit field trips to visit government installations and union headquarters. The 74-acre estate, sloping down to the Shenandoah River, offers a wide range of recreational facilities that were lacking in Washington, including swimming, fishing and boating.

The first class, consisting of 20 instructor-trainees—two each from Uruguay, Argentina, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Colombia, Venezuela and Ecuador, plus four AIFLD employes—is already in residence.

12-Week Courses

It is planned to offer three 12-week courses each year aimed at upgrading the skills of Latin American union leaders and AIFLD staff members so as to spread the effect of the education programs.

The courses, in addition to orientation, include advanced teaching techniques; history and structure of national and international labor movements; labor legislation; collective bargaining; labor and politics; the Alliance for Progress, and democratic vs. totalitarian political and economic systems.

GHAA Elects Dr. Lorin Kerr As President

St. Louis, Mo.—Dr. Lorin D. Kerr of Washington, D. C., was elected president of the Group Health Association of America by the directors following the annual membership meeting here. He succeeds Kenneth McCaffree, Seattle, Wash., professor of economics at the University of Washington, who was chosen chairman of the board.

Kerr is assistant to the executive medical officer of the Mine Workers' welfare and retirement fund. GHAA officers who were re-elected include Third Vice Pres. Isidor Melamed, executive director of the AFL-CIO Hospital Association of Philadelphia.

The GHAA restated its opposition to discrimination because of race, creed or color, and discrimination against group practice physicians in the matter of hospital privileges and medical society membership.

Major Drive Planned for 'Truth' Laws

Representatives of nearly 50 million consumers will gather in Washington next month to push for enactment of a broad program of consumer legislation.

The AFL-CIO and six international unions are among 30 national organizations serving as a steering committee for "Consumer Assembly '66," the largest consumer-oriented gathering ever to be held in the capital.

In addition to organized labor, representatives of business, cooperatives, credit unions, church and social clubs and senior citizen groups are mapping the three-day conference, Apr. 25-27.

David Angevine of the Cooperative League of the USA, chairman of the program's steering committee, said delegates from hundreds of organizations in all states would attend and participate. The conference will hear from congressional sponsors of consumer legislation, government experts and nationally known authorities.

Their subjects will be truth-in-packaging, truth-in-lending, automobiles, tires, medical and drug quality and costs, utility rates and air and water pollution.

Among those scheduled to participate are Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.), Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.), Rep. Wright Patman (D-Tex.), and Rep. Leonor Sullivan (D-Mo.).

Others will be Esther Peterson, special assistant to Pres. Johnson for consumer affairs; Ralph Nader, author of "Unsafe at Any Speed," and Sidney Margolius, whose consumer column appears in the AFL-CIO News.

N.Y. Teachers' Dewey Award Cites Morse

New York—The United Federation of Teachers gave its 1966 John Dewey award to Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) at the union's annual spring conference and also saluted three unexpected guests — Prince Philip of Britain; Earl Mountbatten, his uncle, and Mayor John Lindsay, who "dropped in" while Philip and the Earl were visiting this city.

More than 3,000 teachers attended the conference luncheon and a dozen workshops and panel discussions on educational techniques. The conference, with UFT member Fred Koury as chairman, marked the 50th anniversary of the founding of the UFT—Local 2 of the American Federation of Teachers.

UFT Pres. Albert Shanker presented the Dewey award to Morse for his lifelong interest in education. Past award winners include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, and the late Adlai Stevenson, who was U.S. ambassador to the United Nations.

Midwest Editors Set June Parley

Iowa City, Ia.—A workshop for unions which want to start publications will be one feature of the Midwest Labor Press Association's annual conference June 2-4 at the University of Iowa here.

The conference agenda includes a talk by Iowa Gov. Harold E. Hughes (D), panel discussions on the role of the press in implementing legislation, letterpress and mimeographing workshops, and a "case study" of recent election successes.

MASSIVE EXPANSION of federal aid to housing was urged by Sec. Joseph D. Keenan (left) of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, keynote speaker at the 35th annual meeting of the National Housing Conference in Washington. Sec. Robert C. Weaver (center) of the Dept. of Housing & Urban Development was the principal speaker at the conference dinner, for which Rep. Albert Rains (D-Ala.) was toastmaster.

Keenan Urges Boost In Federal Housing Aid

The national goal of a decent home for all Americans can be achieved only through massive expansion in federal aid for construction of housing and "all the other facilities which go to make up a good living environment," Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers told the National Housing Conference.

Keenan, chairman of the NHC convention committee, gave the keynote speech at the organization's 35th annual convention in Washington.

The focus of expanded activity in housing, he emphasized, "must be on the needs of low- and moderate-income families, most of whom are poorly served in our present environment."

He reiterated the NHC contention that in the quest for good housing for low-income families, maximum participation by private enterprise must be encouraged, but warned that the "fast buck" artist has invaded the field of homes for the elderly under Federal Housing Administration programs.

"He has willfully construed 'low cost' housing to mean 'cheap' housing," Keenan said. "He has been willing to cut corners and produce shoddy, ill-planned, cheaply-constructed housing to be rented or sold at monthly costs beyond the economic reach of those for whom the homes were originally intended.

"Cutting corners and shoddy construction may produce 'low cost' housing, but it is the 'highest cost' housing that can possibly be built from the point of view of maintenance and continued life. When approved, it is licensed larceny. Every safeguard against such continuing practices must be one of our major goals throughout this and every year ahead."

Keenan reviewed the part the NHC has played in the housing field during its lifetime and laid its success to two factors—its total commitment to the public interest, and its service as a clearing house and policy base for national and local leadership in support of enabling legislation.

Harry C. Bates, president-emeritus of the Bricklayers, and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers were re-elected NHC vice presidents. Newly elected to the board of directors were William Oliver, co-chairman of the UAW Fair Practices Dept., and Alex Fuller, secretary of the Steelworkers' Civil Rights Committee.

Re-elected directors were Keenan, Administrative Dir. Jack T. Conway of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Ben Fischer of the USWA; Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Pres. Edward J. Leonard of the Plasterers; Lawrence M. Raftery, retired president of the Painters; Sec. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Housing Committee, and Pres. John W. Edelman of the National Council of Senior Citizens.

The conference in a resolution reaffirmed its commitment to equal opportunity in housing for all American families. It recognized the progress of recent years, deplored the continuing deprival of opportunity because of race, color, creed or national origin, and declared that overcoming the denial and dissipating "myths" about inability to pay for and maintain good homes are "great challenges" to the nation.

The delegates approved Pres. Johnson's messages and bills on demonstration cities and urban development, and called on the real estate and mortgage lending industries "to provide their full support to, and cooperation with, local-federal collaboration for the peace, security and welfare of the nation."

'Revitalized' FDA Urged:

LBJ Asks Package Of Consumer Bills

A group of bills designed to protect consumers from excessive credit costs and from deceptive or misleading labeling or packaging of consumer goods was urged by Pres. Johnson in a special message to Congress.

In addition, the President asked for a new Child Safety Act and a Drug Safety Act to prohibit or regulate the sale of hazardous drugs, paints, cosmetics and other substances and a "revitalized" Food & Drug Administration to enforce the standards.

He reported a program of consumer education, operated by the Office of Economic Opportunity, to promote the use of "cooperative sources of low-cost credit" by 7 million families with poverty-level incomes and said the OEO had already made 56 grants to support consumer credit education programs in local communities.

Johnson added a declaration that the "wisest consumer laws" will not protect the public "if their hard-earned dollars and savings are eroded by inflation."

The past five years of economic expansion, he said, have been the "most inflation-free" in the nation's history and he urged continued "responsible" action by labor and private business firms so that the country has "the benefits of full employment and price stability—not one at the expense of the other."

Fair Standards

Fair packaging and labeling legislation, the President told Congress, should include these provisions:

- A requirement that the "nature and quantity" of the contents of food and other packaged products should be carried on the package in a "simple, direct, accurate and visible" form.
- Packages with "deceptively shaped boxes" and meaningless adjectives, quantity markings and promotional gimmicks should be kept off the shelves of stores.
- "Reasonable and appropriate weight standards" should be adopted so that packages would carry information "to facilitate comparative shopping."

A bill to provide such consumer protections, sponsored by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) and Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.), is pending in the Senate Commerce Committee.

A "truth-in-lending" statute, long advocated by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), also was urged by Johnson to meet "the right of the consumer to know the actual cost" of money he borrows to finance payment for automobiles, travel costs, education costs or any other article or service he buys.

The legislation should require lenders "to state the full cost of credit, simply and clearly, before any credit contract is signed," the President said.

Credit Is Key

Credit charges are "a key item in the consumer budget," totaling $24 billion last year, he observed, and people have the right to "know the cost of credit in the same clear terms as the price of milk or gasoline."

Three "related items" to reinforce consumer protections, Johnson said, would ban from commerce household substances "so hazardous that warning labels are not adequate safeguards," authorize the FDA to stiffen regulation of the sale and labeling of drugs, and broaden training programs for state safety officials.

The President pointed out that he had recommended truth-in-lending and truth-in-packaging legislation in 1964 and that the late Pres. Kennedy had made a similar recommendation in 1962.

The consumer protections needed by low-income families, Johnson emphasized, arise from the fact that they most urgently lack the knowledge and capacity to shop effectively for bargains and that they "are often victimized by excessive costs of credit and merchandise."

Information and regulation programs cannot cure such "basic maladies" arising from low-income levels, he said, but such programs "can lessen their impact."

were: A. Philip Randolph, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and AFL-CIO vice president; Dr. Martin Luther King, Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Roy Wilkins, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Whitney Young, Jr., National Urban League; Floyd McKissick, Congress of Racial Equality; John Lewis, Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, and Dorothy Height, National Council of Negro Women.

For some 30 million persons already covered by a $1.25 wage floor, the minimum would rise to $1.40 on Feb. 1, 1967, and to $1.60 on Feb. 1, 1968.

Newly covered workers would begin at $1 next February and, except for farm workers, rise in 15-cent annual steps to the $1.60 level. The cutoff wage for agricultural workers—brought under the minimum wage for the first time—would be $1.30.

The full Labor Committee added some 500,000 workers to the 6.5 million covered by the subcommittee bill. These are federal employes paid under non-appropriated funds, most of whom work at military PX stores, commissaries, officers' clubs and other self-financing operations.

Other major groups covered include some 1.5 million retail employes, 1.4 million hospital workers, 580,000 construction workers, nearly 700,000 hotel and restaurant employes, 500,000 laundry workers and 485,000 farm workers.

Under-21 Rate

The committee softened the bill by voting to permit persons under 21 to be paid at 75 percent of the minimum wage for the first six weeks of their employment career. The bill also gives a limited overtime exemption for management trainees in retail and service establishments. It permits hiring of students without regard to age at 85 percent of the minimum wage for retail, service or farm jobs under certificates issued by the Secretary of Labor.

Labor Committee Chairman Adam C. Powell announced that Rep. Alphonzo Bell (R-Calif.) will join Subcommittee Chairman John H. Dent (D-Pa.) in sponsoring the bill, giving it a bipartisan flavor.

The measure is expected to reach the House floor in late April, either with Rules Committee approval or under the "21-day rule" which permits legislation to be brought to the floor without going through the Rules Committee.

In other congressional action:

- The first consumer bill—a tire safety measure aimed at developing meaningful standards for various grades of tires—was scheduled for Senate action after winning approval in the Commerce Committee.
- Chairman Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.) of the Senate Interior Committee introduced a bill to carry out presidential recommendations for a National Water Commission. The President on Feb. 23 proposed such a commission to advise on ways of providing "more usable water for our cities, our industries, and our farms." In a subsequent message, Johnson relayed to Congress a report proposing a broad range of water research and a doubling of present appropriations.

Meany Presses Goal Of Liberal Congress

Everett McKinley Dirksen, "the new darling of the conservatives."

"This means," he emphasized, "that we work with COPE, that we don't work with any political party, whether it is Republican, Democratic or anything else."

He warned the delegates that employer organizations are spearheading "a vicious propaganda campaign" against the trade union movement.

"The public is being told, from editorial pages, from slanted news, from articles in our slick paper magazines, that American labor is too powerful, that it has too much political power, that it is a bad influence on the economy of the country as a whole. They hold over the heads of the American people the threat of inflation and they tie that to what they call the unrestricted power of unions to exact exorbitant wage demands."

To some "jitterbug" economists, Meany said, "there are two kinds of money in this country."

In their view, the money that goes into "astronomical profits" of corporations and "fabulous salaries" of executives is not inflationary; "it is only the money that the fellow in overalls gets in his pay envelope that is inflationary."

The "inflation" scare, Meany noted, is even used as an argument against a substantial increase in the minimum wage because the lowest paid workers would receive increases above the "guidelines."

With indignation, he told the delegates:

"We have tens of thousands of people in this country who are fully employed . . . but also on relief. Put that little fact in your pipe and smoke it. Fully employed — tens of thousands of them—and still on relief in order to feed their families."

The labor movement, he said, knows what power is. "We meet it across the bargaining tables. We see it in the management structure from one end of this country to another."

Power for Good

So far as union power is concerned, Meany said, "I have no objection to a powerful trade union movement and I don't see why anyone else would have an objection so long as that power is directed toward the good of the country as a whole."

Labor is using its power for good, he declared, by raising living standards for all, by building up purchasing power that keeps the economy growing, by struggling to extend the minimum wage law to millions who do not belong to unions, by spending its money to strengthen democracy in Latin America, Africa and Asia, by its support of charitable organizations.

"When we do all these things, I submit that we are using our power for the good of the country as a whole, not selfishly for ourselves."

Despite setbacks, despite some anti-labor laws, Meany said, the pattern of the American trade union movement over the years has been "constant improvement in the conditions of life and of work for the American wage earner and his family. And I am sure that it is going to continue to be that way."

Strike Activity Shows Decline

Strike activity in January was under that of January 1965 by every count, according to the Labor Dept.

Lost time amounted to 1 million man-days compared to 1.8 million a year earlier, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics reported. The 205 stoppages that began during the month contrasted with 260 that started in January 1965. Involved were 101,000 workers compared with 107,000 a year earlier. Strikes that continued from December raised the respective totals to 127,000 and 188,000, the report showed.

The percentage of estimated working time lost dropped from 18 one-hundredths of 1 per cent in January 1965 to 9 one-hundredths of 1 percent the past January.

MORE THAN 4,000 delegates to the 11th legislative conference of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. meet in general session before going to Capitol Hill to urge their congressmen and senators to support labor's program. Passage of the on-site picketing bill was a major conference goal.

ployer construction site if a union has a dispute with one of the contractors or subcontractors.

Four Presidents have urged Congress to legalize such picketing and a situs picketing bill has been cleared by the House Labor and Rules Committees.

Frank Bonadio, secretary-treasurer of the Building & Construction Trades Dept., referred to it in a report to the delegates as "the bill we want most." Bonadio presided at the conference in the absence of Pres. C. J. Haggerty, who is recuperating from an operation.

Wirtz told the delegates they were "rightly" impatient at the delay in eliminating the "unintended, unfair, discriminatory restriction of on-site picketing."

Their unions, he noted, have supported every legislative proposal to strengthen the nation and have sought nothing for labor "unless it could be fairly identified as being also in the public interest."

The impatience is additionally justified, Wirtz said, "for the way things have started" with failure to repeal the "right-to-work" section of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"When the issue is as important as repealing Section 14(b)," he added, "we aren't going to do any pretending about being good losers —not when we lost because we were denied even the right to a vote."

House Speaker John W. McCormack acknowledged that there are problems in getting the situs picketing bill to an early vote in the House but voiced confidence that it will be acted on this session.

"John McCormack has not given up the fight for the on-site picketing bill," he pledged.

He warned the delegates that there will be efforts to cut back coverage of the minimum wage bill when it reaches the floor and urged unity behind the House committee bill.

The ranking Republican member of the House Labor Committee, William H. Ayres of Ohio, told the conference he had assurances that Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen would not filibuster against the on-site picketing bill, as he did against 14(b) repeal.

Pledges of strong support for labor's program came from House Majority Leader Carl Albert and Sen. Russell B. Long, assistant Democratic leader in the Senate.

Albert predicted that the House will pass all three top bills—situs picketing, minimum wage and unemployment insurance. Both he and Long identified their party with the aspirations of labor.

Albert and Long stressed that the big majority of Democrats in the House and Senate had supported 14(b) repeal. Ayres argued that 14(b) repeal and other major legislation couldn't have passed the House without the help of some Republican votes:

In other addresses to the conference:

● Under Sec. of Labor John G. Henning termed the failure of the 14(b) repeal drive "a critical reversal" but declared that "the issue is not dead" and "ultimate victory" will be achieved.

Apprentice Help

He praised the cooperation of building trades unions in expanding apprenticeship opportunities for Negroes and other minority groups and said building trades leaders in New York—under criticism recently by a city official—were "champions of equal opportunity in apprenticeship."

● Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.), who will be floor manager of the on-site picketing bill, said there are the votes in the House to pass the bill when it is brought up. Thompson noted that a large number of freshmen congressmen had voted for 14(b) repeal, and told the delegates:

"I hope that you will not forget them . . . because they are going to need your help, and they deserve all the help you can give them."

● Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.) reported that he has been "well educated" on labor's legislative goals by New Jersey union members and "I will do my share."

● AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said BCTD Pres. Haggerty and Legislative Rep. Walter Mason had worked wholeheartedly for every bill of interest to labor, and the AFL-CIO's legislative staff will give "all-out support" to the on-site picketing bill.

● Louis Sherman, general counsel for the department, briefed delegates on amendments to the situs picketing bill being proposed by Rep. Charles E. Goodell (R-N.Y.). Some Goodell amendments merely add language which wouldn't change the effect of the bill, Sherman noted, but others would limit its scope and should be opposed. One such amendment would limit picketing to employers whose principal business is construction. This, he warned, would exclude such firms as a cement company which is also "one of the biggest construction companies in its area."

Also on the department's 1966 legislative program are expansion of Davis-Bacon Act coverage, public works and health facilities construction, strengthened civil rights laws, bigger housing and education programs, amendment of the Small Business Act, and other Taft-Hartley changes.

Delegates gave a rising ovation to a spokesman for the Navy's Seabees and voted unanimous endorsement of the current recruitment campaign to enlist skilled workers for construction service in Viet Nam.

Schoemann Hits Holdup On Site Picketing Bill

Reports that Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) is holding up action on the situs picketing bill "until his own terms are met" are an indication that the "Democratic Party can't deliver" on legislation, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann declared.

Schoemann, president of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, cited newspaper reports that Powell had conferred with Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, who had strongly urged passage of the bill earlier in the week, and that Powell had insisted on prior conditions, including passage of the wage-hour bill, improvement in fair employment practices legislation and prior consideration of the jobsite picketing bill by the Senate.

Referring to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's comments to the legislative sessions of the Building & Construction Trades Dept. that the Democratic Party in Congress "can't deliver," Schoemann said:

"That is what we mean when we say the Democratic Party can't deliver or doesn't really want to."

His comments came at a luncheon honoring retired Plumbers & Pipe Fitters Sec.-Treas. William C. O'Neill attended by 900 persons, including the union's delegates to the legislative meeting. O'Neill was praised for his decades of dedicated service to the union and his record as a general officer.

Schoemann said that the union had been "bitterly and tragically disappointed" in the past six months with Congress and Administration policies. He said the building trades had been subjected to a "barrage of anti-union propaganda." He singled out the wage-price guideposts as "wage dictatorship."

Assessing the relative roles of the two major parties and their relations with labor, Schoemann said the Republican Party owed little if anything to organized labor but that the Democratic Party "has put itself deeply in debt to the organized labor movement. It has taken much and it has given back very, very little," he commented.

Higher Pay Hikes Mark Major '65 Settlements

Average (median) wage increases of 3.9 percent during the first contract year were scored in major collective bargaining agreements negotiated in 1965, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Labor Dept.

Over the full runs of the contracts, the BLS reported, the gains average 3.3 percent per year.

Agreements negotiated in 1964 yielded 3.2 percent the first year and 3 percent per year over the full terms, while those bargained out in 1963 returned 3 percent and 2.3 percent, respectively, the report showed.

One of the factors involved in the higher figure for 1965 was the basic steel contract settlement, which provided what the BLS called a "very large" increase for the first year, but no across-the-board raise in the second. By contrast, 1964 settlements in the auto and related industries yielded either no first-year raise, or a small one. There also in 1965 was an "unusual concentration" of settlements deferred from the previous year, the BLS said, with the result that some groups of workers received two pay hikes in one year.

The BLS found that about 3.5 million workers were affected by major settlements concluded in 1965, with a comparable number getting wage increases under contracts negotiated in previous years. These included wage raises, cost of living adjustments, or a combination of the two, the report said.

The 7 million workers who received wage increases in 1965 under major contracts—either new or old —averaged 3.5 percent, the BLS said, compared to 3.2 percent in 1964 and 3.4 percent in 1963.

Through Tax-Credit Repeal:

Labor Urges Check On '1-Sector' Boom

The AFL-CIO told Congress that "an unsustainable capital goods boom" is responsible for what is erroneously described as the threat of general inflation, and should be remedied by repeal of the present 7 percent tax credit for business investment in new plant and equipment.

Nathaniel Goldfinger, director of the federation's Dept. of Research, urged the subcommittee on fiscal policy of the Joint Economic Committee to avoid a "general blunderbuss approach" to what he described as a "special problem."

"At present, flexible restraint of the one-sector capital goods boom is required, rather than tough general restraints on both consumer income and business income," he said.

The AFL-CIO's chief economist stressed his conviction that there is no present danger of inflation.

"There are no general, widespread inflationary shortages of goods, productive capacity and manpower," he said. "There is no generally excessive demand for goods in short supply. There is no consumer scare-buying or hoarding. Neither is there evidence of a widespread, sharp buildup of business inventories.

"In addition, the increase of social security taxes . . . is cutting into consumer income by about $2.5 billion this year. And the recent tax measure adopted by Congress will have the effect of withdrawing another $1 billion, or close to it, from consumer buying power in 1966.

"Moreover, the economy is not yet at full employment or at the ceiling of its vast productive ability."

However, Goldfinger went on, the "one-sector boom" in capital investment is "creating distortions and some localized strains in the economy." He recalled that Prof. Arthur Okun, now a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said in 1963 that outlays for new plant and equipment could not be safely maintained at more than 10 percent of total national production; yet the rate in 1965 was 10.3 percent and is expected to reach 11 percent this year, "perhaps $7-8 billion above a sustainable level."

"The capital goods boom has been encouraged and fed by government policy," Goldfinger noted, with these results:

"From 1960 to 1965 profits rose 50 percent before taxes and 66 percent after taxes—approximately twice as fast as the 27 percent increase in wage and salary payments and much faster than the 33 percent rise in personal income."

The cash flow to corporations has also risen 56 percent over the same period the AFL-CIO spokesman continued.

"These lopsided flows of income have fed the one-sector boom . . . that is distorting the economy," he said. "This distortion — which threatens some price pressures now and an economic decline in the future—should be curbed by rescinding the 7 percent tax credit and/or increasing corporate tax rates.

"If there are inflationary pressures anywhere in the private economy at present, they are to be found in the one-sector boom of profits and capital goods outlays."

Goldfinger assailed the "alternative suggestion of some people—to curtail government investments in human resources and needed public services"—as "grossly unfair and, perhaps, socially dangerous."

On the contrary, he maintained, the government should sustain these efforts and should be prepared, when military spending levels off or declines, to "increase its investment in the improvement of public services and human resources."

Barbers' Locals Sign for Pensions

Indianapolis, Ind. — More than 750 Barbers local unions and guilds have contributed to the union's newly established pension fund and some $500,000 in deposits is being invested by the fund's bank, Pres. Joseph N. DePaola said in a first report.

The union's first pension plan for members got under way Jan. 1. About 100 more locals are expected to join, said DePaola, who is also the union's pension chairman. Members contribute $5 a month for pension and death coverage.

Pay, Job Measures Pushed to Lift Poor

The AFL-CIO urged expansion of the anti-poverty program, coupled with vigorous steps to raise wages of the "working poor" and improve the lot of the aged and others unable to work.

Miles C. Stanley, assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, also called on Congress to inaugurate "a federally supported job-creating program that would put the hard-core unemployed to work providing needed public services in the communities in which they live."

Stanley presented labor's views in a statement filed with the House Education and Labor Committee, making these main points:

- "A good beginning" has been made in the first 18 months of the anti-poverty program despite inevitable problems of a "pioneer experiment."
- To achieve the goals of the Economic Opportunity Act, "far more resources must be committed . . . to projects like the Neighborhood Youth Corps and the Community Action Programs like Operation Head Start."
- The biggest part of the poverty problem can be licked only by "the creation of enough job opportunities at decent pay to meet the needs of all Americans willing and able to work, the extension of collective bargaining, and the provision of adequate minimum wages and coverage and improved unemployment compensation."

Stanley said labor is "deeply disappointed" at the Administration's failure to recommend a bigger budget for the poverty program.

He pointed out that after five years of "prosperity for most Americans . . . 32 million of our fellow citizens still live in abject poverty and millions more hover at its fringe."

National Goal

The attack on poverty, he said, is a national commitment, "yet the resources we are allocating toward this purpose are altogether insufficient in terms of both the need and of our abilities."

Discussing specific anti-poverty programs, Stanley urged that the experience of trade unions in training workers be better utilized in the Job Corps program.

He termed the proposed budget for the Neighborhood Youth Corps "entirely too low," noting that last month over 50,000 applicants had to be turned away for lack of funds.

Project Head Start has been "universally acclaimed," Stanley noted, and its proposed expansion to serve an additional 100,000 children "is not enough."

He cautioned that "if, for lack of financing, the forward momentum of the Office for Economic Opportunity is lost and the reasonable expectations of the poor are frustrated, incalculable harm will be done."

Urging the creation of jobs for the hard-core unemployed, Stanley said:

"Such a program should be tailored to meet the employment requirements of men and women with competitive disadvantages that prevent them from qualifying for jobs in private enterprises.

"However, no 'make-work' jobs should be contemplated. These people should be employed to help meet a huge backlog of public service needs—in parks and playgrounds, in educational institutions, in hospitals, libraries and nursing homes, in public protection activities and in other public and private nonprofit undertakings."

He noted that the National Commission on Technology, Automation and Economic Progress suggested such a program to provide 500,000 jobs.

Boost Sought In School Aid As Needs Rise

additional comments on identical bills sponsored by Perkins and by Chairman Adam Clayton Powell (D-N. Y.) of the full House Education and Labor Committee:

- The AFL-CIO welcomes a proposed change in the basis of distributing federal funds so that children of families with less than $3,000 in annual income—rather than $2,000—would be counted in school districts.
- Since this change cannot take place until fiscal year 1968, federal incentive grants should be retained for school districts which make "significant increases" in local support of the schools.

Acknowledging that some school districts, with relatively few children of low-income families, might thus get incentive grants larger than the basic formula would justify, Biemiller proposed that Congress might limit incentive funds to sums no larger than basic grants or authorize the incentive payments as an addition to the general school-aid program.

In regard to aid to "federally impacted" school districts, where federal employes are concentrated, he said "We will suggest new areas of impact which need to be recognized," such as the impact of desegration in school districts and the impact of rapid population growth.

School construction needs are not adequately met by present programs, he added, although the 89th Congress, with its succession of bills affecting education at all levels, "has justifiably come to be known as the 'Educational Congress.' "

Rail Firemen Protest 'Stalling' in Negotiations

A railroad union president has accused the major U.S. railroads of stalling in negotiations and asked the Senate Committee on Commerce to "put teeth" into efforts to get a settlement of the rail fireman dispute.

Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen told the committee he has tried for four months without success to get rail management to the bargaining table, adding: "I ask for legislation which will compel the railroads to bargain with us now."

Gilbert and Winfield M. Homer, of the Labor Bureau of Middle West, were the last witnesses to appear in committee hearings that began last fall on the effects of arbitration ordered by Congress in 1964 to block a threatened rail strike over the size of train crews.

Homer presented data showing that accident increased "substantially" after railroads removed firemen from diesel freight and yard engines under the compulsory arbitration award. He said that many train accidents—both collisions and derailments—occurred where the absence of a fireman "clearly reduced the safety factor."

The arbitration award expires Mar. 31. The BLF&E served notice on the roads that it regards the terms of the award as inapplicable after that date and that it wants to negotiate new terms.

Gilbert laid some of the blame for the lack of bargaining progress to what he called "stalling and erecting of impediments" by the National Mediation Board.

No Mediators

He said the board assumed jurisdiction last Feb. 16 on three of seven railroads where the BLF&E had asked for its services but that mediators have not been assigned. Gilbert declared he was "mystified" as to why the NMB "has been unable to find even one mediator" to assign to the dispute.

More than 17,000 firemen lost their jobs when management was awarded the right to remove them. Gilbert's union wants at least half of them restored to service after the award expires, but rail managements have refused to agree.

Bipartisan Push Given House Bill

The House Labor Committee has termed its minimum wage bill "imperative" to the nation.

The committee's formal report to the House warned that millions of fully-employed workers are still mired in poverty even though the economy can "easily" absorb the cost of a higher wage floor.

The committee bill to raise the minimum in steps to $1.60 an hour and extend coverage to 7 million additional workers emerged with bipartisan sponsorship. It carries the names of Representatives John H. Dent (D-Pa.) and Alphonzo Bell (R-Calif.).

Every President, from Franklin D. Roosevelt to Lyndon B. Johnson, has urged expansion of the minimum wage, the committee noted. But despite these urgings, "the law has not been kept in line with the advancing economy and some of its guarantees mean less comparatively than they did 27 years ago."

The committee declared its intention in the pending bill to extend coverage as much "as is presently practicable and to raise the minimum wage to a level which will prevent the disgraceful and intolerable situation of workers and their families dwelling in poverty."

Urgency Stressed

The committee discarded the customary legalistic tone of a legislative report to convey its members' sense of urgency.

It cited as "a shocking fact that demands immediate remedy that 40 percent of all children living in poverty were in families where there was a worker who had a full-time job throughout the year. Full employment and equal employment opportunity are now widely endorsed objectives, but to be employed equally at substandard wages is no social achievement at all."

The bill would raise the $1.25 wage floor for nearly 30 million persons already covered to $1.40 on Feb. 1, 1967, and $1.60 one year later.

Newly-covered workers would start at $1 an hour and advance in annual steps of 15 cents to reach the $1.60 level on Feb. 1, 1971. Farm workers, covered for the first time under the Fair Labor Standards Act, would be brought only to a $1.30 ceiling.

The committee stressed that the lower cutoff for farm workers "is in no way implying that the

House Beats GOP Attack On 'Great Society' Budget

Rent Supplement Survives Key Test

By David L. Perlman

A Republican-led budget-slashing drive was narrowly halted in the House in a major test of strength on whether Great Society programs will be scuttled as "inflationary."

Administration supporters defeated, 198-190, an attempt to delete a token $12 million rent supplement appropriation from a catch-all $2.56 billion money bill. Sixty-five Democrats joined 125 Republicans in voting to deny funds to the program—and thus kill it. Supporting the program were 192 Democrats and six Republicans.

Both sides approached the issue as a symbol of a battle which may be renewed many times in this session of Congress, recognizing that a victory for the economy bloc would give momentum to a resurgent conservative coalition.

The GOP picked as its target a program that had already been heavily trimmed back under conservative pressure—and one that the House had only narrowly authorized last year and then refused to finance in an end-of-the-session hassle.

The rent supplement program would relieve the pressure on public housing by allowing some low- income families to live in modest apartments built by non-profit groups. The government would pay the difference between one-fourth of a family's income and the rent. If a family's earnings rose, the federal payment would drop.

Pres. Johnson earlier this year asked Congress for an "urgently needed" $30 million appropriation to get the rent program rolling.

The House Appropriation Committee slashed this request to $12 million and added a restriction giving communities a veto power over the location of such housing.

Despite this heavy cut—and earlier concessions to ease conser-

Food Costs Send CPI Up Sharply

By Gervase N. Love

A steep climb in food prices sent the Consumer Price Index up by one-half of 1 percent in February to a new high of 111.6 percent of the 1957-9 average, the Labor Dept. reported.

The rise was the greatest for any month since June, when the index also increased by one-half of 1 percent, and was the largest advance for any February since 1951, when the boost was seven-tenths of 1 percent. The index was 2.5 percent higher than in February 1965.

Three-fourths of the jump was attributed to higher food prices, which advanced 1.5 percent. The supply of fresh vegetables was cut by unusually wet and cool weather in California and Arizona, rains in Texas and a freeze in Florida, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics said.

Fresh fruit went up because of seasonal factors and was then pushed a bit higher by the Florida freeze, it added. Meat prices went up nearly 2 percent because of a "continuing strong demand" on re-

High Court Invites Updated Rights Law

By Willard Shelton

The Supreme Court overruled two U.S. District Court judges in Mississippi and Georgia and held that the federal government could prosecute, under an ancient civil rights law, two cases involving racial murders.

In addition, six of the nine justices in concurring opinions invited Congress to update and broaden the rights statutes dating from the post-Civil War era.

The White House, which had been ready to send Congress an Administration request for specific new rights legislation, held back its proposals so that Dept. of Justice officials could study the exact language of the court in regard to racial acts of terrorism and violence by private citizens.

The two cases involve the deaths of four people. Three of them—one Mississippi Negro and two white civil rights co-workers from New York—were killed near Philadelphia, Miss., in the summer of 1964, and their bodies hidden in a newly created earthen dam. The fourth, Col. Lemuel A. Penn, a Negro educator, was shot dead on a Georgia highway while driving his car back from a period of active military reserve training to return to his normal position in the Washington, D. C. school system.

Federal grand juries indicted 18 persons in the Mississippi murders, including three law officers, on charges of depriving the slain men of their rights, and six persons in the Georgia case on charges of conspiracy to deprive Col. Penn of his right to travel freely on highways to and from the state.

In the Georgia case, three persons were indicted on state murder charges, two were brought to trial and were acquitted. In the Mississippi case, no state charges have been brought against the defendants

Mediation Plan Outlined For N.Y.C. Employes

A proposal for new mediation and collective bargaining procedures for New York City employes has been drafted by a panel of union, city and public members, accepted by Mayor John V. Lindsay and praised by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

The panel proposed a new independent agency made up of two union representatives, two members appointed by the mayor and three impartial members selected by both sides.

It would decide on bargaining units and certification, make binding decisions on interpretations of contracts—and play a major mediation role in bargaining.

If the board found collective bargaining "exhausted" after 30 days of negotiations, it could set up a panel to mediate, hold hearings and —if it wished—publish recommendations for settlement. For 30 days after the board reports, the city could not unilaterally change conditions and the union could not strike.

Meany praised the agreement, declaring:

"These are sound and sensible procedures. The panel deserves congratulations on facing up to a difficult problem and recommending constructive proposals.

"These recommendations constitute what should be an effective structure for avoiding the causes of conflict."

He noted that the agreement was

Real Factory Earnings Show No Gain for Year

The factory worker's real spendable earnings have shown virtually no change over the year ending in February because wage increases haven't been large enough to counteract rises in consumer prices and social security taxes, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

Further, the report showed, real spendable earnings—take-home pay adjusted for changes in the Consumer Price Index—have dropped sharply from January and December levels.

The married worker with three dependents had $87.63 in real spendable earnings in the Februarys of both 1966 and 1965, the BLS said, compared with $87.91 in January and $89.75 in December. His unmarried counterpart had $80.65 in February, 3 cents a week more than in February 1965, compared with $80.89 in January and $82.07 in December.

Hotel Union, Automat Chain Sign 1st Pact

New York—Pay hikes and overtime rates are among the benefits that 2,600 workers in 40 Horn & Hardart restaurants, cafeterias and "automats" will get under a first contract negotiated by Cafeteria Employes Local 302 of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

The agreement followed a successful organizing drive, started last June, and recognition by the previously non-union firm after a card-check conducted by the American Arbitration Association.

Members elected a negotiating committee Jan. 24 and six weeks later ratified a three-year contract providing wage increases of $3.60 a week for waitresses, $5.60 for other employes; an additional $3 a week for those whose workweek is reduced from 45 hours to 40; time and a half for all hours over eight per day and 40 per week.

The pact also provides vacations up to three weeks after 10 years of service; up to three days funeral leave; health and pension benefits; grievance procedure including a permanent arbitrator; a promotion clause and other benefits. Joseph Fox is Local 302 president.

Henry Kirsch Named To UNESCO Panel

Henry Kirsch of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs has been appointed by Sec. of State Dean Rusk to the U.S. National Commission for UNESCO. The commission advises the government on matters involving UNESCO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization, and serves as a link between UNESCO and institutions and individuals in the U.S.

Award Winner Stresses Fireman's Safety Role

The public needs two men in the cab of every locomotive, and so does the railroad industry, veteran railroader James M. Duffy told an audience that saw him receive the top safety award of his union, the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen.

"I've been a railroad man 24 years and I know how it feels," said Duffy of his feat in saving four boys from possible death. "Thank God I was in the right place at the right time."

BLF&E Pres. H. E. Gilbert, who was on the committee that picked Duffy from the field of a dozen monthly safety award winners, gave the fireman from Wooster, O., a check for $500 as the "Locomotive Fireman of 1965."

Chairman Harley O. Staggers (D-W.Va.) of the House Commerce Committee presented the union's D. B. Robertson plaque to Duffy, who is 60, for his "alert attention to duty, quick action at the moment of danger and skill as a railroad fireman" while on duty on the left side of a Pennsylvania Railroad engine last Oct. 30 near Braddock, Pa.

Duffy's locomotive was rounding a curve at 40 miles an hour when he spotted four boys walking the track with their backs to the train on the side not visible to Engineer Donald P. Faulds.

The boys could not hear the approach of the 61-car freight train because another train was moving alongside them on the adjoining track. Duffy pulled the whistle cord and shouted to the engineer to put on the emergency brakes.

Three of the boys jumped to safety but the youngest, James Berkavich, 5, hesitated for a few seconds and was caught by the engine and knocked away from the impact.

"God, we got him," cried the engineer. "Isn't that hell?"

Boy Recovered

By the time Faulds stopped the train several thousand feet away, the badly injured boy had been carried to a hospital. He has since recovered.

Faulds, too, was saluted at the safety banquet for his part in the 1965 feat. In 1960, before becoming an engineer, he won a "fireman of the month" award for stopping a speeding passenger train by signaling it to halt a few feet short of a wrecked gondola car blocking three Pennsylvania Railroad tracks at Conway, Pa.

The banquet audience included more than 100 congressmen and senators, members of the Railroad Retirement Board, the National Mediation Board, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and BLF&E legislative chairmen from 48 states.

Duffy's wife and four children were flown to Washington for the presentation—three from Wooster and a son, James, from his college in Florida.

Gilbert reported that the number of union members laid off under a 1964 compulsory arbitration award has risen to 20,000. His union, in a special section of the Washington Post Mar. 20, said train accidents are up 22 percent over 1963 and the rate of collision per 1 million train miles is at an all-time high. Both increases were blamed by the BLF&E on the removal of firemen from freight and yard engines.

Order Extended to Firemen:

Court Bars Strike Over Train Crews

The Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen have been barred by federal courts from striking for restoration of firemen's jobs.

Judge Alexander Holtzoff of the U.S. District Court in Washington issued a ten-day restraining order sought by railroad managements against any strike to restore jobs eliminated by the compulsory arbitration award of 1964. The order, originally issued against the Railroad Trainmen, the Switchmen, and the Conductors & Brakemen, was extended to the BLF&E.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia dismissed the BLF&E motion for a stay of the lower court order.

The union said 20,000 firemen lost jobs because of the compulsory arbitration award and it wants to bargain with major U.S. railroads on restoring at least half the jobs after the award expiration March 31.

The Trainmen, Switchmen and the Conductors & Brakemen said the award cost more than 5,000 additional jobs among their members.

The restraining order runs through Apr. 5. Judge Holtzoff set Apr. 4 for hearing arguments on the railroads' petition for a permanent order and on the BLF&E's petition that the carriers be enjoined from violating terms of the 1950 agreement requiring a fireman on diesel locomotives. The union has taken the position that the 1950 agreement again takes effect with the expiration of the compulsory arbitration award.

Holtzoff ruled that none of the unions is legally entitled to strike for restoration of the old job rules, and that they must continue to observe arbitration awards and agreements unless changed.

The five operating unions have served notices asking employers to bargain but talks have been stalled.

The BLF&E had filed suit in U.S. District Court in Chicago asking a finding that the 1964 award has no force or effect after Mar. 31, but the suit was transferred to Holtzoff's court at the request of the railroads.

Later Holtzoff ruled that three of some 80 agreements on the size of crews had terminated since they were not part of the arbitration award and that the companies involved must restore crews to their original size. Also, he upheld union claims that five special boards on crew consists had no authority to act after Jan. 25 though their hearings were not completed.

Training Issue Leads to Walkout

The Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen struck eight railroads shortly before the AFL-CIO News went to press. Judge Alexander Holtzoff of U.S. District Court in Washington issued an injunction ordering an end to the strike.

The strike was called over failure of the carriers to negotiate a training program for firemen, one of three issues listed by the BLF&E in notices served on the roads last Nov. 15.

Holtzoff earlier had barred the union from striking over demands to restore firemen's jobs. (See adjacent story.)

Taking part in the walkout were BLF&E members on the Pennsylvania Railroad west of Harrisburg, Pa., the Boston & Maine, Central of Georgia, Seaboard Airline, Missouri Pacific, Union Pacific, Grand Trunk Western and the Illinois Central.

AEC Panel Bars Use Of Unproved Job Tests

Amarillo, Tex.—The Atomic Energy Labor-Management Relations Panel has told an AEC contractor here to stop using aptitude tests until it can prove that test scores accurately predict job performance. Under no conditions, the panel said, should the test be the "sole criterion" for promotion or job bidding.

The panel's recommedation was a victory for the Amarillo Metal Trades Council, which bargains for employes of the Mason & Hanger-Silas Mason Co. Union members at the plant had twice voted to strike over the company's insistence that employes must pass a battery of aptitude tests before being permitted to bid for better jobs.

The AEC panel's decision expanded on an earlier recommendation, made last spring, that the parties negotiate a job bidding procedure in which the test score would not be the only factor in deciding whether a worker could bid on a job.

In the process of negotiations, the Metal Trades Council uncovered the fact that neither the employer nor the psychological testing firm which furnished the tests were able to show a consistent, meaningful relationship between test scores and the jobs to be filled.

An impasse was reached. The workers again voted to strike. The AEC panel stepped back into the case.

It said its earlier decision reflected a belief that the effectiveness of the tests had not been adequately demonstrated and that the employer had set an "unrealistically high" passing grade.

On rehearing, the panel declared, "this persuasion became deepened: the tests had not been properly validated for the purpose for which they were being used."

Its recommendation this time was clear-cut: "that the company cease making the Differential Aptitude Tests or any similar tests criteria, in whole or in part, for transfers or promotions until such tests have been properly validated."

It explained validation as "the demonstration of a reasonably strong and stable factual correlation between scores obtained from the tests and objective estimates of performance," through the use of professionally-accepted scientific procedures.

At the same time, the panel said the company should be permitted to continue using manual dexterity tests as it has done for many years.

If the aptitude tests should be properly validated, the panel said, they should be only one of a number of factors to be considered. "At best," the panel said, such tests can measure only one-fourth to one-third of the factors involved in determining on-the-job performance.

Meany Undergoes Surgery on Hip

AFL-CIO President George Meany successfully underwent arthroplasty surgery of the right hip joint in New York City last week.

The operation, designed to relieve arthritic pain in his right hip, was performed in Harkness Pavilion. He will be out of his office for several weeks.

Meany's doctor reported that the operation was a success and that his condition was excellent.

in line with policies urged by the AFL-CIO Executive Council and expressed the hope that it "will receive the acceptance and support it so clearly merits."

The council statement said that "repressive" statutes, such as New York State's Condon-Wadlin Act, are a "barrier" to the settlement of issues between public employes and government. It emphasized as "realistic" the collective bargaining process supplemented by "effective mediation and fact-finding procedures," and recommendations by impartial panels.

A labor panel headed by Victor Gotbaum, executive director of Dist. 37 of the State, County & Municipal Employes, played a major role in shaping the plan. Participants included top officers of the Fire Fighters, Plumbers and Building Service Employes. Unions represented on the panel bargain for 113,000 of the 175,000 city employes.

Lindsay said he will ask the City Council to approve the plan—a necessary step before it can go into effect.

As drafted, the machinery would apply only to city employes under the mayor's jurisdiction — not including transit workers, teachers and housing authority employes.

Lindsay told a news conference, however, that he considered the plan "an open-ended document which is there as an invitation" to other agencies and unions.

The panel which drew up the plan was established last July by former Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

Job, Pay Gains Won in IUOE Dredging Pact

New York—A contract package called the best in many years has been negotiated with the dredging industry by Local 25 of the Operating Engineers' marine division, representing 3,000 dredgemen in states of the Northeast.

The new pact, announced by Local 25 Pres. Stephen J. Leslie, calls for a union hiring hall, protection of jobs, improved working conditions, a wage increase of 18 cents this year, and an additional 14 cents in each of the two following years. In addition, a hike of $5 a week in the subsistence rate was won for all classifications of workers covered by the contract.

Preliminary meetings have been held and secret ballot votes are scheduled for Philadelphia on Apr. 4 and Brooklyn Apr. 5.

Local 25 has been negotiating with employers in the Great Lakes area, where contracts expired Mar. 31, and in the South, where the expiration date is Apr. 30. Leslie said he hopes similar terms can be won for 2,000 workers in those areas without any work interruption.

'Business as Usual':

GE, Westinghouse Balk at Early Talks

Officers of the General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electric Corp. have rejected an offer by eight AFL-CIO unions to hold informal, no-commitment meetings to lay the groundwork for contract talks due to start this fall.

A union spokesman said management was taking a "business as usual" attitude. The unions in the GE-Westinghouse Committee on Collective Bargaining will meet Apr. 5 to review the situation, he said.

The offer to hold non-binding talks in advance of bargaining was made by the presidents of eight unions that bargain with the two giant firms. At a Mar. 15 meeting in Washington, the unions set coordinated goals for negotiations due to start Aug. 1 at GE, Aug. 15 at Westinghouse.

Participating in the coordinated bargaining effort are the Allied Industrial Workers, Auto Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Machinists, Flint Glass Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, and Technical Engineers.

Management Inflexible

GE Pres. F. J. Borch wrote the committee that "correspondence on such matters should be addressed to those directly responsible for negotiations with your respective unions"—Manager of Employe Relations Philip Moore on national issues and local plant management on local issues. He said also:

"It would be inappropriate to hold the kind of central meeting you suggest, since we believe strongly that union discussions should be conducted" with those having the assigned authority.

The Westinghouse reply, by Labor Relations Dir. C. C. Frame, noted that two of the AFL-CIO unions have national agreements and others negotiate at the plant level.

Each agreement, Frame declared, "clearly defines the procedures and specified times for bargaining" on changes desired by either party and the company would not agree to depart from them.

These procedures, he said, have "resulted in stability of employment, improved pay, better benefits and good working conditions."

The unions charged, however, that increases since 1960 of 12 percent for GE workers and 11 percent for those at Westinghouse were nearly wiped out by an 8 percent rise in living costs. In contrast, they noted, GE profits rose 95 percent in six years and those of Westinghouse doubled in three years.

Included in the union goals are a substantial "catch-up" wage increase, with no geographic differentials; strengthened income and job security; the full union shop; and major improvements in pensions, insurance, and other benefits.

ATOMIC ENERGY POLICIES were discussed by Atomic Energy Commissioner James T. Ramey (right, at head of table) at a seminar for the AFL-CIO staff subcommittee on atomic energy and natural resources which also heard from Dir. H. T. Herrick (left, with back to camera) of the AEC Division of Labor Relations. The seminar started in Washington and included visits to the AEC Brookhaven National Laboratory, Upton, N.Y., and the Consolidated Edison Co.'s Indian Point Station, in Westchester County, N.Y.

Union's Suit to Enforce Contract Ruled Subject to State Time Limit

The Supreme Court ruled in a 6-3 decision that under the Taft-Hartley Act a union has the right to sue to recover contract benefits for its members, but that a suit filed by the Auto Workers in Indiana was barred by a state statute of limitations.

The ruling involved a landmark action in which the union filed suit not for itself but for its members under Section 301 of the act, the section governing lawsuits over collective bargaining agreements.

The UAW sought to recover accrued vacation benefits for about 100 workers terminated by the Hoosier Cardinal Corp. of Evansville on June 1, 1957. The union's contract was still in effect and included a clause providing for such vacation payments. Three suits in state courts were dismissed as impermissible under Indiana law and the dismissal was affirmed on appeal in June 1960. The federal action was initiated nearly four years later.

The majority opinion by Justice Potter Stewart, in upholding the UAW's right to bring the suit, said "the union's standing to vindicate employe rights" under Section 301 "implements no more than the established doctrine that the union's role in the collective bargaining process does not end with the making of a contract."

However, the majority also held that the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals was correct in finding that the suit was barred by Indiana's six-year statute of limitations governing unwritten contracts.

The UAW had argued that Section 301 suits should not be barred by any state law and that the court should fashion a uniform time limit on all such suits to fill the gap created by the section's failure to specify any limit. The union contended further that if any state law did apply it was Indiana's 20-year limit governing written contracts, not the shorter period governing unwritten agreements.

'Innovation' Barred

Stewart's majority opinion cited long precedent that "state statutes of limitations govern the timeliness of federal causes of action unless Congress specifically provides otherwise." The majority saw no need for "so bald a form of judicial innovation" as a uniform standard of timeliness in suits over union contracts.

On the question of which state law should apply, Stewart listed two reasons for adopting the six-year limit.

- The claim is not exclusively based on a written contract but involves each worker's individual oral contract of employment made at the time he was hired.
- "Relatively rapid disposition" of labor disputes is a goal of federal labor law, as illustrated by the six-month limitation on unfair practice evidence under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The union, Stewart noted, sought damages "based upon an alleged breach of the vacation clause in a written . . . agreement." But, he said, proof of this breach and of the extent of damages "both depend upon proof of the existence and duration of separate employment contracts between the employer and each of the aggrieved employes. Hence this suit may fairly be characterized as one not exclusively based upon a written contract."

The decision noted, further, that the union waited more than three years to bring the federal court action after the state suits were dismissed.

Justice Byron R. White, joined by Justices William O. Douglas and William J. Brennan, dissented from the decision, observing that it "creates 50 or more different statutes of limitations rather than fashioning a uniform rule. . . ."

The dissent saw "no sense or justice in referring to 50 or more different statutes of limitations so that one employe may be barred after one year while another employe may sue any time within six years. Nor is there any reason why an employer operating under the contract in one state should be bothered with stale claims already barred as against other employers in other states."

White said he had "difficulty in fathoming" the argument that to fashion such a rule "would involve too bald an exercise of judicial innovation" and suggested that courts had not been so reluctant to "create" uniform limits in other areas.

Parent Union Absolved In Local Picketing Case

The Supreme Court reversed a $75,000 damage suit award against the unaffiliated Mine Workers on the ground that the trial revealed no "clear proof" that the parent union authorized or ratified picket line violence by members of one local in southern Tennessee.

The plaintiff, Paul Gibbs, was hired by a Tennessee Consolidated Coal Co. subsidiary to open a new mine after an older mine had been closed and 100 members of the Mine Workers local were laid off. Gibbs also got a contract for haulage of coal from the new mine to a rail loading point. He attempted to operate with members of the Southern Labor Union, not the laid-off UMW members.

Armed members of the UMW local "forcibly prevented" the new-mine opening for two days, the court agreed, and peaceful picketing continued thereafter.

Gibbs sued in U.S. District Court, asking damages under the Taft-Hartley Act for an alleged illegal secondary boycott and damages under state law for alleged conspiracy.

The jury decided for the plaintiff on both issues. The trial judge set aside the secondary boycott verdict as unsubstantiated and reduced the damage judgment under the state claim from a total of $174,500 to $75,000. The trial court was upheld by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

In an opinion written by Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., the Supreme Court reversed both the trial and appellate courts on the ground that the parent Mine Workers had not been shown to have participated in, authorized or ratified the two days of local incidents.

The Norris-LaGuardia Act, Brennan noted, required clear proof of such complicity, whereas the international union was not even aware of the opening of the new mine until after the local incidents had occurred.

George Gilbert, the regional representative, was out of the state, and when he returned gave "explicit instructions" that the picket line should be limited in numbers, that no violence should occur, and that the strike should not be spread to neighboring mines, the court observed. Other representatives of the Mine Workers were sent with similar instructions.

In a concurring opinion, Justice John M. Harlan, joined by Justice Tom Clark, differed with sections of Brennan's reasoning but agreed on reversing the judgment. Chief Justice Earl Warren did not participate in the case.

Sheet Metal Union Wins Runoff Vote

Bowling Green, Ky.—The Sheet Metal Workers won bargaining rights in a second election here at the plant of the Master Vibrator Co. The vote, ordered by the National Labor Relations Board, was 77 for Sheet Metal, 10 opposed.

The union fell short of a majority in an election 14 months ago, but won the right to a runoff vote when the NLRB ordered a recount of 32 challenged ballots which gave it 24 more votes and a plurality. The board's decision hinged on the status of laid-off workers who, it held, had a reasonable expectation of recall.

Master Vibrator workers will appoint a bargaining committee and draft contract proposals. They comprise a unit of Local 433, chartered last year to represent workers at the Detrex Co. plant where the Sheet Metal union won a long strike and a first contract.

Stewardesses Backed In Battle on Age Limits

New York—Airline stewardesses who contend they're not "too old to work" at age 32 were upheld by a member of the New York State Human Rights Commission.

Commissioner J. Edward Conway recommended on the basis of a year-long study that airlines be barred from grounding stewardesses long before they reach the normal retirement age. The full commission has before it several complaints filed by stewardesses under New York's fair employment law, which includes a ban on age discrimination.

Pres. Matthew Guinan of the Transport Workers and James B. Horst, director of the union's air transport division, praised the report as breaking "the barriers of discrimination practiced by some airlines which have seen fit to discharge perfectly competent stewardesses because they are over the age of 32."

The union said it is notifying three airlines where it holds bargaining rights—American, Northwest and Trans World Airlines—that it expects "immediate reinstatement with back pay" of all stewardesses fired because of age.

A spokesman for the airlines said the industry will fight in court any attempt by the New York commission to force a change in the age limits.

The TWU has also pressed for federal action against arbitrary age limits imposed by airlines and last fall received a friendly hearing before a House Labor subcommittee. One committee member, Rep. William D. Hathaway (D-Me.), said at the time that airlines "need to be educated to the fact that they're not running flying Bunny Clubs but just another means of transportation."

Another airline requirement—that stewardesses resign when they marry—went by the board recently when the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission found the policy to be illegal discrimination.

Conway's report noted that 24 of the 38 U.S. airlines set no maximum age for stewardesses—and no airline sets an age limit on male stewards. The average length of service of airline stewardesses is only two years, he noted.

Summarizing his findings, Conway said that no evidence has been uncovered to warrant an "arbitrary" age for continued employment of airline stewardesses.

PLAQUE memorializing James G. Patton for quarter-century of service to family farmers, labor and consumers is presented to retiring Farmers Union president at appreciation dinner. From left, Pres. P. L. Siemiller, Machinists; Agriculture Sec. Orville Freeman; Patton and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz. Freeman made presentation for Agriculture Dept. personnel.

400 Join Tribute:

Farm Union's Patton Honored by Labor

Labor voiced a warm tribute to James G. Patton, who stepped down Mar. 16 after 25 years as president of the National Farmers Union, at an appreciation dinner sponsored by a committee of AFL-CIO vice presidents and Machinists union officials.

More than 400 farmer, labor and government representatives joined in the tribute and cheered Patton during the presentation of two symbols of his career—a framed "citation of appreciation" by Sec. of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman and a "genuine, union-made, silverplated pitchfork" presented by IAM Pres. P. L. Siemiller, who was master of ceremonies and with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, co-chairman of the dinner.

Federation Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan, who spoke for Meany, hailed Patton as "an eloquent spokesman for the common interests of farmers and workers" and urged in his honor a rededication to the ultimate achievement of true farmer-labor cooperation.

NFU Pres. Tony T. Dechant, who took Patton's former post, urged labor's "continued and most capable support" of Farmers Union efforts to "increase the income of our nation's family farmers to bring them at least equal" to the income of other citizens.

The Farmers Union, he said, will not slacken in its efforts to revitalize rural America through advanced programs of housing, rural electrification, credit, conservation and cooperative development, and legislation geared to "the complete elimination of poverty."

Siemiller declared that despite efforts of others to split labor and the farmer, Patton's career proves their interests are identical. In Patton, he said, "the family farmers have had a matchless champion, the workers a friend, the people a spokesman."

Patton said he is not retiring from all his interests but will remain active in the NFU and in the Council for Industrial Peace and the National Council on Agricultural Life & Labor, whose presidency he has just assumed.

Keenan, who is secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, praised Patton as a symbol of the "independent" and "progressive" character of the American farmer in the spirit of the late Sen. Robert LaFollette and other great liberals of the past.

Different Image

The National Farm Bureau Federation and the Grange, Keenan observed, by "thundering" against much social legislation have created an image of the American farmer as a "dyed-in-the-wool reactionary" but the NFU, he said, has consistently spoken out for the continuing progress of wage earners as well as farmers.

The truth, he continued, is that there is no conflict of interest between farmers and workers. What the farmer gets has little relation to the price of food in the supermarket, and what the worker earns an hour has "almost nothing to do with the price of a harrow," said Keenan, adding:

"We look forward to the day when there will be a bigger, stronger and even more influential National Farmers Union at our side."

FCC Ordered to Hold Hearings On Bias Charges Against Station

The Federal Communications Commission has been ordered by a U.S. court to hold public hearings on charges by civil rights and church spokesmen that a Jackson, Miss., television station violated its responsibilities by program discrimination against minority groups.

A three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia unanimously told the FCC that the public had a right to be heard on such charges before the commission issued a license renewal to the station.

The TV outlet, WLBT, owned by the Lamar Life Broadcasting Co., was given a one-year license renewal by the FCC and, in effect, told to mend its ways. The standard renewal for TV and radio stations is for a three-year period.

Civil rights leader had accused the Lamar Life company of allowing segregationist sentiments freedom of expression on the television station and a companion radio station, WJDC, and refused equal time for individuals and organizations to answer despite the long-existing FCC "fairness doctrine."

The United Church of Christ, a Protestant group, also accused the TV and radio stations of discriminatory practices in reporting racial news and added that Negro churches were refused a part in a revolving series among area religious organizations.

The three-judge appellate court decision laid down for the first time a rule that the FCC must hold hearings on public complaints against a TV station's programming practices as well as allowing "standing" to competitors who might be economically involved.

The court's opinion, written by Judge Warren E. Burger, remarked that the FCC had only a "pious hope," in granting a probationary one-year license renewal, that the station would reform.

The FCC might have knocked the station off the air, the court suggested, and opened the TV channel to other applicants for a license.

In the original attack on FCC renewal of the WLBT license, the Mississippi AFL-CIO accused the station of unlawful attempts to influence workers in a National Labor Relations Board election and of falsely intimating that the state federation's president, Claude Ramsey, was a Communist sympathizer.

The state AFL-CIO also branded the television outlet a "semi-official organ of the John Birch Society, the White Citizens Council and other right-wing organizations," stating that the station manager had used the facilities to urge Mississippi residents to resist federal laws and court decrees.

U. S. Urged to Protect Jobs of Negro Teachers

Atlanta, Ga.—The federal government should take the initiative in protecting the jobs of Negro teachers in the South, the American Federation of Teachers urged here.

AFT Pres. Charles Cogen, in a letter to U.S. Commissioner of Education Harold Howe II made public at a conference here, charged that Office of Education "guidelines" on school desegregation may result in the firing of "many hundreds" of Negro teachers by school superintendents and boards within the next year.

The Office of Education sent letters to school officials urging that "small, inadequate schools for Negro students" be closed. Also it declared that it intends to prevent firings based on racial discrimination.

Cogen said he was pleased by the reminder that race discrimination is prohibited but said a notice to close schools without suggesting that the teachers be reemployed elsewhere within the school district "is an invitation for any school district so inclined to . . . evade the anti-discrimination guideline."

Declaring that testing programs such as some reported in Florida schools, and various forms of merit pay schedules, "are often a shield for racial discrimination," he added:

"We think it grossly unfair and destructive of teacher morale to fire teachers who are deemed fit to teach until the school systems find" they must integrate.

Experienced instructors could be used in some other constructive capacity — for tutoring, remedial teaching, or even small group study sessions—if held incapable of handling the usual teaching load, he wrote.

Cogen recommended that the Office of Education require local school districts to "justify any diminution of staff or dismissal of experienced teachers" only on the basis of a reduction in student enrollment.

"We hope that something can be done about this now," he wrote Howe. "Employment of teachers for the 1966-67 school year is now in process. Action should be taken now to prevent further discriminatory firings."

Short Shorts Held Right—And Risk

Owosso, Mich. — Women employes at the Mitchell-Bentley Corp. plant here may wear "short shorts" at work, an arbitrator ruled.

A foreman sent two women home for wearing shorts which did not reach to their knees. Their union, Auto Workers Local 743, took their claim for lost pay to arbitration—and won.

The arbitrator noted that "past practice" had allowed women to wear shorts at work and that the "short shorts," while exposing various degrees of thigh, were admittedly "not indecent." Therefore "it would appear to be the personal right of a female employe to wear short shorts for her better or her worse."

Meany, Molony On Rights Unit

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Joseph Molony of the Steelworkers have been named by Pres. Johnson to the special leadership council which will plan the White House Conference on Civil Rights.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph, president of the Sleeping Car Porters, is honorary chairman of the conference, which will be held in Washington June 1-2. Ben W. Heineman, board chairman of the Chicago & North Western Railway, is conference chairman.

Court Majority Invites Wider U. S. Rights Law

in the federal indictments.

The 1870 civil rights statute under which federal indictments were brought includes two applicable provisions:

- A section prohibiting interference with a citizen's rights by anyone acting "under color of state law."
- Another section prohibiting conspiracy to injure any person's exercise of any federal right or privilege.

Charge Dismissed

Federal District Judge Harold Cox dismissed the conspiracy charge against all defendants in the Mississippi case, ruling that homicide is a state crime only and that "federally created" rights cover only such areas as the right to use a post office or to vote. He also dismissed the "interference" charge against 15 private citizens, letting it stand only against three police officials charged with acting "under color of state law."

District Judge W. A. Bootle dismissed the Georgia federal indictments on similar grounds.

The Supreme Court overruled Cox unanimously, reinstating both charges of the Mississippi indictment. Justice Abe Fortas in his opinion said that "federally created" rights include the right not to be denied life or liberty without due process of law and that private citizens acting illegally in consort with police officials were equally guilty with the officials of operating under the "color of state law."

The major opinion in the Georgia case, written by Justice Potter Stewart, was more narrow. It held that the indictment alleged some degree of state involvement, such as the arrest of Negroes on false reports of criminal acts, and that this might be sufficient for a finding that the private persons accused in the killing were acting "under color of law."

Stewart also said that conspiracy even by private citizens to deprive another of his right to travel freely to and from Georgia might be a federal offense, but added that the prosecution must prove a "specific intent" by the conspirators to interfere with federally guaranteed rights.

Two concurring opinions were filed in the Georgia case. One, written by Justice Tom C. Clark in which Justice Hugo L. Black and Fortas joined, suggested that the Stewart opinion was too cautious and declared: "There can be no doubt" that Congress has power "to enact laws punishing all conspiracies —with or without [the element of] state action—that interfere" with the rights of all persons under the 14th Amendment.

The second concurring opinion observed that although the 1870 federal civil rights law does not specifically cover illegal interference by private individuals of another person's rights, "the remedy is for Congress to write a law without this defect." The opinion, written by Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., in which Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justice William O. Douglas joined, noted that six members of the court had now said that such a statute would be constitutionally valid.

THE AVERAGE HOME finds it hard to support a real, up-to-date globe, maps change so rapidly, so if you're young and have dreams of faraway places, you go to the public library and find your own road to the romance and adventure that come alive in the books on the rows of shelves.

YOU CAN HAVE dreams when you're older, too. And you can study, perhaps to make up for missed schooling—or just to satisfy the curiosity that seems to follow some folks right into the grave.

Libraries Open New World to All Ages

National Library Week, in which the AFL-CIO has long participated, will be observed Apr. 17-23 and serves again as a reminder that publicly-supported libraries at all levels are still suffering from lack of funds. But they're staying in business and they still open the wonders of enjoyment, inspiration and knowledge to the eager and the curious of every generation. These photos show some of the work the Cincinnati Public Library system is doing for its readers.

HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS find public libraries pretty handy. The explosion in learning has opened up a whole new world of essential reading material—and a library is the logical place to look for it.

THERE'S NOTHING like a good story to hold the interest of the younger generation, especially if it can be sort of acted out. Thousands of libraries, like Cincinnati's, provide special services for tots who are just beginning to read.

STORY-TELLING TIME in the Cincinnati public library system is a time for rapt attention, even of doubters like the little girl in second photo at right. Library Week aims to stir citizens to greater use of library services, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has noted, and surely, he added, "this purpose is in keeping with the spirit and aspirations of the labor movement." Cooperation between libraries and unions, he said, helps both.

THE WORLD is different if you can read, even if some of the words are pretty hard. A public library has books for all sizes of readers as well as all sizes of books for readers.

YOU'RE A BIG BOY when you can go to the catalogue and find the book you want. The U.S. pays $2.05 per capita per year for its public libraries. Recommended standard is $3.85.

Guarding The Wage Dollar

THE WAGE-EARNING family can ill-afford the waste of hard-earned dollars on products that do not give full value, are unsafe to use, are deceptively presented or are exorbitantly priced.

The consumer's right to safety, to be informed, to choose among a variety of products at fair prices and to be heard are the goals of both the AFL-CIO and the Johnson Administration.

Much legislation enacted in the first session of the 89th Congress has been beneficial to consumers. But to date little has been accomplished in terms of specific consumer legislation. Measures to require disclosure of true interest rates on consumer instalment credit date back to 1960; proposals to cure the chaos in consumer product packaging date from 1962.

The President's message on consumer problems and legislation, excerpts of which appear on this page, and the announcement of a three-day "Consumer Assembly '66" to be held this month by representatives of nearly 50 million consumers highlight the new emphasis and concern that this session of Congress enact legislation to safeguard consumers.

THE AFL-CIO has been in the forefront of the battle for consumer legislation. It has testified on every possible occasion for pro-consumer bills, has discussed consumer problems intensively in its publications, has conducted a wide range of consumer education programs within the trade union movement and in cooperation with other consumer groups.

At its 1965 convention the AFL-CIO restated its historic position. It called for:

- Prompt congressional action to enact a "truth-in-lending" bill which will require lenders to make a full disclosure of financing charges on consumer credit both in terms of dollars and cents and in terms of true percentage annual rates.

- Passage of a "truth-in-packaging" bill to stop deceptive labeling and packaging of consumer products and establish ground rules for reasonable standards for weights and measures.

- Closing the loopholes in the Food, Drug & Cosmetics Act, especially the pre-testing of cosmetics and medical devices before sale.

- Legislation to require federal inspection of all meat for safety and wholesomeness.

- Establishment of federal safety standards and a grading system for automobile tires.

- Increased authority for the Federal Trade Commission to move quickly against misleading advertising.

- Stronger machinery for consumer representation in the government.

- A congressional study of "trading stamps" to ascertain their actual worth to the consumer and their impact on consumer prices.

The two key measures—"truth-in-lending" and "truth-in-packaging"—have been thoroughly studied and debated in committee. The time has come for congressional action so that the consumer "bill of rights" first voiced by Pres. Kennedy in 1962 is written into the law of the land.

In President's Message:

Consumer Protection, Guidance Given Key Role in Poverty War

The following is excerpted from Pres. Johnson's message to Congress on consumer affairs.

THE CONSUMER'S INTEREST is the American interest.

In guarding it, in promoting it, we improve the lives of every man, woman and child in our nation.

Every domestic program of the federal government in a very real sense is directed toward the consumer. When we work to stem pollution, improve transportation, or rebuild our cities, we promote the welfare of the American consumer.

The consumer has a right to a dollar of stable purchasing power.

I pledge to defend that right with all the ability and determination at my command.

A NEW and progressive program is needed if we are to protect the American consumer's rights in the marketplace—his rights to be informed, to choose, to be protected from unsafe products and to be heard in the councils of government.

I recommend that the Congress enact comprehensive measures to secure these rights.

The consumer buys what he wants. He cannot and should not be told what to buy. But he must be told what is available for purchase.

If the consumer is to be a wise sovereign in our progressive market economy, he must be fully informed. Free consumer choice—indeed, our free enterprise system—must rest on a firm foundation of reliable information on the costs and contents of the products we buy.

I renew my request that the Congress enact legislation to strengthen this foundation in two critical areas—lending and packaging.

I proposed legislation in these areas two years ago. Pres. Kennedy made a similar recommendation four years ago. We have learned much from careful study of these proposals by the Congress and the public. Everything we have learned reaffirms my conviction that:

- We can have equitable and effective laws on lending and packaging.

- We can protect both the consumer and the overwhelming majority of honest businessmen from the minority of producers who would compete unfairly and infringe the rights of the consumer and their fellow businessmen.

- We need to reform in the credit area and we should encourage states to enact legislation to correct abuses.

- We need such legislation urgently. We can now act wisely without further delay.

I have instructed the director of the Office of Economic Opportunity to give particular attention to the consumer needs of our poverty-stricken families. Studies have shown that they suffer most cruelly from lack of consumer protection and lack of buyer "know-how."

We must deal with the fact that today 34 million Americans—7 million families—must try to stretch poverty-level incomes to meet living costs. Studies show that these people are plagued by consumer problems unknown to the affluent majority.

They are unable to shop effectively for bargains or to buy in economical quantities.

They are often victimized by excessive costs of credit and merchandise.

They are subjected to countless fraudulent and deceptive marketing and financing practices.

Most of these problems are symptoms of the basic maladies which we are attacking in the war on poverty. Programs of consumer information and protection cannot cure them—but such programs can lessen their impact.

The Office of Economic Opportunity has already made 56 grants, totaling almost $3 million, to support consumer education and related programs throughout the country. In the future, this office will become a clearing-house for distribution of educational materials to the poor. It will be a powerful source of incentive and support to the poor in their efforts to achieve fair play in the marketplace.

I PLEDGE the all-out effort of the federal government to help our poorest citizens to spend their limited funds more efficiently as we work to enhance their incomes.

Credit is a particular problem for the poor. Often it is available only at high interest rates, and its overextension can lead to the garnishment of wages and the loss of jobs. The situation is particularly severe because the poor are susceptible to emergencies that eliminate any limited financial reserves they may have.

Cooperative sources of low-cost credit, such as credit unions, combined with sound and impartial debt and financial counseling, and with legal services, can be of great benefit to the poor.

I am directing the director of the Office of Economic Opportunity and my Committee on Consumer Interests to intensify their efforts to encourage the development of such services in community action programs.

Morgan Says:

New Housing Laws With Teeth Needed to Destroy Racial Slums

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

SOONER rather than later, the American people are going to be forced to come to grips personally and individually with the facts of life.

I am not talking about the birds and the bees and the flowers, though this does happen to be spring. The facts at issue are pointed up by this question: how long do we think a democratic society can endure when it is not? How long do we think we can get away with paying mere lip service to the principles of individual liberty on which this country was founded without facing a major challenge to our hypocrisy?

Morgan

The answer is, of course, not long, but the majority of us don't seem disposed to accept it. Nevertheless, laws and circumstances are backing us all into a corner from which there is no escape. There and then we are going to have to demonstrate that we do believe in equal rights, or see our system destroyed. For an open society cannot exist half closed. The lack of ventilation will stifle it.

There are some surface signs of hope, but it would be dangerous to read them as indicating that everything is pointed in the right direction. Once more the Supreme Court has come to the rescue of American citizenship by ruling that its rights are indivisible, by again reminding the country that, under the law and the constitution, citizenship cannot be broken up into first, second and third class categories.

It did so by striking down Virginia's poll tax and adding, significantly that such levies anywhere are an unconstitutional burden on the right to vote. This decision surely dooms the poll tax as a voting condition in the only states where it remains, Mississippi, Alabama and Texas. Indeed, lower courts have already ruled the Alabama and Texas poll taxes unconstitutional.

In the past the poll tax had been just one of many devices used to keep Negroes from voting. Last year's voting rights act moved against some of the others. In a practical sense the new decision does not mean a great deal. Only four states were involved and even in them, especially in Texas and Virginia, as our society has become more affluent, many Negroes paid the tax in order to vote. But the court ruled this was a form of economic discrimination.

A much larger and far more explosive form of economic and social discrimination remains. This is in housing. A voting right is hard for even the professional segregationists to deny, though the diehards are still trying to. But a living right is something else again. That hits you right in the home where you live, and in the house next door, if a Negro is trying to move in. Herein lies the great unspoken prejudice of American whites and attached to it is a time bomb.

North and South, East and West, the country is segregated in its living quarters and something has got to give. The irony of it is that governments from the federal level down to the grass roots have conspired with the power structure of every community to make it and keep it that way, almost as formally as if everything were drawn to scale on a blueprint.

The Watts area of Los Angeles, where there have been already two explosions, was, in a very real sense, officially created to absorb the immigration of Negroes from other states, a movement quickened by job opportunities in World War II.

BUT THE PRESSURES generated within the Negro ghettos have not been siphoned off by the fancy plans for urban renewal and public housing. As often as not new slums have been created as others were razed. So serious has the situation become that a veteran of 25 years experience in civil rights, Edward Rutledge, now executive director of the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, said he had never seen tensions so high between Negro and white communities at every level in major cities, across the land. He predicted not only still another Watts in Los Angeles but similar riots elsewhere, including Rochester, N.Y., unless integrated housing developments for the poor are speeded up and racial slums are destroyed by housing laws with teeth in them.

The Great Society legislation on housing now in Congress is already so emasculated that Rutledge thinks Pres. Johnson may have to expand Pres. Kennedy's executive order on desegregated housing to deal with the crisis.

The nation's capital has a dramatic test case in its own front yard. A Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee is holding hearings on legislation to authorize development of an "embassy enclave" in an area near the State Dept. This would permit foreign governments to construct new chanceries in the neighborhood without being picketed by the neighbors.

Trouble is, little if any thought has been given to the fate of the people already living there, many of them Negroes. But a lively and integrated little lobby has sprung up called the Lincoln Civic Association to defend the residents' rights. Its members are all for the enclave, they will tell the committee, if it is made part of a balanced complex. The association has the theory that peoples' rights are as important as property rights, and that of course, is revolutionary.

The Only Inflationary Pressure:

End to Investment Credit Urged To Curb Capital Goods Boom

ORGANIZED LABOR'S top economist has called for an end to special tax credits on investment in new industrial equipment to curb the only inflationary pressure in the economy.

Nathaniel Goldfinger, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, warned that heavy outlays for plant expansion, encouraged by present tax advantages, have produced a "capital goods boom" that "cannot be sustained."

This, he said, poses "a two-fold problem—pressure on resources in some capital goods industries in some parts of the country" and "a potential economic decline when the capital goods boom begins to level off or drop off, as it undoubtedly will." His statements came during the network radio interview, Labor News Conference.

Turning aside a contention that excess consumer purchasing power is causing inflationary pressures, he declared "there is no evidence of any sharp increases in consumer spending . . . no consumer scare-buying . . . no shortages of consumer goods."

"The real problems" in the economy at this time are "booming profits and the boom of capital goods," he said.

GOLDFINGER charged that the special investment tax credit "is really a subsidy, a handout, a bonanza to business," but, he said, "business doesn't need a subsidy to encourage investment." He suggested that "high sales levels and good business conditions . . . would provide a more sustainable" rise of productive capacity.

"When business investment moves up sharply, as it has in the past several years and as it did in the mid-50s, it does create localized pressures in the economy—price pressures," Goldfinger said. But, "when it declines, it creates unemployment—layoffs," he said.

Reporters questioning him on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program, aired weekly over the Mutual radio network, were Joseph R. Slevin of the New York Herald Tribune and Lee Cohn of the Washington Star.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

REPUBLICAN SPOKESMEN, both in Congress and in the party's national committee, think they have a persuasive issue in a charge that federal spending on non-defense programs is forcing up living costs and threatening a runaway inflation. What this means is they are against any appropriations to put into effect Johnson Administration domestic programs the congressmen voted against in the first place.

The economic viewpoint embodied in this attack is as naive as the doom-wailing against Franklin D. Roosevelt's anti-depression measures of the Thirties.

It presupposes that government expenditures somehow induce inflation and that expenditures by private industry—the soaring expenditures for new equipment, for example, which are stimulated by a special 7 percent tax credit—have nothing to do with creating inflationary pressures. Yet, as the Washington Post remarks, a dollar spent—sent into the nation's economic stream—is a dollar spent, no matter who spends it.

The great bulk of government expenditures is for defense purposes—and knocking out a few hundred million or even $2 billion for non-defense programs would do nothing to curb the boom in business spending for capital goods, which places buying pressure on supplies of materials and skilled labor.

IN THE HOUSE, on Mar. 29, Republicans split 125 to 6 in favor of knocking out a $12 million appropriation to get the rent supplement program for low-income families into operation. It was nothing new; the House GOP split 130-4 in trying to kill the rent supplement program from the 1965 omnibus housing bill in the original authorization measure.

Republicans also led a House battle to kill a $10 million appropriation to finance the Teacher Corps program, also authorized by Congress last year. Again, this was nothing new. They tried to knock the Teacher Corps provisions out the Administration's higher education bill in 1965. They filed a motion to recommit the bill to a House-Senate conference committee with instructions that the Teacher Corps be eliminated, and in a rollcall voted 111 to 7 in favor of that proposition.

The pattern is likely to continue throughout the current session of Congress as appropriations bills come up.

It was only an illusion—not a reality—that everything the Administration obtained from Congress last year was the product of consensus. A relatively small group of Republicans sometimes helped build the majority.

House Republicans voted 109-25 against the Appalachia bill on Mar. 3, 1965. They voted 93-31 against the regional development and public works program, and previously had voted 115-10 for an amendment to eliminate federal loans and guarantees for land purchase and development.

House Republicans even attempted to knock the basic social security provisions from the medicare bill, showing a party division of 128-10 on the rollcall, although these basic provisions are financed by payroll taxes, not the Treasury.

The Senate rollcalls show a somewhat less heavy majority of Republicans voting for amendments to weaken, limit or defeat Administration programs, but the pattern is about the same.

The Mar. 29 victory on funds for rent supplements was exceedingly narrow; the six Republicans favoring the appropriation actually furnished the balance of power, because 65 Democrats deserted the Administration and the rollcall tally was only 198-190.

The fact remains that the GOP leaders in Congress are not spurred solely by sudden fears of inflation when they try to kill or reduce funds for educational, anti-poverty, housing and similar programs. They were against these programs in 1965 and 1964 and 1963—just as they were against federal school aid and area redevelopment programs when Gen. Eisenhower was President in the Fifties.

How to Buy:

Food Prices Due to Keep High Until Fall Rise in Pork Supply

By Sidney Margolius

FOOD IS the big price problem in this year of high living costs and will remain so until fall. Then an increase in present scarce pork supplies will ease the pressure which also has been pushing up beef, poultry and other protein foods.

Last month peanuts were one of the few "plentiful foods" the Agriculture Dept. was able to suggest. This month it has added raisins to the list. The real prospect for the months ahead is told by the Dun & Bradstreet Wholesale Food Price Index, which is 14 percent higher than a year ago. Meat prices are going to be very high this summer.

Farmers themselves are protesting the present level of food prices, charging that pork prices have gone up more in the supermarkets than justified by the increase in farmers' prices.

The other cost-boosting news is that the Veterans Administration has joined the interest-raising parade by raising the rate on GI mortgages to 5.5 percent from the previous 5.25 percent. This, however, is still the lowest rate usually available with a small down payment, if you are still eligible and can find a lender willing to grant a VA mortgage.

Recently FHA raised its mortgage rate to 6 percent (including the premium for insuring the lender against loss). This makes the FHA rate higher now than conventional (non-FHA) mortgages in many areas (major exception is California).

The item most in demand among America's housewives at this time is refrigerators. Many lower-price models now incorporate such desirable modern specifications as the frostless and thin-wall features. These now often are available for less than $250 compared to the more-usual $300 two or three years ago.

Thin-wall models provide more interior capacity in the same exterior space because the foamed insulation used enables the thinner walls.

A genuinely "frost free" or "frostless" refrigerator provides automatic defrosting in both the refrigerator and freezer sections. Make sure of this point. Less-expensive models provide automatic defrost only in the refrigerator compartment. However, defrosting the freezer section is not a difficult chore, especially in a top-mounted freezer.

Keep in mind that the frost-free feature and the size both affect operating cost. For example, if a single-door refrigerator costs $1 a month to operate, the equivalent model frost-free in the refrigerator only will cost $1.88, and the completely frostless $3.51. A refrigerator over 15 cubic feet usually will cost about $1 more a month to operate than one under 15 cubic feet.

The capacity of the freezer is the real value to compare among different brands and models when you shop refrigerators, not whether one model has swing-out shelves and another glide-out, or ice water tap, automatic ice maker, special egg rack, etc.

YOU MAY NOT EAT WELL this spring, but you can dress well. If you avoid the fleeting "ugly" fashions like the garish, geometric "op art" patterns, there also are classic styles available at relatively reasonable prices in modern easy-care fabrics. You will find more blends of polyester fiber (Dacron, etc.) with cotton or rayon; acrylic fibers (Orlon, Creslan, etc.) and other relatively easy-care fabrics such as Arnel triacetate (a second cousin to acetate).

We nominate as the apparel buy of the season two-piece suits of polyester-cotton or polyester-rayon in linen-like texture, for $20-$25. These are easy to care for, and versatile. They can be worn with blouse as a costume; without, more casually, and as separates. Another moderate-price buy is two-piece knit suits of blends of acrylic fiber and mohair.

This is the flush season for eggs, and they are a best buy now even though prices are higher than last year. Eggs have complete protein. This means they are usable as an alternate for meat.

Broilers are more expensive than last year even though supplies are larger, because of the increased demand as an alternate for costly red meats. Canned salmon is more reasonable, and tuna is another low-priced substitute for meat.

Buyer, Be Wary:

New Guide Explains Labels, Standards

BUYER, BE WARY! is the advice offered by a leading expert on consumer problems to today's shopper. In the face of complex products, a multitude of brands, inadequate labels, deterioration of weights and measures, the shopper who is not aware of facts and standards will end up dribbling money away.

In a new Public Affairs Pamphlet, Buyer, Be Wary!, Sidney Margolius not only points out the problems and confusions but offers a guide to basic facts the shopper needs.

Government standards, where they do exist, are helpful, Margolius finds—if the consumer understands what to look for. "Most shoppers," for example, "seem unaware of the fact that the list of ingredients is arranged in order of predominance . . . on one widely sold brand of frozen ready-to-serve macaroni and cheese . . . the ingredients, in this order, are water, macaroni, and cheese. Knowing that they are set down in order of predominance [the shopper] can then make her own decision as to whether a product in which the leading ingredient is water is worth the price asked."

Some progress, Margolius finds, has been made toward clearer labeling and simplified if not standardized sizes of packaging as a result of legislative and administrative effort. Until the situation improves everywhere, he urges shoppers to "select suitable items and compare values" by checking against standards that are available. Here is some of the specific information he suggests as guides:

● Buy food by grade, not by brand, and you will save money without sacrificing quality. Remember that "grade has nothing to do with food value. . . . The higher grades merely have better appearance and more uniform size, and in the case of meat, may be juicier, and sometimes—not always—more tender. . . . In general, a helpful policy is to use the higher grades for the table and lower grades for the pot."

● "For clothing, carpeting, and other textile products, the fiber identification laws can be helpful when shopping, if you know what to look for, especially in these days of new fibers which are either used alone or blended with the traditional cotton, wool, and rayon . . . [but] you yourself still have to judge the actual quality. A good-quality rayon will give better service than a poorly constructed rayon-and-nylon. Or a tightly woven wool-and-cotton may wear better than a loosely woven, low-grade all-wool."

● As for shoe labels, "since 1963, the Federal Trade Commission has required that shoes be labeled accordingly if they contain synthetic materials or such lower grades of leather as split cowhide or pulverized leather. Unfortunately, the permitted wording is not always clear to everyday shoppers."

● "The American Standards Association has been instrumental in helping to develop standards for photographic supplies, power lawn mowers, and many other goods."

● "Two different brands of aspirin both labeled USP meet the same standard, although one bottle with a highly advertised brand name may cost five times as much as the other. If two brands of vitamins are both labeled USP, and the potencies listed are similar, there is no reason to pay $9.50 for one if the other costs only $3.50."

● "In regard to prescription medicines . . . the savings are large if your doctor—on whose judgment you finally must rely—prescribes a generic drug."

Two helpful charts in Buyer, Be Wary! summarize "Quality Standards to Look For" and "Leading United States Department of Agriculture Food Grades."

The grades and standards Margolius summarizes are important because, as he puts it, "a family unable to make purchases knowledgeably suffers a constant and unnecessary drain of income away from such important family goals as education, health needs, improvement of living standards, and saving for retirement."

Buyer, Be Wary! is available for 25 cents from Public Affairs Pamphlets, 381 Park Avenue South, New York, N.Y. 10016.

From Soup to Nonsense:

The Fine Art of Letter-Writing Is More or Less Modernized

By Jane Goodsell

LETTER-WRITING is still being conducted by rules of etiquette that must have been established by the Medes and Persians.

Or maybe it all dates back to the Age of Chivalry, when people were very polite to each other until they got their dander up; and then, instead of writing irate letters, they let off steam by knocking each other's blocks off in jousts and tourneys.

Actually, I've no idea who laid down the rules, but I do know that they're long overdue for revision. They have no relevance to modern life and therefore I propose the following changes:

The salutation "Dear" should be eliminated when it is totally out of keeping with the body of the letter, and does not express the true feelings of the correspondent. For example, it makes no sense to write: "Dear Mr. Follansbee, if you don't keep that dog of yours out of my yard and away from my rose bushes, I am going to call the police. . . ." A more fitting salutation would be, "Now see, here, Follansbee!" or "Follansbee, beware!"

Don't you feel silly addressing your congressman as "Dear" and declaring yourself very truly his? Such sentiments might be appropriate in a Valentine, but not in a letter denouncing the recipient as a scoundrel and a nincompoop.

When you sit down to write a letter to a book club declaring that this is the third time you have informed them you wish to discontinue your membership, that you have no intention of paying the bills they keep sending you for books you did not order, and that you intend to initiate legal proceedings if they do not cease and desist . . . is it befitting to start your letter by addressing them as "Gentlemen"? Wouldn't "You idiots, you!" be more suited to the occasion?

IN CASE my suggestions strike you as too bizarre, you might prefer to model your correspondence on a letter I came across the other night while browsing through a book of great letters. Written by Benjamin Franklin to William Strahan, an old friend and a member of the British House of Commons, it accomplishes the seemingly impossible task of expressing fury with grace and style:

"Mr. Strahan:

"You are a member of Parliament, and of that Majority which has doomed my Country to Destruction. You have begun to burn our Towns and murder our People. Look upon your hands! They are stained with the Blood of your Relations! You and I were long friends. You are now my Enemy, and

To Clean Up, Increase Supply:

Broad Effort Urged to Meet Growing U. S. Water Needs

If the United States hopes ever to accomplish anything worthwhile in cleaning up and increasing its water supply, it will have to dig a lot deeper into its bankroll than the annual $3 billion or so it's coming up with now, George Taylor writes in the current issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

Taylor, an economist in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, presents figures showing that "to clean up and develop and store our waters on a scale commensurate with forecast needs of our society can well exceed $50 billion over the next decade and at least another $50 billion between 1980 and 2000."

In an article titled "America's Water Crisis," he cites a few of the items that make up the $100 billion estimated total—$1.7 billion in New York State alone in the next five years and $20 billion "to bring life once again" to incredibly polluted Lake Erie.

"As a beginning," Taylor writes, "labor has urged that the federal resource agencies be reorganized and streamlined to eliminate waste, duplication and jurisdictional infighting. Special interests have too long pursued narrow goals in agencies like the Bureau of Reclamation, Army Engineers, Fish & Wildlife, National Parks, Public Health, Soil Conservation and Forest Services."

At the federal level, he continues, there is need for "sound, business-like management control" over investments for resources development. He urges that planning to meet not only water but other resource needs "should be coordinated along the general lines of the short-lived national and regional economic planning boards pioneered during the New Deal days."

"If the eastern drought continues," he writes, "millions of people will have their water rationed this time next year. If there is drought in the Southwest and Plains states, farmers and townspeople will see their pumps sucking sand and mud instead of water and they will be importing it from a more fortunate area in tank cars.

"Along the streams that are lined with factories, steam electric plants, packinghouses and communities, small and large waters will run with waste and silt, turn their uglified surfaces to the sky and fill the air with stench.

May Get Worse

"This is the way it will be, and worse, just as long as the nation allows it and is unwilling to pay the full price to put its water resources in order.

"A TVA booklet calls water 'nature's constant gift.' This gift is deserved only if it is cherished, preserved and wisely used. The time for Americans to be worthy of it is now."

Taylor estimates that the country as a whole enjoys about 30 inches of precipitation annually—not, of course, evenly divided. This amounts to a runoff of about 4.4 trillion gallons a day, of which about 1.1 trillion gallons can be considered "potentially usable" by man. But this is reduced to about 515 million gallons, he says, because of regional variations in rain and snowfall, natural and man-made pollution, and failure to provide development and conservation facilities.

By 1900, he continues in his analysis, the country used about 8 percent of the 515 million gallons. By 1960 it was using 60 percent—with the rate going up at twice the rate of population growth. By the next decade, he goes on, estimates are that use will aggregate "well over 600 million gallons per day," and that by 2000 the figure will go up to nearly 900 million gallons.

The problem has three main facets, Taylor writes—irregular or scanty rainfall such as that which has brought drought to the Northeast over the past few years; pollution, both manmade and natural, and failure to control streamflow.

"Plenty of water flowing in a stream means nothing if human and industrial waste and silt befoul the artery's function to carrying filth and contamination downstream to the next community," he declares. "Pollution threatens all other uses. Every major river basin and now even the Great Lakes are heavily polluted. Not one supply has been cleaned up. . . ."

To control streamflow, he explains, involves both surface and ground water. He continues:

"A controlled stream is one in which the annual runoff has been equalized by means of catching water in systems of large main stem and smaller head-water reservoirs when rainfall and snow melt are heaviest. This kind of system aids in reduction of flood damage downstream.

"The same principle of refilling and drawing down underground reservoirs should prevail as that governing operation of surface storage. Programs are needed to achieve their artificial recharging in order to prevent the depletion of underground water tables that has taken place in the Plains states, in Arizona and in California."

AFL-CIO Bakers Win Nabisco Vote

Buena Park, Calif.—The American Bakery & Confectionery Workers turned back an attack by the combined forces of two unions expelled from the AFL-CIO because of corruption in the leadership and won bargaining rights at a new plant of the National Biscuit Co. here.

The election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board gave the ABC a 66-6 win over the Teamsters and the Bakery & Confectionery Workers, scored with the aid of the AFL-CIO Los Angeles-Orange Counties Organizing Committee.

Union Support Spurred For Arthritis Research

A hope for additional support from the labor movement for the fight on one of mankind's greatest cripplers was expressed by Dr. William S. Clark, president of the Arthritis Foundation, at a meeting of the Arthritis & Rheumatism Association of Metropolitan Washington.

He hailed organized labor as representative of "a very vast and probably the most important segment of American society" which has helped in the long battle against the major forms of arthritis and rheumatism. These bring suffering—and in some cases crippling deformities—to more than 12 million men, women and children, according to a study by the National Health Survey, and cost the country some $2.5 billion a year.

AFL-CIO Ssec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler is a director of the national foundation and a member of the board of governors.

Clark noted that considering the rheumatic diseases as a whole, modern classifications "list more than 80 disease entities within the group." When cases have been verified by medical examination, the estimated frequency ranges up to 218 cases per 1,000 people who are 15 years or older, he said.

The worst crippler, rheumatoid arthritis, he said, is estimated to strike seven of every 1,000 people with "definite" cases and "at least another 20 per 1,000" with "probable" cases.

Hope in Research

What is going on in the "very dramatic field" of arthritis research, Clark predicted, will produce soon a "great medical breakthrough" the "fallout" from which will have a major "impact" on all medicine.

For rheumatoid arthritis, "our Number One challenge," the Arthritis Foundation is gearing up to attack the same way polio was attacked and solved, he said, adding that "within a few months we may hear some highly interesting news" about its success.

Clark said the foundation has just completed a revision of its principal piece of literature, a pamphlet titled "The Facts About Arthritis," which will be ready for distribution by May 1. He urged all union members who suffer from arthritis or any other rheumatic disease, or who think they may be afflicted, to write local chapters for a free copy.

Teachers' Study Shows Insurance Benefits Lag

St. Louis—Nearly half the U.S. school systems surveyed by the American Federation of Teachers in a recent study offer no insurance protection of any kind for classroom employes, the union reports here.

By way of contrast the AFT noted that more than 90 percent of private employers provide some form of hospitalization and life insurance protection for white collar employes, according to a 1965 report by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

As further evidence of the marked deficiency in fringe benefits and working conditions for teachers, the union quoted these additional highlights of its survey:

- Only 42 percent of 586 systems responding to the survey offer hospitalization insurance, and only 4 percent extend coverage to the teacher's family.
- About 18 percent of the school systems offer group life insurance, and 15 percent pay all or part of the premium.

It is clear from the study, AFT Pres. Charles Cogen said, that "teachers still have a long way to go to catch up" with private industry. What teachers "need and deserve," he added, is "a professional salary, sound working conditions, and a carefully constructed series of fringe benefits."

The AFT goal is insurance fully-paid by boards of education, the kinds of coverage to be decided by the teachers themselves.

AFT Assistant Research Dir. Donald Burton told a press conference here the results of a parallel survey of 600 school systems showing:

- Sick leave allowance of only 10 days a year in 60 percent of the school systems responding to the survey. The AFT has been urging unlimited accumulation of sick leave days and no less than 15 a year.
- Fully paid personal or emergency leave was provided by 240 systems but 147 provided none and 26 did not respond.
- In the field of sabbatical leaves for study, rest and travel, no school system allowed full pay for an entire year but 58 percent offered partially-paid sabbaticals.

Many teachers eligible for such a leave do not take one, the survey showed. Burton gave this reason: "Teachers can hardly maintain their living standards on full salary . . . It's impossible on half salary."

Shoe Workers Win At Illinois Plant

Greenup, Ill.—Success after 15 years of organizing effort was achieved by the United Shoe Workers at the Eddlebrick Shoe Co. here. Workers voted for the union, 155-71, in a National Labor Relations Board election.

National Dir. Russell J. Taylor of the Shoe Workers said plant workers were organized by his union staff with the help of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization.

LABOR ATTACHES from countries throughout the free world were given AFL-CIO views at a meeting in Washington sponsored by the Dept. of Intl. Affairs. Left to right are Labor Attache Jose A. Naldo of the Philippines; First Sec. Anton G. O. Smit of the Netherlands Embassy; AFL-CIO Intl. Affairs Dir. Jay Lovestone and Alfred J. Morris of the Panamanian Embassy.

Labor Studies Center Planned at University

The National Institute for Labor Education is cooperating to develop a national center for labor studies at American University in Washington designed to serve the needs of universities and unions in the fields of labor economics and labor education.

Dean W. Donald Bowles of the university's College of Arts & Sciences and Dean Richard Bray of the College of Continuing Education have been elected to the NILE board of directors, and the NILE offices have been relocated on the university's downtown campus.

Announcement of the program was made by the NILE director, Dr. Joseph Mire, following a meeting of the executive committee. Mire has been appointed a part-time research professor in economics at AU and will work to develop the center.

Program Plans

The proposed center will be concerned at the start with developing major programs in the College of Arts & Sciences' Dept. of Economics and in the College of Continuing Education, although all of the university's facilities and faculty will be available to it.

The institute will continue other labor education programs it has been carrying on under federal and foundation grants.

"It is my hope," said Bowles, "that the association between NILE and AU will be a national catalyst for academic education in labor economics and manpower studies at the graduate level, and for a strong research center utilizing fully the unique research and personnel resources of the nation's capital, both in government and in the large number of international unions that have central offices located here."

Bray saw as the center's first task the establishment of a national information center on labor education, followed later by "broad educational programs for full-time union staffs, local elected officers, and rank-and-file union members."

NILE, which was established in 1957, is headed by Dr. Ralph N. Campbell, of the Cornell University School of Industrial & Labor Relations. AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin is a vice president. Other unionists on the executive committee are James E. Noe, education and research director of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and Education Dir. Carroll Hutton of the Auto Workers. The 21-member board of directors includes eight labor representatives.

Ohio Wage Floor Aids 100,000 Women, Minors

Columbus, O.—The Ohio AFL-CIO won a long fight to obtain a $1.25 per hour minimum wage for an estimated 100,000 women and minors in the retail industry when State Industrial Relations Dir. William O. Walker formally accepted a wage board recommendation.

The recommendation proposed the $1.25 rate for all workers in the category except part-time employes, the handicapped, learners and first-year students in distributive education programs.

$1 for Three Groups

The nine-member board suggested $1 for the first three of these groups, with the student group receiving 85 cents an hour as the federal law provides. In addition the board defined part-time employes as those working no more than four hours a day for a maximum of 24 hours a week and learners as those with less than 90 days experience. It left definition of the handicapped to Walker.

Walker approved the exceptions except for the handicapped who are certified and licensed by their employers as handicapped. These workers, he held, already have ample protection under the law.

Joining with the State AFL-CIO in presentations to the tripartite wage board were the Retail-Wholesale Union and the Retail Clerks. Labor members of the board were RWDSU Intl. Rep. Eugene Ingles; Sec.-Treas. Larry Radabaugh of RCIA Local 698, Akron, and David McDonald of RCIA Local 880, Cleveland.

State AFL-CIO Sec. Treas. Robert D. Bollard hailed Walker's acceptance of the recommendations and predicted it would help organized labor's continuing drive for a statewide minimum wage law covering men, women and minors. Meanwhile, he said, labor will continue to press for wage boards for employment in 13 additional industries.

Fire Fighters Warn of Drift To Other Jobs

Toronto, Ont.—Competitive conditions may begin to deprive communities in the United States and Canada of adequate fire fighting services unless the wages and working conditions of firemen are continually improved, the executive board of the Fire Fighters said at a meeting here.

The board issued the warning after studying the impact of a full employment economy on fire protection services, IAFF Pres. William D. Buck said. Failure to improve the pay scales and conditions of fire fighters, he warned, "may cause many cities and towns to lose substantial numbers of their fire fighters to more lucrative jobs in private industry."

Speaking for the full executive board, Buck cited what he called a "continuing attack" in both countries on efforts to raise fire fighters' pay and living conditions.

Both policemen and fire fighters, he said, deserve better treatment. To give wage hikes only to policemen, "which has become a fashionable dogma for some city management 'experts'," he said, can but harm the integrity and effectiveness of many fire departments.

"The facts show," Buck said, "that a failure to pay decent wages, or to work out satisfactory schedules of decent hours, is leading to a gradual drift away from fire service employment."

The IAFF has called on the governing bodies of cities, towns, provinces and states in both nations "to take a clear new look at this problem," he said.

PLUMBERS & PIPE FITTERS honored the union's retired secretary-treasurer, William C. O'Neill, at a luncheon attended by 900 persons. Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, right, presented O'Neill with keys to a new car as a retirement gift.

Three-Fourths of Rise:

Sharp Jump in CPI Laid to Food Costs

duced supplies of beef, veal and pork. Poultry prices jumped 8 percent and egg prices 4 percent over January, the department said.

Arnold Chase, assistant commissioner of labor statistics, predicted that "the worst of the increases appear to be over" but said another rise could be expected in March, though it would be "substantially less" than February's. Good weather, he said, should end temporary shortages of fresh vegetables, but meat and poultry prices are not expected to fall until later in the year. (See "How to Buy" column by Sidney Margolius on Page 8.)

The report showed that a lot of other things went up in price, too —mortgage interest rates, property taxes and insurance, home maintenance and repairs, housekeeping services, heating fuel and gasoline, clothing, and doctor and health services.

The only major items that showed a drop were new and used autos, and even they went down less than seasonally. Prices for furniture and appliances were unchanged.

An increase in take-home pay of about 20 cents was wiped out by the price rise. Take-home pay inched up to $97.80 a week for a married worker with two children and to $90 for an unmarried worker, but real spendable earnings dropped 28 cents for the married worker and 24 cents for the single person, the BLS said.

An estimated 156,000 workers will receive cost-of-living wage increases as a result of the hike in the index. Most of them—about 137,000—will get 2 cents an hour based on the change from November; approximately 7,350 will get 3 cents and 1,900 will get 1 cent on the same basis.

Other Increases

Increases of 1 cent will go to 1,625 workers and 4 cents to 1,000 workers due to monthly and semi-annual changes, respectively. Based on quarterly changes in the Detroit and Washington, D.C., indices, 4,300 workers in Battle Creek, Mich., will get 3 cents an hour and 3,000 in Washington will get 4 cents.

In comparing February prices with those of a year earlier, the BLS laid most of the 2.5 percent rise over the year to a 6 percent jump in food. Exceptions to the general rise were potatoes, down nearly 30 percent from February 1965, and citrus fruits, orange juice and bananas. Consumer service prices were up by 2.4 percent.

Chase took a look into the future and forecast for 1966 a CPI increase of "a little more" than the approximately 2 percent recorded in 1965. However, he conceded that hard predictions were impossible because "so much depends on the weather."

He said the BLS was unable to find any signs of panic buying in anticipation of skyrocketing prices.

8th Congress of Strings Seeks Talented Youths

New York—The Musicians and locals of the union in all parts of the United States and Canada are looking for 100 talented young string instrumentalists to give them scholarships to the eighth annual Congress of Strings.

The congress is co-sponsored by the AFM and Michigan State University, on whose campus at East Lansing the winners will study and perform between June 26 and Aug. 20 under the tutelage of some of the world's foremost musicians.

The students are selected in local community auditions. With financing by the AFM and the locals, they receive free transportation to the campus, as well as meals, lodging and instruction.

Donald Johanos, music director of the Dallas, Tex., Symphony, again will serve as dean of the congress faculty. The students will perform under his direction and that of two other outstanding leaders—Joseph Krips, conductor of the San Francisco Symphony, and William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony. It is planned to have a fourth noted conductor participate.

Practice sessions will be held daily. They include regular symphony orchestra repertoire and chamber music, and small group instruction in bass, viola, cello and violin.

AFM Sec.-Treas. Stanley Ballard, congress project director, listed among the faculty:

Faculty List

Concertmaster Rafael Druian of the Cleveland Orchestra; Frank Houser, associate concertmaster of the San Francisco Symphony; Concertmaster Hyman Goodman, Toronto Symphony; Concertmaster Leonard Posner, Dallas Symphony; Robert Jamieson, principal cellist, Minneapolis Symphony; Theodore Salzman, formerly principal cellist of the Pittsburgh Symphony; John A. Di Janni, principal violist of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, and Warren Benfield, double bassist of the Chicago Symphony.

The eight-week summer sessions have more than justified the time and expense, according to AFM Pres. Herman D. Kenin, under whose direction the congress was founded in 1959.

"The students have distinguished themselves in all divisions of the classical music field," he said. "Almost every major American symphony has former Congress of Strings students among its personnel. Their accomplishments are eloquent testimony to this worthwhile program."

GOP Attack Falls Short:

Administration Wins Budget Test in House

vative fears — the GOP rode to battle under a new slogan of "rifles or ruffles." This, it was reported, replaces the earlier "guns or butter" slogan which was discarded out of deference to the feelings of dairy state congressmen.

House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford (Mich.) put it this way:

"The United States today is in the midst of wartime inflation . . . In this crisis, the Congress has a responsibility to cut back and hold the line on domestic spending."

Majority Leader Carl Albert (Okla.) retorted that over the years the Republicans "have been blind in their opposition to progressive legislation; blind in their concern for human beings; blind to the significance of the era in which we live."

He said Administration supporters "are just as opposed to inflation as anyone else, but we do not run for cover every time the word is mentioned."

The GOP also attacked a $10 million item to launch a federal teachers corps to bring teams of skilled and apprentice teachers to work in poverty neighborhood schools at the invitation of local school systems. A northern Democrat, Rep. Robert B. Duncan (Ore.), moved to eliminate the money for the program. He received few votes from Democrats and his motion was beaten on a non-record 156-128 vote.

Rep. Frank T. Bow (R-O) found little support from either side of the aisle when he tried to eliminate $41 million in "impact" aid to schools with large enrollments from families of federal military and civilian employes. The President had not sought the funds and has urged a heavy cutback in the program, but 315 House members come from districts receiving aid and Bow's motion was shouted down on a voice vote.

Passed 269-122

Most of the money in the bill was for federal commitments which could not be cut, matching grants to states authorized by existing laws. In final form, the money bill passed on a 269-122 vote.

With considerably less heat, Congress gave final approval to a bill setting uniform dates for daylight saving time this year and making daylight saving automatic next year unless a state legislature specifically votes to keep the state on standard time.

In another development, the House Banking Committee voted to give the Administration standby authority to impose controls on consumer installment credit terms. The amendment to a routine bill extending the Defense Production Act was sponsored by Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D-Wis.).

The Administration had not sought the credit control authority, but the standby proposal had the endorsement of the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, of which Reuss is a member.

NEW JERSEY Rubber Workers, delegates to their union's national legislative conference, get a friendly reception as they call on Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.), right.

NLRB Backs Union Right To Job Data

The National Labor Relations Board, upholding a trial examiner's finding, ruled that the Auto Workers are entitled to wage data and job descriptions of salaried technicians at the Akron, O., plant of Goodyear Aerospace Corp. to protect their members against loss of work.

The technicians are not in the UAW's bargaining unit but perform allied duties. For 15 years the union has asked for a description of their work and other data, and management has consistently refused to provide it.

A three-man board panel adopted the recommended order of Examiner Frederick U. Reel requiring the aircraft parts firm to supply the UAW with the "name, department number, job title or classification, job description, wage or salary, hours and fringe benefits of each excluded technician" at plants where UAW local 856 is the legal bargaining representative of the workers.

The examiner, reviewing comparable court decisions, found management was "under a duty to furnish the requested data and violated . . . the Act by failing to do so."

Senate Urged to Beef Up Mine Safety Measure

The AFL-CIO has endorsed the mine safety bill passed by the House last Sept. 6 and urged the Senate to pass it with one strengthening amendment.

The bill called the Federal Metal & and Nonmetallic Mine Safety Act is "well designed to achieve an effective mine safety program" with the single exception of a provision leaving enforcement to the states, Federation Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said in a message to Chairman Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) of the Senate Labor subcommittee.

The need for safety legislation is "particularly acute" in the mines involved, Biemiller wrote, because the work must be carried on "under especially adverse natural conditions, the industry has become largely mechanized, and the health hazards in work underground are acute."

He asked the subcommittee to eliminate Section 13 of the bill under study because "mine safety should not be left to the vagaries" of state enforcement agencies, but should be concentrated under a single federal agency, preferably the Bureau of Mines of the Dept. of Interior.

Biemiller said the AFL-CIO "fully supports" the position of the Steelworkers detailed in a statement presented by USWA Legislative Dir. Frank N. Hoffmann, whose union represents 30,000 miners.

Hoffmann said the union has been trying for more than a decade to get mine safety legislation enacted. He added: "Preservation of life, limb and health of the workmen in mining is paramount; without such protection, efficient production is imposible."

A recent report to Congress by a mine safety board revealed the ineffectiveness of state and local efforts to reduce safety hazards, Hoffmann declared. He also urged that the bill be strengthened by giving responsibility for safety to the Bureau of Mines.

TWUA Gains 25c Package In Northeast

Boston — The Textile Workers Union of America announced tentative agreement with three major New England textile firms on a 25-cent hourly package of benefits in a three-year contract.

The union's Cotton-Synthetics Advisory Council is recommending acceptance of the settlement, TWUA Pres. William Pollock said.

The offer, if ratified by the locals, is expected to become a general pattern for new contracts with 175 other firms employing about 40,000 workers and meetings for that purpose are being scheduled, William Pollock added.

The wage-fringe increase offer was made by the American Thread Co., Bates Mfg. Co. and West Point-Pepperell Inc., whose plants are in Maine and Connecticut. It provides:

- A wage increase of 10 cents an hour when current contracts expire Apr. 15, plus 2 cents in fringe benefits.
- Additional increases averaging 6 cents per hour in April 1967 and 7 cents in April 1968.

All wage increases would be applied to incentive rates in all plants, Pollock said.

The offer would raise plant minimum rates from the present $1.50 floor to $1.60 this year, $1.65 a year later and $1.71 in the final year of the agreement.

Pollock said the settlement offer is "not as high as the workers are entitled to in light of the industry's profits" and the rise in productivity and living costs, but "it does indicate that management is willing" to give its employes a "meaningful share" of its prosperity.

The fringe benefits differ from plant to plant but may include sickness and accident benefits, removing the ceiling on severance pay on retirement, now 20 weeks; a $500 increase in life insurance coverage and liberalized retirement benefits, the union reported.

Guild Certified At Canada UPI

Ottawa, Ont. — The Canadian Wire Service Guild, a unit of the Newspaper Guild, has been certified by the Canadian Labor Relations Board as bargaining agent for United Press-Intl. employes across Canada.

The certificate was issued after the CWSG filed membership applications signed by a majority of the 27 staff members. It covers UPI employes in Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Halifax and Quebec City. The wire service's employes in the United States have held a Guild contract for a number of years.

Wage Floor Expansion Termed Vital to Nation

wage floor for agricultural employes [should] lag permanently behind that of other protected employes." The intent, rather, is to allow Congress to study the impact of a farm minimum wage. The report noted that Pres. Roosevelt's original minimum wage message in 1937 asked Congress "to help those who toil in factory and on farm."

It noted that about 44 percent of the 485,000 farm workers to be covered presently earn less than $1 an hour and estimated that the added labor cost would be approximately one cent on each unit for vegetables and fruits, defining "unit" as "per pound or per dozen or per head," whichever is customary for the crop.

"If retail prices go up more than that and if the increase is blamed on rising labor costs in the field, the American housewife should demand a complete and immediate congressional inquiry," the committee said.

The committee firmly rejected the "perennial spectre" that a higher minimum wage will mean unemployment as marginal workers are priced out of the labor market. This argument was raised every time the Fair Labor Standards Act has been improved, the committee noted, and each time disproved by experience. It added:

"There could be no better time than the present period of unprecedented business prosperity to broaden the base of the Act and to increase the minimum wage to a level which will provide a living wage."

Rising business profits, the committee said, "indicate that the adjustment to the economic impact of this legislation should be a relatively easy one for American businesses to make."

The legislation is expected to reach the House floor in late April, with indications that opponents will concentrate on seeking to cut back the coverage rather than the wage level.

Two of the 10 committee Republicans filed individual dissents from the committee report.

Rep. Dave Martin (Neb.) termed the $1.60 wage level "excessive and dangerous" and attacked inclusion of farm workers. Rep. Glenn Andrews (Ala.) said he considered the bill "inflationary," although an "agreeable" improvement over the $1.75 wage floor the committee had recommended last year.

Screen Guilds Support Suit Against CATV

New York—The Screen Actors Guild and the Directors Guild have filed a joint brief with U.S. District Court here in support of a suit by United Artists to stop the Fortnightly Corp. from picking up its televised movies and transmitting them to subscribers to its community antenna TV system in Pennsylvania.

The brief stressed that the guilds acted to protect the economic interests of their members. It showed that under their contracts, the members of both are entitled to additional compensation when films on which they have worked are televised or retelevised. In addition, it supported the charge that CATV transmission of its televised pictures infringes on its copyright.

The CATV system has been picking up the legitimate telecasts without paying but is collecting for sending them on to its subscribers, the suit charged.

'Bigger' Box Of Cereal Led To 'Truth' Bill

Cleveland—A box of cereal that didn't "make the round of the table" was the genesis of the truth-in-packaging bill, Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) told union members here.

Hart gave this account of how his interest was aroused in misleading packaging in a talk to the Inter-Union Gas Industry Conference:

"Five years ago my family noted at the breakfast table that one of our favorite cereals was in a new—and bigger—box. We also noted that the new box didn't make the round of the table. The old, smaller box had."

Today, Hart noted, consumers have become aware that the "frustrations" they face in the market place are "not unique" and the problem is national.

The drug investigations launched by the late Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) brought needed reforms. Support has been growing for both truth-in-packaging and the long-pending truth-in-lending bill of Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.). And, Hart noted, Pres. Johnson's recent consumer message points out other areas of needed action.

The conference was attended by delegates from the Building Service Employes, the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, the Chemical Workers and a group of directly-affiliated AFL-CIO local unions.

First '66 Consumer Bill:

Tire Safety Measure Approved by Senate

The Senate unanimously passed a labor-endorsed tire safety bill, the first consumer legislation to reach a vote this year.

It would set minimum safety standards for new and retread tires, ban the sale of hazardous "regrooved" tires, and direct the government to issue a meaningful grading system. At present, consumers have no way of knowing whether one manufacturer's "premium" tire is equal to another brand's "first line" or a third company's "100 level."

The Administration-backed bill was sponsored by Senate Commerce Committee Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) and strengthened by a floor amendment introduced by Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.). It passed on a 79-0 roll-call and now goes to the House.

Endorsed by President

Pres. Johnson endorsed the bill in his Mar. 2 transportation message, citing evidence that "increasing numbers of inferior tires are being sold to unwitting customers throughout the country."

The AFL-CIO convention last December urged both safety standards and a grading system for tires. In a letter to Magnuson, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller had criticized the "confusing mish-mash" in tire labeling and declared:

"We believe it is absolutely vital to the safety of the American people that all automobile tires sold conform to federal minimum safety and performance standards.

"Furthermore, we believe that the welfare of the consumer public requires a uniform, federally-enforced system of tire-grading and tire-labeling."

The Senate-passed bill directs the Secretary of Commerce to:

- Promulgate not later than Jan. 31, 1967, interim minimum safe performance standards for new tires, based on existing public and private standards.
- Establish not later than Jan. 31, 1969, revised standards for new tires and minimum standards for retreads, based on a comprehensive program of research and testing. These standards would also include maximum permissible loads for each size of tire—a provision Magnuson termed "very important." At present, he said, car manufacturers sometimes try to cut costs by supplying a smaller size tire than needed by the weight of the car and its potential load.
- Prescribe within two years after enactment a uniform quality grading system for tires to help consumers "make an informed choice." The grade designations would take effect six months after their publication in the Federal Register.

The original bill merely directed the secretary to make recommendations to Congress for a uniform grading system, "if feasible." The Senate accepted Nelson's amendment to give the government a green light to put a grading system into effect.

House Committee Boosts Value Of Federal Pay, Fringe Package

A pay and fringe benefits bill for federal employes cleared the House Post Office & Civil Service Committee with strong bipartisan support and moved toward an early vote on the House floor.

Improved fringe benefits and the dropping of a proposed increase in employe contributions to the retirement fund raised the "take-home value" of the bill above the Administration's original proposal, which was linked to the 3.2 percent wage "guidelines." The House Committee bill would also take effect six months sooner—in July instead of next January.

The 2.85 percent pay raise for 1.8 million salaried employes matches the amount recommended by Pres. Johnson—although lower-paid workers would receive more and higher-bracket executives less than the Administration proposed. The committee applied the average increase across-the-board; the Administration bill ranged from 1 to 4 percent.

Pension and other fringe benefit improvements apply to nearly 600,000 hourly-paid wage board workers as well as to salaried employes. On most fringe items, the committee broadened the original bill.

The retirement provisions include Administration proposals long sought by AFL-CIO unions of federal employes—among them the right of employes with 30 years of service to retire at full pension at age 55 instead of 60. But the committee discarded the Administration proposal to require employes to contribute 7 percent of their salaries to the Civil Service Retirement Fund, instead of the present 6.5 percent, to help pay the cost. The committee also dropped a union-opposed provision allowing federal agencies to force early retirement on employes with 30 years of service.

Postal and federal employe unions welcomed the improvements made in the bill which were generally in line with proposals they made in testimony before the committee. The principal unions accepted the 2.85 percent pay formula with assurances from key committee members of higher "catch-up" raises in the future.

Other fringe improvements in the committee bill include:

- Improved survivorship benefits.
- Eligibility of all federal employes for social security hospital benefits after 65 on the same basis. Most are presently excluded.
- An increase in the government's contribution to group health insurance for employes from the present 28 percent to 38 percent, effective Jan. 1. The Administration had proposed doing this in two steps instead of one.
- Increased allowances for federal employes required to wear uniforms.
- A 25 percent pay premium for Sunday work by persons whose regular workweek includes Sunday.
- Liberalized overtime benefits for many employes.
- Optional retirement at 60 instead of 62 for employes with 20 years of service.

Role of Labor Pressed In Federal Wage Boards

Wage board procedures for setting prevailing pay rates for the government's 560,000 blue collar workers "should approach collective bargaining practices in private industry as closely as possible," the AFL-CIO said.

Labor's views were presented to Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., by an AFL-CIO committee which included representatives of unions with large membership among federal workers. Macy, at Pres. Johnson's request, is studying pay-setting procedures for hourly-paid employes, which presently differ from agency to agency.

The committee declared:

"Any changes in the present methods and procedures for wage determination should clearly establish and promote the basic principles of union participation and collective bargaining at all steps and levels of the job classification, wage-survey and wage-setting processes."

The statement stressed that "the AFL-CIO again and again has declared its opposition" to a central wage board to fix pay scales. It cautioned against "hasty" changes to meet "arbitrary deadlines."

It said local wage determination committees, charged with establishing the prevailing wage structure in each locality, should be made up equally of union and management representatives.

Furthermore, the AFL-CIO said, union representatives should participate equally in collection of wage data and have the right to challenge the listing of companies surveyed and propose inclusion of additional shops.

National Review Asked

Appeals from local wage committees, the AFL-CIO recommended, should go to national agency review committees of three agency and three union members, with an impartial public member to vote in case of a tie. An agency head would have to have the specific approval of the President to reject a wage recommendation.

Members of the AFL-CIO committee are Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller; Orrin Burrows, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Thomas R. Donahue, Building Service Employes; John F. Griner, American Federation of Government Employes; B. A. Gritta, AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept.; John A. McCart, AFL-CIO Government Employes Council, and William H. Ryan, Machinists Dist. 44.

Wage-Hour Guide Covers New Act

The Labor Dept.'s Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Division has issued a guide to the McNamara-O'Hara Service Contract Act as an aid to contractors, subcontractors and employes working on covered contracts.

The act requires that all employes of contractors or subcontractors working on any government service contract be paid at least the $1.25 an hour minimum specified in the Fair Labor Standards Act and that the work they do, not be performed under unsafe or unsanitary conditions. On service contracts of more than $2,500 the employes must get the wages and fringe benefits determined by the wage-hour administrator to be prevailing for such work in the area.

Paducah, Ky.—Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Local 3-550 has won a nine-year battle for disability benefits for Roy F. Rhine, former member. Arbitrator Nathan Cayton ordered the Union Carbide Corp. to give Rhine nearly $15,000 in benefits.

Rhine was fired in 1957 on the ground he had a liver ailment and there was no work for him at the plant here. He charged that the disability had been induced by his work at Union Carbide.

7 Unions Join In Challenging T-H Affidavit

Seven AFL-CIO-affiliated unions, the American Civil Liberties Union and the National Farmers Union have joined in challenging the constitutionality of the non-Communist affidavit procedure formerly required of union officials under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The affidavit requirement was repealed in 1959, but a case dating to the period it was in effect is before the court for review.

Unions joining in the friend-of-the-court brief are the Auto Workers, Clothing Workers, Meat Cutters, Packinghouse Workers, Teachers, Typographical Union and the Transport Workers.

They argued that the requirement violated rights of free speech and subjected individuals to punishment without judicial trial.

The case before the court is the conviction of six officers and employes of the Mine-Mill & Smelter Workers, an unaffiliated union expelled from the former CIO. They were found guilty of falsely denying that they were members of the Communist Party.

March Job Report Shows Factory, Building Gains

House Votes Increase in Federal Pay

The House voted 392-1 approval of a 2.85 percent pay raise for 1.8 million federal employes, coupled with improvements in retirement and other fringe benefits.

The bill, which now goes to the Senate, would take effect July 1, six months earlier than Pres. Johnson had proposed.

Nearly all the congressmen who took part in the debate—Democrats and Republicans alike—expressed regret that the amount of the increase wasn't higher.

At the strong request of the White House, the House Post Office & Civil Service Committee had kept the bill's budget cost down to the Administration's 3.2 percent "guidelines" figure. However, the committee applied the President's "average" 2.85 percent raise across the board, thus boosting the raise for lower-paid workers and reducing the increase for higher-bracket officials.

Another major change from the Administration proposal was the dropping of a provision which would have required employes to help pay for improved retirement benefits through a higher payroll deduction into the contributory Civil Service Retirement Fund. The retirement benefits do not show up as a budget cost.

The lone dissent on the roll call vote came from Rep. W. R. Poage (D-Tex.), who complained that any pay raise at this time would be "inflationary."

Short of Goal

The compromise bill had the unanimous support of the House committee, but key members agreed that it fell short of the "comparability" test with private industry salaries and expressed the hope that a larger increase would be possible next year.

The principal postal and federal employe unions contended that a 7 percent raise would be needed to achieve comparability with non-government workers but supported the committee bill as an improvement over the original Administration proposal.

House Republicans were solidly rebuffed on their first two attempts to impose a 5 percent cut on all domestic spending bills.

The party strategy was adopted at a meeting of the House Republican Conference with the announced aim of avoiding a tax increase.

Shortly after the conference broke up, the new policy faced its first test on a GOP proposal to cut 5 percent from a $1.2 bil-

Mediators Enter Rail Bargaining

Federal mediators entered the dispute between the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen and major rail carriers over restoration of railroad firemen to their jobs.

The National Mediation Board asked labor and management to meet with mediators Apr. 12 in Baltimore for B&O Railroad employes and on the same date in Roanoke, Va., for the Norfolk & Western.

Mediation procedures had been agreed on at a meeting between Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and BLF&E Pres. H. E. Gilbert, who acted to end a four-day strike of 8,000 firemen against eight U.S. railroads after receiving assurances that mediators would be assigned and collective bargaining resumed.

The strike had tied up all train movements on the eight roads. Members of other unions declined to cross the firemen's picket lines on the Boston & Maine, Central of Georgia, Seaboard Air Line, Missouri Pacific, Union Pacific, Grand Trunk Western, Illinois Central, and the Pennsylvania Lines west of Harrisburg, Pa.

Gilbert said the strike was called "for the purpose of securing collective bargaining" and that it succeeded in getting the bargaining process started "on the way toward settling the controversy."

The union pins its hopes for getting the carriers to the bargaining table on a statement by Pres. Johnson urging the firemen to end their strike.

Whatever issues may be in dispute, Johnson said in a message delivered by Wirtz, "should be resolved by negotiations" under procedures of the Railway Labor Act. He said such procedures "can and

AGREEMENT to start negotiations on contract with striking Delano, Calif., grape workers is signed by Sidney Korshak, left, attorney for Schenley Industries Corp., and Cesar Chavez, director of National Farm Workers Association. Standing are Sec.-Treas. W. J. Bassett of the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO (left) and AFL-CIO Organization Dir. William L. Kircher.

Agreement with Schenley:

Grape Strikers Win Major Breakthrough

Los Angeles—A major breakthrough on the farm labor battlefront in California came Apr. 6 when Schenley Industries Corp. agreed to begin negotiations for a collective bargaining contract with the striking grape workers in Delano.

It was the first break in the seven-month-old dispute which has pitted several of the giants of California's $3.8 billion agricultural industry against a handful of destitute farm workers.

And it came as demands for legislation, both state and national, were mounting to give collective bargaining rights to agricultural workers after the nation's attention was focused on their plight.

The recognition agreement, specifying the National Farm Workers Association as the bargaining agent for some 400 Schenley grape workers in Kern and Tulare counties, was signed at the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO headquarters.

It was the culmination of a week of discussions with Schenley executives and key union leaders, including William L. Kircher, AFL-CIO organizing director. Kircher announced the agreement at a press conference shortly after the signing.

Talks Scheduled

The agreement calls for negotiations for a written collective bargaining contract to begin within 30 days with a pledge that both parties will make every effort to conclude a pact within 60 days.

Kircher predicted that the recognition would prove a giant step toward eventual union organization of all workers on large corporate farms. Schenley owns about 3,500 acres of vineyards in the Delano area out of the 47,000 acres involved in the dispute.

Sidney Korshak, attorney for Schenley Industries, signed the agreement for the company and Cesar Chavez, director of the NFWA, signed for the union. Kircher signed as a witness.

The AFL-CIO Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee has jointly conducted the strike in Delano with NFWA. The Schenley workers were members of the in-

Teen-Age Group Lags For Month

By Saul Miller

Non-farm jobs increased by 520,000 in March with more than seasonal increases in manufacturing and construction helping chalk up the largest gain for the month since 1950.

But an increase in unemployment among 14 to 17-year-old youngsters—a small group where precise measurement is difficult, the Labor Dept. said—inched the jobless rate to 3.8 percent of the labor force, up one-tenth of 1 percent from February.

Workweek Up

The government's report showed a seasonal increase of two-tenths of an hour, sending the average factory workweek to 41.5 hours in March and average overtime to 3.9 hours a week, the highest overtime figure for the month since the series began in 1956.

The increases in the workweek and overtime sent factory workers' average weekly earnings up nearly $1 to $111.22 in March. However, the government had reported last week that a rise in living costs and increased social security taxes had kept real earnings unchanged over the year.

The Labor Dept. report disclosed also that the labor force grew a bit more than anticipated in the first three months of 1966 as the availability of jobs attracted more persons to the labor force. The civilian labor force rose 1.2 million over the quarter to 74.8 million persons.

The first quarter of the year

New Sign-Up Deadline Voted For Medicare

Late applicants for enrollment in the $3-a-month voluntary medicare insurance program were assured of another chance when Congress passed and sent to Pres. Johnson for his signature a bill extending the signing-up period by two months.

The legislation, urged by the President, extends the deadline from the original Mar. 31 to May 31. About 1.3 million men and women over 65 years of age failed to act during the original application period, the Social Security Administration reported, and many may be expected to sign up during the extension period.

The extension originated in the Senate, where it was tacked on to a minor non-controversial tax bill

Stereotypers, LPIU Slate Talks Aimed at Graphic Arts Merger

The executive board of the Stereotypers & Electrotypers has voted to enter merger negotiations with the Lithographers & Photoengravers.

Unity discussions were authorized by the Stereotypers' convention last September and confirmed by a referendum vote of the 12,000 members in January, with the board empowered to pick the other union.

"The board decided that the role of its organization as platemakers can best be served by exploring a physical merger with other printing union platemakers," it said in announcing its decision.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany commenting on the development saw "the distinct possibility that in the foreseeable future we shall have a unified graphic arts union."

He recalled that at the AFL-CIO convention last December he expressed the conviction that organized labor in the future "must place even greater emphasis upon the consolidation of competing organizations as the way to a more rational and effective trade union structure."

"This is a significant example of just what is needed to be done by the unions in many industries," Meany added. "Here is an industry plagued by bitter jurisdictional and organizational disputes for well over half a century. These unions deserve high commendation that they are now adopting the sound trade union outlook that the salvation of the interests of their members lies in unity.

"They will find as they work out and achieve the formula for that unity, though division might be a habit of the mind hard to break, once it is broken, the pain of the experience will disappear quite quickly as they discover how much the gains from fraternal action for the common good will outweigh the pains."

ACWA Wins 52c Package In Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Clothing Workers have negotiated a three-year contract providing wage and benefit increases valued at 52 cents an hour for 400 alteration tailors in most of the area's clothing stores and men's apparel departments.

The alteration workers, called bushelmen by the trade, will get wage hikes of $5 a year each year of the agreement; a third week of vacation, a seventh paid holiday, an increase in insurance and pension benefits, and overtime pay after eight hours of work. Benefits are retroactive to Mar. 1.

The new pact also calls for a boost in the fitters' minimum wage to $118 for a five-day 40-hour week and to $105 for assistant fitters, both over a two-year period.

ACWA Local 56 Business Agent Gus Gervasi said the third week of vacation will be taken in the winter season after a year's service instead of the 10 years of service formerly required — the only such bushelmen's agreement in ACWA contracts.

The seventh paid holiday may be taken whenever a member desires. Overtime pay is required at time and a half for all work over eight hours daily, and for all Saturday work.

Gervasi said most stores agreed to a monthly deduction of union dues and all agreed to cover bushelmen under the union's national insurance plan.

Food Prices Due to Drop, Freeman Says

The sharp rise in retail food prices can "absolutely not" be blamed on higher labor costs, Sec. of Agriculture Orville Freeman told a press conference.

Anyway, he and the Labor Dept. agree the figures on the supermarket tape will drop.

They went up, Freeman said, for two basic reasons—scarcity of cattle, after an oversupply in 1964 led to a drop in prices, resulting in higher meat prices, and bad weather in Florida, California and Texas that damaged fruits and vegetables and sent their prices up.

He predicted that by the end of the year prices will be about 6 percent less with poultry and eggs down 15 to 20 percent and vegetables down 20 to 25 percent.

His forecast was followed by a Labor Dept. report that the wholesale food price index had declined, the sixth week in a row it had either dropped or remained stable. The reading for the last week in March, the report showed, was 3 percent less than the average for all of February, with meats down 4 percent. Past experience indicates, a department spokesman said, that retail prices will soon start dropping or, at least, remain unchanged.

Raid Repulsed By Iron Workers

Milwaukee—The Iron Workers, bargaining agent for 369 workers at the Harnischfeger Corp. plant in nearby Cudahy, Wis., defeated an attempted raid by the expelled United Electrical Workers. The vote in a National Labor Relations Board election was Iron Workers 200, UE 124, neither 8.

The victory was reported by the Iron Workers and the AFL-CIO regional office. The plant was bought by Harnischfeger 20 months ago from the Novo Industrial Corp., Milwaukee Crane division.

FREE COLLEGE education for all qualified students was urged by the principal speakers at a conference on higher education sponsored by the Ohio AFL-CIO in cooperation with Kent State University. Speakers included (left to right) State Sen. Robert D. Stockdale of Kent State's University Relations Dept.; Emery Bacon, assistant to the president of the University of West Virginia and former education director of the Steelworkers, and State Sen. Frank W. King, Ohio AFL-CIO president.

Free College Education Urged for All Qualified

Kent, O.—A tuition-free college education for all qualified applicants was advocated by the principal speakers at a conference on higher education sponsored by the Ohio AFL-CIO in cooperation with Kent State University.

Dr. M. M. Chambers of Indiana University and Emery Bacon, assistant to the president of the University of West Virginia and a former education director of the Steelworkers, both urged abolition of tuition fees at tax-supported colleges and universities.

Chambers told the 240 representatives of labor, industry and education at the conference that this would be an extension of the U. S. system of free education for all, which he called "the marvel of the world, never approached in any other country in all history."

Bacon observed that "every time tuition and other fees rise, more talented students are lost to higher education and the nation." He urged support of proposals advanced by organized labor to:

- Expand free public education to 14 years and eventually to 16.
- Give state universities adequate support.
- Continue federal government support of higher education.
- Consider compulsory attendance laws to meet manpower needs.
- Broaden both graduate programs and general studies for adults.

Dr. John D. Millett, chancellor of the Ohio Board of Regents, conceded that state institutions in Ohio charge higher student fees than many other states, with the average to be about $525 next year. One reason for this, he said, is to prevent too great a difference in fee structure "from upsetting the balance" between public and private schools.

Challenged by King

He was challenged by State Sen. Frank W. King, president of the State AFL-CIO, who pointed out that student fees at state-supported colleges and universities have risen more sharply in recent years than have state appropriations for higher education.

King said he was "grateful" to the private colleges for the burden they carry, but couldn't believe that public and private colleges were in competition. He said he favored eliminating tuition at state schools and retaining the state's "open admissions" statute, which says, in effect, that any Ohio high school graduate is eligible for admission to a state school.

Commenting generally on the condition in the state, Dr. James H. Pelley, professor of education at Miami University, declared that attendance at college is a right, not a privilege, but that college education in Ohio "is becoming the prerogative of the rich, and working class students are being priced out."

State AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Robert D. Bollard, conference chairman, pointed out that 72 percent of the state's population is made up of families with incomes below $7,500.

"Yet," Bollard said, "it would appear from university profiles that students from these families comprise less than 20 percent of the student body in our state universities and land grant colleges. Conversely, the families in this wage bracket are bearing a proportionately larger share of the high cost of education.

"The land grant colleges and our state universities were established to correct inequities in educational opportunities. This will never be accomplished while admission procedures and policies become ever more restrictive" and costs keep rising.

dependent union. At the press conference Chavez indicated that talks were under way with the national AFL-CIO for eventual affiliation of NFWA. He said also the agreement ended the NFWA boycott against Schenley products.

In commenting upon the agreement, Kircher said:

"I would like to commend Cesar Chavez and his fellow leaders. The role of AFL-CIO indicates our respect for the NFWA. We look forward to the day when this movement is part of the great mainstream of organized labor, the AFL-CIO. The needs of the farm workers, so long forgotten, demand the total strength and solidarity of all of organized labor.

"I want also to commend the wonderful labor movement of California. The great and continued leadership and support of the State AFL-CIO under Tom Pitts and the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor under Bill Bassett have been invaluable in this accomplishment.

"The Schenley Corp. is to be congratulated for its forward-looking posture in this matter. In a sense it has become a pioneer in the breakthrough against the last frontier in this nation where workers are still denied the right to organize and bargain collectively. The AFL-CIO has always appreciated the 100 percent union operation and good relationship of the Schenley Corp."

San Francisco—The Di Giorgio Corp., largest employer of grape workers in the Central Valley of California, has proposed that the California State Mediation & Conciliation Service conduct secret ballot elections to determine whether workers want union representation.

The company announced it would negotiate wages and other conditions with a union if the workers voted union in the proposed elections.

2,000 Jobs at Stake:

Newspaper Unions Seek Merger Limit

New York—Newspaper unions have urged the Justice Dept. to formulate some plan short of full merger to preserve the jobs of more than 2,000 workers on three daily papers contemplating joint publication.

A Newspaper Guild spokesman said total merger is the "furthest step" that should be permitted under the anti-monopoly laws. The leader of Typographical Local 6 urged that publishers be required to keep their plants intact for sale to a new and competing buyer. The head of the Newspaper & Mail Deliverers said the "failing corporation" doctrine should not be used to permit a monopolistic merger when the parent companies are all making money.

The Herald Tribune, Journal American and World-Telegram & Sun filed notice Mar. 22 of intent to merge into the World Journal Tribune, Inc. The number of jobs to be abolished was put at 841 in Guild departments, 450 for the ITU, 450 deliverers, plus members of seven other unions. The papers now employ some 5,700 workers.

The publishers want to combine the Journal American and the World-Telegram into an afternoon paper called the World Journal. The Herald Tribune would continue as a morning newspaper but its Sunday edition would be combined with the Sunday Journal American to become the Sunday World Journal & Tribune.

A Justice Dept. official said it was unlikely the dailies would merge without the department's clearance. But incorporation papers were filed by the publishing firm in Delaware; Journal American employes were alerted to evacuate that plant on short notice, and construction crews began remodeling World-Telegram facilities for joint operation.

ANG Counsel Irving Leuchter told Asst. U.S. Atty. Gen. Donald F. Turner at a Washington meeting that instead of a full merger, it would be preferable to allow one or more of the merging dailies to fail because in that event, other companies could come into the New York field.

Pres. Bertram A. Powers of ITU Local 6 said "we might be interested" in buying one of the plants to be vacated and asked, "Is one available?"

Pres. James M. Byrnes of the Printing Pressmen's local said the Justice Dept. has an obligation to determine if any other publisher is interested in buying one of the dailies.

Major Impact on P.M.'s

The major competitive impact of the merger would be felt in the afternoon field, where the number of papers would be reduced to two—the new World Journal and the 165-year-old New York Post.

Turner told newsmen later he is not sure "this is a case where the companies have to seek another buyer—there will still be other competitors, although the situation in the afternoon field is serious."

Anti-trust investigators' reports are expected soon but Turner said "our analysis is going to take a lot of time."

Executive Vice Pres. Thomas J. Murphy of the New York Guild voiced doubt the department would spike the merger. Unions, he said, will "have no alternative" except to strike if the U.S. fails to act and publishers do not reach acceptable agreements with the unions on jobs.

Job Equality Pact Signed By Shipbuilder

The Newport News (Va.) Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission have reached agreement on a desegregation plan. The firm is the country's largest shipbuilder, with 19,000 employes — about 5,000 of them Negroes—and extensive government ship construction contracts.

The agreement will provide new promotion and training programs for Negroes, a review of the skills of all Negro employes to assure them of fair treatment, and outside evaluation of all jobs and pay rates to determine if Negroes are undergoing discrimination.

It was worked out over six days of intensive negotiations during which the Labor and Navy Departments, which had determined the company was not in compliance with the Executive Order dealing with federal contracts, joined EEOC conciliators.

The company sought the conciliation discussions after the commission had found it was violating the employment discrimination provisions of the Civil Rights Act, as 41 Negro employes had claimed in filing formal charges.

Newport News workers are represented by an unaffiliated local union. The local did not participate in working out terms of the agreement between the company and government agencies.

The company agreed to post a non-discrimination policy statement throughout the shipyard and to attach a copy to each paycheck within 30 days; to read the policy statement to all supervisors, to advise employes in group meetings that violators will be disciplined, and to report to the EEOC the moves it has made to comply with the agreement 90 days after the signing and each quarter for the following two years.

should operate promptly and effectively, and will as soon as work is resumed."

Gilbert then sent telegrams to union chairmen on each road urging an "immediate return to work" with "appropriate arrangements" to restore service and the usual "protective agreements" covering all affected employes.

The strike began Mar. 31. It ended after the railroads got a temporary restraining order from Judge Alexander Holtzoff of the U.S. District Court in Washington, and the union got written agreements from each road that the strikers and those who honored their picket lines would not be penalized.

Earlier the same court had issued a 10-day strike restraining order against the Railroad Trainmen, the Switchmen, and the Conductors & Brakemen, then extended it to the BLF&E at the request of management.

The original restrainer affected two of the three issues raised by the rail unions—the status of work rules in effect before a 1964 arbitration award permitting the rails to eliminate thousands of on-train jobs, and the restoration of laid-off workers to jobs with their seniority rights unimpaired.

The BLF&E authorized strikes on the eight roads over a third issue, the training of apprentices in engine cabs, in what it said was a protest against the railroads' failure to commence bargaining.

Holtzoff restrained a strike over that issue also.

The roads asked $500,000 damages per day against the union and $25,000 a day against Gilbert, but Holtzoff cut the amounts to $25,000 and $2,500 and set Apr. 27 for argument on whether the court restraining order should be made permanent.

The firemen, who lost 20,000 jobs under the arbitration award, will ask the court to rule that the pre-1964 work rules are in effect.

Panel Urges Pay Safeguard For Reservists

Philadelphia—A joint committee representing labor and management in the glass container industry has urged each employer to adopt a policy assuring reservists that their earnings "will not be diminished during periods required of annual training."

Announcement of the agreement was made by Pres. Lee W. Minton of the Glass Bottle Blowers and J. Thomas Rimer, labor relations director for the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute.

Efforts also will be made, they said, to schedule production "so that reservists can fulfill their weekly training obligations without loss of earnings, seniority or other benefits."

The joint committee in addition reaffirmed its opposition to further cuts in duties on imported products and urged U.S. tariff negotiators in Geneva to "negotiate realistically and not be subjected to last minute concessions."

Stereotypers, LPIU Slate Merger Talks

The LPIU was formed by the merger on Sept. 7, 1964, of the former Lithographers and the Photo Engravers—the first merger in the graphic arts field in 50 years.

Now the new union, which has 50,000 members, is also deep in unity discussions with the 115,000-member Printing Pressmen.

Pres. John Connolly of the Bookbinders, who hailed the creation of the LPIU as setting "guideposts" for the rest of the industry, said that if the LPIU and the Pressmen are able to work out a merger, his union and its 65,000 members would be prepared "to go ahead and form one union."

LPIU Pres. Kenneth J. Brown said that he and Pres. James H. Sampson of the Stereotypers both will serve on the merger committee. Sampson also is president of the Intl. Allied Printing Trades Association.

Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Pressmen welcomed the Stereotypers' move as "a logical step and consistent with our objective."

"Ever since we entered into the merger discussions we are now having with LPIU," he said, "our eventual purpose has been nothing less than total merger of all graphic arts unions. By all platemakers combining at this stage, it can only expedite the most orderly, constructive and early accomplishment of that goal."

Brown assured the Stereotypers that their craft identity, interests and democratic representation would receive "careful consideration" and said that his union's experience with merger "makes us optimistic" that the negotiations, which start soon, will be speedily fruitful."

"We will not have to speculate," he said, "as to whether merger will mean a greater ability to meet the challenge of technological developments to platemakers, or add to their job security, or bring a strengthened bargaining ability, or extend the opportunities for organizing non-union companies with substandard conditions, or reduce jurisdictional conflict.

"That hopeful speculation in our first merger is now, in less than two years, a matter of proven record of what merger can accomplish."

PICKET SIGNS were discarded when Boston printers and mailers voted to end 31-day strike against five daily papers. The vote to accept a new 3-year agreement was approved 746-340 by members of ITU Local 13 and 158-31 by ITU Mailers Local 1 membership.

Printers, Mailers Win Cash Hikes in Strike

Boston—Striking printers and mailers voted to end their walkout at Boston's five daily and three Sunday newspapers after 31 days. Members of Local 13 of the Typographical Union and Local 1 of the ITU Mailers voted by a combined margin of 904-371 to accept contracts recognizing their right to take wage increases in cash rather than in fringe benefits.

The two locals struck Mar. 6, by a combined vote of 1,266 to 56, on the issue of "free collective bargaining." Members of other newspaper unions refused to cross their picket lines. The papers—the Herald, the Traveler, the Sunday Herald, the morning, evening and Sunday Globe, the Record-American and the Sunday Advertiser—shut down.

A mediation panel headed by William Rose of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service had concentrated its efforts during the strike towards establishing "a community of interest" among all the craft unions in the industry.

Acceptance of a contract by the mailers and printers left unsigned for 1965-66 the Stereotypers, Electricians, Machinists and drivers. The mediation panel bent its efforts to resolving the differences between those unions and the Boston Daily Newspaper Publishers Association. The Stereotypers have voted a strike, but have not posted pickets.

The publishers' group indicated it wanted agreement with all the unions before resuming publication. The newspapers have a combined circulation of more than 1.1 million and employ 5,000.

The settlement hammered out in four weeks of almost continuous mediation sessions gives the printers and mailers $15.40 in pay raises over three years, plus 90 cents in fringe benefits.

The issue that provoked the strike was the publishers' earlier insistence that gains in the first two years totaling $8.30 be diverted to the health, welfare and pension funds in which 10 craft unions participate. This arrangement already had been accepted by five unions—the Pressmen, Deliverers, Photoengravers, Paper Handlers and garage mechanics.

Management argued that refusal of the printers and mailers to go along would weaken the plan, but the striking unions produced actuarial studies to support their argument that two levels of benefits could be maintained, with benefits pegged to contributions.

Other Unions to Vote

The actuarial reports signaled the start of intensive negotiations between the striking unions and the publishers, while the mediation panel obtained agreement from the five signed unions to submit the changes in the health, welfare and pension plans to their members after the printers and mailers had voted on acceptance of the 3-year contract.

The newspaper strike was the third and longest in Boston history. A 1957 walkout by the mailers lasted three weeks and one by the printers in 1959 was settled after eight days.

During the dispute, the Massachusetts Div. of Employment Security ruled that members of non-striking unions were eligible for unemployment insurance benefits starting at $50 a week for an unmarried worker plus $6 for each dependent.

AFL-CIO Renews Support Of Savings Bond Program

AFL-CIO support of the U.S. Savings Bond Program was renewed by Pres. George Meany as the 1966 campaign, marking the 25th anniversary of the drive, got under way.

"As chairman of the National Labor Committee for Saving Bonds," Meany wrote the presidents of federation affiliates, "I have pledged the full support of the AFL-CIO, and I am confident that all affiliates of the AFL-CIO will take an active part in promoting the campaign among their members.

"When we encourage our people to take advantage of the savings bond program for systematic personal savings, we are furthering their personal welfare. More importantly, however, in supporting this great American program, we are giving practical expression to our patriotism."

Meany pointed out that the program has had AFL-CIO endorsement not only because it is "our patriotic duty," but because "it affords the American wage earner a way to save regularly by investing in United States Savings Bonds through the payroll saving plan where he is employed." More than 8 million workers in 40,000 companies, most of them union members, are saving regularly in this manner, he added.

Robert Hall Clerks Agree on $9 Hike

Chicago — Retail clerks in 39 Robert Hall clothing stores in Illinois and Wisconsin will get a $9 weekly pay raise and other benefits in a recent contract settlement negotiated by eight RCIA local unions.

Postal Clerks Vote to Defer Merger Action

Cleveland—Action on a proposed merger between the National Federation of Postal Clerks and the National Postal Union was referred to the federation's convention next August after a special convention here narrowly defeated a plan previously worked out.

A two-thirds vote of the special convention was required. The ratification vote of 605 and one-twelfth to 334 and eleven-twelfths was 21 votes short.

The NPU had previously approved the merger agreement by a 7-1 margin in a special convention and a membership referendum.

Negotiations Scheduled

Pres. E. C. Hallbeck of the Postal Clerks and NPU Pres. Sidney A. Goodman announced that merger talks will be resumed, starting Apr. 21 in Washington. They said they still expect "that merger can and will be achieved before the end of 1966." Hallbeck said the union's negotiating team will be enlarged to include "some who were not completely satisfied with our original document."

The AFL-CIO-affiliated Postal Clerks hold national exclusive bargaining rights for 240,000 post office workers. The NPU has local bargaining rights in several large post offices including New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Detroit and Los Angeles.

Delegates from smaller locals of the Postal Clerks expressed fear, at the special convention, that their units might be submerged in the unified group by new area alignments.

The NPU came into existence eight years ago following a dispute at the 1958 Postal Clerks convention. Merger talks were authorized in 1964 by conventions of both unions and executive boards of both groups approved an agreement on principles last year.

House Clears Pay Hike for U.S. Employes

lion appropriation bill for the Interior Dept. and related agencies.

It was beaten 233-157. Only 30 Democrats voted with 127 Republicans. The votes against the cut came from 227 Democrats and six Republicans.

The margin of defeat was even greater on the second test—a $7.2 billion money bill for the Post Office and Treasury Depts. This time 14 Republicans deserted their party line and the cut was beaten, 244-127. The senior Republican on the Appropriations subcommittee handling the bill, Rep. Silvio O. Conte (Mass.), took the floor to charge that it would be "irresponsible" to cut out needed funds.

The Senate voted down a motion to reject a presidential reorganization plan shifting the Community Relations Service to the Justice Dept.

The 1964 Civil Rights Act had placed the agency under the Commerce Dept., but a study directed by Vice Pres. Humphrey recommended that it be put under Justice to give greater coordination to civil rights programs.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) introduced a motion of disapproval which was backed by all Republicans present and most southern Democrats. It was defeated on a 42-32 vote.

Both the House and the Senate began the Easter recess April 8, with the Senate returning Apr. 13, the House on Apr. 18.

A Built-In Restraint

THE CURRENT DEBATE over whether or not a general tax increase is needed to "cool off" the economy has ignored the vital fact that there is a very real here-and-now restraint on workers' purchasing power.

In the 12 months ending February 1966 there was virtually no change in the real spendable earnings of the average factory worker. The rise in consumer prices and the increase in social security taxes have wiped out any real wage gains.

All indications are that the trend will continue. In February, for the second consecutive month, workers' real spendable earnings dropped from previous levels.

To impose a general, across-the-board increase in income taxes would further reduce the purchasing power of those who in the past year have made little progress toward a better standard of living.

In contrast, the booming sector of the economy—investment in new plant and equipment—and the soaring profits of business and industry are proper areas for restraining action through suspension of the 7 percent investment tax credit and/or an excess profits levy.

This would serve the ends of justice and equity rather than a tax increase that would further cut back the limited purchasing power of those in the low and middle-income brackets.

A Loaded Poll

THE "LOADED QUESTION" poll on labor legislation has popped up again, this time on jobsite picketing and under the auspices of the Associated General Contractors, bitter opponents of the measure pending in Congress.

After first establishing through a relatively simple question that 54 percent of 293 union members in the total sample of 2,138 men and women had not heard of the term secondary boycott and explaining that the term meant a form of pressure against a struck company to "give the union what it wants," the following question was asked of the entire group:

"A federal law now forbids secondary boycotts. Unions want to change this law to let them use secondary boycotts to help them get what they want for their members. Do you think the law should or should not be changed to let unions use secondary boycotts?"

To no one's particular surprise this particular question found 60 percent against changing the law on secondary boycotts.

We wonder what the poll would have shown if the question were put this way:

"Should building trades workers have the same right to picket that other workers now are guaranteed under federal laws?"

181 Give Views:

Joint Committee Explores Need To Reform Rules of Congress

ALTHOUGH THE FIRST SESSION of the 89th Congress set records in its passage of landmark legislation in many fields, the issue of changes in rules and procedures in the Senate and House is still alive.

Certainly if nothing else points to the problem, the filibuster of Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen against permitting a vote on repeal of Section 14(b) dramatizes the fact that archaic rules must be altered.

Not only cloture but many other practices, procedures and traditions in both Houses of Congress are under fire.

Not much attention has been given to the work of the Joint Committee on the Organization of the Congress which has held extensive hearings under the co-chairmanship of Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla.) and Rep. Ray J. Madden (D-Ind.).

The committee has received the views of 181 witnesses. Seventeen senators and 59 representatives testified in person and two senators and 19 representatives submitted statements for the record.

The congressional witnesses represented a total of 914 years of service in Congress. The testimony, together with documents and submissions, is contained in 13 printed volumes, totaling 2,063 pages.

Sen. Joseph Clark (D-Pa.) got to the heart of one of the most critical bulwarks to effective legislation—the almost undisputed power of committee chairmen and how the chairmen are chosen.

Currently, seniority is the sole determining factor in the selection of committee chairmen. As a result, many committees of Congress are headed by men who achieved their positions merely by being able to survive longer in the office they hold.

One of the proposals being advanced by Clark and a number of other liberal members of Congress is that the committee chairman should be elected by secret ballot of the majority members of the committee. An acceptable alternative to this proposal, which Clark accepts too, is that the chairman should be elected by secret ballot by a majority of the committee from among the three members with the most seniority.

Rep. Richard Bolling (D-Mo.) and a number of other liberals are backing a plan under which the chairman would be nominated by the party leadership with the approval of a majority of the caucus.

Some would rotate the chairmanship. Others would not permit one geographical section of the country to have more than one-half of the chairs. Several asked that the chairmanship be rotated between the two most senior members. Other proposals would require chairmen to step down at the age of 70 or after serving 10 to 12 years.

THE ORGANIZATION of Congress covers many areas. They include jurisdiction of committees, committee assignments, committee meetings, committee hearings, committee staff, subcommittees, party leadership, term of office, ethics, lobbying, scheduling and floor procedures.

Like the unlimited debate in the Senate—and the requirements for cloture to cut it off—each of these areas provokes endless discussion and differences.

"One of the most perplexing problems facing the Congress is the legislative workload of the members," the committee said in its second interim report. "The fundamental legislative mechanism, of course, is the congressional committee system." The committee staff has assembled all the information it has been able to collect in this respect and programmed it for computer analysis. The results and recommendations are not yet available.

The co-chairman of the Joint Committee, Monroney, was co-author of the last major reorganization. Along with the late Sen. Robert M. LaFollette (Prog.-Wis.), he sponsored the Legislative Reorganization Act in 1946.

While this legislation was not all some hoped it would be, it did modernize government considerably. It reduced the size of standing committees, required that they keep complete records, reduced some workloads and in other ways streamlined the procedures of both houses.

Much that was not accomplished in 1946 and other outmoded machinery still in operation 20 years later needs serious attention. (PAI)

Morgan Says:

Williamsburg Offers a Refuge From the Pell Mell of 'Progress'

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7p.m., EST.)

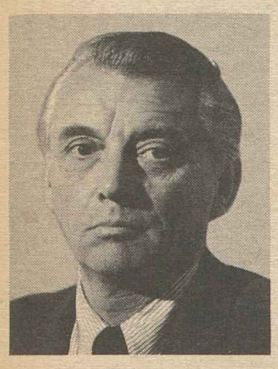
WRITING in the magazine World Health, a Dutch expert on mental health, Prof. A Querido of the University of Amsterdam, has several provocative things to say about the perils of urbanization in the modern world.

"But the greatest danger . . . almost . . . [the] greatest crime of modern city life," he declared, "is its disruption of human relations, resulting in an isolation, a loneliness of the individual which increases with the size of the city and its complexity."



Morgan

Far but by no means too far from the madding and maddening crowd, the capital of colonial Virginia, Williamsburg, is a good place to go to re-examine this and other problems of American society. Williamsburg, a visitor is quickly reminded, was the southern cradle of the Revolution. In 1775, as colonists were becoming more restive, the governor, representing the British crown, took the "precaution" of removing a supply of powder from the magazine.

The result was explosive. Patrick Henry himself led a party of armed volunteers on the city in protest. This was nearly a fortnight before the news of the Battle of Lexington had reached Virginia.

But though the simple splendor of Williamsburg's restoration by the Rockefeller family revives that American revolutionary spirit too often forgotten, it provides as well a reflective setting in which to judge the values of our modern society. Williamsburg is not Disneyland East. Its faithful recreation of history stirs a kind of sobering excitement far more enduring than the thrill of a roller-coaster ride in an amusement park. There is something infectious about this feeling. While citizens are not descending on the town in droves, paid admissions have more than doubled in 10 years, now approach 700,000 annually.

But why in the world in this jumping age would people interrupt the pursuit of the surf, the ski and the frug to trudge through a lot of stuffy buildings loaded with dusty 200-year-old relics and then be satisfied with a bowl of shrimps with sippets and a glass of cider at Chowning's Tavern? The fact is the buildings are not musty museums, their trappings not mere artifacts of a dead past. Somehow things come alive.

There is the substantial shadow of Washington reporting to the House of Burgesses, America's oldest legislative assembly, on the French & Indian War. There is the scene of the burgesses passing George Mason's Declaration of Rights, from which the federal constitution's Bill of Rights stems. Down Duke of Gloucester Street, a modern Williamsburgher rather improbably dressed in full colonial costume, silver buckles and all, demonstrates in the apothecary shop how 18th century physicians bled their patients.

Over at the Governor's Palace, candles are hand-dipped. Fresh bread is shoveled out of the brick ovens in the Raleigh Tavern as it was when George Wythe, Thomas Jefferson's mentor, sent his servant to buy a loaf.

AS THE VISITOR absorbs these sights and sounds and smells, a ferment of questions rises in his mind: What have we got, in the frenetic rhythm of our time, that they didn't have? Where have we come, value-wise? Of course it's good to have antibiotics instead of the horse-sized pills Dr. Peter Hay gave his patients in 1746. And the old discomforts, from the outdoor privy to the washboard, have been replaced by an endless inventory of modern conveniences. But have we not lost something in the trade?

Slavery has been abolished but shackles of racial prejudice still handcuff millions of our citizens. We are the richest country on the face of the earth but we are bankrupting ourselves with the wanton waste of human and natural resources.

Again and again, a Colonial Williamsburg executive reports, visitors reflect their frustration and discontent with the pressured messiness of the times by remarking the grace, the quiet, the tidy simplicity of this charming, living fragment of an important past.

It would be Operation Futility, of course, to try to turn the clock back. But as time whirs on in the Space Age we need to pause long enough in our spastic orbit to retrieve some of the inspirations of integrity, leadership, sacrifice, courage, restraint and good taste from our abundant heritage. In the pell-mell of "progress" they have all but been buried by empty pop bottles, beer cans, plastic bags, billboards, arrogant real estate promotions and other gracious hallmarks of the era.

On second thought, maybe these, like Williamsburg, should also be preserved. What a thrill for the American populace circa 2166 A.D. to restore a combination used car lot and supermarket, anchored in asphalt and glowing with neon, as a fitting monument to their 20th century forefathers.

Workers Seek Bargaining:

New State Laws, Policies Spur Public Employe Union Growth

STATE AND LOCAL government employes are winning more and more of the job-related rights and privileges that workers in private industry have long had, a top union official has said.

As a result of new state laws and administrative orders issued by the responsible public officials, a growing number of public workers now have the "right to organize a union of their own choosing and the right to bilateral collective bargaining," said Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes as he appeared on Labor News Conference.

Wurf credited the rapid growth of his union —nearly 50 percent in the last two years—to a new determination among government workers to have a voice in wages, working conditions and other on-the-job matters.

"These workers are tired of being second class citizens" and are joining unions to meet needs "that can't be met in any other way," he said, noting that "public officials are finding ways to deal" with the unions.

WURF CHARGED that the so-called wage guidelines of the President's Council of Economic Advisers are especially hard on state and local government workers who, he said, are frequently so far behind employes in private industry that "we simply insist that 3.2 isn't enough."

"Even where we are keeping pace with the economy, I am not at all convinced that the guidelines . . . are reasonable," he said, adding that it is unfair "to ask workers to limit their standard of living while the rest of the economy rolls around loose" with "fantastic corporate profits and fantastic salaries for corporate executives."

Reporters questioning Wurf on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program, aired weekly over the Mutual radio network, were Neil Gilbride, labor reporter for the Associated Press, and John Herling, editor of the Herling Labor Letter and syndicated columnist.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE PACE of the second session of the 89th Congress, viewed as the members scattered to their home states and districts for the Easter recess, is something less than as breathtaking as last year's.

It is only fair to acknowledge that the pace in 1965 was breathtaking indeed. A massive program of federal school aid had cleared both houses and was signed by the President in April. The House had passed the medicare bill and approved major amendments to the manpower training bill. Both houses passed the Appalachia bill in March and committee hearings had been completed on water pollution controls.

What we have this year, as mid-April rolled around, is enactment of two major measures—the Cold War GI bill and the bill to restore some of the excise tax levies reduced just in 1965. An Asian Development Bank has been approved. House hearings have been completed on a revised food for freedom program.

A special appropriation bill to underwrite the costs of the Viet Nam war has been passed. As for the rest, a good many pending measures are still in the process of hearings underway or scheduled, at best.

THE COMMITTEE-APPROVED bill to broaden minimum wage coverage and raise the rate in steps to $1.40 and $1.60 an hour appears likely to reach the House floor late in April, with bipartisan support and with the prospect of a green light in the House Rules Committee.

The potent Ways & Means Committee has completed hearings on proposals to modernize the long-neglected unemployment insurance system and a bill is anticipated. With the name of Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) as its sponsor, it can be expected to get respectful attention.

But consumer protection measures—truth-in-lending and truth-in-packaging—are stalled still. The only consumer action of the session thus far is Senate passage of a measure to force improved grading practices in the automobile tire industry.

Repeal of Section 14(b) fell victim in the Senate again to a filibuster led by Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois, the Republican floor leader. The on-site picketing bill, designed to restore building trades union members to the peaceful picketing rights other unions are acknowledged to have, got out of the House Labor Committee and was cleared by the Rules Committee but hasn't been called up.

The Senate, when it returns from the recess, will deal again with the continually revised Dirksen-proposed constitutional amendment to undercut the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" decisions on the apportionment of state legislatures. It didn't get the required two-thirds majority last year and seems unlikely to get a two-thirds majority this year.

The Administration's promised draft of new civil rights legislation, to plug loopholes in existing statutes, has not yet been sent to Capitol Hill, partly because a Supreme Court majority practically invited Congress to draft stiffer laws on racial attacks on the rights of Negroes than the archaic and to some extent vague 1870 statutes.

THIS DOES NOT MEAN that the current session will not have completed a respectable body of work before its adjournment.

Civil rights legislation may again be significant, for the third successive year. Foreign aid authorizations and appropriations must be voted. Amendments are pending to the poverty program and a new measure for elementary school aid is in House and Senate committees.

But the pace, clearly, is less spectacular. The first session of the 89th, let it be acknowledged again, was probably the most spectacular in our history; programs got through that had been stalled for 10 to 20 years. This is an election year, when it is normally difficult to get approval for innovations.

EXPANDING trade unionism among public workers is enabling them to win more of the job-related rights and privileges that workers in private industry have long had, State, County & Municipal Employes Pres. Jerry Wurf (center) said on Labor News Conference. Reporters Neil Gilbride (left) of the Associated Press and John Herling, editor of the Herling Labor Letter, questioned him on the AFL-CIO produced interview, aired weekly over the Mutual radio network.

Rollcall in House on Rent Supplements

On Mar. 29, the House voted 198-190 against a motion which would have killed the rent supplement program by eliminating a $12 million appropriation for the program. Opposing the budget cut and thus supporting the rent program were 192 Democrats and six Republicans. Voting to kill the program were 125 Republicans and 65 Democrats.

On labor's scoreboard, a vote against killing rent supplements was a right vote (R), while a vote to deny funds to the program was wrong (W). Other symbols: A—absent; PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; NV—not voting. Numerals indicate districts; AL—at large.

Social Security Sets Benefit Mark in '65

The Social Security Administration paid out a record $16.6 billion in benefits in fiscal 1965, an increase of $788 million over the previous year, the trustees of the Social Security Trust Funds said in their annual report to Congress.

Total income of the trust funds also set new high records and ran about $225 million more than expenditures.

The trustees are Sec. of the Treasury Henry H. Fowler, who also is managing trustee; Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare John W. Gardner. Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball is secretary of the board.

Ball said that assets of the Old Age & Survivors Insurance Trust Fund totalled $20.2 billion on June 30, 1965, while the Disability Insurance Trust Fund, now paying benefits to more than 1 million disabled workers and their families, had assets of $2 billion.

In projecting operations of the two funds into the future, the trustees estimated that receipts will increase more rapidly than disbursements over the next five years and that by June 30, 1970, their assets will have increased $9.2 billion to a total of $31.3 billion.

Longer-range estimates of income and outgo show the funds are expected to be in actuarial balance at least over the next 75 years. This means, the report said, that income will be high enough to cover all benefit payments and the administrative expenses.

Taxable Base Raised

The 1965 amendments to the Social Security Act raised the taxable base from $4,800 to $6,600 effective Jan. 1, 1966. The basic tax rate was set at 3.85 percent for 1966, with a gradual increase to 4.85 percent in 1973. Thus a worker earning $6,600 or more this year will pay $254.10 into the Old Age & Survivors Insurance and the Disability Insurance Trust Funds.

The trustees in compliance with the law also made some estimates about finances of the Hospital Insurance and Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Funds created by the medicare legislation.

The hospital fund, which will pay benefits to persons 65 and over beginning July 1, is expected to have assets of $1.09 billion on June 30, 1967, after one full year of operation. Income for fiscal 1967 was estimated at $2.668 billion and expenditures at $2.338 billion.

The trustees estimated that 80 percent of those eligible will participate in the supplementary medical fund and that in fiscal 1967 receipts will amount to $550 million from subscribers and an equal amount from the Treasury. Disbursements were estimated at $765 million and assets at the end of June 1967 were forecast at $205 million.

The hospital fund is financed by a tax of 35 one-hundredths of 1 percent starting last Jan. 1, becoming one-half of 1 percent next year, and rising gradually to eight-tenths of 1 percent in 1987. It is levied on the same earnings as the basic social security tax—$6,600 for 1966—and is in addition to the basic tax.

A worker earning at least $6,600 this year, therefore, will pay $23.10 for hospital protection, or a total of $277.20 for social security and medicare. If he earns less both taxes, of course, will be lower.

Gov. Babcock Seeks Montana Senate Seat

Montana's two-term Republican Gov. Tim M. Babcock announced he will seek Republican nomination for the U.S. Senate to oppose Democratic incumbent Sen. Lee Metcalf.

Babcock is rated as an ultra-conservative but in a party unity move he recently hammered down John Birch Society candidates for chairmanship of the GOP State Committee. He did not take a stand in support of former State Chairman Melvin Engles, who last December publicly repudiated the Birch Society and other extremist movements.

In Texas, Mrs. Albert Thomas (D) was elected in a special election to fill the 8th District (Houston) House seat left vacant by the death of her husband. She did not file for a full term in the upcoming 90th Congress. Democratic primary candidates are State Rep. Robert C. Eckhardt and Larry McCasel.

Labor Dept. Names Aide to Reynolds

Appointment of John N. Gentry, a career government employe, as deputy assistant secretary of labor for labor-management relations has been announced by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

COPE DOLLAR DRIVE award was presented to Sec.-Treas. Charles G. Heisel (left) and Vice Pres. Robert J. Nicholson (right) of the Insurance Workers by Dir. Alexander E. Barkan of the AFL-CIO Committee for Political Education in recognition of the union's reaching 100 percent of its COPE quota last year. Forty-four other international unions also chalked up 100 percent records in 1965.

TUTORING SERVICES for grammar school age youngsters in Washington were made possible when the District of Columbia Communications Workers City Council picked up a $750 printing bill. Above are some of the principals and some of the beneficiaries hitting the books at the Barney Neighborhood House (left to right): Bryan Winkle; Vicky Shan; John H. Brown, director of the Office of Tutoring Services of the local Health & Welfare Council; Tony Winkle; Pres. Stanley Buda of the CWA council; Jefferie Goines; Dr. David Iwamoto, president of the OTS advisory board, and Clara Shan. The $750 voted by the council was presented by Buda to Brown and Iwamoto for the OTS.

Hillman Awards To Cite Clergymen

New York — Meritorious public service scrolls and checks for $500 each will be presented to three outstanding clergymen by the Sidney Hillman Foundation at its annual luncheon here, Apr. 28, Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the foundation and of the Clothing Workers, announced.

Chosen were Msgr. George G. Higgins, director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference; Dr. Martin Luther King, civil rights leader and 1964 Nobel Peace Prize winner, and Rabbi Jacob Weinstein of KAM Temple, Chicago.

The awards, Potofsky said, recognize the leadership many clergymen have provided in efforts to attain equality and dignity for all people in this country and a more enlightened approach to peace abroad.

Teachers Win Overseas Pay Parity Fight

Nearly 7,000 teachers at overseas schools operated by the Defense Dept. for families of Americans serving abroad have won a long battle for pay equity in a bill cleared by Congress and sent to the White House.

At both House and Senate hearings, representatives of the AFL-CIO, the American Federation of Teachers and the AFL-CIO Government Employes Council protested a pay policy which gave many experienced teachers a salary below that of government clerk-typists.

In its final form, the legislation guarantees teachers pay equal to the average of classroom teachers in U.S. cities of more than 100,000 population.

The immediate effect of the legislation will be to raise salaries an estimated $40 a month. It will also ensure periodic pay increases to match future rises in average teacher salaries in the United States.

The conferees dropped from the bill a House provision, opposed by labor, which would have limited tours of overseas duty to five years. It was replaced by a procedure for voluntary rotation which the Defense Dept. will try to work out with school districts in the U.S.

Non-Farm Jobs Show Sharp Rise in March

found the jobless rate averaging 3.8 percent, compared to 4.2 percent in the last three months of 1965, the first time since 1953 that a quarterly average has dropped below 4 percent.

Non-farm employment hit 61.7 million in March and the manufacturing industries "were highly successful at hiring additional employes," the department said. A 125,000 job increase, three times the expected seasonal rise, carried manufacturing employment to a record 18.6 million, up 1 million over the year.

Almost 80 percent of this advance, the department said, occurred among the durable goods industries, where five major metals and metal-using industries showed a rise of 650,000 from March 1965.

Construction employment rose by 150,000 to 3 million, double the expected seasonal rise.

The report said that despite strong job gains in manufacturing and construction "the majority of the 2.9 million new jobs created since March 1965 were in the service-producing industries. State and local government and trade provided a total of more than 1 million new jobs, while miscellaneous services accounted for an additional 430,000."

Unemployment rates for adult men and women remained unchanged over the month while teen-age unemployment moved up to 11.7 percent in March. The 3 million unemployed in March included 1.4 million adult men, 900,000 women and 750,000 teen-agers, nearly half of whom were in school and seeking only part-time work.

Joblessness among non-whites totaled more than 600,000 in March, about one-fifth of the total. Their jobless rate at 7.2 percent was up slightly—two-tenths of 1 percent—but down 1.4 percent from a year ago.

Long-term unemployment totaled 750,000 in March, the lowest level for the month since 1957. The number of workers on part-time for economic reasons dropped by 340,000 over the year to 1.6 million in March.

Philippines Labor Backs Viet Aid

Labor federations in the Philippines have voiced strong support for Pres. Ferdinand E. Marcos' program of aid to Viet Nam, which includes sending a non-combatant battalion of 2,000 men to assist the military opposition to the Communists spearheaded by the United States.

They include the Philippine Labor Center, made up of seven large unions; the Council for Agrarian Workers; the Philippine Labor Unity Movement Federation of Industrial & Agrarian Workers (PLUM), composed of 20 major unions, and the Mindanao Congress of Labor. Marcos' program also is supported by Pres. Cipriano Cid of the Philippine Association of Free Labor Unions and Pres. Pelagio Villegas, Jr., of the FDW federation.

5 Major Areas Show Decline In Joblessness

The Labor Dept. has reclassified five major labor market areas to categories denoting lower unemployment, while two areas were shifted to higher ratings of joblessness.

The latest count, for the January-February period, shows 16 areas of "substantial" unemployment of from 6 to 8.9 percent of the workforce. This is down from 17 in the last report two months ago and from 24 a year ago.

The "moderate" unemployment grouping of 3 to 5.9 percent includes 82 areas, compared with 83 in December and 98 a year ago. There are 50 areas of "low" unemployment of 1.5 to 2.9 percent, up from 48 in December and 23 a year ago.

Two Puerto Rican cities remain in the bottom category showing unemployment of 12 percent or higher, and no area is yet in the "labor shortage" category of less than 1.5 percent joblessness.

The latest shifts brought San Jose, Calif., from substantial to moderate unemployment; Greenville, S.C., and Dallas, Tex., from moderate to low unemployment, and Kenosha and Racine, Wis., from low to moderate unemployment.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said reports from major centers indicate continuing shortages in a number of occupational categories, with unfilled listings in local public employment offices at the highest levels since the end of World War II.

Would Upset 1 Man, 1 Vote:

Dirksen Amendment Up Again in Senate

The Senate will vote for the second time in nine months on Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen's attempt to amend the constitution to nullify the Supreme Court's one man, one vote ruling.

Dirksen failed last summer to muster a two-thirds vote for his amendment to permit one house of a state legislature to be apportioned on factors other than population. The vote then was 57-39, seven short of the margin needed for a constitutional change.

His second try will come after the Senate returns from its Easter recess on Apr. 13—when the amendment will be the pending order of business.

The exact wording of the newest proposal remains in doubt. Dirksen has several times amended his plan in an effort to pick up votes and he has indicated that he is prepared to make further changes. But opponents, led by Dirksen's Illinois colleague, Democrat Paul H. Douglas, express confidence that a solid one-third-plus of the Senate remains opposed to tampering with the one man, one vote principle.

For months a well-financed lobby has been working to drum up support for the Dirksen amendment, enlisting what the AFL-CIO convention last December termed "a strange coalition of conservatives, right-wing extremists and obstinate traditionalists."

Many observers viewed Dirksen's filibuster against repeal of Taft-Hartley Section 14(b) as an invitation to a back-door deal to let 14(b) repeal pass in exchange for the reapportionment amendment.

Pres. George Meany told the AFL-CIO convention that he considered the two issues "solidly and inescapably intertwined." He added:

"As badly as I want 14(b) repealed, I do not want it that badly. And the Senate minority leader and all his anti-labor stooges can filibuster until hell freezes over before I will agree to sell the people short for that kind of a deal."

On his first try last year, Dirksen bypassed the Senate Judiciary Committee by offering his amendment as a substitute for an unrelated bill before the Senate. Late in the last session, he moved his amendment through the committee by using delaying tactics on the then-pending immigration bill until his constitutional amendment was cleared. But the committee sent the amendment to the Senate calendar "without recommendation."

Since Dirksen began his battle to upset the one man, one vote doctrine, most states have reapportioned their legislatures on a population basis.

With the reapportionment he sought to block virtually an accomplished fact, Dirksen has indicated that he may agree to a requirement that a legislature be equitably reapportioned before it could exempt one house from the one man, one vote principle. Dirksen had fought this proposal last year when it was advanced by Sen. Birch Bayh (D-Ind.), chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee which deals with constitutional amendments.

The fact of reapportionment, however, is believed to have eased pressure on senators from previously malapportioned states to support the Dirksen amendment as a way of protecting the political status quo.

Pres. Johnson has remained neutral in the controversy. But in last year's battle, Vice Pres. Humphrey actively opposed the Dirksen plan.

Jack S. Smith Dies, Plasterers' Staffer

Gloucester, Va. — Jack Stanley Smith, president of the former Virginia AFL from 1945 to 1955 and since then an international representative for the Plasterers, died in a Newport News hospital after a brief illness. He was 59.

A native of England, he came to this area from Canada and attended Hampton High School and the College of William & Mary. He once was president of the Newport News Central Labor Union.

Foreign Studies Plan Endorsed by Labor

The AFL-CIO expressed its "enthusiastic support" for an Administration bill to set up graduate centers for international studies and strengthen undergraduate programs in the field.

Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin said the proposed centers should be open "to all segments of our society" and not limited to graduate students.

Testifying before a task force of the House Education & Labor Committee, Rogin said:

"Many of the U.S. trade unionists working in other countries are not graduates of high school, much less college. Yet their practical experience has been invaluable in preparing them for their present assignments. The artificial barrier of a college degree should not stand in the way of others like them receiving training to prepare for international work."

The task force, equivalent to a subcommittee, is headed by Rep. John Brademas (D-Ind.) who, with Committee Chairman Adam C. Powell (D-N.Y.), introduced the Administration bill.

It would authorize grants for centers which could concentrate on research and training "either on specific geographical areas of the world or on particular fields or issues in international affairs . . . or both."

Funds for undergraduate studies would be given to colleges for specific programs which could not be undertaken without federal financial help. The bill would also expand the National Defense Education Act, making funds available for West European language and area studies and increasing the proportion of federal support.

Rogin told the task force that labor's support comes from "a deep conviction that peace and freedom throughout the world can be strengthened if Americans have an understanding of all the nations which make it up."

It derives also, he said, from "a long trade union experience in international effort in support of free trade unionism and democracy."

Rogin noted that one-fourth of the AFL-CIO's income is spent in international efforts and "we know that Americans who will be working overseas, or with foreign visitors to this country, need an understanding of the languages and institutions."

American unions, he said, have "welcomed to this country thousands of trade unionists from all parts of the free world, and have developed educational programs to help these visitors understand our nation."

New Sign-Up Deadline Voted For Medicare

the House had passed and sent back.

The House approved it unanimously, but sent it back to the Senate with two amendments. One would assure belated signers of benefits beginning July 1, when the insurance program covering doctor bills gets under way, and the second would make it easier for public welfare agencies to enroll welfare recipients who receive social security benefits.

The Senate accepted the amendments by voice vote and sent the legislation to the White House.

The medicare bill originally provided that persons 65 years or older by Jan. 1, 1966, sign for the voluntary coverage by Mar. 31. Those reaching 65 after that date can enroll during the three months before or the three months after their birthday.

For the $3 monthly premium the insurance covers about 80 percent of annual doctor bills and certain related expenses. The premium is matched by payments from general revenues, and the program is intended to supplement the medicare hospital and nursing care coverage.

The SSA estimated that 16.8 million of the 19.1 million senior citizens eligible for coverage have signed up, and that the opportunity was definitely turned down by only 1 million. During discussion of the extension on the House floor, the agency was lauded for enrolling most of the eligibles by Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) of the Ways & Means Committee, and by Rep. John W. Byrnes (R-Wis.), ranking minority member.

110,000 Complete Training in 1965 Under Manpower Act Programs

The Manpower Development & Training Act during its four years of operation has proved "an effective instrument to provide the underemployed with the opportunity to upgrade their skills and to equip the unemployed with new skills," Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz declared.

MDTA training is helping meet both the needs of the unemployed and the nation's demand for trained workers, he said in his annual report to Congress on manpower research and training under the act.

The report showed that in 1965 the MDTA program:

- "Enrolled 180,000 trainees, of whom 110,000 completed training. Of those who completed training, 74 percent are employed.
- "Reduced manpower and production bottlenecks carrying inflationary potential through training for skilled and semi-skilled occupations.
- "Helped to meet labor demand for 112,000 jobs in service and service-related occupations through job development programs.
- "Through labor mobility demonstration projects, aided 1,200 unemployed workers with little prospect for employment in their home communities to move with their families to vacant jobs elsewhere.
- "Initiated special measures to find the disadvantaged unemployed and underemployed and train them for jobs that fit their needs through a human resources development program."

Of the 110,000 who completed training last year, 35,000 acquired new skills while actually working on on-the-job projects, the report said.

The program last year was called "particularly successful" in reaching long-term jobless and nonwhites, with more than 40 percent of all who enrolled in 1965 having been jobless for 15 weeks or longer, and with non-white enrollment increasing from 30 percent in 1964 to nearly 34 percent last year.

Trade union participation in support of on-the-job training to help meet the demand for workers with new skills was increased during the year, the report said. It continued:

"Joint labor-management and labor-sponsored on-the-job training projects covered nearly 6,000 trainees enrolled in apprentice-entry and retraining or upgrading programs. These programs were sponsored by 24 different labor organizations and joint labor-management groups in 28 states."

As examples the report cited projects aimed at upgrading the skills of operating engineers and carpenters in California, training barbers and hairdressers throughout the country in new techniques leading to better-paying jobs, apprentice bricklayer programs in Georgia and the District of Columbia, and another for hotel service workers in Nevada.

Hiring Rate Shows Slight Decline

The factory hiring rate for February reached its highest level for the month since the Korean War despite a more-than-seasonal drop from January, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The seasonally-adjusted rate dropped from 49 to 47 per 1,000 employes and total accessions fell from 46 per 1,000 in January to 41 per 1,000, with declines found in most manufacturing industries.

Meany Hails Wilson On British Election

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sent "sincerest congratulations" in a radio message to British Prime Minister Harold Wilson on the Labor Party's smashing election victory in late March.

The "overwhelming victory under your leadership," Meany told Wilson, "provides new hope for strengthening free world cooperation in promoting peace, freedom and social justice," the "basic aims of the international free trade union movement."

The Labor Party held only a three-vote majority in the House of Commons elected in 1964. Wilson's triumph gives Labor a 110-vote majority over the Conservatives, a 97-member margin in the total including Liberal Party and splinter groups.

Support Given Indiana Dunes Recreation Site

The AFL-CIO gave "strong support" to legislation creating an Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore recreation area.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller termed it "a fair and equitable compromise between industrial development and sound conservation."

In a letter to all members of the House Interior Committee, Biemiller said the legislation would provide an "extremely important" recreation facility for the people of the Chicago area.

Biemiller said the AFL-CIO's analysis of the legislation "convinces us that it represents a fair and equitable compromise between industrial development and sound conservation."

The Senate last year passed a bill introduced by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), a pioneer crusader to save the Indiana dunes from destruction by commercial exploitation. Companion bills have been introduced in the House by Rep. J. Edward Roush (D-Ind.) and other supporters of the proposed 11,000-acre recreation area.

Key Bills Confront Rest of '66 Session

MORE THAN 8,000 supporters gathered at the California state capitol as Delano grape strikers ended a 300-mile march in Sacramento on Easter Sunday to demonstrate their determination to win decent farm wages and union recognition. The crowd stayed for three hours despite frequent showers and cheered news that a major grower, Schenley Industries, Inc., had agreed to start contract negotiations within 30 days.

Grape Strikers' Rally Hails 1st Big Victory

Sacramento, Calif.—Striking grape workers, celebrating the first major victory of the 7-month-long Delano walkout, ended a 300-mile march to the state capitol on Easter Sunday and served notice that their battle for equality is just beginning.

Sixty-seven "Delano pilgrims" followed a color guard bearing the American and Mexican flags and a likeness of the Virgin of Guadeloupe to the steps of the capitol building.

They and their sympathizers made up a crowd of more than 8,000 jamming the capitol building grounds. It was the biggest capitol rally since Pres. Johnson's appearance during the 1964 election campaign.

The singing, cheering throng stayed for three hours despite repeated showers, creating a fiesta atmosphere, as speaker after speaker pledged a continued battle for decent farm wages and such essentials as collective bargaining and social insurance, still denied farm workers.

Their victory was the agreement the previous week by Schenley Industries, Inc., to recognize the National Farm Workers Association as collective bargaining representative for its farm employes. Contract negotiations are to start within 30 days.

Two days after the march ended, another grower—Christian Brothers wineries—offered to recognize the NFWA.

AFL-CIO Organization Dir. William L. Kircher, who had been present when the Schenley recognition agreement was announced at Los Angeles AFL-CIO headquarters, told the gathering that "the only road workers can travel is the road of unity, and the only language employers can understand is the language of solidarity."

LBJ Asks New Aid For Aged, Children

San Antonio, Tex.—Pres. Johnson will ask major improvements in the social security system next year, including higher benefits "across-the-board" and a new program of dental care for children under six.

The President revealed he has instructed Health, Education & Welfare Sec. John W. Gardner to draft "sound and workable" proposals for submission to the next session of Congress. Johnson also strongly hinted at future extension of the medicare principle to other age groups.

"Medicare need not just be for people over 65," Johnson said. "That is where we started."

The next step, he indicated, will be federal assistance in financing dental services for young children. Beyond that, the President pledged, "We are never going to stop trying to find new ways to make medicare sensitive to what our people need."

Johnson's broad-ranging speech —a blueprint for continuation of his Great Society program—was made in the courtyard of a public housing project for the elderly.

Signs Extension

The occasion was the signing of legislation extending the deadline for persons over 65 to enroll in the voluntary medicare program. Nearly 17 million eligible persons already have enrolled and the remaining 1.3 million over 65 now have until May 31 to sign up.

The President largely discarded his prepared speech to tell the people of his home state that he wants "to be remembered as one who spent his whole life trying to get more people more to eat and more to wear, to live longer, to have medicine . . . nursing, hospitals and doctors' care . . . to have their children have a chance to go to school" and have an equal start in life.

He noted the improvements made in social security benefits in recent years, but stressed that "too many of our older citizens are still trying to get along on income that is too small now to meet their needs."

Johnson stressed the concept of social security as a flexible system, adapting to new needs.

"This is what I would like to do," the President said:

"I would like to increase insurance benefits across the board for 21 million beneficiaries—the aged, the disabled, the widows and the orphans—including an increase in the monthly minimum, the monthly maximum and the total family benefits. . . .

"I would like to keep our social security and public welfare programs up-to-date in relation to increased earnings."

Explaining his intention to propose a dental care plan for children, Johnson said:

Help Children

"I have been wondering for some time now why we shouldn't bring our compassion and our concern to bear not just on people over 65 but upon our young children under six."

He predicted: "We are going to have these new programs."

The President said the HEW study now under way also covers "the financial structure of the social security program." Other sources indicated that an increase in the taxable wage base and government contributions to the fund are among the measures under consideration by the Administration.

The AFL-CIO convention last December urged the need for raising benefits "at least 50 percent" and an expansion of medicare. The convention suggested financing these improvements by raising the taxable wage base in steps from the present $6,600 a year to $15,000 and adding a government contribution to the amount paid by workers and employers.

Equal Vote Foes Open New Fight

By David L. Perlman

Congress returns from an Easter respite with the bulk of its work still ahead of it—including action on such key labor goals as wage-hour improvements, federal standards of unemployment insurance, on-site picketing rights and consumer protection laws.

The Senate immediately plunged into debate on the Dirksen Amendment, an attempt to get around the Supreme Court's one man, one vote ruling.

Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) needs a two-thirds margin for his constitutional amendment to allow states to apportion one house of a legislature on factors other than population.

Dirksen's amendment was rejected by the Senate last year. It has been vigorously fought by the AFL-CIO and is opposed by leading good government groups.

Budget Battles

Less in the headlines but of major importance are the recurring battles over the domestic budget—being fought behind the scenes in committees as well as on the floor of the House and Senate.

House Republicans have set a party goal of slashing all non-military appropriations by 5 percent when they reach the floor. The GOP lost its first budget-cutting attempts on funds for the Interior, Post Office and Treasury departments.

Reuther Calls for Bolder Action To Meet Challenge of Poverty

By Robert B. Cooney

"The challenge is great and the hour is later than we think," declared Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther in calling for "bold and imaginative action" to wipe out poverty.

Reuther told 1,000 person attending the second annual meeting of the Citizens' Crusade Against Poverty, of which he is chairman, that they must "mobilize a counter-thrust" to fight the attempts in Congress to trim back vital legislative programs.

There are people in Congress, he said, who oppose the anti-poverty, minimum wage, housing and other programs and are using the excuse of the situation in Southeast Asia to try to cut back funds in these areas.

If the nation fails to act boldly to erase poverty, Reuther warned, a vacuum will be created in which reason will yield to rioting and the spirit of brotherhood will be replaced by bloodshed.

Besides representatives of some 125 organizations voluntarily associated with CCAP, spokesmen of the poor came to the meeting from the Mississippi Delta, from Appalachia, from Los Angeles' Watts area, Harlem, Chicago and the vineyards of California.

Reuther, in his keynote address to the conference, announced that CCAP is launching three new projects now that the groundwork is laid.

Reuther said CCAP plans to open two centers with the aim of training 1,000 workers in the next three years who will help the poor to organize. It also will launch a southern rural action project which will operate initially in 22 counties in the South and move as soon as it can into the Southwest.

The organization also plans to expand its "working" liaison from 4,000 grass roots groups at present to 10,000 and create regional pools of professional and other skilled persons.

Richard Boone, executive director of CCAP, explained that the rural project aims to build on what has been learned in Mississippi and Alabama. He said local groups which arose through Head Start and other programs cannot survive

N.Y. Cab Union Wins Rights at 29 More Units

New York—The Taxi Drivers Organizing Committee, AFL-CIO, successfully completed the first phase of its drive to achieve bargaining rights for 24,000 taxi fleet employes by winning certification at 29 more garages.

The notice of certification, signed by NLRB Dir. Samuel M. Kaynard of the Brooklyn region, brought the number of drivers' units won in the 18-month organizing campaign to 67 of the 84 units involved, and the number of drivers and inside workers represented to more than 20,000.

Still unresolved are elections in 13 more garages, where the TDOC

NLRB Upholds Discount for Prompt Dues

A union's right to give members a 25-cent monthly discount for paying dues on time has been upheld by the National Labor Relations Board.

In a 4-0 vote the board accepted a trial examiner's finding that the $4.25 dues provided by the bylaws of Machinists' Lodge 1345, St. Louis, were what the bylaws said they were and not $4 plus a 25-cent penalty for late payment.

Former IAM Member William O. Black charged that the union unlawfully had him fired from his job at the Cobak Tool & Mfg. Co. in 1964 after dropping him from membership for late dues payment. Black claimed the difference between eligibility for membership and non-eligibility was in the 25-cent portion of his May 1964 tender of dues.

Examiner Fannie M. Boyls and the board disagreed. It could hardly be argued, the examiner said, that the discounts "so commonly given in the business world are penalties." The union's 25-cent discount must be viewed, she concluded, as a part of the basic dues—"not an assessment or penalty for late payments."

The NLRB record showed that Black on July 31, 1964, was three months behind in dues payments. He was warned in July but made no reply. Dropped from membership in August, he later offered part payment of $7 but was told to apply for reinstatement, which he failed to do. Management fired him Dec. 1, 1964, under the union-company contract.

Union Group Backs Controls Over CATV

Four AFL-CIO unions have joined in urging Congress to bring community antenna television under effective federal regulation.

Spokesman for the unions, at House Commerce Committee hearings, was Albert O. Hardy of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. He testified also for the Musicians, the Television & Radio Artists and the Stage Employes.

The union-supported bill was requested by the Federal Communications Commission to clear away any doubts that the FCC has authority over community antenna television. CATV, as it is called, consists of privately operated relay systems which pick up signals from distant TV stations and pipe them into the homes of paying subscribers.

Also before the committee is a bill, sponsored by Rep. Walter Rogers (D-Tex.), which would have just the opposite effect. It would bar the FCC from regulating CATV.

Hardy, who is director of the IBEW's radio, television and recording division, warned that the development of locally-oriented free television is threatened by the growth of CATV systems.

Local programming by local stations and the future of UHF—ultra-high frequency—stations are all threatened by uncontrolled CATV competition, he warned.

Hardy said unions in the field are "encouraged" that the FCC has taken steps to regulate community antenna television.

If Congress accepts the agency's request for legislative guidance in this area, Hardy said, it should be made clear that extension of television service through CATV "must not be accomplished at the expense of those who cannot—or choose not—to pay for TV entertainment, education and information."

Union Leaders Assail Condon-Wadlin Report

Albany, N.Y.—A proposal to replace the state's stringent Condon-Wadlin Act with a new set of bars against the right of public employe unions to strike was denounced as a "Mad Hatter" idea by leaders of the State, County & Municipal Employes.

AFSCME Pres. Jerry Wurf and Exec. Dir. Victor Gotbaum of the union's District Council No. 37 said they were "appalled" by the report of a panel appointed by Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) to recommend revisions in the act.

They declared the report confirmed labor's claim that "there is a basic denial of full citizenship rights to public employes because of the control . . . of their right of association and collective bargaining."

The panel proposed that the Condon-Wadlin Act be repealed and replaced by new legislation. It recommended creation of a State Public Employment Relations Board to provide mediation and fact-finding services; authorization for the Legislature or the applicable local legislative body to hand down a final settlement in case of deadlock; granting of recognition and bargaining rights to public employes throughout the state at all levels, and authorization for units of government to sign union contracts.

However, the proposals recommended continuing the Condon-Wadlin strike ban, requiring all public employe unions to sign no-strike pledges, and establishing more lenient penalties for strikers ranging from reprimand to dismissal.

The Condon-Wadlin Act requires automatic dismissal of all strikers. A worker who strikes can be rehired, but must remain on probation for five years and cannot receive a pay raise for at least three years.

The state panel proposal would stiffen the financial threat to unions by raising the present $250 a day limit on fines against unions for violation of court injunctions. The amount of the fine would be left to the discretion of the judge. The proposal also requires withdrawal of recognition from any union engaging in a strike.

"The report insists that public employes renounce their right to strike even before it becomes a relevant factor," Wurf and Gotbaum declared.

"It offers no procedures that would guarantee governmental employers will be any more responsible in their labor-management relations than they have in the past."

They pointed out that the recommendation for a board to administer collective bargaining does not specify that it be impartial. The penalties proposed are designed, they charged, "not merely to punish unions, but to destroy them."

The panel was headed by Dr. George W. Taylor of the University of Pennsylvania, one of the country's foremost arbitrators. Rockefeller, who has been in South America, has given no indication of his views on the report. However, Speaker Anthony J. Travia of the Democratic-controlled Assembly predicted that if Rockefeller were to send the recommendations to the Legislature they would not get "much support."

As did Wurf and Gotbaum, Travia urged enactment of a bill sponsored by Assemblyman Frank G. Rossetti (D) of Manhattan drastically revising the Condon-Wadlin Act. The two union leaders said it recognizes the problems of "bilateral negotiations" in public employment, "but offers realistic and sound procedures" for their "constructive" solution.

Labor Advisory Panel Gets Staff Coordinator

David S. North, for the past year assistant for farm labor matters to Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, has been appointed executive secretary to the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy.

As 300-Mile March Ends:

1st Victory Hailed By Grape Strikers

the hundreds among the crowds, Kircher declared: "They're here—all that make up the AFL-CIO family. This is a battle for workers all over the nation. The job is to give the farm worker the first class citizenship he deserves."

Schenley operates one of the grape ranches where 3,500 members of the AFL-CIO Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee and the NFWA went on strike last September. Larry Itliong, AWOC business representative, also was among the speakers here.

Conditional Election

The huge Di Giorgio Corp. followed Schenley's move by announcing it would allow elections on its ranches, including its Delano property, to determine if employes wanted a union.

Strike leaders pointed out, however, that Di Giorgio had loaded its bid with "non-negotiable" clauses, including a ban on strikes during harvest time, and would allow strikebreakers to vote.

The Christian Brothers of California subsequently offered formal recognition the to NFWA as "the organization through which social justice may be realized" for California farm workers. The religious order has only 25 field workers in its vineyards and buying most of its grapes from other growers. Its 150 inside workers, however, have been represented by the Distillery Workers for 21 years.

The marchers, headed by NFWA Dir. Cesar Chavez, left Delano at the southern end of the San Joaquin Valley on Mar. 17 to dramatize the strike issues. They passed through 53 farm towns where other agricultural workers gave them food and shelter.

Their march was augmented by unionists and other sympathizers all along the route. On the Saturday before Easter, they camped at Our Lady of Grace Catholic school across the Sacramento River from the state capitol.

After religious services by Catholic, Protestant and Jewish clergymen, they and 3,500 sympathizers walked the five miles to the capitol Easter morning. Nearly 5,000 additional supporters met them on the way or were waiting at the capitol.

City Councilman Richard Marriott, editor of the Sacramento Valley Union Labor Bulletin, met the column on the river bridge and presented the keys of the city to Chavez and Rafael Bustos, who served as chief of the march.

NFWA Vice Pres. Dolores Huerta called on Gov. Edmund G. Brown to convene a special session of the state legislature to enact collective bargaining legislation for farm workers. Brown, who had announced he had promised to spend Easter with his family in Palm Springs, was not present.

The long strike is a protest at the failure of growers even to match the $1.40 per hour which employers must pay to qualify for imported bracero labor and seeks union recognition.

13 COPE Area Parleys Draw 7,000 Unionists

Trade unionists are determined to work harder in 1966 recognizing that the stakes are higher than in any previous off-year congressional election.

This conclusion emerged from soundings taken among delegates to this year's series of area conferences conducted by the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, National COPE Dir. Alexander E. Barkan reported. A record number of more than 7,000 state, central body and local union leaders and members attended 13 COPE conferences in as many cities.

"The numbers and enthusiasm of delegates and their response to the conferences show they're ready to go all-out to help re-elect our liberal friends," Barkan said. "There was real recognition of the importance of the accomplishments of the 89th Congress, despite open and obvious disappointment over failure of 14(b) repeal."

Members seemed particularly aware of the great contribution of the 51 new liberals elected to the House in 1964 who made the flow of progressive legislation possible, Barkan reported.

"But our members know the score," he said, "and they're aware of the obstacles the newcomers must overcome to win re-election in November. They know that the conservatives will be throwing more money and manpower into this election than any previous off-year election. But they seem ready for a full-scale effort, and that's just what we'll need."

Thin Margins

Barkan said materials distributed at the COPE conferences showed how narrowly most of the newcomers won in 1964—despite Pres. Johnson's landslide victory—and how important their votes had been to passage of key liberal legislation like medicare, aid to education, housing, voting rights, anti-poverty programs, public works, and other job-creating measures.

Other materials showed that off-year balloting usually cuts heavily into the congressional strength of the party in control of the White House. The average loss over the past 60 years has been 37 seats in the House and five in the Senate.

Barkan said any comparable loss this year would "cripple hopes for more good legislation and would probably place control of Congress in conservative hands for years."

has a majority but cannot be certified until Kaynard's office rules on challenged ballots. Union representation was rejected in only four garages.

Committee Chairman Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., who headed the organizing drive as president of the New York City AFL-CIO, said he was "gratified" at the election results and determined to win an advantageous first contract.

Preliminary bargaining talks have been started with the representatives of some owners, and formal bargaining dates will be set soon for the negotiation of wages, health and welfare protection, pensions, grievances, breakdown time and other contract issues.

The committee will serve as bargaining representative pending application for an AFL-CIO charter, TDOC Coordinator Joseph Chaloupka said. That could be "any time," he added.

The 29 units just certified were won in elections held last Dec. 21. The TDOC was chosen in 30 other garages in the first NLRB vote last July 21. An additional eight garages were won in elections conducted by the State Labor Relations Board after the NLRB declined jurisdiction.

Besides driver units, the AFL-CIO committee was chosen by maintenance and service workers in 34 units which were consolidated with the drivers and in six separate "inside" units.

Total figures will not be released until all challenges have been disposed of and elections held where reruns have been ordered. Most of the latter are inside units, the NLRB said.

Many attempts had been made over the years to organize taxi drivers in the city, but all ended in failure until the TDOC was formed with the active support of the national AFL-CIO and central labor body. Federation Regional Dir. Michael Mann predicted that the new union will be strong and militant and a "credit to the labor movement."

The organizing committee originally sought a simultaneous city-wide election in all fleet garages, but the NLRB directed separate votes among drivers and mechanics at each place of work.

'Hot Copy' Ban By Guild Held Illegal Boycott

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner recommended that the Cleveland Newspaper Guild be ruled guilty of unlawfully instructing its members not to process New York Times news service copy during a 1965 strike of The New York Guild against the Times.

Examiner Sidney D. Goldberg said refusal of Guild members on the Cleveland Plain Dealer to handle Times copy was in effect a strike against the Plain Dealer and an unlawful secondary boycott in violation of the "hot cargo" provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Cleveland Guild Local 1 admitted, the examiner said, that its Plain Dealer unit voted not to process the Times service during the strike of a sister local and suggested that Times copy could be processed by two exempt executives — the news editor and night managing editor.

Goldberg rejected this as "sheer sophistry" without any "reasonable" basis in fact. It is clear, he said, that the concerted refusal of copy editors to handle the Times wire copy rendered the service "useless" to the newspaper. He asked that the Cleveland Guild be ordered not to repeat its boycott conduct.

THEY STOPPED TRAFFIC as well as the show when these members of the Variety Artists took to the picket line at New York's Latin Quarter. They closed the famous night spot and with the solid support of the other unions in the entertainment field won a new contract in three days. Gains included the AGVA's first contractual time-and-a-half rate for work on the seventh day of the week; limits of 13 shows a week for the chorus girls and 17 shows for principals; minimums of $122 a week for the girls and $175 for principals, and recognition of AVGA members as employes of the Latin Quarter.

Defense Planners Urged to Ease 'Boom and Bust' Impact on Jobs

San Francisco, Calif.—Both the Defense Dept. and the industry could do more "to moderate the endless cycle of boom and bust that keeps aerospace workers in a state of chronic insecurity," Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists declared at an Advanced Planning Briefing here.

The briefing was one in a series set for different parts of the country by the Defense Dept. A representative of organized labor has been scheduled to speak at each.

Siemiller pointed out that the department engages in many kinds of long-term planning and recalled that aerospace industry spokesmen have suggested they be given "timely access" to these plans in order to develop their own plans.

"I am suggesting that the unions representing workers in the aerospace industry also have a right to know the direction of defense planning," he added. "We have a right to make suggestions as to how the Dept. of Defense can synchronize military necessity with social need. We have a right to expect that there be planning for people as well as for production."

If collective bargaining is going to work in the industry, the IAM president maintained, the department's field representatives must recognize that both bargaining and unions have a proper place.

Military Handicap

"I know I'm treading sensitive ground here," he said, "but the fact is most union negotiators and union members firmly believe that military men have little understanding of—or sympathy for—union objectives."

Union negotiators feel that in bargaining they face not only management but the power of the Pentagon, which "we call the ghost at the bargaining table," he said.

"The ghost at the bargaining table is seldom impartial," Siemiller declared. "He seldom looks at the merits of the union's position. He isn't interested in knowing that what the union is seeking here is generally accepted in other industries."

Conditions exist in the industry, he said, that undermine the collective bargaining process, and the first of them is "rooted in the basic insecurity" of aerospace jobholders.

"For the workforce in any particular locality the experience has been one of boom or bust, feast or famine, employment that goes up like a skyrocket one year and down like a depth charge the next," he charged.

"Often these conflicting trends come simultaneously. There will be a shortage of skills in one locality and a surplus in another. . . .

"Aerospace workers say they live from contract to contract. Some even jokingly refer to themselves as migrants. Like those who follow the crops—they follow the contracts."

Such a condition is not only "rough on the people involved," he said, but also is "wasteful, expensive and time-consuming."

"Once a skilled workforce has been scattered to the winds it takes money to recruit a new one," said Siemiller. "It takes time and money for training. Either directly or indirectly the government bears these costs. But a greater cost is paid by the aerospace workers themselves."

Merging Dailies Warned Time Runs Out on Pacts

New York—A newspaper corporation formed by the merger of three present dailies announced that its first editions will go on sale Apr. 25 but several newspaper union spokesmen said their members will not report for work unless new contract agreements are reached by that date.

Executive Vice Pres. Thomas J. Murphy of the New York Newspaper Guild said chances of completing negotiations are "very slim" in the time remaining.

Every contract clause must be "signed, sealed, delivered and ratified" before publication, said Murphy, adding "if we don't have a full agreement we will be forced to strike."

A spokesman for Typographical Local 6 said printers would have to reach agreement with the new World Journal Tribune, Inc., by Apr. 20 to assure publication by the 25th. Other unions also are insisting on full agreement before the publication date.

Publishers of the morning and Sunday Herald Tribune, the afternoon and Sunday Journal American and the afternoon World- Telegram & Sun gave the U.S. Justice Dept. advance notice of their intent to combine their operations at a cost to the city of one afternoon paper and one Sunday paper. Later they announced the morning Herald Tribune will come out Apr. 25 as part of the new corporation, the evening World Journal that afternoon and the Sunday World Journal Tribune on May 1.

The Justice Dept. has not ruled whether it considers the proposed merger in violation of the anti-monopoly laws but was reported ready to give the publishers clearance with a warning against illegal combinations in the sale of ads.

The unions have been informed that some 2,000 of the 5,700 present employes of the three dailies will lose their jobs through merger.

The Guild has asked among other things for two weeks' pay for each year of service for severed employes, but publishers refused the request except where present agreements provide unlimited severance pay. Contracts at two of the papers have a 60-week limit.

Murphy said the Apr. 25 target date puts an "unreasonable limitation" on efforts to negotiate a full agreement. Contracts between the Guild and the three dailies had a Mar. 30, 1965, expiration date but were extended when no agreement could be reached on job protection.

Guild strike headquarters have been opened near the dailies and strike benefit forms distributed in the three units. Strike authorizations were voted by all three more than six months ago, the union said.

Consumer Parley Seen Spurring Truth Bills

The first nationwide gathering of consumer organizations in Washington late this month could provide the impact needed to enact consumer legislation now before Congress, Mrs. Esther Peterson, special assistant to Pres. Johnson for consumer affairs, declared.

Mrs. Peterson, who will give the opening welcome to Consumer Assembly '66, has urged maximum representation by consumer organizations to "give the impetus needed to put the President's consumer program through Congress."

The AFL-CIO and six international unions are among the 32 sponsors of the three-day assembly which will begin on April 25 and bring together representatives of 50 million consumers.

Other participants will be church organizations, social service groups, senior citizens clubs, credit unions and consumer cooperatives.

The assembly's aim is to demonstrate a broad-based demand for truth-in-packaging, truth-in-lending and other legislative measures, including more rigid pre-market testing of drugs and cosmetics.

"Thanks to the housewife's insistence on a fair deal at the store counter, the consumer movement has grown and the consumer's voice has taken on authority," Mrs. Peterson declared.

In addition to the problems facing housewives, the assembly will also concern itself with highway safety, air and water pollution, rising medical and hospital costs and utility rates.

A hoped-for discussion between automotive industry spokesmen and critic Ralph Nader, who will be among the program's participants, failed to materialize when General Motors and the Automobile Manufacturers Association turned down invitations to take part in a panel on automobile safety. The National Safety Council also declined to participate.

A major problem for union counselors in time of recession—wage garnishments—will be discussed by Sidney Margolius, whose consumer column appears in the AFL-CIO News.

Dirksen's Third Try

SEN. EVERETT McKinley Dirksen, the man most responsible for blocking repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, has renewed another of his campaigns against the Twentieth Century.

He has taken the Senate floor again to lead a bitter rear-guard action to subvert the U.S. Supreme Court's historic one man, one vote basis for reapportionment of state legislatures.

The Senate minority leader has gone down to defeat twice before on the issue as labor, civil rights and liberal groups joined to prevent Dirksen's scuttling of the principle of fair representation.

But he is back for a third try, intent on preserving intact the strongholds of political and economic reaction in America and to prevent or delay the kind of progress that is necessary to meet the new problems and challenges of a modern society.

AFL-CIO PRES. George Meany told the federation's convention last year that 14(b) repeal and the reapportionment issue "are solidly and inescapably intertwined" as far as Dirksen is concerned.

Meany said the basis of Dirksen's filibuster to prevent a vote on repeal of 14(b) was in effect to say: "Give up your opposition to the reapportionment amendment and you can have 14(b) repeal." Meany reacted sharply:

"Well, as badly as I want 14(b) repealed, I do not want it that badly. And the Senate minority leader and all his anti-labor stooges can filibuster until hell freezes over before I will agree to sell the people short for that kind of deal."

THE SUPREME COURT decision brought to a climax a long campaign in which the AFL-CIO has been deeply engaged, to reform the "rotten borough" system that has debased the political structure of the country.

The effect of the decision and its implementation by the states is to establish and maintain at all levels of government an effective working majority that is truly representative of and responsive to the needs and aspirations of the United States in the 1960s.

The major political, economic and social problems of the nation are, to an ever-increasing degree, urban problems. The need for housing, schools, mass transit, clean air and water, recreation and other facilities and services demands progressive legislation and larger public expenditures.

These are exactly the programs that the Old Guard, led by Dirksen, bitterly oppose, especially in the state legislatures.

These are the programs that organized labor, functioning in the public interest as the "people's lobby," has fought for at the local, state and national levels.

The one man, one vote decision makes it possible for the first time in many generations to give the people accurate and fair representation in the legislatures and in Congress.

Dirksen's latest attempt to enshrine the "rotten borough" system must be defeated finally and decisively so that the nation can get on with the important tasks of meeting the people's needs.

U. S. Worker Has 'Vital Stake' In Fate of Viet Nam's Freedom

The following article was written by Vice Pres. Humphrey especially for the labor press:

By Hubert H. Humphrey

EVERY TRADE-UNIONIST has a vital stake in freedom's fate in Viet Nam.

Some readers may ask, "How will it affect my union here at home—my job—my freedom?"

The answer is: In many significant ways—both directly and indirectly.

Consider what a Communist victory in South Viet Nam could mean. The immediate result would probably be the execution or imprisonment of thousands of anti-Communist union leaders and rank-and-file members. Free trade unions would be abolished. Communist propaganda has long since warned the Viet Cong to "beware of trade union leaders."

A Communist conquest would be tragic, too, for religious leaders of all faiths. And it would probably result in encouragement of Hanoi and Peking in a policy of further aggression elsewhere in Asia.

Organized labor does not forget the bitter lessons it—and all of us—learned in the 1930's—the years of appeasement. Czechoslovakia, then, seemed "far away" to some people, including Neville Chamberlain. To him, Hitler's demands only involved "a remote country among people of whom we know nothing."

But labor knows that communism's design against Viet Nam is a threat to all of us. Appeasement of Ho Chi Minh and Mao Tse Tung will not work. Aggression unchecked is aggression unleashed.

Recognizing these facts, American labor has given some of the finest support to the Administration's efforts for freedom. The AFL-CIO convention in San Francisco in December 1965 pledged "unstinting support . . . of all measures the Administration might deem necessary to halt Communist aggression and secure a just and lasting peace."

The convention recalled that "the AFL-CIO Executive Council and Pres. George Meany have repeatedly affirmed American labor's support of Pres. Johnson's peace efforts."

Our chief executive has time and again offered to sit down at the conference table to negotiate without any pre-conditions. An honorable peace remains America's goal.

Meanwhile, labor recognizes that we dare not slacken our effort. So, labor is providing crucial aid for—not one—but two simultaneous struggles in Viet Nam: the struggle for military security, and the struggle to defeat man's ancient enemies of ignorance, hunger and disease.

In Honolulu, Pres. Johnson and Premier Ky joined in an historic declaration against human misery. That declaration is now being carried out by the boldest program for change in Viet Nam's history.

A STRONG FOUNDATION for progress has been established. Eight thousand health stations are operating in villages and hamlets. Over 9,000 elementary and secondary school classrooms have been built or expanded. Eight thousand self-help projects have been completed; another 6,000 are under way. These include construction of village maternities, classrooms, bridges, road repair, rice and fish-drying platforms. Over 267,000 refugees have been resettled; 461,000 are in 250 temporary shelters.

Organized labor in Viet Nam has an increasingly vital role. Today, the Viet Nam Confederation of Labor (CVT) is one of the strongest and best organized democratic movements in South Viet Nam. It has a membership of over 300,000 of which more than one-third are plantation workers and tenant farmers in the country. CVT Pres. Tran Van Buu is a staunch supporter of free trade unions and a dedicated anti-Communist.

CVT has the support both of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unionists (ICFTU) and the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unionists (IFCTU) with which it is affiliated.

International labor solidarity must be free men's answer to international communism. Fortunately, labor solidarity is not just a hope; it is an inspiring reality. Moral and physical support by American labor has provided a tremendous lift to Vietnamese working people. Visiting American labor leaders have given practical advice and help.

At home, labor has generously donated skills, time and money to Viet Nam's cause. Union after union has passed individual resolutions of support.

Labor does not like war; none of us do. But if America were to turn its back on defenseless nations, who would man the ramparts against Communist aggression?

Labor knows its cause and its course. Labor will continue to work shoulder to shoulder in the fight for Viet Nam's freedom.

Billions Lavished on Betting But Arts and Theater Wither

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7p.m., EST.)

LAST YEAR the American public bet more than $4.5 billion on horse races. That was almost six times what it spent on books. Individuals bought about $800 million worth of books in 1965—half of it going for encyclopedias.

In 1964, the U.S. population invested almost $12.5 billion in alcoholic beverages, nearly $7 billion in cosmetics, beauty treatments, hair-dos and haircuts. At the same time it bought less than $500 million worth of tickets to legitimate theater productions, paid less than $6 million for admission to national parks.

Morgan

These comparisons are taken at random and are not necessarily scientifically sound but they give at least a hint of our sense of values.

The whole United States is a cultural desert. True, in the brief, bright John and Jacqueline Kennedy years at the White House, little oases of beauty, refinement and grace began to emerge in the arid fields of the nation's materialism. This was only a frail beginning—though a hopeful one.

The National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities, inspired by the Kennedys, was pushed into reality by Pres. Johnson last year in the extraordinary bonanza of Great Society legislation. But it is already in trouble in Congress. The problem: money.

The House did pass a $7 million appropriation for the foundation's various activities, including aid to states in the arts and humanities. However, this was little more than half the funds requested. The Senate is more sympathetic and may restore much of the cuts though it is not likely to get well into the job before summer. And by then demands for more domestic economies, on a guns-or-butter theme, may be louder.

One of the foundation's functions is to provide seed money—in matching funds—to encourage culture at the grass roots. So far 42 states have established arts councils. These have been eager to move ahead. A serious restriction on funds could blight their growth at a critical time.

Maybe the foundation's sponsors should have disguised it as a space capsule or a potential excursion ticket to the moon. When the National Science Foundation was created 15 years ago its budget was a modest $3.5 million. Its 1966 budget is nearly half a billion. The Soviets had released Sputnik I, you remember, in between.

WE'RE RACING the Russians to outer space but if we're racing anybody on culture we are losing. Recently one of the offspring of the 1965 arts and humanities act, the National Endowment for the Arts, made a survey. It found that of 771 American cities with a population of 25,000 or more, only 131 had had the opportunity to hear at least one professional symphony orchestra "live" in the last three years. Only 157 saw at least one professional theatrical performance. Only 117 communities witnessed at least one ballet or other dance presentation.

Road companies, unsurprisingly, tend to travel the same roads—where they can count on good houses. Their itineraries are concentrated in the Northeast, parts of the South, the Midwest and California. From the Mississippi west to California—with rare exceptions—there is little or nothing in the way of professional tours or resident companies.

This puts a rather weird reverse English on "progress." Back in the roaring gold-rush days of the 19th century, such frontier towns as Denver, Leadville and Virginia City prided themselves on their expensive, even lavish "opry houses." Whatever happened, by the way, to the little nuggets of culture distributed after the turn of this century on the Chautauqua circuits to towns and hamlets of the American hinterland? The answer, of course, is: Hollywood, radio and television.

Leaving these founts of esthetic riches aside, the United States today spends less on culture than any west European nation. Federal outlays on arts programs in the U.S. amount to little more than 1 cent per capita per annum. In contrast, Austria spends about $1.70 per person; Britain 70 cents; West Germany and France 20 cents each; Italy 16 cents per capita. Those figures do not include upwards of $33 million invested by private foundations last year in American museums, music, the performing arts, literature and the like. But even that contribution to culture amounted to only 5 percent of total foundation spending in 1965.

What does it all matter anyway? We're the richest, most powerful nation on earth as it is. Furthermore, Americans are understandably leery of any culture spoon-fed by government in the totalitarian manner. Culture is never likely to be regimented from Washington. But with wise use of federal funds we could have it plus all the heaven of rock 'n' roll, pinball palaces, billboard art and the Beverly Hillbillies too.

Not Enough Help:

Wage-Hour Unit Hit On Enforcement Lag

By Alexander Uhl

THOUSANDS of low-wage American workers are being cheated every year out of the hard earned dollars they ought to be paid under the minimum wage laws and at least two members of Congress feel that they are not getting the protection they need.

Representatives John E. Fogarty (D-R.I.) and Daniel J. Flood (D-Pa.) have told the Dept. of Labor that there are not enough government officers enforcing the law and that the department's Wage & Hour Division ought to be asking for more money to hire more of them.

Budget hearings before a House Appropriations subcommittee held last February have just been made public. They show that both Fogarty and Flood gave Wage & Hour Administrator Clarence T. Lundquist a rough time over what he was doing and what he intended to do about nailing down those firms which cheat their workers both on minimum wages and overtime payments.

Lundquist said he had asked for more help, but that the Bureau of the Budget had cut him back. Pressed further as to what he intended to do when he has to enforce the recently enacted Federal Services Contract Act, Lundquist insisted that he would go to Congress for more money to do the added job.

Neither Fogarty nor Flood suggested that Lundquist personally was not doing as good a job as he could with the money he had, but they complained bitterly that a better job ought to be done.

HERE IS THE PICTURE as Lundquist explained it to the subcommittee and the criticism that he met:

The Wage & Hour Compliance Division has been making more than 50,000 investigations a year, but this represents less than 25 percent of the total investigations that should be made. Lundquist conceded that he did not have enough men to do a broader job. Fogarty pointed out that violations were growing larger year by year—$59 million in the 1964 fiscal year, $74 million in 1965 and $85 million in 1966 while the amount of wages actually recovered for workers was not going up as fast.

"That is not good for those who work for a living," he said.

Lundquist said that a survey had been made of projected law evasion which indicated that if the Compliance Division "were able to visit all of the firms in violation of the wage and hour law in any one year, we would find the total of about $300 million in back wages due."

Both Fogarty and Flood said these figures show that the Compliance Division needs more money to enforce the law.

Asked for the source of most complaints of wage cheating, Lundquist replied:

"The usual complaint comes from a non-union worker, a former employe in an unskilled job, working in a firm that is in a non-metropolitan area and to a greater extent the tendency is to have that firm located somewhere in the southern area of the country."

Lundquist agreed with Fogarty and Flood that unions have played an important role in helping correct law violations.

Flood declared that with defense contracts growing and subcontractors springing up all over the country, the Wage & Hour Compliance Division won't be able to keep up with enforcement.

"You are not going to hold your own," he predicted.

Finally Flood drew from Lundquist the admission that with his present budget he could not enforce the law "as well as I would want to enforce it."

In the end, Lundquist said that when Congress passes additional improvements in the minimum wage level and adds to the number of workers covered, he would "be asking for more funds to enforce the statute, and I would hope that request would be approved." (PAI).

Suburban Dailies Offer Hope:

Big City Newspaper Mergers Create Growing 'Opinion Void'

NEWSPAPER MERGERS have left many metropolitan areas without divergent editorial opinion and news treatment, but that void is fast being filled by suburban dailies springing up around many cities, according to a top newspaper union official.

Monopoly papers often take "different political courses" in an attempt to avoid an anti-trust crackdown, Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson of the Newspaper Guild told reporters on Labor News Conference. But, he charged, when one publisher controls "the commercial end" of two or more papers, any chances for independence among them is lost.

Farson assailed the recently-announced proposal to merge three of the oldest major daily papers in the country—the New York Herald Tribune, the Scripps-Howard chain's World-Telegram & Sun, and Hearst's Journal American.

"This 'troika'—this three-headed monster"—has not met the "failing business" requirements of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act, he charged. "Scripps-Howard makes outlandish profits all over the country; Hearst is making profits; the Herald Tribune organization is making profits." The merger, if allowed, "will be the death knell of the New York Post," he asserted.

FARSON predicted, however, that the Justice Dept. would take no action to halt the combine, because "publishers are too powerful" and "the pressures on these departments are terrific."

"Any man in Congress worth his salt knows that the guy he has to have on his side is the publisher" and "he is not about to take him on," he said.

Reporters questioning him on the weekly AFL-CIO produced interview, aired nationwide as a public service over the Mutual radio network, were Kenneth Crawford, columnist for Newsweek magazine and former president of the ANG, and Harry Conn, editor of Press Associates, Inc.

THE VOID of divergent editorial opinion and news treatment left in the wake of metropolitan newspaper mergers is rapidly being filled by suburban dailies, Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson (center) of the Newspaper Guild told Kenneth Crawford (left) of Newsweek magazine and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc., on the weekly AFL-CIO public affairs program, Labor News Conference, heard nationwide on the Mutual radio network.

TRADE UNIONS' ROLE in the war on poverty was discussed by more than 100 labor and university educators at an AFL-CIO Education Directors Conference in Detroit, some sessions of which were held jointly with the University Labor Education Association.

Goldfinger Asks End To Investment Credit

The only part of the economy under inflationary pressure is in the areas of business profits and business investment, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger declared in a nationwide radio broadcast.

"If there is to be a tax increase or some kind of tax measure," he asserted, "it should be pinpointed at the area of pressure on prices and that is in the area of business profits and business spending for new plants and new machines.

"I think the wisest course at this point would be for the government immediately to drop the 7 percent tax credit for investment in new equipment. . . . If there was any argument to support that subsidy back in 1962, then there is a powerful argument to eliminate it now, when it is not only not needed but is creating difficulties and pressures on the economy."

The chief AFL-CIO economist's views were aired on the Columbia Broadcasting System's Capitol Cloakroom program, on which other guests were Carl Madden, research director for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and Arthur Okun, a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

Madden called for economic "restraint" by labor and management, "but above all by government, which is the leader of the effort to deal with inflation." He disagreed with Goldfinger on repeal of the tax credit and maintained that a tax increase "simply encourages a Congress which has already indicated its willingness to spend by providing more revenues to finance more spending."

Goldfinger expressed concern at Madden's advocacy of lower government spending, declaring there should be adequate funds both to prosecute the war in Viet Nam and the war on poverty.

"I firmly believe that the poor should not be compelled to bear the major burden of the war in Viet Nam and the business boom in new plants and machines," he added.

Controls Opposed

All three speakers agreed it would be dangerous and unwise to "slam the brakes" on the economy by invoking wage and price controls. Okun held that some restraints have not had their full effect, such as the recently-enacted rise in excise taxes and the changes in methods of collecting federal income taxes, as well as higher interest rates. Until the full effect is felt, he said, he does not see the need "to slam the brakes on either consumption or investment or to sacrifice our Great Society programs."

Goldfinger noted that Commerce Dept. studies show that the gap between prices and unit labor costs of industrial products and the spread between the cost of labor per item and the profit per item are greater than at any time in the last 15 years.

"Last year alone," he said, "profits went up 15 percent before taxes and 20 percent after taxes while all wage and salary payments, combined, went up 7 percent."

53,000 Unions File Reports Under L-G

The number of unions—local and national—reporting to the Labor Dept. under the Landrum-Griffin Act increased by more than 600 last year to nearly 53,000, according to the department's Summary of Operations of the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act.

Actually nearly 1,700 unions filed reports for the first time, but 975 unions reported their termination because of discontinuance or merger with other unions.

Only 128 unions were under trusteeships, the report showed, compared with 488 in 1959. Twelve unions were taken to court in 1965 because of alleged election irregularities; 18 unions conducted rerun elections under supervision of the Office of Labor-Management & Welfare-Pension Reports, and at the end of the year 35 election suits were pending, most of them carried over from previous years.

High-Rise Housing Planned by NMU

New York—The National Maritime Union will build high-rise apartment houses for seamen and their families in four major port cities without using any public funds, the union announced.

Construction will begin this year on a 20-story building in New York to cost $5 million, and another in New Orleans to cost $4 million. Upon their completion work will start on 11-story buildings in Chicago, to cost $2.5 million, and San Francisco, to cost $2.3 million.

The NMU plans to meet the $14 million construction cost through investments from the NMU Pension Fund, which is jointly administered by the union and deep-sea shipping operators under contract.

'Viking' Fire Stirs New Call On Ship Safety

New York—A renewed call for protection against "floating fire traps" was voiced by the National Maritime Union in the wake of a fire that heavily damaged the Caribbean cruise ship Viking Princess, carrying American passengers but sailing under a foreign flag.

The nation needs laws requiring all passenger vessels operating out of U.S. ports to conform fully to U.S. safety laws, said NMU Pres. Joseph Curran.

Curran noted that Viking Princess crewmen helped get passengers into lifeboats when the ship caught fire, but added: "Gallant seamanship doesn't change the fact that this ship represented a danger to its passengers."

Built in St. Nazaire, Franch, in 1950, the vessel sailed under three foreign flags and three names—the Lavoisier, the Riviera Prima and the Viking Princess—during her career.

In 1964 the Coast Guard refused to certify the ship as seaworthy until interior changes were made. Then she sailed abruptly from this port, stranding 350 expectant passengers. In January 1965 passengers complained she listed heavily to port, the air conditioning did not work and there was no hot water.

Ads for the ship were still running in New York papers recently for Bermuda sailings in September.

LABOR SITUATION in Argentina was described in Buenos Aires for Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), second from left, by three ex-U.S. trade union activists (left to right): Melvin Blum, U.S. Information Service labor information officer and former director of the Ladies' Garment Workers training school; U.S. Labor Attache James F. Shea, formerly on the staff of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, and Charles Wheeler, program director in Argentina for the American Institute for Free Labor Development and former president of a Pittsburgh local of the Communications Workers. Javits was in Buenos Aires to attend a meeting of the Inter-American Economic & Social Council.

AAA Marks 40th Year:

Abel Hails Success Of Arbitration Body

New York—An effective corps of arbitrators is an essential ingredient to the success of free collective bargaining, Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel declared here at a 40th anniversary celebration of the American Arbitration Association.

Abel said organized labor has made progress through arbitration and will continue to do so "because the needs and problems will not just go away."

In a nation undergoing major economic and industrial changes, he observed, labor and management are challenged by many problems—wage determinations, job security and job opportunity, safety and working conditions complaints, and others — and unionists prefer to seek out arbitration as a voluntary solution.

Arbitration represents only the application of those terms to disputes arising under labor contracts, he pointed out.

"I regard the arbitrator more as a participant in the fair and proper administration of the contract than as a judge dispensing justice in a legalistic proceeding or issuing decisions between two parties at war," Abel said.

The USWA leader noted that the services of the American Arbitration Association are used on some 3,000 contracts between the union and smaller companies.

AAA Pres. Donald B. Straus estimated that the association would be handling about 12,000 cases this year. He narrated a film-slide commentary comparing conditions in major management and labor groups aided by AAA as they were 35 or more years ago with conditions as they are today.

An appeal to lawyers to help AAA provide an expanded program of legal services—without charge where necessary—was made by Orison S. Marden, president-elect of the American Bar Association. He paid tribute to those attorneys who give their time voluntarily in arbitration proceedings, while asserting that arbitration should be an important part of lawyers' work. Marden expressed the hope that there would be a "proper increase" in efficient arbitration services for those who can't afford to pay.

Founded in 1926

The AAA was founded in 1926, largely through the efforts of former Pres. Herbert Hoover, then secretary of commerce, and two distinguished attorneys who were later to become chief justices of the United States—Harlan F. Stone and Charles Evans Hughes.

Today the association has a national panel of arbitrators numbering 16,000 men and women. The AAA helps resolve business problems between industrial concerns, proceedings involving court actions and disputes between trade unions and management.

Two sources of income support the organization — administrative fees paid on a case basis by parties involved in arbitrations, and annual membership dues by business and labor groups, law firms, other organizations and individuals.

Labor Urges Expansion Of 'Impact' School Aid

The AFL-CIO urged Congress to expand, not cut, the existing program of federal "impact" aid to school districts.

An Administration proposal would sharply reduce impact grants to schools attended by children of federal military and civilian personnel, and would eliminate such aid entirely in a number of areas.

The AFL-CIO amplified earlier testimony before a House Education & Labor subcommittee with a statement detailing labor's position on impact aid.

It termed the proposed cutback "a serious error" which would place "a staggering and sudden burden" on school districts dependent on the funds. In fact, the AFL-CIO said, the "excellent approach" of impact aid should be extended to cover all conditions of rapid population growth which require "quick enlargement of school facilities."

There is also the impact of new educational demands, the federation noted, including the need to replace antiquated rural schools and dilapidated city schools. The statement added:

"Another impact which can place severe strains upon a school district is the impact of school desegregation, whether resulting from federally ordered desegregation or from conscientious efforts of a school district to deal with de facto segregation.

"Finally, there is the impact upon a school district's finances of the sudden loss of a tax base. The cancellation of a government contract with a private concern in the district, for example, can have serious consequences to the schools."

As to the existing program, the AFL-CIO protested vigorously against the proposal to exclude three percent of the children of federal workers and servicemen in computing the amount of impact grants. This, it noted, would cut $3 million from aid to Los Angeles schools and $7.5 million in money going to New York City.

Aid to education programs now in existence "should be strengthened and improved, rather than being curtailed and phased out," the AFL-CIO said.

Tragedy of Poverty Hits Young Hardest

Harrington Article Draws Profile Of America's 50 Million Poor

The face of poverty is young and this is the most shocking fact about the millions of poor in America, declares Michael Harrington.

Writing in the April issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine, Harrington points out that of the 50 million people who live in poverty or hover around its edge, some 22 million are under 18.

"This is particularly tragic today," he observes, "because we are more and more learning that poverty could become hereditary for the first time in our history."

In earlier times, Harrington says, immigrants improved their condition because the economy had a great need for muscle power. Today, the school dropout population continues to grow even as the young jobseeker must compete for work with machines which have the equivalent of a high school education.

With 22 million young people in poverty, he writes, "there is a very real growth potential for impoverishment in the United States."

Magazine Theme

His article, "The World of Poverty," leads off an edition of the Federationist devoted entirely to the problem of poverty. Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, discusses the range and results of the federal government's "war on poverty." Other articles deal with labor's role and describe union-led projects around the nation.

Harrington, author of "The Other America," a book which helped to inspire the war on poverty, warns that the gains of the last few years present a very real danger of overoptimism.

He notes that unemployment has been brought down to around 4 percent and that the President's Council of Economic Advisers reported that in 1963 and 1964 almost 3 million people were liberated from poverty.

So there will be those who will conclude that we are not far from achieving the Economic Opportunity Act's goal of eliminating "the paradox of poverty in the midst of plenty," he says.

Thus, he adds, it is particularly important to emphasize the dimensions of poverty today.

Harrington offers this profile of the best-off of the poor: A family of four, living in a large city, with a father who works full-time; his wife can spend a total of 95 cents for the family's big meal of the day.

This family is within the government's "poverty line"—an annual income of $3,130 for a family of four.

Harrington cautions that the "poverty line" is a mere figure of speech. Understanding that this best-off family is only one illness, one accident, one recession away from not being able to afford that 95-cent meal is crucial, he adds.

With such a definition, including those who "hover" around the edge of poverty, the world of poverty embraces 50 million Americans, 22 million of them children, Harrington points out. The government in 1965 raised its count of children below the poverty line to 15 million, up from the earlier estimated 11 million.

"In other words," Harrington continues, "almost half of the total poverty population—43 percent, to be exact—is under 18. Or, put another way, one out of every five Americans is poor—but one out of every four young Americans is in this plight."

In an age of automation, he adds, it is three or four or five times as hard to "lift oneself by the bootstraps," as in immigrant times, because one has to get three or four or five times higher in order to find a decent job.

"This means," Harrington declares, "that unless we move radically, those 15 to 22 million impoverished young Americans of today are going to be the fathers and mothers of an even larger poverty generation of tomorrow."

Harrington points out that the 1966 manpower report of the U.S. Labor Dept. anticipates a rise in the school dropout population. Dropouts in the 25-29 age group numbered 3.3 million in 1965; this age group in 1975 is expected to total nearly 5 million.

Negro citizens, along with the young, are special victims of poverty, Harrington emphasizes.

He observes that the Negro jobless rate is double the white rate and Negro teen-age unemployment runs over 25 percent. And yet, he adds, the report issued by the President's Automation Commission said that if non-whites hold the same proportion of jobs in each occupation as in 1964, the non-white jobless rate in 1975 will be five times the national rate.

What the commission is telling us, Harrington says, is that without a gigantic upgrading of the Negro workforce, this "miserable situation" is going to get more than twice as bad as it is now.

"Thus it is clear the growth potential of poverty will victimize Negroes more than anyone else" and it is the young Negro who most needs help today, he adds.

These enormous problems are compounded, he writes, by the fact that 17 million jobs are unprotected by a minimum wage and these jobs are the type sought by dropouts and racial minorities—in retail trade, restaurants and hospitals.

Millions Lack Aid

Of the large group of non-working poor, only about one-fifth received any public assistance payments in 1964, Harrington declares. Last June, 11.5 million poor children, their 7 million parents, plus about 3.5 million aged poor, got nothing at all. Thus the need for guaranteed incomes as proposed by the President's Commission, Harrington says, adding:

"We are rich enough to guarantee every citizen the right to the necessities of life."

Summing up, Harrington says the world of poverty is made up of a subculture of 50 million Americans, 22 million of them children; poverty is a tragically youthful phenomenon; Negro progress is slowing down and may be reversing; the worst-off employed lack minimum wage protection and the non-working poor do not even receive public assistance.

Crusade Sessions Hear Call for Bolder Action

without substantial outside help.

Reuther said CCAP hopes to broaden the participation of trade unions in its work.

Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey dropped in on a luncheon session and told the delegates that "this nation is no stronger than its people."

"The war on poverty," Humphrey said, "leaves no room for conscientious objectors."

Its aim, he added, is not only to emancipate millions of people from poverty but to maximize their participation in American life.

Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, stated clerk of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and a vice chairman of CCAP, urged the conference to recognize that the real enemy is the human condition of poverty imposed on some people and groups by society's patterns and rules.

Seeing worldwide implications in the anti-poverty struggle, Dr. Blake declared that "the strategy for a free world depends upon the American people daring to change their own society soon enough and deeply enough that the hopes of our own American Revolution of nearly 200 years ago shall be realized for all men and for ourselves."

The No. 1 Domestic Problem

Despite all the talk about inflation by economists and newspaper writers, the No. 1 problem in America today is poverty.

It is not surprising that we in the labor movement see this fact more clearly than anyone except the poor themselves. Poverty was our original enemy from the day the first trade union was established; it will remain the enemy until it is exterminated from American life.

Poverty is a curse in any era. Its persistence in a period of unparalleled opulence is an intolerable affront to the national conscience, a denial of the American promise so proudly proclaimed for two centuries.

The time to end poverty is now—in the decade of the Sixties. The means are available; they need only to be used.

The first essential is jobs at good wages for all. More than half the poverty in the nation is the direct result of unemployment, low wages and involuntary part-time work.

Unemployment has been declining at a gratifying rate. But real or potential shortages of workers with certain skills should not be allowed to obscure the backwaters of the manpower pool that remain largely unreached.

The place to start is with a higher minimum wage, applicable to all workers in interstate commerce. The wage-hour bill now before Congress proposes a long step in that direction—but only one step out of many that must be taken.

A corresponding need is more and better education at all levels—not only equal and unlimited opportunity for the young, but catch-up schooling, training and retraining for adults. Impressive progress has been made in recent years, but the immense backlog that remains is obvious to the least sensitive observer.

The ultimate answer to the hypocritical lament that a higher minimum wage takes work away from the unskilled is the full development of every worker's potential ability. Yet better education and a realistic wage floor, even in combination, cannot assure the elimination of poverty.

There also must be a concerted, well-planned federal policy to ensure full employment in times of peace as well as times of war. The massive investment in America, which we in the AFL-CIO have advocated for years, must be carried on. While the demands imposed by the Viet Nam war of course have top priority, there must be no retreat in the continuing struggle for a better life for all.

If poverty is to be wiped out, another group requires special attention. One-fifth of the poor is old—too old to get jobs, past what is normally accepted as the retirement age. They have been helped by the modest increase in social security pensions; they will be helped soon by medicare, but they deserve further measures to cope with their problems and extend their useful lives.

I write these words in the full knowledge that Pres. Johnson, more than two years ago, declared a war on poverty. I write in the full knowledge that there has since developed, on a vastly expanded scale, a different kind of war in Viet Nam. We in the AFL-CIO fully support both these wars.

But we do not accept the proposition that America must choose between these two wars, fighting either one or the other. We believe that both must be fought—and won.

The United States is not faced with a choice between guns or butter. The extermination of poverty is not "butter"—it is muscle, muscle to make this free land stronger, in spirit and substance, in the early struggle against communism and every other form of tyranny.

When we fight to end poverty in America, we are fighting for the cause of human liberty throughout the world—for the aspirations of all mankind.

URW Pact Settles Seiberling Strike

Barberton, O.—A strike of nearly three months' duration ended here when members of Rubber Workers Local 18 voted unanimously for ratification of an 18-month contract with the Seiberling Tire division of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

The new pact, with benefits for 1,000 workers, provides wage hikes of 10.7 cents an hour this year, another nine cents next year; raises as high as 51 cents an hour for some workers under a new rate system; and fringe benefits valued at nearly 18 cents over the contract term, Pres. Henry Gilliam said.

The old contract expired Dec. 31 but talks continued until Jan. 18. The strike was called when management refused to drop proposals to strip key provisions from the contract, according to union spokesmen.

Some 'Imbalances' Reported:

BLS Survey Finds No Labor Shortage

The Labor Dept. has found no overall shortage of labor in the nation, although with employment growing by about 900,000 since December, some imbalances are developing between labor supply and demand.

The findings were announced in a Report on Manpower Shortages and Reserves prepared by Commissioner Arthur M. Ross of the Bureau of Labor Statistics in accordance with Pres. Johnson's order to provide "the fullest possible information" each month on possible manpower shortages.

"Employers, it is evident, are finding it increasingly difficult to locate some types of workers," said the report, which covered March. "Want-ad columns are growing longer, unfilled vacancies are more numerous, and widespread complaints are heard that applicants do not have the proper qualifications or experience.

"It does not follow, however, that we are suffering from a general manpower shortage or an exhaustion of manpower reserves. The explanation is that there are imbalances between manpower supply and demand which are capable of being remedied by private and public efforts. The untapped reserves of labor supply are also considerable."

At the time the report was made public Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz also announced that job openings at local public employment offices throughout the country on Mar. 1 were at their highest level since the end of World War II—21 years ago. The total of 344,000 vacancies was 67,000 more than a year earlier and climbed to that level despite placements in non-farm industries during February that set a new post-war high for the month.

Indicators Analyzed

In addition to the rise in employment since December, Ross listed among general indicators of the manpower situation:

- The decline in the unemployment rate from 4.8 percent in April 1965 to 3.8 percent in March, and the drop in the number of the unemployed to 3 million in March, about 1.4 million of them adult men.

"Even though unemployment among men is still close to a seasonal peak and can be expected to drop sharply in the next two months because of the pickup in seasonal work, there still remains a considerably reservoir of workers available for employment expansion," Ross observed.

- The modest increases over the year in average hourly earnings and the average workweek in manufacturing, although hours have risen more sharply in a few industries where the manpower situation is "tight."
- Rising quit rates in industry, indicating that workers are able to find alternate job opportunities.
- The ability of manufacturers to ship increasing orders without undue delay, an indication that producers are keeping up with the flow of new business.

Manpower shortages, the report added, have not been a factor in recent price increases except possibly in some of the lower-paid consumer services where employers had to raise wages in order to compete for manpower.

Ross examined the manpower situations in five labor market areas ranging from Cincinnati, O., classified as "rather tight," to Los Angeles, described as "rather loose," and found them "quite different" despite a "basic similarity in one respect."

"Skilled workers, engineers and scientists are hard to find," he said, "while there are unused reserves of less skilled, less experienced and otherwise less attractive job candidates. The extent of the mismatch varies from one community to another, but it is plain that the common problem is one of imbalance rather than overall labor shortage.

"It is the task of private and public manpower policies to remedy these imbalances in order that employment growth may continue in orderly fashion."

More Applicants

Shortages are still of the "spot" variety, rather than general in character, the report noted. Even with unemployment down to 3.8 percent in March, it added "there are three job applicants at local employment offices for every unfilled opening."

In examining occupational shortages and surpluses, Ross found the greatest need in the blue collar category to be for mechanics and repairmen, machinists, welders and flame cutters, patternmakers, toolmakers and die setters.

Also reported were local shortages of construction laborers, warehousemen, automotive washers and greasers, and machine shop laborers. In service occupations the most acute shortages were reported among waiters and waitresses, housemaids, nursemaids, restaurant cooks and other kitchen workers, private housekeepers and porters.

Draftsmen, social workers, trained nurses, mechanical and electrical engineers, laboratory technicians and assistants, and accountants and auditors were reported "in shortest supply."

are expected to face budget-slashing attacks.

Congress racked up several solid accomplishments in its first three months—including final passage of a permanent GI Bill of Rights, tax adjustments, extension of the deadline for medicare registration, a $13.1 billion appropriation for military and economic assistance in Southeast Asia, U.S. membership in the Asia Development Bank and an overseas teachers bill.

A modest pay and fringe benefit bill for federal employes had clear sailing in the House and appears certain to win Senate approval. A number of other significant bills either have passed one house or have been cleared by committees.

The session began with a major setback, however—the failure of the Senate to break the Dirksen filibuster and reach a vote on repeal of Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b). And there appeared to be little hope for immediate home rule for the District of Columbia, with a limited "half-loaf" measure apparently the most that could emerge from a House-Senate conference.

A new battle over civil rights legislation is likely to be touched off when the Administration submits its legislative proposals in the near future. Also pending in the House is a committee-approved bill strengthening the equal employment opportunity program.

The minimum wage bill is expected to reach the House floor during the last week in April. Described by the AFL-CIO as "a solid step forward," it would extend coverage to 7 million additional workers including, for the first time, a large group of farm workers.

Wage Floor Would Rise

The wage floor for nearly 30 million workers now covered by the $1.25 minimum would rise to $1.40 on Feb. 1, 1967, and to $1.60 an hour one year later. The minimum for newly-covered workers would start at $1 an hour and rise at the rate of 15 cents a year. The cutoff for farm workers would be $1.30, for other workers $1.60.

The bill emerged from the House Labor Committee with bipartisan sponsorship and the Rules Committee is currently holding hearings.

The on-site picketing bill, a major goal of the AFL-CIO and the Building & Construction Trades Dept., already has a rule as well as House committee approval. But Chairman Adam C. Powell (D-N.Y.) of the House Labor Committee said he doesn't plan to call the bill up for floor action until the House acts on both the minimum wage and equal employment opportunity bills.

The legislation, recommended by every President since Truman, would permit a union with a dispute against a construction contractor or subcontractor to picket a multi-employer construction site. Such picketing is currently outlawed under court interpretations of the secondary boycott ban of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Still in the committee stage is the unemployment compensation standards bill, a major AFL-CIO goal and a prime target of employer organizations. House Ways & Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), who introduced the labor-backed Administration bill, is working in closed committee sessions to come up with a measure commanding broad support.

Despite a special message from Pres. Johnson, only one consumer bill has moved out of committee—a tire grading and labeling bill which passed the Senate unanimously. It's now in the House Commerce Committee.

The Senate Commerce Committee has been considering—but has yet to act on—the "truth-in-packaging" bill of Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.). A hopeful sign was the listing of the bill by Majority Leader Mike Mansfield as one of the measures the Senate will consider in the weeks ahead. There has been no action in the Judiciary Committee, however, on the "truth-in-lending" bill of Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.).

4-16-66

The Senate also has before it two labor-supported bills which have passed the House: a measure extending coal mine safety inspection to other types of mining, and amendments to the Railway Labor Act designed to clear up a backlog of grievances and make monetary awards binding on employers.

Congress has given little attention so far to two constitutional amendments Johnson proposed early this year: to abolish the Electoral College as an institution and to extend the terms of House members from two to four years. Although some hearings have been held, no action has been taken by either the House or Senate Judiciary Committees.

The President has asked a new approach in foreign aid, including five-year authorization for separate economic and military aid programs —to "free Congress from the burden of an annual renewal of basic legislation." A two-year authorization is considered a possibility.

Also pending is a presidential request for a new Cabinet Dept. of Transportation.

Congress will be under double pressure in this election year—on the one hand to wind up its work as early as possible so that members will have more time to campaign, but also to compile a record which it can point to with pride.

Senate Kills Dirksen Move To Curb 1 Man, 1 Vote Rule

House Unit Asks Tight Ship Safety

Foreign flag ships that fail to meet U.S. safety standards should be barred from American ports, the House Merchant Marine Committee has urged.

The committee unanimously endorsed the report of a three-man board of consultants it had named to study the Yarmouth Castle disaster, in which 90 persons died last November when fire swept a cruise ship flying the Panama flag.

In a parallel action, the Senate Commerce Committee opened hearings on legislation which would require owners of foreign-flag passenger liners to notify prospective passengers if their ships did not meet U.S. fire safety standards.

As Congress returned from its Easter recess, the Administration won a test of strength in the House, easily beating a Republican motion to disapprove a presidential reorganization plan to transfer the Community Relations Service to the Justice Dept. The civil rights agency, set up to help communities resolve racial problems, has been in the Commerce Dept.

The vote against the Republican-sponsored motion of disapproval was 220-163. Voting with the Administration were 202 Democrats and 18 Republicans; opposed to the reorganization were 109 Republicans and 54 Democrats.

Meany Asks Action:

House Urged to End Site Picketing Delay

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany urged House members to press for "immediate action" on the on-site picketing bill—a "top priority" goal of the labor movement.

He warned that "an untruthful and well-organized campaign" is under way to keep the bill from coming to a vote in the House. Those who are trying to block action, he charged, "know that a large, bipartisan majority in the House of Representatives and in the Senate favor this bill."

In a letter to all House members, Meany reiterated the AFL-CIO's "complete and undivided support" for the bill, which would allow picketing at multi-employer construction sites.

"The bill would give exactly the same picketing rights to building and construction trades workers that are enjoyed by industrial workers and all others coming under NLRB jurisdiction," he stressed.

He noted that the legislation has been approved by the House Labor Committee and cleared by the Rules Committee. It has been supported over the years by the Administrations of Presidents Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson, and leaders of both parties have promised to help bring it to a vote.

Construction trades workers, Meany declared, are entitled to this "long delayed relief."

In a parallel move, the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. alerted its state and local councils and affiliated unions to the need to counter "a large scale propaganda campaign" by employer organizations opposed to the bill.

Opponents have spent "many hundreds of thousands of dollars," the BCTD charged, and have used everything from polls with "loaded questions" to "caricatures and comic books" to drum up anti-labor sentiment.

Meany Hails Vote As 3rd Bid Fails

By David L. Perlman

The Senate slammed the door on a constitutional amendment to overturn the Supreme Court's one man, one vote ruling, handing Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen his third successive defeat on the issue.

Dirksen's supporters had mounted a lavishly-financed campaign to drum up backing for his amendment. But when the roll was called, the 55-38 margin was seven short of the two-thirds majority required. The only vote switch from last August's rollcall was a gain for the one man, one vote forces. (Rollcall on Page 8.)

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany hailed the outcome, declaring:

"Basic democracy won a major victory when the Senate rejected Sen. Dirksen's proposal which would have negated the American principle of one man, one vote.

"We in the AFL-CIO are extremely pleased. We have long fought for equality of citizenship and the Senate action insures that right."

Dirksen first tried to block reapportionment of state legislatures in the summer of 1964 by proposing a four-year moratorium on court reapportionment orders—with the expressed hope that a constitutional amendment would be adopted during that period by minority-elected legislatures.

The AFL-CIO was one of the first groups to sound the alarm against the plan and the Senate turned it down.

Last August, after failing to get Judiciary Committee approval for his proposed amendment to allow one house of a legislature to be set up without regard to population, Dirksen sought to substitute his plan for an unrelated bill then before the Senate. But the most he

CWA Wins 3,400 Unit From ACA

New York—The Communications Workers defeated the expelled American Communications Association to become collective bargaining agent for 3,400 employes of the Western Union Telegraph Co. here.

More than 2,600 employes balloted in an election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board. They chose the CWA and rejected the ACA, which had represented them for 25 years, by a vote of 1,505 to 1,147. Only 23 workers voted for no union.

CWA's victory shrinks the total ACA membership to fewer than 2,000, Pres. Joseph A. Beirne reported. Beirne was one of the 12 vice presidents of the former CIO who voted in 1949 and 1950 to expel the ACA and 10 other unions for being Communist dominated.

The decision of Western Union employes to join an AFL-CIO affiliate is "another bright page in the story of organized labor's battle against Communist influence everywhere," Beirne said.

Prices Up in March, Increase Slows a Bit

The consumer price index continued to rise in March but at a somewhat slower pace than in February, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The index climbed four-tenths of one percent last month to 112. In February the index had moved upward five-tenths of one percent, paced by a sharp increase in food prices. In mid-March food, clothing, used cars and most services continued to rise, BLS said.

Arthur Ross, commissioner of labor statistics, pointed out that the wholesale price index for the week ending April 19 had dropped and was three-fourths of one percent below the February level. This gives ground for hope, he said, of a slowdown in the rise of consumer prices.

The advance of the index to 112 means that it cost $11.20 last month to buy the same basket of goods and services that cost $10 eight years ago.

Three-fourths of the index jump in February was attributed to higher food prices. Government officials have predicted that food prices will head downward in the next few months checking the sharp climb in consumer prices.

A year ago in March 1965 the consumer price index stood at 109, or about 2.8 percent below the March 1966 figure.

Ross said that for the first quarter of 1966 the index rose at the rate of 3.6 percent a year, but that "at the wholesale level prices have been stable and this makes it hard to judge" the future trend.

Mountain Youth Lured To Sea by SIU Project

Brooklyn, N.Y.—Fifteen young men from deeply impoverished areas of West Virginia have completed 60 days of training under a labor-sponsored program that opens the way to jobs at good wages.

They received instruction in the techniques of seamanship in the "Project Recruit" program given by the Seafarers in cooperation with the West Virginia AFL-CIO, and they learned their lessons well.

At commencement ceremonies at the SIU's Harry Lundeberg School of Seamanship, where they took their training, they were presented with certificates attesting to their competence. They also qualified for preference in hiring aboard vessels under contract to the SIU at basic salaries of $300 a month—plus room, board and enough overtime to put them in the $5,000-a-year bracket.

"Project Recruit" is an example of labor's participation in the national anti-poverty program. The youths whose future it has changed from bleakness to hope were trained at no cost to themselves or the public.

They received all tuition and expenses, including a free physical examination and transportation costs to the school. While undergoing training they were provided

Pilots Protest Narrowing of Flight Lanes

The Air Line Pilots have urged the Federal Aviation Agency in the interests of safety to keep 120 nautical miles of space between planes flying the North Atlantic route.

Ten union witnesses headed by ALPA Pres. Charles H. Ruby urged the FAA to rescind "immediately" its Feb. 7 order reducing the "lateral separation" between planes to 90 nautical miles and to restore the 120-mile rule.

The FAA ordered public hearings when the ALPA and the Intl. Federation of Air Line Pilots Associations protested the change.

Union witnesses said there never has been a mid-ocean collision, but that with 450-passenger planes now in the planning stage, maximum space is needed to avoid a crash that might involve up to 900 passengers.

Ruby was chief pilot for National Air Lines when elected ALPA president in 1962. He asked the FAA to order that a 120-mile separation be "available to all pilots on all flights at all flight levels."

ALPA is not unalterably opposed to any reduction in lateral distance between planes under "unquestionably safe" conditions, but such conditions will not exist, Ruby said, until "considerable improvement" is made in flight instruments and rules.

The Air Transport Association and other groups testified in favor of the 90-mile limit because of a great increase in plane travel.

SUPPORT for 21 fired St. John's University teachers is demonstrated on university's Brooklyn campus by pickets from a dozen unions headed by leaders of the New York labor movement. # Investigating Team Hits St. John's Dismissals

New York—St. John's University was guilty of "grievous and inexcusable" violation of academic freedom when it fired 31 professors without a hearing in December, an investigating team of the American Association of University Professors charged. A strike by faculty members followed the firings.

Dr. Israel Kugler, president of the striking United Federation of College Teachers, hailed the report as confirmation of the union's claim of justification in walking out to protect the rights of the faculty.

"This makes it virtually unanimous that the academic world is up in arms about these injustices," he declared.

St. John's is the world's largest Catholic university, with 13,000 students, and is operated by the Vincentian fathers.

The AAUP unit's report, which did not mention the strike, will be presented to the association at its annual meeting later this month in Atlanta, Ga., and is expected to result in censure of the institution. This would constitute a warning that academic freedom and tenure at St. John's are unsatisfactory.

The university has rejected all offers of mediation and conciliation. The last union proposal it turned down was that the presidents of any three Catholic universities name a panel of 15 persons from which St. John's and striking faculty members would select three each. The six would hold public hearings on the strikers' charges and make public recommendations which the St. John's board of trustees could accept or reject.

About 100 faculty members are now in the fourth month of their walkout, which has had the solid support of organized labor in the New York area. The UFCT, a unit of Local 2 of the American Federation of Teachers, is paying about $10,000 a week in strike benefits and would welcome help. Its office is at 300 Park Avenue South, New York, N. Y. 10010.

By League for Industrial Democracy:

Randolph Honored As Rights Pioneer

New York—Labor's commitment to the unfinished battle for equal rights and opportunity emerged as the theme of the 61st annual conference of the League for Industrial Democracy.

Highlight of the two-day conference was a luncheon honoring AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph for a lifetime of crusading leadership for civil rights.

The occasion was Randolph's 77th birthday anniversary, marked by tributes from top leaders of the labor-civil rights coalition.

Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel made the formal presentation of the LID's annual award to Randolph, and pledged that labor will carry on the "social revolution" that Randolph helped spark.

Abel defined it as "a revolution that erases the seething indignation among minority groups, assures security and dignity to workers, eliminates the fears of the aged and meets the expectations of the young."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany telegraphed his "warmest best wishes" to Randolph and "fraternal greetings to the LID," commenting:

'A Natural Pair'

"They are a natural pair, for they have both been fighting for justice and the rights of man for all their lives. In choosing to honor Phil Randolph, the LID acted in its own highest traditions."

Among the many dignitaries who sent messages were Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

It was the guest of honor himself, however, who summed up his lifetime philosophy in a brief acknowledgement.

"To be free you must be equal," Randolph said, "and to be equal you must be free."

Abel noted the progress that has been made since the time when Randolph was "a lonely voice for equal rights," but acknowledged that "there is much more to be done" within the trade union movement itself to ensure equal rights.

He termed the union contract "the most effective" weapon against discrimination, noting that through collective bargaining "representatives of workers can negotiate conditions to provide the greatest degree of equality of treatment and opportunity." Abel added:

"We need a new sense of total commitment to achieve social and economic justice. It is time we embarked on crash programs to help in specific and concrete ways those poverty-stricken millions who ask nothing more than a chance to make a useful contribution to society."

Labor's role was a recurrent theme of the entire conference. An evening program on labor as a force for social change featured Pres. Ralph Helstein of the Packinghouse Workers; Gus Tyler, assistant president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, and A. H. Raskin of the New York Times. Other program participants included the Rev. Peter O'Reilly, head of the striking teachers at St. John's University; Al Kehrer, southern staff representative of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, and Delores Huerta of the National Farm Workers.

He announced that CWA next would open a drive to bring 1,200 employes of the Radio Corp. of America Cable Div. out of ACA and into CWA.

Beirne expressed thanks to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and affiliated unions for giving "total support" in CWA's effort to show the advantages of "being a part of the real American trade union movement as found only in the AFL-CIO."

Meany, in a letter to Beirne distributed among Western Union employes, recalled that they had been outside the mainstream of the labor movement for 16 years "because of the alien political beliefs" of their top officers.

Western Union employes belong in the AFL-CIO and "deserve all the benefits and rights" flowing from membership, said Meany, inviting them to "join with us."

Support also was received from the New York City, Long Island and New Jersey State central labor bodies, the CWA said.

In bargaining scheduled to begin next month, Beirne and Pres. E. L. Hageman of the Commercial Telegraphers plan to coordinate negotiating procedure and goals. The CTU has for many years represented Western Union employes outside this city.

CWA's election campaign stressed the point that wages and fringe benefits under ACA contracts lag behind those won by CWA and other unions in the same field.

The two unions have appeared on the same ballot four times since ACA was expelled. CWA won each time. It now represents former ACA units at ITT World Communications, Globe Wireless and RCA Radiomarine in addition to the new Western Union group.

- "Will not legalize any activity otherwise unlawful.
- "Will not require that a man join a union in order to get a job.
- "Will not affect product boycotts.
- "Will not legalize jurisdiction strikes [or] otherwise unlawful recognition or organizational picketing.
- "Will not extend beyond the project site, and will not have any effect outside the construction industry."

Despite these assurances, the BCTD noted, material sent out by opponents of the bill include such items as a kit with a cover cartoon portraying the on-site picketing bill as a rattlesnake about to be killed by a gunman drawing a pistol, and a caption reading, "Get him before he gets you."

BSEIU Launches Drive For 'Rights, Votes, Jobs'

The Building Service Employes have launched a drive for "Rights, Votes and Jobs" intended to assure that no trace of segregation persists in any local union or its field of employment, to re-elect pro-labor congressional candidates, and to make certain that graduates of anti-poverty training programs have jobs waiting for them.

The program got under way with a meeting in New York City for the New York-New Jersey areas, has moved into Missouri and Michigan, will be extended to Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Boston, Minneapolis and Chicago, and then carried to other principal cities.

Pres. Davis Sullivan has called on all locals to tear down whatever barriers to integration that may remain. He also urged local civil right committees to be active operating committees, pointing out the need for educational programs in view of the changes in the civil rights field.

"The nation has undertaken a War on Poverty and we must support that effort," Sullivan declared. "We must also make sure that that effort is quickly expanded into attacks on poverty in all areas of our society and is given enough budgetary support to attain its goals."

In a resolution spelling out the goals, the union's executive board stressed that the Civil Rights Act and the Voting Rights Act require the cooperation of BSEIU members if they are to be effective. The union's constitution requires civil rights and educational committees in all locals.

"Much remains to be done in terms of federal, state and local legislation," the board said, "and we call upon political education committees of local unions to assist civil rights committees and the union in general in securing passage of needed civil rights legislation."

NATIONWIDE DRIVE for equality in areas of "Rights, Votes and Jobs" was kicked off at a meeting in New York by the Building Service Employes. Helping inaugurate the campaign were (left to right) Peter Ottley, chairman of the BSEIU Civil Rights Committee; BSEIU Sec.-Treas. George E. Fairchild and Walter Davis, deputy director of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

First Determination:

UAW Group Eligible For Trade Pact Aid

Some 200 New Jersey Auto Workers employed by the Ford Motor Co. have been ruled eligible to apply for federal assistance under the U.S.-Canadian automotive products agreement.

The determination was the first made under the agreement and the Automotive Products Trade Act of 1965 that implements it. It was based on a finding that the trade pact eliminating tariffs on autos and auto parts led Ford to move packaging and shipping of knocked-down cars for export from its Pennsauken, N.J., parts depot to Tillsonburg, Ont.

As a result, it was found, "a significant number or proportion of the workers [at Pennsauken] have become or will become unemployed."

The Automotive Agreement Adjustment Assistance Board—made up of Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, Sec. of Commerce John T. Connor and Sec. of the Treasury Henry H. Fowler—found that the operation of the U.S.-Canada agreement was the "primary factor" in the unemployment and that hence the workers who lose or have lost their jobs since Nov. 19, 1965, are eligible to apply for adjustment aid.

Workers eligible to ask for assistance must meet specific standards that include length of employment with Ford, employment history during the previous three years, and willingness to take other suitable jobs. If they meet the standards they will be entitled to up to 65 percent of their previous pay to a maximum of $70 a week for 52 weeks, plus other types of aid.

However, Congress has not completed action on legislation appropriating adjustment aid funds. A bill has been passed by the House and is now pending in the Senate. UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther urged speedy action on the measure "so benefits can be paid without delay to the workers and their families."

Reuther noted that the trade treaty award was the first making benefits available to workers adversely affected by a trade treaty between the U.S. and another country. It was made possible "because the UAW insisted that eligibility requirements under the legislation implementing this agreement be more liberal than the provisions of the Trade Expansion Act," he observed.

In the Trade Expansion Act, the U.S. Tariff Commission was authorized to determine eligibility for adjustment assistance. Nineteen petitions have been filed with it—including five from labor groups—and each has been rejected.

In the Ford case, the board asked the Tariff Commission to determine some of the facts and also received advice from the Small Business Administration and the Labor, Commerce and Treasury departments.

Seniority Settlement Faces Vote at Boeing

More than 45,000 Machinists at Boeing Co. plants in 27 states will vote April 27 on a strike-averting agreement that IAM negotiators said would "put seniority back into the union contract" for the first time in 18 years.

IAM Vice Pres. Charles F. West, Seattle, Wash., and other union negotiators said they will recommend a favorable vote on a compromise proposal made by federal mediators a few hours before a midnight strike deadline.

Direct negotiations between union and management were deadlocked after six months of talks when a Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service panel headed by Dir. William E. Simkin offered a five-point method of solution. The parties accepted it tentatively after an all-night session in Simkin's offices Apr. 19.

IAM members at Boeing lost their former seniority provision after a 1948 strike. They have been trying to restore it ever since and to get rid of an employe rating system which, a union spokesman said, is based on "how well the foreman likes you."

The pending proposal provides that seniority govern future layoffs for about 60 percent of Boeing employes, including "substantially all" union members with more than three years of service, according to IAM.

Future layoffs of employes with less than three years of service will be governed by a combined ability-seniority system, with the union having the right to challenge layoffs under a new appeals procedure.

The settlement plan also recognizes seniority as the basis for promotions. It gives workers the right to challenge seniority violations through the union grievance procedure, with final appeal to arbitration.

If approved by IAM members, the proposed settlement will become part of the contract covering Boeing workers at Seattle, Wash.; Wichita, Kan.; Michoud, La., Cape Kennedy, Fla., and other locations in 23 states.

The IAM struck Boeing last fall for 19 days. Members returned with an interim agreement calling for 51 cents more an hour in wage and fringe benefits over a three-year period, and providing no more than six months of talks on the rating system Boeing calls "performance analysis."

The union said "performance analysis" is detested by Boeing workers because layoffs, downgrading, promotions and transfers are based on whim and not on experience or seniority.

Trainmen Set Contract Aims On Railroads

New Orleans—General chairmen for the Railroad Trainmen on 110 U.S. railroads agreed here to ask for a boost in wages, a cost of living adjustment, a work guarantee and other improvements in contracts covering 160,000 trainmen.

The chairmen, emphasizing that rising living costs have whittled away the rate increase won by the BRT two years ago, decided to submit the following proposals to rail management in talks due to start July 12:

- A 25 percent pay raise.
- A living cost escalator provision.
- Guaranteed work of not less than five days a week, 22 days a month for yard service, 26 basic days' earnings per month for road service—both exclusive of overtime or extra work.

The chairmen also voted to ask for nine paid holidays instead of seven, with eligibility extended to all members on the active work list and to those on days off, vacations, or absent because of service-connected disabilities.

The union will propose, BRT Pres. Charles Luna said, that active employes receive $6,000 life insurance coverage, increased from the present $4,000, and retired employes, now not covered, getting $2,000 coverage.

T. M. Holleran Dies; Headed Labor Exchange

Thomas M. Holleran, director of the Trade Union Exchange Programs Division of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Intl. Affairs until his retirement in January, died in Washington following a heart attack. He was 48.

He became executive secretary of AFL Federal Labor Union No. 18887, representing Midvale Steel Co. employes in Philadelphia, in 1942, and was in the U.S. labor delegation that organized the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in London in 1949. He joined the staff of the Mutual Security Agency in 1950 and moved to the Labor Dept. in 1955. As director of the exchange program he greeted and briefed most of the foreign labor leaders who visited the U.S.

Clergy Hail Recognition Of Grape Strikers' Union

San Francisco—Representatives of Catholic, Jewish and Protestant faiths issued a joint statement here hailing the recently signed recognition agreement between the National Farm Workers Association and Schenley Industries, Inc., as "the beginning of the end of the worst indignity imposed on farm workers."

The agreement, reached after the intervention of the AFL-CIO, recognizes the NFWA as exclusive bargaining agent for Schenley workers in the Delano grape fields.

The clergymen's statement was signed by Rev. Eugene J. Boyle, chairman of the Commission on Social Justice of the Catholic Archdiocese of San Francisco; Rabbi Joseph B. Glaser, regional director of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and chairman of the Social Action Committee of the Board of Rabbis of Northern California; and the executive committee of the Northern California-Nevada Council of Churches.

"Schenley Industries is to be highly commended for its recognition of the National Farm Workers Association as the sole collective bargaining agent for its vineyard employes," the statement said.

"By this action Schenley has clearly demonstrated that its business operation has a solid foundation in an awareness of social responsibility in labor-management relations.

"This truly historic recognition agreement is the beginning of the end, we think, of the worst indignity imposed upon farm workers—the denial to them over the years of the right to form associations of their own choosing . . . [and] bargain collectively with their employers."

The statement by the religious leaders came as members of NFWA and the AFL-CIO Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee were attempting to hold Sunday mass in a Delano park. Growers and their supporters picketed the mass, stating that it was being held for "publicity purposes." The mass was called off after the picketing interference created conditions which, a union officer said, "lent an improper atmosphere in which to have the mass celebrated."

Beautiful stereophonic music is a new "fringe benefit" provided by the growers in the Delano grape strike for the handful of imported "esquiroles" (Spanish for "strikebreakers") now in the fields.

The music is played not for any beneficial effect it might have on workers' efficiency, but to drown out the voices of AWOC and NFWA pickets as they stand at the edge of the fields and shout to the "esquiroles" to come out and join "la huelga"—the strike.

The strikers say that the music is a problem now, but that it is really "muy lindo" and that they may make a demand in contract negotiations to have it played every day after the strike is won.

Machinists Slate Airlines Strike

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, the National Mediation Board was reported preparing to ask Pres. Johnson to invoke emergency board procedures to delay a walkout by 34,000 mechanics and other airlines ground personnel.

The Machinists set 12:01 a.m. local time, Apr. 23, as the deadline for a strike in bargaining for new contracts with five major airlines—Eastern, National, Northwest, Trans World and United.

Governor Declares Label Show Week

Baltimore, Md. — Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin has proclaimed the period from Apr. 29 through May 4 as Union-Industries Show Week in tribute to the exhibition produced by the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. It will be held here that week at the 5th Regiment Armory.

The show is open to the public without charge. It will run for six days and nights, with about $100,000 worth of free gifts, prizes and souvenirs. Practically all AFL-CIO unions are participating.

In his proclamation, McKeldin called the show "America's largest exposition which brings to the public the force, appeal and knowledge that union-made goods are excellent in quality, workmanship and artistry."

COPE Urged to Counter Off-Year Voting Pattern

Milwaukee, Wis.—The "tremendous" legislative gains of recent years are in "real danger," AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler warned a meeting sponsored by the Wisconsin AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education.

"There is a real fear that with the end of the 89th Congress this year, the forward progress of legislation will be halted," he declared. "And even worse, there is worry that these gains will be eroded away and our accomplishments cancelled out."

What makes this "fearsome spectre" a possibility in 1966, he said, is the history of off-year congressional elections, in which the party in power usually loses a substantial number of seats in both branches of Congress.

To reverse this pattern, he urged stepped-up COPE activity "to bring an awareness of the issues and unity of purpose to our efforts."

Schnitzler paid warm tribute to the 51 liberal congressmen first elected in 1964 who "made the 89th Congress different from any other." He particularly cited two Wisconsin Democrats, Representatives Lynn E. Stalbaum and John A. Race, declaring the state could be proud of them.

"If off-year election history repeats itself this year it most likely will take its heaviest toll among the 51 liberals," he went on. "These men and women come from marginal areas or from districts that had been represented by deep-dyed conservatives for generations. Their loss and their succession by the type of men they replaced would be a staggering blow to us."

If there is to be any loss of seats in Congress, Schnitzler declared, "let the loss be the seats of those who have failed to keep pace with and support the programs of a better America . . . those men of either party who have sat during the 89th Congress and failed to respond to their duty, who failed to reflect the will of the people and who failed to give their voices and their votes to the legislative betterment of our nation."

"Let the new Congress be made up of all those men and women who stood up and were counted in the last two years," Schnitzler urged. "And let the ranks of the missing be filled by men and women who bring to the chamber and committee rooms of Congress new ideas, new courage and new determination."

Progress in the Vineyards

THE DECADES-OLD STRUGGLE of farm workers—the most cruelly exploited group of workers in the nation—to achieve first class citizenship in an industrial democracy has taken a major step forward in grape fields of the Central Valley of California.

A new spirit of unity and determination, strongly supported by the AFL-CIO and its affiliates and liberal groups across the country, culminated in a major breakthrough in a seven-month strike in the Delano area—recognition of a union of farm workers for collective bargaining purposes.

The breakthrough with its new hopes of organizing into strong, effective unions the hundreds of thousands of farm workers in California has its roots in earlier struggles. But in recent years the conditions have changed, and the most important change was the termination of the program of importation of foreign farm workers.

In this legislative fight the AFL-CIO led the way, throwing all its resources into fighting the powerful growers' lobby intent on maintaining a supply of cheap labor so that they could reap a veritable "harvest of shame."

The end of the bracero program and a renewed and vigorous organizing drive are now paying off in terms of union recognition and the beginning of collective bargaining amid indications that this may spread to major growers and processors.

To bolster this new drive and spirit and to bring real first-class citizenship to the farm workers, the need is for congressional action to give to these exploited field hands the protection of national legislation—wage-hour laws, labor relations protections, unemployment compensation benefits and the entire range of laws designed to aid and protect other American workers. At this point the farm workers are still denied these basic rights.

Still Room to Grow

THE ABILITY of the nation's economy to handle both the cost of halting aggression in Viet Nam and waging a war on poverty at home has been documented in the latest pulse-taking of the nation's economic health.

The total output of goods and services—the Gross National Product—for the first three months of 1966 shows a real increase, after adjustment for price changes, of almost 1.5 percent over the preceding three months. This is a jump of close to 6 percent on a yearly basis—well above the average annual rate of growth experienced during the first years of expansion from 1960 to 1965.

In spite of this sizable increase in output, America still has not reached the limits of its capacity to produce. With the labor force increasing, with productivity rising and more than 3 million people still unemployed, there is no reason why we cannot continue to increase production at a pace close to the 6 percent yearly rate of the first quarter. It would be shameful to allow these productive resources to lie idle while badly needed programs go begging.

Although prices also rose more rapidly during the first quarter, the inflation argument for suppressing expenditures on vital social programs doesn't hold water. Some of the price pressures have already begun to subside. And there are more civilized ways of keeping the lid on prices than by reneging on the promises made to the millions of Americans who have not yet shared in the nation's growing abundance.

'This Could Be a Vintage Year'

Facilities Face Strain:

Group Practice Called Answer To Demand for Medical Care

THERE'S considerable concern these days that with medicare scheduled to go into operation soon medical facilities will be inundated beyond their capacities.

It is hard to argue the point that our medical plant is not geared to the demands that will be placed upon it. This, of course, is another way of saying that perhaps for the first time we are facing the problem of providing adequate medical care to all elderly citizens.

It is going to take time to train more doctors and technicians. And unless the pay of non-professionals in medicine is raised these workers will continue to be in short supply.

One immediate aid to the over-taxed medical facilities is receiving fresh recognition, however. This is group medical practice—something that organized labor has long sought with growing success.

It was not too many years ago that the American Medical Association was fighting a battle-to-the-death against groups of doctors and technicians joining to provide patients with complete medical care.

The tide of demand for such medical care led the AMA to reluctantly withdraw its objections.

Another factor has been the irresistible move toward specialization. There are internists, pediatricians, gynecologists, ophthalmologists, dermatologists, and so on. The AMA has established 35 specialty boards of medicine. In addition, there are subspecial.

The acceleration toward specialization is seen in the statistics. In 1940, 21 percent of the doctors in private practice were specialists. In 1964, 69 percent were specialists. Four out of five medical students are in training for special fields.

Along with this trend toward specialization is the increasing dependence of the medical profession on expensive diagnostic and therapeutic equipment, usually available only in such institutional settings as hospitals or group practice clinics.

A House committee was told recently by labor that "we do not claim quality medical care automatically and necessarily results from the association of doctors and other paramedical personnel in group practice, but we do believe group practice provides the necessary framework within which quality control can be built in."

Many unions have found that providing comprehensive health services on a prepaid basis is probably the soundest means of achieving complete medical care. Millions of union members and their families have such coverage through labor-management contracts.

Under this type of arrangement the medical group has an incentive to practice preventive medicine because the patient who becomes sick becomes the financial as well as the medical responsibility of the prepaid health plan.

Group medical practice is being considered by many authorities as at least a partial answer to how we meet the growing emergency of needed hospitals and facilities under the expected impact of medicare.

A case in point came to light recently.

It was provided by Marion B. Folsom, secretary of health, education and welfare under Pres. Eisenhower. He is now chairman of New York Gov. Rockefeller's Committee on Hospital Costs.

HE IS SUPPORTING state legislation to permit the 700,000-member Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York (HIP) to operate its own hospitals. A great part of HIP's membership is made up of union members.

Folsom, in a letter to HIP Pres. James Brindle, said that one of the most important ways of curbing rising hospital costs was that "there could be savings in hospital costs and superior treatment of patients if people had available a broad spectrum of insured health services in and out of the hospital."

"The evidence indicates the programs of this type would result in markedly lower hospital utilization," Folsom's letter stated. He added that it is "especially important today to encourage the fullest possible constructive experimentation within voluntary prepayment plans and that the law should offer positive encouragement to such efforts, rather than restrict them."

Morgan Says:

School Aid Act Holds Promise Of Greatest Boost to Education

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7p.m., EST.)

THERE IS SOMETHING educational in the fact that despite dire warnings, the historic 1965 federal-aid-to-education act has not subverted the nation's public school system.

For generations, states' righters and other powerful conservative elements had successfully blocked federal assistance to primary and secondary schools on the grounds that somehow a sinister governmental hand would stretch out from Washington and dictate what every child should be taught from border to border and coast to coast.

Morgan

Then with typical Johnsonian virtuosity, dissident elements, including opponents in the church-state issue, were drawn together, albeit reluctantly. The result: the Oscar-winning first session of the 89th Congress enacted a monumental bill that should give American education its greatest boost since the Civil War.

There is no magic in it. Its impact is barely beginning to be felt and, unsurprisingly, difficulties have already been encountered.

The focus of these is on the guidelines of the U. S. Office of Education for compliance with desegregation requirements. Education Commissioner Harold Howe II warned that school systems failing to file satisfactory pledges of compliance by Apr. 15 faced the loss of all federal aid. There has been stiff and angry resistance from the first Southern states most directly affected. But there are also complications, actual and potential —and some explosively embarrassing—over the issue of de facto segregation in big cities outside the South.

IT SHOULD astonish nobody, however, that the leverage of federal funds is gradually rolling away a lot of the original opposition to aid from Washington. The authors of the bill saw this obstacle—they would have had to be blind not to—and their approach was to work the legislation around it, not force a head-on collision. Thus emphasis was placed from the beginning on funneling federal help through the existing public school systems of the 50 states, not trying to level them and build from scratch.

Many of these existing structures, unfortunately, were antiquated in physical plant, teaching techniques and the concepts of education. It was important to avoid, if possible, preserving them in antiquity, so to speak, with a consequent waste of money. Fortunately, one of the principal architects of the school aid bill was Howe's predecessor as education commissioner, Francis Keppel, who has just resigned as Assistant Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare to go into the industry-backed field of educational publishing and teaching aids.

Keppel helped conceive a kind of three-way thrust to the legislation. The first, already noted, was the importance of working through the states. The second was to stress the complementary and inter-acting roles of education, the war on poverty and the drive for civil rights. The third was the great need for what might be called laboratory experimentation in new approaches to learning. This is why, for example, the U. S. Office of Education has $100 million to invest in research and development.

There will be dry runs in this area, just as in the Pentagon's development of new weapons systems. But there is promise of new weapons against ignorance.

The so-called "new math", which bewilders so many parents, including this one, stemmed almost directly from research done by the National Science Foundation in connection with the Defense Education Act.

Nobody knows just what will come out of the experiments—that's why they need to be made—but some experts envision a number of experimental education centers around the country where parents, students and teachers may go for a look at new processes, somewhat in the manner in which farmers have spent time profitably at experiment stations sponsored by the Dept. of Agriculture.

The logic and importance of tying together the attacks on ignorance, poverty and prejudice can hardly be over-emphasized. Poverty will persist unless the poor can get jobs. They can't get jobs without developing skills. They can't develop skills without education. And minority groups, who almost invariably comprise the hard core of the poor, can't be meaningfully drawn into this process on a basis of equal opportunity until the ugly lumps of racial and other prejudices are filtered out.

Happily, the common sense of this approach—so sensible that it had never really been tried before—was obvious not only to Keppel but Sargent Shriver and other like-minded government officials. Increasingly, it is hoped, Shriver's anti-poverty warriors, education and civil rights workers will be able to "needle" city and state administrations to move in the direction of these combined operations for related objectives.

Home Districts Affected:

Congress Seen Rejecting Cuts In 'Impact' School Aid Program

CONGRESS will reject Administration budget proposals cutting or dropping urgent school aid programs, AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin has predicted.

Rogin said Congress "is revolting" against the proposal to shift funds from aid to land-grant colleges, federally-impacted school districts, school lunch programs and student loans to "some of the new laws." Rogin was interviewed on the nationwide radio program, Labor News Conference.

He charged that under Administration proposals, "about $200 million" would be lost to school districts now getting assistance to help ease the burden of high enrollments caused by federal activities in their areas.

But, he noted, "many congressmen have such schools in their districts . . . and they are going to see to it that that aid continues. These school districts have developed programs that are based on impacted areas aid" and "sharp cuts like these would have bad effects throughout the country . . . particularly in the large cities."

THE AFL-CIO spokesman said that while "money itself is not the whole answer" to national school needs, it "is essential in order to have quality education." He added that "most of it will have to come from the federal government" so that local governments will be able to continue meeting the mounting demands for other public services.

But, Rogin noted, many school districts "could be doing better" with the money they now have. More effort must be directed toward improving schools in low income areas, he said, pointing out that "unquestionably, there are two grades of education in many cities," with the quality of education better in high income areas than in low income sections.

Reporters questioning him on Labor News Conference, produced as a public service by the AFL-CIO and aired each week over the Mutual radio network, were Mary Merchant, education reporter for the Washington edition of the Afro-American, and William Wyant, a Washington correspondent for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Money Market Tightens:

Inflation Curbs Pose Threat of Slowdown

MANY ECONOMISTS are warning that the steps being used to combat the alleged inflation threat may well be heading us toward a recession. They insist that a far greater danger may be hard money.

This whole trend toward a "hard" or "tight" money market started last fall when the Federal Reserve Board pushed up interest rates by restricting the supplies of lendable funds. The explanation was that the economy was growing at such a rapid pace there was a threat of inflation. The "Fed" sought to put a brake on economic growth.

During this period many economists were saying that there was no real evidence that inflation was an immediate threat.

It was true that the Consumer Price Index had risen rather sharply, but most of the increase was attributed to higher prices for food and the Agriculture Dept. was predicting a decline of food prices by 6 percent by the end of 1966.

The Wall Street Journal discounted the inflation threat, declaring: "In spite of the many warnings issued in recent weeks that price inflation not only is threatened but has already begun, careful analysis of the facts reveals very little real evidence of it. Indeed, government indexes show that whatever price inflation occurred is concentrated in a few special types of commodities."

It seems that every time the economy starts to move into high gear the money-managers decide that it is time to control the pace by raising interest rates.

"The rate of interest," writes Dr. Seymour E. Harris, Harvard professor of economics, "is a crucial factor in the determination of economic activity. The lower the rate, all other things being equal, the greater incentive to borrow, produce and put idle men and resources to work."

The higher the interest rate, Harris points out, the slower the rate of economic activity, which means less jobs, less income and purchasing power and a lower rate of economic growth.

THERE HAVE BEEN three prime experiences with hard money in the post World War II period—1949-1950, 1953-1954 and 1958-1959—and each one led to a recession which imposed needless hardship on millions of American workers and small businessmen.

In each instance the stated purpose of hard money was to combat inflation that threatened the economy.

However, experience has shown that in small doses hard money cannot be effective as an antidote to inflation and in large doses may succeed in curbing inflation but only at a terrible cost.

Hard money does three things:

- Increases the profits of financial institutions.
- Reduces the level of demand and brings on a small scale recession.
- Curbs government programs using credit to promote agriculture, housing, small business and foreign trade development.

The latest and most alarming hard money development was the announcement by the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration that they were raising the top interest rate on government insured home loans from 5.5 percent to 5.75 percent.

The mortgage bankers contended that with conventional housing loans going above 6 percent they could not afford to provide money for VA and FHA loans even though they were risking little with government backed loans. They knew that if they withheld money from the housing mortgage market—carried on their own form of "strike"—they could force up VA and FHA rates. They did.

Said Sec. Robert C. Weaver of the Dept. of Housing & Urban Development: "It had reached a point where home purchasers were having their buying plans thwarted by a lack of mortage funds."

This is the bind that comes with hard money. Less people will be buying homes and the things that go into them. There will be less construction generally. (PAI)

(Willard Shelton, whose column normally appears in this space, is ill.)

CONGRESS will reject budget proposals to cut back federal school aid to districts with high concentrations of government personnel, AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin (center) predicted on Labor News Conference. Reporters Mary Merchant of the Afro-American and William Wyant of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch questioned him on the weekly AFL-CIO public affairs program over the Mutual radio network.

VISITING ISRAELI dignitaries were welcomed to AFL-CIO headquarters by federation officials. From left, Rudolph Faupl of the Machinists, U. S. worker delegate to the Intl. Labor Organization; Israeli Labor Attache Amos Eiran; AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Sullivan; Labor Minister Yigal Allon of Israel; and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Paul Jennings. Also present were Federation Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge, Lane Kirkland, executive assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, and Ernest Lee of the federation's Dept. of Intl. Affairs.

Kenin Conveys Greetings:

New Labor College Dedicated by ORIT

Cuernavaca, Mexico—The most powerful weapons in the effort to achieve genuine social justice are truth and knowledge, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Herman D. Kenin declared at dedication exercises for the new American Institute for Trade Union Studies.

"To this end our joint efforts and this institute are dedicated," he said. "This, in effect, is what this institute will give to its graduates.

"Freedom—to organize and direct the unions in their countries. Freedom—from outside influence and control, by assuring that they will have the knowledge to make their own decisions. Freeedom—to win for themselves the benefits of higher wages and working conditions. Freedom—to defend the sacred rights of trade union liberties. Freedom—in sum, to fight for and preserve freedom."

Kenin, president of the Musicians, represented AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at the opening ceremonies of the labor college. The institution was established by the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), western hemisphere arm of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and is designed to train union teachers who, upon returning to their own lands, will conduct or participate in labor education programs.

The trainees, from free labor organizations throughout Latin America and the Caribbean area, will receive intensive instruction in the technical, cultural, economic, political and social development of democratic trade unions in particular, and the American worker in general.

ICFTU Gave $180,000

The ICFTU's Intl. Solidarity Fund, of which Meany is chairman, gave $180,000 toward construction of the institute. The American Institute for Free Labor Development and the national unions and centers of many nations in the Americas assisted with technical aid, and most of the land was contributed by Gov. Emilio Riva Palacio of the State of Morales, who was one of the dedication speakers.

Kenin, bringing greetings from Meany and the members of the AFL-CIO, hailed the "solidarity, mutual understanding and co-ordination that brought forth this college."

"Because we all know," he added, "that just as it will benefit the people of the developing nations of our continent by giving them the arms with which to fight in that eternal revolution, the revolution for social justice, in the same way it will benefit the workers of the North American continent."

Morris Paladino, assistant director of the institute and former AIFLD staff member, reviewed the development of the hemisphere-wide labor education program and declared that the institute "will be an enduring reminder to our friends—and, yes, our enemies—that the democratic trade union movement is a permanent and indestructible force in today's society."

Other speakers included ORIT Sec.-Gen. Arturo Jauregui; Guillermo Hori Rovaina, representing Pres. Gustavo Diaz Ordaz of Mexico; the institute director, Prof. Bernardo Ibanez; Fidel Velazquez, secretary-general of the Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM) and ICFTU vice president, and Luis Garcia, architect and builder of the institute.

Anti-Poverty Crusade To Step Up Program

The Citizens' Crusade Against Poverty has announced it is speeding up planned programs so the energies and talents of the poor, instead of being forced to explode in futile frustration, can be channeled into constructive activities to help end poverty.

Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, chairman of CCAP, said the group's officers reviewed and analyzed the Crusade's April 13-14 conference which ended in disarray and are convinced of the need for "an even more vigorous" program.

"All of us regret the discourtesy that a small group of dissidents displayed toward Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity," Reuther said.

"We also regret that it was not possible to proceed to an orderly conclusion of the conference and consideration of the thoughtful proposals that the vast majority of the delegates had labored so hard to formulate in the forum sessions."

Reuther said the policy recommendations have been forwarded to the members of CCAP's national committee.

On the opening day of the conference, Reuther described three CCAP projects in a keynote address. The newest will be a southern rural action project which will operate initially in 22 counties in the South and expand into the Southwest. Another project almost ready to move to the action stage involves two centers which will train 1,000 persons in the next three years to help the poor organize. A going project aims to expand CCAP's liaison with 4,000 grass roots groups to 10,000 by mid-summer.

During the day and well into the evening, the 1,000 delegates broke up into smaller groups to attend forums and panel sessions. The delegates represented 125 organizations voluntarily associated in CCAP and the ghetto areas of cities like New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Washington, D.C.

Shriver Heckled

When Shriver spoke at a luncheon on the final day, he was heckled and harassed by a small group of dissidents. Order could not be restored to act on recommendations and conference leaders adjourned the meeting.

"We are embarrassed but not discouraged," commented Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, stated clerk of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and a CCAP vice chairman. "This is a crisis," Dr. Blake told a press conference later. "It shows millions of people are awfully tired at the talk of doing away with poverty and not seeing any jobs."

Reuther, whose UAW said it would stick by its $1 million pledge to the Citizens' Crusade, said the conference showed the need for a "great expansion" in the war on poverty. He added:

"If we are to successfully wage war against poverty, we must demonstrate the courage and the will to cut through governmental red tape, remove bureaucratic roadblocks and overcome the resistance of the entrenched political power structure at the local level."

Freedom Role ICFTU Theme On May Day

Brussels, Belgium—The organized workers of the newly-independent countries can play their full role in nation-building "only as free men, through their own independent efforts," the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions declared in its May Day Manifesto.

"The ICFTU pledges itself anew to continue its aid to the young labor movements of the developing countries—aid in training leaders, in organizing, in promoting socially-useful projects of all kinds and in resisting attacks on their freedom and independence," the statement said.

"As in the past, the ICFTU stands ready to uphold the workers' rights to form, join and run trade unions of their own choice. And, as always, we will defend those rights no matter by whom they are threatened."

The ICFTU sent greetings to workers everywhere on "May Day, the workers' own holiday, the day when we remember the pioneers who led us to past victories, the day when we look to the future and prepare for the struggles still to come."

The manifesto noted that in many nations, "thanks to the unstinting efforts" of free labor, the past year has seen "steady progress in winning for the workers steady employment, more leisure time and a fairer share of the wealth they produce."

Builders Urged To Meet Needs Of Disabled

A veteran union lobbyist who can still climb stairs, walk through revolving doors and squeeze into a telephone booth is carrying the torch for hundreds of thousands of people who can't.

They include men, women and children dependent on wheelchairs, leg braces and crutches, persons with heart ailments and other handicaps.

Walter Mason, legislative director of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., feels strongly that the handicapped person should have the same right as anyone else "to vote, to worship, to get an education, to watch a ball game, to browse around the public library, to get to his office or to his factory workbench."

Mason is a member of the executive committee of the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped and helped draft specifications for making buildings more functional for the handicapped.

Most of the standards are common sense items—such as at least one ground-level entrance to a building or at least a non-slip surfaced ramp, doors wide enough to admit a wheelchair and similar features.

Mason notes: "There are no features which will cause problems of design in new construction, and no features which cannot be adapted in existing construction."

He points out that many of the recommendations benefit the general public as well as the handicapped "for they permit use of the facilities with greater ease and comfort by everyone."

States Cooperate

A number of states have enacted legislation requiring all new buildings constructed with public funds to conform to these specifications, Mason notes, and many communities have amended their building codes.

He holds out the hope that "the day will come in the not too distant future when every building and facility will be usable by everyone."

Making buildings accessible to the handicapped, Mason stresses, would open up new employment opportunities for many whose abilities are now going to waste. "The economic potential is enormous," he says.

1965 Volume Sets Records For ULLICO

Chicago—The Union Labor Life Insurance Co. reported its biggest year, with 1965 income, insurance volume, assets and payments to policyholders and beneficiaries setting new records.

ULLICO's annual stockholders' meeting heard Pres. Edmund P. Tobin report:

- Income was up 13 percent to more than $101 million, more than twice what it was five years ago. Assets rose to $59.6 million, compared with $38.5 million in 1960.
- Payments to policyholders and beneficiaries totaled $91.4 million last year, compared with $45.4 million four years earlier.
- Total life insurance in force rose to $1.656 billion, up $560 million in the five-year period.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, who spoke at a luncheon following the meeting, praised the "astounding achievements" of the company during its 39-year history.

The meeting was welcomed to Chicago by Pres. William A. Lee of the city's AFL-CIO Council, who noted that it was the first time a ULLICO annual meeting had been held in a city beyond the eastern seaboard.

REPRESENTING AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at the dedication of the new American Institute for Trade Union Studies recently opened by the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers in Cuernavaca, Mexico, was Vice Pres. Herman D. Kenin (speaking), president of the Musicians. ORIT Sec.-Gen. Arturo Jauregui is at the left, with Sec. Gen. Juan Jose Osorio of the Inter-American Federation of Entertainment Unions beside him. At right is Morris Palodino, assistant director of the institute.

Henning Hits Misinformation:

'Blackout' Assailed On Apprentice Gains

New York—Construction unions and employers here were urged to establish an apprenticeship information center to clear away "the tragedy of misinformation prevailing about equality of opportunity for minority groups." The recommendation was made by Under Secretary of Labor John F. Henning at a conference held by the Building & Construction Trades Council and the Joint Industry Board.

Henning asserted that construction labor has been "maligned, misrepresented and exposed to unjustified attack" because its record of achievement in opening up training and employment opportunity to minority groups "is totally unknown to the nation."

Noting that 1,776 non-white journeymen and 1,140 non-white apprentices have been absorbed in the industry here since March 1965, he characterized the lack of information about this record as "one of the great tragedies in the nation."

"I say you should move out in front, now," Henning told employers and union officers. He suggested that an apprenticeship information center would help carry the story to civil rights groups and the public.

Henning said 14 major cities throughout the nation now have apprenticeship information centers that "take the veil of mystery" away from training and employment opportunity for members of minority groups. They have proved successful, he said, because they work closely with unions, employers and civil rights organizations.

He cited Labor Dept. statistics showing that the national jobless rate for Negroes is about twice that for whites, and noted that the unemployment rate in the construction industry today is nearly as high. Employers at the conference estimated that about 80,000 workers in the industry are presently without work in New York City alone.

Raymond Murphy, Jr., director of the Workers Defense League apprenticeship program, told the group his organization was "gratified" with the progress made in the direction of securing construction jobs for non-whites during the past two years.

"We seek just rights in the area of apprenticeship training and job opportunity for people from minority groups who are qualified," he declared, "and we feel that your employer and union leaders have made important contributions toward this end."

Glass Bottle Union Turns Back Raid

Defiance, O.—A raid by the ousted Teamsters on Local 51 of the Glass Bottle Blowers was frustrated when the AFL-CIO union won a runoff election at the Johns-Manville plant here. The National Labor Relations Board announced this tally: GBBA 308, Teamsters 212.

The NLRB set aside a previous election because of unfair tactics by the raiders, who started their campaign while Local 51 was on strike. The drive in support of the GBBA had the aid of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization and numerous affiliated unions in Toledo and northwest Ohio, Regional Dir. Jesse Gallagher said.

Contract Talks Pressed With N.Y. Dailies

New York—The newspaper unions stepped up their bargaining efforts here in an attempt to reach agreement with three merging newspapers by an Apr. 25 deadline.

The unions are seeking full agreement before that date with the new World Journal Tribune, Inc., formed to publish the morning Herald Tribune, afternoon World Journal and Sunday World Journal Tribune. These would succeed the current separately published lineup of the morning Herald Tribune, the Journal American and the World-Telegram & Sun in the afternoon and the Herald Tribune and the Journal American on Sunday.

In Washington, the Justice Dept. said that, because of the financial losses suffered by the three papers in recent years, it would not attempt to block the merger.

Union spokesmen said prospects for agreement on contracts before the deadline appeared hopeless.

Managers of the new joint enterprise indicated that about 2,000 of the present 5,700 employes of the three papers will lose their jobs. Several unions said their members will not report for work on the target date unless full agreement is reached in advance on contract terms acceptable to both retained and displaced workers.

Mailers Local 6, a Typographical Union affiliate, filed an unfair labor practice charge with the National Labor Relations Board after unsuccessful talks with the publishers and urged the board to seek an injunction to halt the merger.

with room and board, any medical expenses, and necessary clothing and equipment.

They received both classroom and practical instruction from skilled instructors with specialized experience, were trained in seamanship, shipboard safety practices and survival techniques, and were familiarized with union rules and procedures so they finished up all ready to go to work.

The training qualified them for entry ratings in any of the three main shipboard work areas—ordinary seaman, wiper in the engineroom, or utility messman.

Union Message

SIU Pres. Paul Hall and Pres. Miles C. Stanley of the West Virginia AFL-CIO, who also is a special assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for anti-poverty activities, spoke at the commencement exercises.

Hall emphasized that going to sea "is an opportunity to enter the best profession of all—professional seafaring," and told the graduates that "I want you to conduct yourself accordingly." The training project will be maintained, he said, so long as there are job prospects for those who complete it.

Anthony Goncalves, administrator of the school, and Charles D. G. Stansbury, the training director, also spoke briefly.

The graduates came from nine different West Virginia communities. They range in age from 17 to 19, and were recruited through the 13 AFL-CIO local central labor bodies and the State AFL-CIO. Recruiting is still going on, and prospects can apply at the same offices. The only requirement is that they not be in school and that they can qualify physically.

The Lundeberg school is named in memory of Harry Lundeberg, SIU founder and first president, who was a pioneer in the development of manpower training programs for the merchant marine during World War II.

It is maintained by steamship companies under their contracts with the SIU, and in addition to basic training for newcomers to the maritime industry offers upgrading courses for all other types of unlicensed jobs in the deck, engine and steward departments.

It recently established a joint training program wtih the Marine Engineers District 2 to qualify unlicensed personnel for licensed engineers' jobs.

New Cabinet Post Urged For Consumer Affairs

The AFL-CIO reiterated its support for a Cabinet-level Dept. of Consumers, while praising the "beginning" that has been made by the Johnson Administration in strengthening consumer representation in government.

Legislative Rep. James F. Doherty testified before a House Government Operations subcommittee in support of the objectives of a bill introduced by Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal (D-N.Y.). He noted that as far back as 1960, the AFL-CIO had endorsed a similar measure by the late Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.).

Since then, Doherty noted, considerable progress has been made through appointment of a special assistant to the President for consumer affairs, creation of the inter-agency President's Committee on Consumer Interests, and the Consumer Advisory Council, made up of non-government representatives.

While pleased with the start, Doherty said, labor remains "very conscious of the need for a stronger base for consumer representation than is possible through the Executive Order route." It is time, he said, "that such representation should formally be organized and firmly established by statute."

He noted that there may be some problems over provisions of the Rosenthal bill shifting units of other departments to the proposed new department.

"In our view," he commented, "actual administrative shifts of present operating programs are not essential . . . although we would welcome any moves to the new department that would strengthen existing programs. . . . Creation of strengthened consumer machinery should not be delayed by debate over what units should be incorporated into the department."

The proposed department, he urged, should be "a focal point for stimulating attention to the consumer interest in other government agencies" whose programs affect credit, housing, prices, safety legislation, fraud and similar matters.

"We would expect also that a strong consumer agency would be able to develop new legislative proposals," Doherty said, noting that much of the consumer legislation in recent years has originated in Congress rather than the executive branch.

"A strong consumer agency in the executive would enable that branch of government to turn in a more effective performance on proposals for consumer interest legislation," he declared.

Depends on Whose Pay Is Being 'Guideposted'

If pay raises for company presidents follow any guideposts it's not the 3.2 percent ceiling advocated by the Council of Economic Advisers, a sampling of company reports indicates.

A preliminary survey by Business Week magazine showed that 40 percent of company presidents got raises last year—averaging 9 percent.

Among the more generous companies—for their executives—were Westinghouse Electric Corp. and Burlington Industries, Inc. Westinghouse Pres. D. C. Burnham had his pay boosted from $198,055 to $223,390. His "additional compensation," such as bonuses, took an even bigger jump—from $50,000 to $90,000. Burlington Industries, the giant textile chain which has been engaged in a running battle against union organization, gave Pres. Charles F. Myers, Jr., a raise from $150,000 to $173,750 a year and a $3,500 boost in added compensation to $12,613.

Unions Urged To Back Youth Jobs Program

A plea for help in finding summer jobs for nearly 2 million young men and women 16 through 21 years old has been issued by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in support of Pres. Johnson's 1966 Youth Opportunity Campaign.

"Hire at least one youngster this summer above and beyond your normal staff needs if possible," Meany urged in a letter to national and international union presidents. "Preference should be given to those most in need.

"Try to avoid letting normal trade union regulations inadvertently present obstacles to the employment of young people in summer work-experience jobs.

"Contact your local unions to urge their support."

Meany recalled that the AFL-CIO supported the program last year, and said that its aid had been pledged to the President for 1966. About half the summer job-hunters will be seeking to start their careers, he observed, and many of the others will need summer employment if they are to continue school.

"This Youth Opportunity Campaign demands the wholehearted support of organized labor," he wrote. "Both our young people and our nation will benefit from what you do."

Senate Again Defeats Dirksen Amendment

could muster was a 57-39 vote, well shy of the needed two-thirds.

It was after this defeat, in which labor again played a key role, that the GOP leader launched his filibusters which kept the Senate from considering the House-passed bill to repeal Section 14(b) of Taft-Hartley.

The two issues, Meany told the AFL-CIO convention last December, were "solidly and inescapably intertwined."

Pressure Drive

The drive for the Dirksen amendment took on a high professional gloss when the West Coast public relations firm of Whittaker & Baxter was hired to develop "grass roots" pressure. The firm had handled a multi-million dollar campaign for the American Medical Association against Pres. Truman's original health insurance plan and had been involved in some of California's biggest political campaigns.

So-called "citizens committees" were set up in each state, high-paid lobbyists with both Democratic and Republican connections were hired. But the ground-swell for the amendment never got much further than editorials in a number of small town newspapers.

Up until the eve of the vote, Dirksen searched for additional supporters by modifying his amendment to take account of some of the criticisms. He even accepted a proposal he had once firmly turned down. He agreed to require that a legislature be reapportioned on a one man, one vote basis before it could submit to referendum an apportionment plan departing from those principles. Dirksen explained his change of heart by noting that some 37 legislatures are already reapportioned and therefore the requirement would have little effect.

Ironically the giant of the Senate in rallying opposition to the Dirksen amendment was his Illinois colleague—Democrat Paul H. Douglas. Over the past three years, on and off the Senate floor, in informal conversations with key opinion leaders and in public speeches and debate, Douglas warned against turning the clock back to the era when a small minority of voters elected most legislators in nearly every state.

His key lieutenants were Wisconsin's Sen. William Proxmire (D) and Maryland's Sen. Joseph D. Tydings (D).

Dirksen, who showed sparks of anger during the debate, vowed that "this issue will not fade away . . . as long as I am in the Senate."

But Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.), who voted for the Dirksen amendment but did not actively push for it, had a different view.

"This will be the end of it," Mansfield told newsmen. "Too many states have been reapportioned already."

INTERNATIONAL TRADE SECRETARIAT activities were discussed at a meeting in AFL-CIO headquarters of AFL-CIO affiliates which take part in the free world labor movement. On the platform are, from left, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison, chairman of the Intl. Affairs Committee; AFL-CIO Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge, president of the Retail Clarks and of the Intl. Federation of Clerical, Commercial & Technical Employes, who presided; Dir. Jay Lovestone of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, and Robert Goss, who recently resigned as assistant secretary-general of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) in charge of organizing.

Rollcall Vote in Senate On Dirksen Amendment

The proposed constitutional amendment to overturn the Supreme Court's one man, one vote ruling failed to receive the necessary two-thirds vote and was rejected by the Senate on April 20.

Labor strongly opposed the amendment, sponsored by Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R-Ill.). Thirty-eight senators backed labor's position by voting against the Dirksen amendment. Fifty-five opposed one man, one vote apportionment by voting for the Dirksen amendment.

1 Man, 1 Vote Debate Puts Issue in Focus

The issues involved in the Dirksen amendment came into sharp focus during the final hours of the Senate debate.

To Sen. Frank J. Lausche, the conservative Democrat from Ohio, one man, one vote apportionment of legislatures would mean "the labor leaders, the political bosses, and others unmindful of the need of balancing budgets will be in control."

He warned: "Destroy the influence of the conservative farmer and, in my judgment, there will be destroyed good government."

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) retorted that supporters of the Dirksen amendment "want to perpetuate rotten borough government in which a small group of people elect a majority of the legislators and narrow interests control those legislators."

Controlling the minority-elected legislators, Douglas charged, were "the big private utility corporations and the big corporate interests which did not want labor organized and did not want protective legislation for labor. They were the groups which wanted to evade and avoid the paying of their just share of taxation. . . . These are the forces operating through Whittaker & Baxter. . . ."

It was Dirksen, himself, who linked reapportionment to the 14(b) repeal fight. Referring to labor's effort to repeal the "right-to-work" provision of the Taft-Hartley Act, the Senate Republican leader declared:

"We stopped it, and we will stop it again."

The Senate earlier had approved the reorganization, which now takes effect. The director of the service, Roger Wilkins, becomes an assistant attorney general. He is the nephew of Roy Wilkins, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Unions Praised

The merchant marine report adopted by the House committee praised the role of maritime unions in warning the nation and Congress of the hazards of ships transferred to foreign registry to escape U.S. standards and regulation.

The National Maritime Union, in congressional testimony given months before the Yarmouth Castle disaster, had specifically termed that ship a "floating firetrap."

Key recommendations of the committee report were:

- "That all future passenger ships be constructed of fireproof, fire-resisting and fire-retardent materials.
- "That all passenger ships—upon transfer of registry—be required to comply with the same standards as new ships.
- "That so-called international escape clauses be eliminated to prevent unscrupulous operators and promoters from endangering the lives of an unaware public with substandard, outmoded ships. . . . These ships should be forced to comply with certain safety requirements, such as the installation of automatic sprinkler systems.
- "That unless these mandatory provisions are adopted, the sub-standard ships should be denied clearance carrying passengers from U.S. ports."

The report also sharply rebuked the Defense Dept. for a "shocking admission" that U.S. defense plans include the use of such substandard foreign-flag ships as the Yarmouth Castle in time of emergency.

Just three months before the Yarmouth Castle disaster, the report noted, government witnesses had termed such ships "a significant asset in Dept. of Defense planning to satisfy emergency sealift requirements."

At the Senate Commerce Committee hearings, Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) declared that the Yarmouth Castle disaster and the recent fire on the Viking Princess "have finally awakened this nation to the fact that all is not well with many of today's passenger ships."

While U.S. vessels built since 1936 are required to have fireproof interiors and paint, foreign-made ships are under much laxer international requirements.

Johnson Picks Ruttenberg for Labor Post

Pres. Johnson has nominated Stanley Ruttenberg to a new post of assistant secretary of labor for manpower.

Ruttenberg, former AFL-CIO research director, is currently Labor Dept. manpower administrator. "In this capacity," the White House announcement said, "he coordinated a wide range of strategic manpower programs which are proving highly beneficial."

Ruttenberg's appointment, subject to confirmation by the Senate, carries with it the chairmanship of the President's Committee on Manpower.

The assistant secretaryship which Ruttenberg will fill is a redesigned post, previously designated as assistant secretary of labor for policy planning and research. Daniel P. Moynihan had filled the spot until his resignation last year.

Ruttenberg, 49, joined the staff of the former CIO in 1938 and became its research director in 1948. He was the AFL-CIO's first research director, leaving in 1962 to become special assistant to the secretary of labor. He was named manpower administrator last year.

Rent Aid Funds Pass Senate Test

The Administration won a big victory by a tiny one-vote margin as the Senate rebuffed its Appropriations Committee and voted $12 million to start the rent supplement program.

Although the money was a relatively small item in a multi-billion appropriation bill, the political stakes were high. In the Senate, as in an earlier House vote, a conservative coalition tried to scuttle a Great Society program by denying it funds—and almost succeeded.

The Senate vote was 46-45. The House vote a month ago to keep the rent money in the bill was 198-190.

Since there is no conflict between the two houses on the amount, final approval is assured. The government can begin at least a small-scale attempt to ease the pressure on public housing by paying part of a poor family's rent in apartments built by non-profit groups.

Pres. Johnson early this year asked Congress for an "urgently needed" $30 million appropriation to get the program going. The money had been authorized by Congress last year, but never appropriated.

Amount Reduced

The amount was reduced to $12 million by the House Appropriations Committee in a supplemental bill providing funds for various agencies for the remainder of this fiscal year.

Despite this heavy cut and earlier concessions to ease conservative fears about the program, Republicans launched an attack on the measure as "inflationary" and a symbol of programs which should be shelved because of the Viet Nam war.

The attack was renewed when the bill reached the Senate, and the Administration lost the first skirmish in the Appropriations Committee. Eight Democrats, mostly from the South, joined seven Republicans to approve an amendment deleting the rent funds. Ten Democrats and two Republicans backed the Administration.

On the key Senate floor vote, 41 Democrats and five Republicans joined to save the rent subsidy money; 26 Republicans and 19 Democrats voted to deny the funds.

Earlier an attempt by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) to raise the rent appropriation to $20 million was beaten, 69-18.

The Administration had an easier time beating back an effort by Senate Republican Leader Everett

Detroit — There's no 3.2 percent "guidepost" for top executives of the Ford Motor Co., a company report revealed.

The firm said it paid out $52.3 million in bonuses to executives during 1965—up 34 percent from the previous year.

Top moneymaker was Henry Ford II, the board chairman. His salary and bonus added up to $650,000 — a raise of $110,000 from the year before.

In addition to the bonuses, 286 persons received stock options for 309,750 shares of stock. And the company even loaned one of its vice presidents $237,549 to buy stock under the option plan.

House Acts to Strengthen Fair Employment Statute

Bill Draws Bipartisan Backing

A labor-supported bill to strengthen fair employment guarantees sailed through the House, 299-94, with bipartisan support.

Its two main provisions would:

● Give the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission power to issue orders to stop discrimination in hiring, promotion and pay practices. The orders could be enforced and reviewed through federal appellate courts in the same manner as orders by the National Labor Relations Board and several other administrative agencies.

● Extend the ban on job discrimination to employers of eight or more workers. Under present law, employers with 100 workers are covered, with the figure scheduled to drop to 75 this July 2, to 50 the following year and, finally, to 25. The House-passed bill would reduce the figure to 50 on July 2 and to eight one year later. Establishments employing an estimated 37 million workers would be covered at that stage.

Most state fair employment commissions now have enforcement powers comparable to those in the House bill and the AFL-CIO—in testimony on previous bills as well as the new legislation —had repeatedly urged that the federal commission be given "teeth" to enforce its orders.

The compromise measure included as Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act gave the commission a conciliation and investigation mission, but required it to bring suit in federal district court to halt the discrimination.

House Labor Committee Chairman Adam C. Powell (D-N.Y.) led the fight for the bill, which his committee had approved last year. He was actively joined in the large-

Six Awarded Scholarships By AFL-CIO

Six new high school graduates, three boys and three girls, have been awarded four-year scholarships under the AFL-CIO College Merit Scholarship program.

This is the eighth year of the program and brings the number of winners to 48.

Each scholarship provides up to $6,000 in financial assistance for study at the college of the student's choice.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has notified the following winners of their selection:

Ivy Thomas, Flint, Mich.; William W. Boyd, Mobile, Ala.; William K. Tomhave, Austin, Minn.; William E. Wainer, Brunswick, Me.; Julia G. Webb, Jackson, Miss., and Belinda Y. Wong, Aiea, Hawaii.

The winners are chosen on the basis of competitive tests given annually by the non-profit National Merit Scholarship Corp., their records in high school and an evaluation of their ability by their high school teachers.

The United States has been divided into three zones for administrative purposes, and two winners are named in each area. The only restriction is that at least three of the scholarships go to students whose father or mother belongs to an AFL-CIO union.

Speaking for 50 Million:

Consumer Coalition Urged to Win Laws

The first national assembly in behalf of 50 million American consumers has called for enactment of a broad package of federal protective legislation as well as the establishment of a permanent consumer lobby.

Consumer Assembly '66, sponsored by 32 national organizations, including the AFL-CIO, took its case directly to congressmen and senators on Capitol Hill after hearing national leaders give a lengthy indictment of abuses which cost Americans millions of dollars yearly and a heavy toll of lives.

Panelists and speakers in the three-day meeting described the pressing need for legislation in packaging, lending, auto safety, pre-testing of drugs and cosmetics, water and air pollution, as well as the need for lower-cost medical care and utility rates.

All agreed that enforceable legislation would come only through a greater effort by a coalition of organizations, such as had gathered for the assembly.

In an address to the delegates, Mrs. Esther Peterson, special assistant to Pres. Johnson for consumer affairs, proposed the creation of a national federation of organizations to promote the welfare of the American consumer.

"The power of the consumer is now split into 197 million parts," she said. "All of the special interest groups are very well organized to exert their influence loudly and clearly in the nation's capitol. In contrast, the consumer interest is so widely diversified and disorgan-

1 Man, 1 Vote Rule Spurs Growth of State, County

By David L. Perlman

One man, one vote reapportionment of state legislatures was credited with a major assist in the "phenomenal growth" reported by the State, County & Municipal Employes at its 16th convention.

AFSCME Pres. Jerry Wurf told the nearly 1,300 delegates that reapportioned legislatures have passed laws giving public employes collective bargaining rights that union members 10 years ago "wouldn't have dreamed were possible."

Today, he said, the union's locals are developing genuine "trade union relationships" with their employers and no longer have to "beg" city councils and state legislatures "for another nickel an hour or another holiday." Membership, Wurf said, has jumped 40,000 in two years to over 290,000.

He gave credit also to the example set by the federal government, whose union recognition policy has been copied by many local governments. Despite shortcomings, he said, the executive order issued by

Hearing Slated In Machinists' Airline Dispute

A special emergency board named by Pres. Johnson to mediate a contract dispute between the Machinists and five airlines will hold its first formal hearing May 6.

The meeting, in Washington, will be open to the public, as will successive hearings on May 7, 12 and 13, the board decided. Members are Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), chairman; Richard Neustadt, associate dean of the Harvard Graduate School of Public Administration; and David Ginsburg, Washington lawyer.

The IAM was preparing to call 34,000 mechanics and other ground personnel out on strike April 23 when Johnson blocked action for at least 60 days under Railroad Labor Act procedures by naming the three neutral arbiters to serve with union and management representatives in holding hearings and recommending a settlement of the dispute.

The board will report back to the President within 30 days and strike action is banned for another 30 days.

The union started joint negotiations six months ago—the first such meetings of the kind—with representatives of Eastern, National, Northwest, Trans World and United airlines. Failing to agree, the parties asked the help of the National Mediation Board in February, again without success.

The union seeks major contract improvements from the lines in such areas as wages, pensions, vacations and insurance, IAM Vice Pres. Joseph W. Ramsey said.

IAM Local Donates Bus To School for Retarded

Kansas City, Mo. — Machinists Local 314 will donate a new 66-passenger bus to the Marshall, Mo., School & Hospital for Retarded Children. The bus was acquired through saving stamps donated by union members and their friends over a five-year period.

HOUSING CRISIS faces the United States, Boris Shishkin warned at Senate hearings on the Administration's Demonstration Cities legislation. Shishkin, secretary of the AFL-CIO Housing Committee, was accompanied by Alexander Bookstaver (right), the federation's investment director.

Crisis in Nation's Cities Tied to Lag in Housing

The AFL-CIO warned of a growing "housing crisis" in the United States and urged Congress "to come to grips with the enormous, urgent and deep-seated problems confronting our nation's cities."

Boris Shishkin, secretary of the AFL-CIO Housing Committee, said labor is "strongly in accord" with the goals of the Administration's Demonstration Cities bill, but considers it "unduly modest" in scope. The bill calls for grants to selected cities to demonstrate how entire neighborhoods can be revitalized through better housing, schools, public transportation and recreation facilities.

Testifying before a Senate Banking subcommittee, Shishkin said "a much greater" effort is needed to meet the needs of an expanding urban population and to rehouse families living in slums.

He urged the subcommittee to keep in mind this "one overriding fact" in considering housing legislation:

"Year after year, federal housing programs have shown greater federal receipts than expenditures. They have cost the taxpayers nothing."

Shishkin noted that both public and private housing starts are below the level of a year ago and "it is clear that the nation's housing needs are not being met."

Praising the coordinated approach of the Demonstration Cities legislation, Shishkin noted:

"Even new housing developments, well-intended and well-built, can deteriorate unless the people living in them have access to jobs, educational opportunities, medical care, recreational facilities and social services."

He urged Congress to approve:

- More generous relocation grants for families dispossessed by slum clearance and assurance of adequate housing before they are compelled to move.
- A step-up in construction of low-rent public housing to at least 125,000 units a year.
- A "new communities" program designed "to accommodate a cross-section of families, both in terms of their income and their racial composition" to relieve congestion of existing cities.
- More funds to plan and develop mass transportation facilities.
- Improved rural housing and community facility programs.
- Maintenance of Davis-Bacon prevailing wage and benefit standards for all housing involving federal financial assistance or mortgage insurance.

Housewright Made Aide to Suffridge

The Retail Clerks announced the appointment of Vice Pres. James T. Housewright, the union's director of organization, as executive assistant to Pres. James A. Suffridge.

Housewright, 44, succeeds Vice Pres. Murray Plopper, who retired after 30 years of union service but will be "on call" for the rest of 1966 in connection with his former assignments. Plopper is 56.

Vice Pres. William A. McGrath took over Housewright's post as director of organization. McGrath, 44, has been organizing director for RCIA's eastern and central divisions.

At Pennsylvania AFL-CIO Parley:

Abel Hits Industry On 'Propaganda'

Pittsburgh—Steelworkers' Pres. I. W. Abel opened the seventh constitutional convention of the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO here with a blast at "propagandists" for industry who have been accusing labor unions of being "too strong and too powerful."

In an apparent answer to recent declarations by R. Conrad Cooper of U.S. Steel Co. and press reports that Steelworkers are "making $10,000 a year," Abel cited official figures of the Internal Revenue Service on earnings in the Pittsburgh area where much of the union's membership is concentrated.

"Last year 101 people had an income of over $200,000 a year and their gross take reported in the press was $95,467,000," he said. "In this area of well-heeled people, 384 persons reported getting over $100,000 a year.

"Contrast that with the 96,014 people who reported incomes of between $6,000 and $7,000 a year and then consider the sad story the figures show—74,608 Allegheny County persons received less than $1,000 a year."

Abel reported on progress of the USWA, explaining internal changes such as the new civil rights program and widened educational and training programs at all levels.

The Steelworkers in the last year issued charters to 315 new locals, which represents about 10 percent of its total number of locals, Abel said, noting that organizing campaigns have added 38,000 to USWA rolls this year.

He reviewed the liberal legislation passed by the 89th Congress and appealed to the Pennsylvania labor movement to redouble efforts at the local level to return liberals to office, increase registration, get out the vote and swell dollar contributions to the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education.

The State AFL-CIO "Good Citizen of the Year Award" was presented to Rev. Frank Ruth, pastor of Reading Reformed Church, who served in the state legislature from 1930 to 1960. He sponsored the first state unemployment compensation bill in the nation under Gov. George Earle in 1936. State AFL-CIO Pres. Harry Boyer noted that his Reading neighbor was a founding member and still holds his card in Cigar Makers Local 402 at Quakertown, Pa.

COPE activity and political action was the main theme of the convention. After extensive debate, the delegates accepted the recommendation of the executive council to make no endorsement in the Pennsylvania Democratic primary contest for governor between State Sen. Robert Casey, Scranton, and Milton Shapp, Philadelphia manufacturer.

Four top officers and all members of the executive council are to be chosen. Opposition appeared against only one incumbent, Executive Vice Pres. Michael Johnson, director of COPE, who was opposed by James Puglin, executive secretary of the Allegheny AFL-CIO Council.

Steelworkers' Head Gets Israeli Award

Pittsburgh—Leaders of 26 international unions were among 1,500 labor, civic and business leaders who saluted Steelworkers' Pres. I. W. Abel at a dinner sponsored by the State of Israel Bonds.

Labor Minister Yigal Allon of Israel praised the union for its support of the new nation and gave Abel a plaque "for advancing the cause of democracy."

Abel said his union has a "profound interest" in democratically-inclined nations and particularly Israel, which has given democracy "a strong foothold in a key area."

3 Unions Strike FEC In New Rules Battle

Conductors, hostlers and trainmen walked out in Miami against the previously-struck Florida East Coast Railway as the Supreme Court heard arguments in Washington that the road has "flagrantly" violated its legal labor contracts by operating with strike breakers.

The new strike began Apr. 24 when the FEC unilaterally put into effect drastic changes in work and pay rules for members of the Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, and the Conductors & Brakemen. About 300 workers called the latest walkout.

Nearly 2,000 members of 11 nonoperating unions have been on strike against the FEC since Jan. 23, 1963, for the same contract improvements that nearly all major U.S. railroads agreed to at that time.

The terms imposed by the FEC, according to BRT Assistant Pres. Ray Moore, are "worse than those that caused some of the great railroad strikes" of the past. All the striking unions have agreed to cooperate until a settlement is reached that is "satisfactory to all," Moore reported.

He said the FEC has been trying to impose the new terms on its employes since 1963 but was halted by court orders until it complied with Railway Labor Act procedures. It completed those procedures by serving notice on all unions and holding mediation sessions with the three that now have struck. Hearings are pending for the other unions.

The striking unions offered to arbitrate their dispute but management refused.

In Supreme Court hearings, attorneys for the Justice Dept. and the railroad unions argued that the rail labor act forbids unilateral changes in labor agreements but the FEC continues to violate its agreements. They asked the court to overturn a 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling permitting the railroad to make any changes it believes "reasonably necessary" to operate during the strike.

In another development, the Railway Labor Executives' Association filed a motion in U.S. District Court in Jacksonville urging appointment of a federal receiver for the FEC—a request made earlier by the city of Miami. The RLEA said the duPont estate and the St. Joe Paper Co., both run by financier Edward Ball, have violated pledges made when Ball got control of the once-bankrupt FEC in 1961.

Beirne Hits Guideposts As 'Economic Nonsense'

A 3.2 percent ceiling on wages is "economic nonsense" and the Communications Workers will resist the effort of the Council of Economic Advisers to "fasten their untested theories on us," CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne told his union's collective bargaining policy committee at a conference in Washington.

"There is nothing in the guidelines or guidepost or ceiling about profits or about prices," Beirne observed. They attempt to impose a limit only on wages, he said, declaring:

"You cannot reduce collective bargaining to a decimal point."

Beirne's speech opened a three-day conference at which delegates from all CWA locals were to draft contract goals on behalf of 400,000 union members.

Beirne declared "there is no conflict of interest between what CWA needs and America's needs." He promised that "what we will bargain for—and achieve—will be good for our members and the nation."

The trade-union concept that the whole nation benefits when workers move to better income levels, greater security, more leisure time has been challenged by "some high-level economists" suddenly "saying it isn't so," the CWA head noted.

"We disagree," Beirne said. "We say they're wrong. We say they are doing a disservice to the President.

"In short, we don't intend to permit the collective bargaining process which has so well served us, and America, to be thrown aside so that some economist can decide in all his wisdom what Ma Bell and other companies should pay us."

Beirne agreed that the Council of Economic Advisers has every right to suggest guidelines. The CWA never has quarreled with the President or his advisers, he said, on their exercise of "what they consider to be their responsibility to the national well-being."

Noting that "runaway inflation" could destroy wage levels "almost overnight," Beirne said the union has no quarrel wtih anyone concerned about inflationary pressures but "an arbitrary 3.2 ceiling on wages to control inflation is bad theory."

Telephone workers need relief from inadequate wages and low pensions and "oppressive overtime practices," he said.

Consumers—On Guard:

Marketplace Filled With Booby-Traps

What are some of the abuses of the marketplace that Consumer Assembly '66 took aim at and seeks corrective legislation for? In the words of the panelists, here is a sampling:

Congresswoman Leonor K. Sullivan, on pre-testing of drugs and cosmetics:

"In writing laws dealing with cosmetics, the men in Congress have been more than just hesitant—they've been downright scared—to do anything which could be construed as interfering with women's inherent right to try to be more beautiful. . . .

"Apparently it is all right to lose your hair and infect your scalp from a poisonous hair dye—or go blind if it gets in your eyes—just so your inherent right to use unsafe hair dyes is not interfered with by any law. . . ."

Ralph Nader, author of "Unsafe at any Speed," on automobile safety:

"The deluxe seat belt is poorly engineered, highly unreliable and ineffective. The motorist is being lured into paying more for a materially more dangerous belt, in terms of opening under accident conditions, than the lower cost, safer standard type belt. . . ."

Robert Knoll, researcher for Consumers Union:

"It doesn't take a million dollar test program smashing dummies into instrument panels to prove that a hard sharp ridge will fracture the human skull or that a heavy open ash tray when hit on an angle could slice into a face or arm or chest. What it does take is subjective reasoning by conscientious men who can change these designs in the early stages."

Alfred L. Moseley, Research Director, Trauma Research Institute, on auto safety:

"The investigation of traffic deaths in the United States is a national disgrace. . . . Vehicle failure may play a role in 60 to 70 percent of the traffic death cases."

On highway safety: "The federal highway administrator has publicly announced that there are designs existing in roadways that subject the motorist to danger. . . . When the design engineers answer to the courts, the quality of our roads will be upgraded."

Sen. Paul H. Douglas, on truth-in-lending:

"I have to report that the money-lending industry's recourse has not only been to make no move whatsoever toward letting the consumer know what he is asked to pay, but has poured even greater resources into its lobbying efforts to defeat the truth-in-lending bill.

"The cost of massive consumer debt is immense. American families annually pay interest and finance charges of at least $22 billion on their personal debts. This means that they pay $9 billion more a year in consumer credit charges than we pay as a nation in interest cost on the entire national debt."

Russell E. Train, President, The Conservation Foundation, on pollution:

"Since the beginning of time the amount of water on earth has been constant. There is no more or no less water available now than ever before. So too is the air supply fixed and constant, a thin layer around the earth. If the battle against pollution is not won, we will pay dearly in terms of loss of health; indeed the human race may well strangle in its own filth. The war on pollution is a matter of life or death."

Nathan S. Paven, former assistant attorney general of Massachusetts, on excessive utility rates:

"To achieve lower rates requires that we, as consumers, concern ourselves not only with the rates themselves, but also with the sources of power; not only with disputes over rates but also with the planning for the expansion of our power supply. We must be prepared to do this before the utility commissions and in the courts, if necessary."

KEYNOTE SPEAKER to Consumer Assembly '66, Mrs. Esther Peterson, special assistant to Pres. Johnson for consumer affairs, greets two representatives of the 32 organizations which met to press for enactment of national consumer legislation. At left is Dr. Colston E. Warne, president of Consumers Union; at right is Paul Jennings, AFL-CIO vice president and president of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

PROSPECTS for truth-in-packaging legislation during the current Congress are hopeful, Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) told delegates to Consumer Assembly '66 in Washington. The sponsoring organizations, which represent 50 million consumers, seek legislation for marketing protection, auto safety, drug and cosmetics pre-testing, as well as truth-in-lending, whose sponsor Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) is at left. At right is Jerry Voorhis, panel chairman and president of the Cooperative League of the USA. Delegates visited Capitol Hill to press their program.

Consumer Assembly Focuses On Need for Permanent Lobby

ized that it is barely heard above a whisper."

Similarly, Rep. Wright Patman (D-Tex.) urged a permanent action group for consumers and praised the assembly as a "giant step forward in putting organized muscle into consumer action."

Patman, speaking on living costs, pointed out that abuses to the consumer can come from the public sector of the economy as well as from business. The Federal Reserve Board action in raising its interest rates by 37.5 percent, he said, takes millions of dollars out of the pockets of American wage earners and gives them to the bankers.

"Just imagine the outcry if any labor union had demanded a 37.5 percent increase in wages or if an industry hiked its prices 37.5 percent. Under our present monetary system, the money lenders are exempt from most of the rules of society," he declared.

Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) told the panel that there was hope for his truth-in-packaging bill in the current Congress despite the lack of attention it has received during the four years since the 1961 investigation of packaging and labeling practices.

He noted that in a compilation of organizations which support truth-in-packaging, the numbers have risen steadily, insuring its eventual passage, "but the timing depends in part on how clearly Congress hears the message of this assembly."

Sen. Paul A. Douglas (D-Ill.) speaking of truth-in-lending, told the delegates that after six years of work, five years of committee hearings and three Presidential messages specifically endorsing such legislation, the issue should now be law and there should be self-reform in the credit industry.

"The truth-in-lending bill still remains buried within the Committee on Banking & Currency, and even more distressing, self-improvement within the industry in order to protect consumers from the shady devices of unethical lenders has failed completely to materialize," he said.

In a panel devoted to the question of auto safety, delegates were told that the Automobile Manufacturers Association and General Motors had declined to participate.

The panelists, who included Ralph Nader, author of "Unsafe at any Speed," condemned the auto industry for its secrecy in matters of safety engineering and its refusal to cooperate in research and crash tests.

Nader told the panel that of the three components involved, education of drivers is a long-range program that must be improved; the betterment of highways is also a long-term necessity, but the automobile can be made more "fail-safe" with the next model.

Rep. James A. Mackay (D-Ga.) called for a Federal Automobile Administration which would be charged with enforcing mandatory standards for manufacturers and would work with national leadership and the states in automotive safety research.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Paul Jennings, president of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, told the assembly that the federation is following a similar tactic by bringing together eight unions that have contract relations with GE and Westinghouse. Jennings assured the consumers that the wage increases being sought by the unions would not raise the price of a single product made by either company.

Before departing for an afternoon visit with congressmen and senators, the delegates were addressed by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, who urged them to make their efforts on Capitol Hill something more than "a one day excursion." He called on them to follow-up back home in their states on a year-round basis.

"Keep letting your congressman and senator know," Biemiller stressed.

Participating organizations in the assembly were labor unions, cooperatives, farmers groups, women's clubs, senior citizens, credit unions, civil rights groups, veterans and religious organizations.

Johnson Reconstitutes Labor Advisory Panel

The President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy—substantially reconstituted in management and public members—will meet May 4 and 5 to discuss maintenance of "a stable and healthy economy," the White House announced.

Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel was named as a new member of the seven-man labor contingent. Others, all holdovers, include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers, Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks and Pres. W. A. Boyle of the unaffiliated Mine Workers.

Four new management representatives were named: Pres. Donald C. Burnham of Westinghouse Electric Corp., Board Chairman Edgar F. Kaiser of Kaiser Steel Corp., Goodrich Co. Pres. J. Ward Keener and Campbell Soup Co. Pres. W. B. Murphy. Holdover management spokesmen are three board chairmen: Henry Ford II of Ford Motors Co., Stuart T. Saunders of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Thomas J. Watson, Jr., of Intl. Business Machines Corp.

Of the five original public members only one remains, George W. Taylor of the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce. New members are University of Oregon Pres. Arthur S. Flemming, University of Minnesota Pres. Owen M. Wilson, Law School Dean Page Keeton of the University of Texas, Pres. Howard W. Johnson of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The labor-management advisory group was created in 1961 by the late Pres. John F. Kennedy, with the secretaries of labor and commerce alternating as chairmen each year. It has not met, however, in more than two years.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz is chairman for the current year, with Commerce Sec. John T. Connor as vice chairman.

RCIA Names Director Of Community Relations

Appointment of Peter P. Voeller of Madison, Wis., as community relations director of the Retail Clerks was announced by Pres. James A. Suffridge. Voeller has been secretary-treasurer of Local 1401 since 1959.

Rail Shopcrafts Agree On Joint Contract Goals

Chicago—All railroad shopcraft unions on May 17 will simultaneously serve carrier managements across the country with identical notices for wage and rule improvements, including a 20 percent pay increase.

The executive council of the AFL-CIO Railroad Employes Dept. agreed at a meeting here to inaugurate a joint national movement to revise and supplement existing agreements through notices covering wage increases, shift differentials, a cost-of-living adjustment, improved overtime, vacation and holiday rules, pay for jury duty, and the establishment of a 30-minute paid lunch period on every shift.

Department members include the Machinists, the Boilermakers, the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the Sheet Metal Workers, the Railway Carmen and the Firemen & Oilers.

Highlights of the joint bargaining program include:

- An increase of 20 percent in all existing rates of pay and differentials, effective next Jan. 1.
- Cost-of-living adjustments effective April 1, 1967, and every three months thereafter amounting to a cent an hour for each three-tenths of a point change in the Consumer Price Index for the months of March, June, September and December above the base index figure for December 1966.
- Double time payment for overtime now compensated for at the rate of time-and-one-half and triple time where the current rules call for double time.
- Differentials of 18 cents an hour for shifts starting between noon and 5 p.m. and 25 cents for those starting between 5 p.m. and 6 a.m.
- Annual paid vacations ranging from 10 consecutive workdays to 25 consecutive workdays depending on length of service.
- The addition of one paid holiday to bring the total to nine.
- A paid 30-minute lunch period within each eight-hour tour of duty.

Among the international officers attending the executive council session here were IAM Vice Pres. Joseph Ramsey, Sheet Metal Workers Vice Pres. J. W. O'Brien, IBEW Vice Pres. Thomas Ramsey, Boilermakers Pres. Russell K. Berg and Vice Pres. Edward H. Wolf, Carmen Pres. A. J. Bernhardt, and Firemen & Oilers Pres. William E. Fredenberger. Department Pres. Michael Fox presided.

Court Extends Ban on Strike By Firemen

U.S. District Judge Alexander Holtzoff extended to May 11 a temporary order restraining the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen from striking and at the request of both sides postponed a hearing from Apr. 27 to May 4 on rail management's petition to make the order permanent.

At the same time, Judge Holtzoff dismissed as "insufficient" a motion by the union to transfer the case to another court.

The motion was based on an affidavit by BLF&E Pres. H. E. Gilbert that the judge has a "personal bias" against the union and in favor of the railroads. Gilbert cited five unfavorable Holtzoff rulings in the BLF&E's battle to restore some of the 20,000 jobs eliminated by a 1964 award under compulsory arbitration ordered by Congress.

The union struck eight railroads early in April but ended the walkout by court order. The railroads have announced that after the hearing on the union's right to strike they will urge Holtzoff to fine the BLF&E and Gilbert for failing to halt the strike promptly enough.

Ex-Pulp-Sulphite Leader John P. Burke Dies at 82

Fort Edward, N.Y. — Funeral services for John P. Burke, who was president and secretary of the Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers for 48 years until his retirement 15 months ago, were scheduled for Apr. 29 here in St. Joseph's Church.

Burke was 82 when he died at Miami Beach, Fla. He got his first job at 13 in a paper mill and later, while working for the Intl. Paper Co. at Franklin, N.H., helped form the union. He headed the organization from 1917 to 1965.

CLC Marks 10th Year:

Canadian Labor Asks Halt To Strike Bans, Injunctions

By Gervase N. Love

Winnipeg, Man.—A drive to boost union bargaining strength by tearing down some of the bars to strikes and cutting the power of the courts to issue injunctions was launched at the sixth constitutional convention of the Canadian Labor Congress. Some 1,600 delegates, marking the 10th anniversary of the merger that set up the CLC, demanded the right to take a strike vote whenever they want during negotiations and called for amendment of the Industrial Relations & Disputes Act to make technological changes introduced while a contract is in force subject to negotiation, conciliation and the right to strike.

In addition, they sent back for strengthening a proposed resolution denouncing the use of injunctions, which urged affiliates at all levels to use "every legitimate means" to eliminate them and to "strengthen the right to picket."

The right to take a strike vote is now limited to the period beginning seven days after a conciliation board report is filed.

The convention's stand on the right to strike over technological changes had at least some of its roots in the recent report of the Industrial Inquiry Commission on Canadian National Railways "run-throughs," known as the Freedman Report after the chairman, Justice Samuel Freedman of the Manitoba Court of Appeal.

Theory Challenged

The report challenged the "residual rights theory" under which management has refused to bargain about the introduction of automated equipment and made recommendations, not yet put into effect, which would make the changes subject to negotiation and protect employes from unilateral management action. "Run-throughs" referred to the abandonment of CNR stations and the running of trains through them.

The floor discussion of the proposed resolution against injunctions was highlighted by the demand of Robert Bouchard, Steelworkers delegate from Rouyn, Que., that the CLC mount a campaign of civil disobedience against their use in labor disputes.

The fight against injunctions, long a sore point with Canadian unions, goes back to a Newspaper Guild strike last winter against the Oshawa, Ont., Times. Mass picketing by the entire local labor movement in defiance of an injunction led to a speedy settlement.

During the debate before the resolution was returned for beefing up, Murray Tate, an ANG member representing the Toronto & District Labor Council, hailed the Oshawa incident as a "glorious page in labor history" and called injunctions a rope placed around labor's neck by management, often with the acquiescence of the courts.

Sec-Treas. Pat O'Neal of the British Columbia Federation of Labor told the convention an incomplete count showed that between 1955 and 1965 more than 300 injunctions had been issued in B. C. labor disputes.

Change Approved

The delegates accepted an Executive Council recommendation for updating the justification machinery in the jurisdictional disputes section of the CLC constitution. The revision cuts down the time between the filing of a claim of justification and a final decision by the Executive Council.

It had its genesis in the imposition of sanctions upon the Steelworkers following a charge of raiding by the Molders. At issue was a 550-man unit at Three Rivers, Que., which USWA leaders maintained would have been taken by the Quebec-based, unaffiliated Confederation of National Trade Unions had the USWA taken the time to go through the lengthy justification process.

Other resolutions opposed CNTU efforts to destroy national bargaining units by splitting off elements in Quebec; called for establishment of a panel of qualified arbitrators by the Federal Dept. of Labor, and renewed CLC opposition to compulsory arbitration.

A companion resolution urged stricter enforcement of the Canada Labor Code, which regulates minimum wages and maximum hours, and called for a new base pay of $2 an hour.

Two major items remained to be acted on as the convention moved toward its close—broadscale CNTU raids on CLC affiliates in Quebec, and Pres. Claude Jodoin's proposal for a commission to review the CLC's structure and operations and make recommendations for modernization to the 1968 convention.

Reports by Jodoin, Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald and the Executive Council showed that CNTU raiding started 1964 and had some initial success but has been effectively countered since then. In 1965, the reports showed, no major raid succeeded and in the latter part of the year the CLC organized more workers in Quebec than the CNTU. However, the CNTU, which grew from about 90,000 to nearly 200,000 members in the past two years, has now attacked CLC unions in the radio, television and railroad fields.

Free Labor Aid Urged To Help New Nations

Winnipeg, Man.—A free world assault on poverty in the underdeveloped nations, with the democratic labor movement in the forefront, was urged by visiting trade unionists from three countries in speeches to the Canadian Labor Congress convention.

Pres. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers, AFL-CIO fraternal delegate to the session, listed three tasks he said lie ahead of the U. S. and Canadian labor movements, one of which is that of extending not only the idea of free unionism and free collective bargaining throughout the world, but of extending throughout the same world the standard of living "which we have won through free unionism and collective bargaining."

Gen. Sec. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, speaking alternately in English and French to a bilingual audience, denounced poverty and hunger as "a shame to our civilization" and the "greatest threat to peace," and called for a concerted action "to wipe them out."

One of the tasks of free labor as spelled out by Lord Harold Collison, fraternal delegate from the British Trades Union Congress, is to "help our colleagues to help themselves by providing assistance in the training of teachers, technicians and skilled craftsmen," and "to convey the know-how which will lead to the understanding use of all the aid that science and engineering can provide towards the goal of a larger and larger national product."

Organizing the Key

Collison, who also is president of the Intl. Federation of Plantation, Agricultural & Allied Workers, declared that organization is the only means whereby the workers in underdeveloped lands "can win for themselves a place in the sun."

Abel's three-point program for joint action by Canadian and U. S. labor included raising the standards of all North American union members up to those achieved by unions with the most effective bargaining power, and helping the "tremendous group" of unorganized wage and salary workers in both countries to unionize themselves.

Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists, a visitor to the convention, was introduced and spoke briefly.

Unions Aid Counselors On Apprentice Planning

School guidance counselors in the Washington, D.C., area learned at first hand of apprenticeship opportunities for youngsters at a workshop sponsored by the D.C. Apprenticeship Council.

Representatives of locals of the Carpenters, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Typographical Union and Sheet Metal Workers took part in what is planned as the first of a series of meetings with guidance advisers.

The union representatives discussed the qualifications students need to enter apprenticeship programs, the benefits to those who learn a skilled craft and stressed that the union-management programs are "completely open" to applicants who meet qualifications.

The 100 counselors present also were told of pre-apprenticeship "on-the-job training" programs for students who cannot presently meet apprenticeship standards.

Robert Borden of the D.C. Apprenticeship Information Center told the school officials: "Send us the kids for aptitude pre-testing." If they show an ability to meet apprenticeship standards, they will be referred to an apprenticeship committee. In any event, he said, the center will help the youngster to find a job somewhere. "No kid's name just gets filed away," he said.

The union officials invited the school advisers to bring student delegations to visit various apprenticeship programs and job sites.

The first-of-its-kind meeting was keynoted by Administrator Hugh C. Murphy of the Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training and the counselors were welcomed by Dr. Carl Hansen, D.C. superintendent of schools.

N. Y. Publishers Hit On Bargaining Lag

New York—Publishers of three dailies are making "no real attempt" to negotiate new contracts for their 5,700 union employes, the Newspaper Guild charged in a strike bulletin as federal efforts continued to get unions and management to intensify their bargaining efforts.

The Guild struck the Herald Tribune, Journal American and World-Telegram April 24—a day before the date set for merger into the World Journal Tribune, Inc., publishing the morning Herald Tribune, the afternoon World Journal and the Sunday World Journal Tribune at a loss to the city of one afternoon and one Sunday paper.

Members of nine craft unions refused to cross the Guild picket lines.

The strike was called for lack of Guild contracts—either with the old papers or the new World Journal Tribune, Inc. A key issue involved differences over the application of seniority provisions to determine which employes would be laid off, or the amount of severance pay to be given some 2,000 workers scheduled for firing—900 Guildsmen and 1,100 craft members.

Craft unions which announced they would not report for work until contract terms have been agreed to were sued by the publishers. In a petition filed in U.S. District Court, the new corporation contended former contracts are still in effect and asked that an arbitration order be entered against Typographical Local 6; and ITU Mailers Local 6; Printing Pressmen's Local 2; Lithographer's & Photoengravers Local 1-p; and the unaffiliated Deliverers.

Guild contracts on the three dailies expired last year and negotiations for renewal agreements became stalled over job safeguards and other procedures in anticipation of the long-rumored merger.

The union is seeking a contract with the merged operation with wage minimums comparable to those at the Times and the News, a full union shop and protections against job displacement through the use of automated equipment.

All the newspaper unions had contracts with the three dailies, but no agreements have been reached with the merged papers, which announced their intention of publishing a morning Herald Tribune, afternoon World Journal and a Sunday World Journal Tribune.

Papers still publishing include the Times, Post, Daily News, the Long Island Star-Journal and the Long Island Press. At the Post, the Guild ended 13 months of bargaining by reaching tentative agreement on a contract providing automation and jurisdictional safeguards and "full management discussion with the Guild" before any future merger.

Colgate Strike Wins 50c Gain For 3 Unions

Solidarity of three unions in negotiations and in a strike was the key to a settlement for 2,700 employes of Colgate-Palmolive Co. valued at 50 cents an hour in wages and benefits over two years.

The unions were Local 5-114 of the Oil Workers at Kansas City, Local 15 of the Chemical Workers at Jeffersonville, Ind., and the Independent Employees Association at Jersey City, N.J.

The bargaining committee was made up of representatives of all three unions, and all were present at negotiations at each of the three company locations as well as the final sessions at the offices of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service in Washington.

The major breakthrough came with Colgate's agreement to compare its wages with others in the soap industry. Previously the company had refused to consider wages paid by other major soap manufacturers, but had tried to use "area average" patterns.

The new contract provides wage increases of 26 cents per hour over the two years and approximately 11.5 cents each year in increased fringe benefits.

Vacation schedules were improved to give three weeks after five years of service with the company, four weeks after 15 years and five weeks after 25 years.

Retirement was provided at any time after age 55 with full retirement at 62. Improvements also were made in hospitalization insurance, sick leave plan, seniority system, and in minimum pay guarantees.

NEWSPAPER GUILD members, striking for job protection in the planned merger of three New York dailies, picket the World-Telegram & Sun. The strike began when the publishers failed to agree with the Guild and nine other newspaper unions on the fate of 2,000 workers due for firing under a merger of the World-Telegram & Sun and the Journal American and the Herald Tribune.

HOTEL WORKERS from New York assemble on the steps of the state capitol in Albany to demonstrate support for legislation granting collective bargaining rights to employes of charitable, educational and religious organizations. The group included union members from the Sloane House YMCA—and clergymen who formed a committee to support the right of "Y" employes to organize.

'Y' Dispute Spurs Drive For New Law

Albany, N. Y.—A 15-bus caravan brought 800 New York City hotel workers to the state capitol here to support legislation extending collective bargaining rights to employes of charitable, educational and religious institutions.

The delegation, sponsored by Local 6 of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes, included employes of the Sloane House YMCA and members of a clergymen's committee which is supporting the workers in their efforts to get a union contract. The "Y" workers had been fired after a protest demonstration and were recently reinstated after five weeks on the picket line. But the management has refused to negotiate a contract or accept state mediation, claiming exemption from state labor laws.

Local 6 estimates that several hundred thousand workers in New York state are denied collective bargaining rights because of exclusions in the law. Many of them are among the state's lowest-paid workers. Some Sloane House employes make as little as $44 a week, the union said.

The Rev. John H. Gill, who joined the demonstration as co-chairman of the Clergy Committee for Uniform Labor Laws, said in a statement:

"It is ironic that religious social agencies must be legally prevented from exploiting the labor of the very people these agencies are designed to serve, the poor. . . . Sweeping the floor in a religious charities building is not qualitatively different from sweeping the floor in the garment district."

Reedy, Valenti Leave LBJ Staff

George Reedy, since 1951 a staff aide to Pres. Johnson both in the Senate and the White House, resigned to enter private business, and the President lost another staff member when Special Assistant Jack Valenti resigned to become president of the Motion Picture Association.

Reedy was a highly respected spokesman for Johnson when the latter was Senate Democratic leader, but served only a relatively brief term as official White House press secretary before quitting the post and moving to other duties. Valenti, after a period as a Texas public relations man, rejoined Johnson the day the latter became President and performed a wide range of duties as speech writer, liaison with diplomats and appointments manager.

Jobs, Schools, Housing Topics for Rights Parley

Work session for the coming White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights" will center on three major problems—jobs and economic security, education and housing.

The areas were selected by the 29-member council to the conference, which will be held June 1 and 2 in Washington, during discussions at a series of weekend meetings.

"While recognizing the importance of many other areas in fulfilling the rights of the American Negro, the council was of the opinion that these three areas are of the utmost urgency and magnitude as to require the closest attention," said Council Chairman Ben. W. Heineman, chairman of the board of directors of the Chicago & North Western Railway.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph, president of the Sleeping Car Porters and generally regarded as the dean of the nation's civil rights leaders, is honorary chairman of the conference. Federation Pres. George Meany and Steelworkers Vice Pres. Joseph Molony are members of the leadership council planning the conference.

The session was first suggested by Pres. Johnson in a speech last June at Howard University, Washington. Its goal, he declared, should be "to help the American Negro fulfill the rights which after the long time of injustice, he is finally about to secure."

About 2,000 persons are expected to participate in the conference. Heineman expressed the hope it will be a "how-to-do-it conference, rather than a mere reidentification of the problems."

He hailed the "devoted work" of the council members "in going over the wide range of concepts, proposals and programs outlined during the 1965 planning session.

Green Memorial Fund Awards 7 Scholarships

Columbus, O.—Seven local union leaders in Ohio have been awarded William Green Memorial tuition scholarships for the long-term union leadership program at Ohio State University here.

The awards were announced by the William Green Memorial Fund selection committee headed by Prof. Glenn Miller of the university's Dept. of Economics and including Pres. Frank King and Sec.-Treas. Robert Bollard of the Ohio AFL-CIO.

The union leadership program was developed by the Labor Education & Research Service at Ohio State as a long-term program emphasizing the social sciences, with Dr. A. J. Wann as director. Now offered in 16 urban centers in Ohio, 500 union leaders and active members are enrolled.

The Green memorial fund was established in 1955 with a gift of $100,000 by the former AFL in memory of Green, its president from 1924 to 1952 and a Coshocton, O., native.

Six of the winners received awards for their third year of study, and one for his fourth year. The winners are:

Fourth year, Frank A. Leon of Steelworkers Local 3523, Warren, O.

Third year, Jack Daniels, Letter Carriers Local 3688, Willoughby, O.; W. O. Flynn, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Local No. 2, Toledo; Calvin A. Hull, Transportation - Communication Employes, Sherwood; James F. Lee, Government Employes Local 1558, Dayton; Henry Lowe, Auto Workers Local 1275, Ravenna; Dalton O. McLaughlin, Railroad Trainmen, Local 169, Newark.

Also financed by the Green Memorial fund are two graduate fellowships, worth $2,250 each for study in the field of labor and industrial relations, and two undergraduate scholarships valued at $500 each for Ohio State students majoring in economics, political science and similar fields.

AFSCME Appoints Publications Chief

John G. Blair, associate editor of the Cleveland, O., Plain Dealer and a news reporter since 1938, has been named publications director of the State, County & Municipal Employes.

Blair was editor of the Cleveland Record during the Cleveland newspaper shutdown of 1961-62. The Record, published by nine unions, achieved a circulation of 150,000.

The Campaign's Challenge

AS THE 1966 CAMPAIGN picks up momentum—six primary elections will be held in the first week of May—certain trends are emerging that pose problems for liberal programs and policies.

Elsewhere on this page is a detailed report on the activities of the ultra-conservative Americans for Constitutional Action and its plans to support with manpower and money congressional candidates in 115 marginal districts where by and large liberals now hold the seats.

The John Birch Society is actively recruiting members and funds for the November elections, also pinpointing vulnerable liberal seats as targets.

The conservative coalition in Congress has mounted an unremitting campaign against liberal programs, seeking to cut and chop at funds necessary to implement and expand the historic legislation of the first session of the 89th Congress.

To date the conservatives have been beaten back in floor fights but the votes reveal an uncomfortably thin margin for the liberals. It is this margin that the conservatives are after in the November balloting.

Given the historic trend in off-year, non-presidential elections of a loss of seats to the party in power and the 51 liberals who were swept in with the Johnson landslide in 1964, many in startling upsets, the conservative bid is aimed at stopping Great Society programs dead in their tracks.

But given the acknowledged wide popularity of the medicare, aid to education, anti-poverty programs and others, the rightwing tactic is not to attack the programs head on, but to emasculate them, starve them out and in effect destroy their effectiveness.

The conservatives also are trying to work both sides of the street on the issue of Viet Nam and have created a phony inflation issue as a screen for attacks on liberal welfare programs.

THIS IS THE SHAPE of the attack six months before the voting. It is a direct challenge to liberal and labor groups on whether the progress touched off with the 1960 election of Pres. Kennedy and stepped up with the election of Pres. Johnson in 1964 will continue into the 90th Congress.

The challenge can be met and overcome if all the basic strengths and resources of the liberal community are mobilized. There are a number of factors, also, that are present in the 1966 elections that can help the liberal cause: the sharp increase in Negro registration especially in the South and the redistricting of congressional seats to meet the Supreme Court's one man, one vote rule.

But basically the situation calls for a major registration effort, a campaign to give all possible aid and assistance to the freshman liberals who have provided the victory margin for liberal programs, a concentration on the real issues of the great strides toward social and economic justice in the past five years.

Labor is deeply committed to a major register and vote drive, a stronger COPE effort financed with greater voluntary contributions to stem the conservative attack and keep the voice of the liberals in both parties alive and strong in the halls of Congress.

ACA Readies Special Support For Conservative Candidates

THE RIGHT-WING Americans for Constitutional Action plans to give special assistance to certain conservative candidates for the U. S. House and Senate this year.

In addition to contributing money, ACA will assign field agents full-time to about 115 candidates, presumably in marginal districts. Though it wasn't announced, ACA extra aid unquestionably will go to candidates running against the vulnerable new liberals elected in 1964 in close contests.

Though it's keying in on 115 races, ACA will take some part in at least 225 campaigns for the House and Senate in 37 states.

Candidates getting the special treatment this year will be able to choose what type of service they most need from ACA—whether it's a speech-writer, a campaign manager, or simply clerical help.

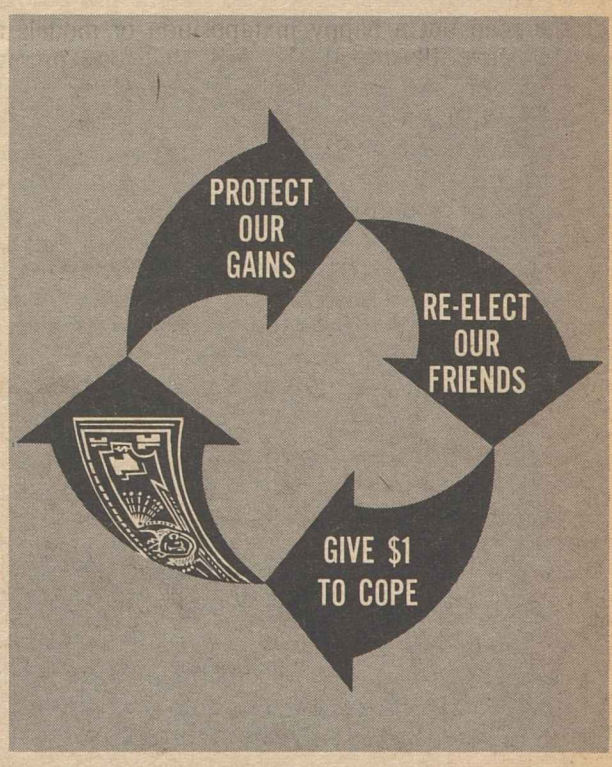
Names of candidates getting this service will be kept secret, ACA announced.

For the first time, ACA will have a finance director. He is Frank J. Kovac, former finance director for the Republican National Committee. Kovac announced he'll shoot for a $500,000 kitty to aid conservative candidates. Normally, ACA's main contribution to its endorsed candidates is trained personnel. This year, a large dose of cash will be added.

That the ACA plans an all-out assault against newly-elected liberals is evident in recent material distributed by the organization.

In releasing its official voting record for the first session of the 89th Congress, ACA takes 47 of 51 new liberals and gives them a combined rating of 9.9 percent right votes from its point of view. It claims the conservatives these 47 replaced had voted 83.3 percent right in the 88th Congress.



In its ratings for 1965—which include votes opposing 14(b) repeal as key right votes—ACA awarded 100 percent scores to 12 House members, Republicans John Buchanan, Jack Edwards and James Martin of Alabama, James Utt of California, George Hansen of Idaho, H. R. Gross of Iowa and Durward Hall of Missouri. Democrats getting 100 percent ACA scores were Thomas Abernethy, William Colmer and John Bell Williams, all from Mississippi.

High-scoring senators on ACA ratings, at 95 percent, were Republicans Carl Curtis and Roman Hruska of Nebraska, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, John Tower of Texas and Milward Simpson of Wyoming, and Democrats Willis Robertson and Harry Byrd, Sr. (now retired) of Virginia.

Forty-two liberal House Democrats got zero ratings from ACA, as did Senators Robert Kennedy (N.Y.), Edward Kennedy (Mass.), Walter Mondale (Minn.), Gale McGee (Wyo.), and Phil Hart and Pat McNamara, both of Michigan. All are Democrats. (COPE Memo.)

Morgan Wins Award For European Series

Edward P. Morgan, whose nightly news commentary over the ABC radio network is sponsored by the AFL-CIO, has won a 1966 Overseas Press Club award.

The award, for the best interpretation of foreign affairs on radio, was for Morgan's 1965 three-week series of nightly broadcasts from half a dozen Communist capitals in Eastern Europe.

Morgan's commentaries have won for him every major radio journalistic award in the 11½ years he has been sponsored by the former AFL and the AFL-CIO.

Morgan Says:

Safety Assigned to Back Seat In Automobile Sales Appeals

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EDT.)

IT'S A MAN'S CAR, not his house, today that is his castle. Indeed, it is hardly too much to say that the automobile has become a movable shrine to itself. It is worshipped around the world. It is the idol of rich and poor alike, plus the middle class in between. Especially to the American true believers it means status. To everybody, everywhere, concerned about his height on the totem pole or not, it is the revered source of mobility and escape.

Morgan

The fact that, nowadays, the escape may be to places beyond this world via a fatal accident in traffic raises the question of whether this speeding altar may also enclose a death wish. Maybe. The daily wanton slaughter on the streets and highways of all continents tempts one to think so. But there are, obviously, other allures.

The Intl. Auto Show has packed up and left the New York Coliseum but its memory lingers on. One sensed, moving among the exhibits of metallic mastodons and their competitive offspring, "the small car," a reach by people for wider horizons, a longing to be carried off on a magic carpet from the tightly-confined monotony of daily life.

The classless society is still a far piece down the road but a happy juxtaposition of models at the show illustrated the fact that our present prosperity at least allows opulence to trickle down. Here magnificently poised in one corner was a $33,365 Rolls Royce Phantom V limousine. People laughed out loud, though not necessarily incredulously, at the price. Across the aisle squatted a Japanese-made Datsun sedan with a multi-tentacled aerial on its ivory top and a tiny portable TV set playing merrily to an empty back seat. Price, presumably without the telly, $1650. Ignoring the Rolls a housewife with a British middle class accent gazed at the Datsun and giggled. "Home, James," she said, "and don't spare the horses."

The butter-thick churning of prosperity has produced both the veneer of luxury for those who can only afford the economy spread and the 24-karat gleam of the rare jewel for those who buy it whether they can afford it or not.

Perhaps you remember the disappearing machineguns, the smoke machine and other fittings on James Bond's Aston-Martin DB-5 in the movies Goldfinger and Thunderball. Well, on the strength of all that free publicity the Aston-Martin people figured they might find a modest market for their luxurious cars, minus the 007 accessories, in the U.S.A. They may be right. At the show they sold four "shooting brakes" (sporting station wagons to you and me) for $22,500 each. Just right for the schoolday car pool.

One customer bought not only a shooting brake, in rich Roman purple, but a $29,000 super Ferrari and a Rolls limousine—more than $85,000 worth of cars at a swoop. "In England," a sales person from London said, a little archly, "we would call his type nouveau riche."

BUT AS PROSPERITY has kissed nearly every economic level, it can, like any romance, bring tragedy. Federal safety standards in car design are in the offing. The industry is bracing for them. Never has Congress been so full of regulatory measures and, apparently, zeal to pass at least some of them. The government's purchasing agent, the General Services Administration, has nearly 70 innovations in mind, including elimination of dashboards, to make car travel safer. Pres. Johnson vented his anger again over the ghastly toll of traffic deaths.

Here and there a manufacturer himself makes an attempt to tackle the issue frontally. One has produced a poster, boasting a sturdy body and chassis for his British Rover line, which includes this reminder:

"An impact speed into an immovable object of only 30 miles per hour is equivalent to more than the "G" forces (gravitational pull) experienced by astronauts on reentry into the earth's atmosphere."

Power and speed seem to remain the dominant selling points, however, and the car magnates are not inclined to dismantle those alluring features of their movable shrines. It is possible that the whole contradictory situation will solve itself. If the chromium-plated traffic jams, such as exist daily in New York and almost every other major city in the world, get any worse everybody will be immobilized. They'll be late to appointments, but alive.

Voluntary Agencies Spurred In Consumer Guidance Effort

COMMUNITY AGENCIES were urged by an AFL-CIO spokesman to join the growing labor effort to make non-profit consumer counseling more widely available.

Noting a mounting need for consumer education, Dir. Leo Perlis of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities declared that "a great many people get head over heels in debt and don't know how to cope with the problem." He said union-sponsored consumer-training courses are now under way in 75 communities and open to "any and all citizens who want to attend them." The ten-week courses cover borrowing and measurement of interest rates, car buying and repairs, home purchases and rentals, insurance buying and how to finance education, he said.

"We propose to promote, in cooperation with other community agencies, similar training for everyone who needs it." His statements came during the weekly AFL-CIO produced public affairs program, Labor News Conference, on the Mutual Radio Network.

Perlis renewed the call for government-sponsored disaster insurance for floods and other risks not now covered by private carriers. Voluntary agencies "are not able to meet the total needs of the people who are stricken by disaster," he said. He noted that the Red Cross spent more than $17 million for rehabilitation and restoration in the aftermath of Hurricane Betsy, "yet the tremendous needs far exceeded all that the Red Cross was able to do."

CONSUMER EDUCATION and disaster services are two of the four major areas of urgent community need on the agenda of the 11th annual AFL-CIO National Conference on Community Services, May 15-19 in Washington. Perlis said lectures and workshops at the conference will also explore possible improvement of present unemployment relief and strike assistance programs.

Presentation of the Murray-Green award to Mr. and Mrs. Sargent Shriver for outstanding work in helping retarded children will highlight the conference.

The award, named for the late Philip Murray, president of the former Congress of Industrial Organizations, and the late William Green, president of the former American Federation of Labor, was established in 1956 to honor achievements and contributions in health and welfare that have inspired others to work for the common good.

Reporters questioning Perlis were Louis Cassels of United Press Intl. and Ben A. Franklin of the New York Times' Washington bureau.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A FOOTNOTE is required in the wake of Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen's final defeat in his extraordinarily persistent drive to push through a constitutional amendment overriding the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" decisions on the makeup of state legislatures.

The Illinois Republican from his position as minority floor leader had a clear shot last year at making his case and winning the necessary two-thirds majority—and fell short.

He used his parliamentary skill, in a manner quite tolerable under Senate rules, and forced a floor vote by the device of substituting his own proposal for a minor noncontroversial issue that happened to pop up on the Senate calendar.

So he got his vote and lost, on a 57-39 roll call; he would have had to persuade seven senators to switch sides to get two-thirds.

This should have ended it, particularly since he had previously lost in a preliminary test. But it didn't end anything.

Dirksen decided he wanted still another vote, and he served notice that unless the Judiciary Committee would report out his amendment, clearing it officially for the floor, he would himself filibuster in the committee to block action on a pending immigration reform bill.

This filibuster blackmail worked. A Democratic vote was switched in committee on Dirksen's amendment, so it could be reported to the Senate "without recommendation," and the senator got out of the way of the immigration bill, which was promptly passed and signed into law.

Pleased with himself, Dirksen next mounted a floor filibuster against a Senate vote on repeal of Sec. 14(b), announcing he would renew both the filibuster and his amendment fight this year—which he did.

THE SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS didn't rely exclusively on his personal powers of persuasion to change the Senate's mind.

Somebody put up enough money to engage the California public relations firm of Whitaker & Baxter to move into Washington with a high-powered operation to rouse the hinterland grassroots in support of the Dirksen amendment.

Whitaker & Baxter is a name to be conjured with when it comes to grassroots campaigns; it was a principal part of the mechanism by which Harry S. Truman's original national health insurance program was blown out of the water.

Whitaker & Baxter did not stint its services in behalf of the Dirksen amendment. Head of its Washington operation was Robert M. Smalley, until last June public relations director of the Republican National Committee. Samuel C. Brightman, longtime publicist for the Democratic National Committee, was a consultant.

A Committee for Government of the People was set up under irreproachably "bipartisan" auspices and what a Whitaker & Baxter prospectus termed an "intensive nationwide publicity campaign" was set in motion.

These things obviously cost money. Sen. Paul H. Douglas, the Democratic captain of the forces opposing the amendment, and Democratic Sen. Joseph D. Tydings of Maryland tried on the Senate floor to get Dirksen to explain who was putting up the money or when a lobbying report might be expected.

Sen. Dirksen's reply was that all this was "a rehash of the old 'red herrings' trotted out" from time to time and that no one needed to instruct him regarding the reporting procedures of the Lobbying Act because "I helped to write it."

SO THE SENATE in its majesty went to a roll call test again—and once again Dirksen was seven votes short, this time by a 55-38 tally.

"The Committee for Government of the People" hadn't won over a single senator's vote. In the only change from the roll call of 1965, except for absentees, Sen. Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.) voted against the amendment instead of for it.

HOW UNIONS can help communities meet emergency human needs will be the central theme of the 11th annual AFL-CIO National Conference on Community Services, Leo Perlis (center), director of the federation's Community Services Activities, reported on Labor News Conference, weekly AFL-CIO presentation on the Mutual Radio Network. He was questioned by Ben A. Franklin (left) of the New York Times and Louis Cassels of United Press Intl.

Elderly Have Second Chance For Medicare Plan B Bargain

By Sidney Margolius

THE NEW DEADLINE of May 31 for enrollment in the doctor insurance part of the medicare program (Plan B) gives people 65 or older who have not yet signed up another chance to get this valuable protection.

While older persons get the hospital insurance part of medicare without any additional cost and with no enrollment deadline, they do have to let the Social Security Administration know if they want the doctor insurance part. At a cost of only $3 a month, the doctor insurance pays for doctor fees in or out of a hospital except for the first $50 of your total annual costs, and 20 percent of the remainder. It also pays for additional home nursing visits, diagnostic tests, prosthetic devices and a number of other medical expenses.

At this writing almost 17 million persons have signed up for the doctor insurance, about a million have said no, and over a million still haven't answered.

Those who did not sign up and those who said no now have another chance.

The May 31 deadline applies mainly to people who became 65 before Jan. 1. People who reached or will reach 65 after that date have a seven-month period in which to enroll, beginning three months before the month in which the birthday occurs and continuing three months after it. However, people who become 65 before the May 31 deadline also will be entitled to coverage on July 1, when the insurance takes effect, if they sign up before May 31.

Those who are supposed to sign up by May 31, but don't, will have to wait for the next general enrollment period this fall and must pay an additional 10 percent.

People not yet 65 should keep in mind the seven-month enrollment period. For example, a man who will reach 65 in November 1966 has an enrollment period beginning Aug. 1, 1966, and continuing to Feb. 28, 1967.

SUPPLEMENTARY PLANS: Many of the health insurance policies people over 65 now carry will be discontinued by the insurance companies after July 1, when medicare goes into effect. In place of these policies, a number of health services, insurance companies and employers have developed new supplementary plans. These fill in the gaps in medicare in varying degree. They also need to be compared and selected with care. A few being offered by fringe sellers even seem quit deceptive.

The medicare gaps for which moderate-income retirees especially need supplementary coverage include: the $40 in-hospital and $50 doctor-bill deductibles; the additional $10 a day for the 61st to 90th days of hospital care which the patient must pay; the additional hospital coverage after the covered 90 days; the additional $5 a day for the 21st to 100th days of post-hospital nursing home care; medicines used outside a hospital; optical and dental care, and other medical expenses not insured by medicare.

Employer-paid supplementary plans are most desirable because of the tax-saving benefits. The employer can deduct such coverage since the Internal Revenue Code says that a pension plan also may provide for hospital and medical expenses of retired employes, spouses and dependents.

Employers have been receptive to providing supplementary coverage for medicare; in fact, more receptive than they were to providing health insurance for retirees before medicare. Some recently-negotiated supplementary plans even have eliminated a previously-required contribution from retirees towards the cost of the insurance. Another feature of some plans is that the employer not only pays the deductibles and co-insurance expenses of medicare, but also the $3 fee.

Group-health plans are by far the most comprehensive way of providing supplementary care for medicare, whether the cost is paid by an employer or by the retiree. The fact that the medicare doctor-bill insurance covers only "specific complaints" and not checkups is a noticeable gap, advises Dr. W. Palmer Dearing, executive director of Group Health Association of America.

The new Blue Cross supplementary hospital plans for senior citizens which this writer has seen, usually costs about $2 a month, and Blue Shield supplementary benefits for doctor bill insurance, a little less than $2.

A Self-Help Plan That Avoids Diets, Drugs, Dancing Lessons

By Jane Goodsell

DO YOU SUFFER from feelings of inferiority? Long for a more forceful, dynamic personality? Do you sometimes feel that life is passing you by? Oh, of course you do! Well, don't just sit there, sighing wistfully. By following my three-key program to success and happiness, you can overcome your feelings of inadequacy and develop the ability to meet life's challenges with courage and assurance.

Step No. 1. Buy yourself a felt-tipped pen. This simple writing tool costs less than two packs of cigarettes, but it can boost your self-esteem more effectively than an MG, XKE—or even a double martini. However weak and immature your handwriting may be, a felt-tipped pen magically transforms it into a bold, masterful scrawl that radiates determination and strength of character.

With a firm, resolute signature like that, you can't possibly be the negative, submissive, weak-minded type you'd previously considered yourself. Your handwriting reveals you as a born leader, a person of indomitable will and purpose.

Step No. 2. Get your knives sharpened. Using knives that have lost their cutting edge has a demoralizing effect on even the hardiest ego structure. A man who is habitually consigned to mangle roasts with a dull carving knife develops feelings of failure and ineffectualness that prevents him from ever aspiring to the presidency—or even asking the boss for a raise.

Conversely, a sharply-honed blade—one that slides incisively through a prime rib roast, and cuts bread into precise, paper-thin slices—makes its manipulator feel like a keen, decisive, authoritative person who can master fate and guide destiny.

Step No. 3. Get some goldfish. People who don't like goldfish because they don't do anything, miss the point entirely. That's the wonderful ego-building thing about goldfish. Everyone needs to feel superior to somebody, and sometimes this can be a problem. There come moments when everyone you know seems to be getting more out of life than you are. Either they're living it up, buying cabin cruisers and color TV and going to Paris, or else they're earnestly engaged in self-improvement—studying Spanish or learning shorthand or doing isometric exercises.

This can be very depressing and, at moments like this, a brace of goldfish can do wonders to boost your morale. No matter how dull and colorless your life may seem, no matter how listless and apathetic you may feel, you're having a whale of a time compared to those stupid fish, who do nothing but float around the fishbowl with their mouths open.

Well, there you are—three cheap, easy, safe keys to self-realization and life-enhancement. So who needs LSD?

Crafts Revive Ancient Arts In Work on Opera Center

New York—Take it from their boss, the building craftsmen who worked on the new Metropolitan Opera House at Lincoln Center weren't just earning a living; they were consciously creating a work of art.

Lou R. Krandall, head of the contracting firm that built the theater, told the story during an intermission interview on the weekly opera radio broadcast.

It started with an interviewer's comment that "there were no headlines about strikes and no jurisdictional quarrels" during the construction.

"In the first place the labor unions worked with us," Krandall said. "And when we saw problems that would be jurisdictional, and that sort of thing, in advance, they were all settled. We had no strikes on this job at all.

"But above all, I have never been on a project where the workmen seemed to feel that they were working on something special and took the big interest that they did here . . . Everybody seemed to take a pride in it."

Krandall made special mention of the plasterers, who molded the fronts of the boxes and other sections of the theater—"a trade of a generation ago."

"We assembled a group of men who just went in—they made their own ateliers—we gave them space there, they went in and worked, they had their meals there. The average age of these men I think would be 65 years or more. And this is the type of thing that took place with labor."

Council Project:

New Survey Studies Labor's Arts Activity

HOW ARTFUL—or arty—is the AFL-CIO? The federation is conducting a survey to find out.

Actually, the survey is a serious venture designed to discover the amount of involvement by all AFL-CIO organizations in the support and encouragement of the arts.

The venture began with a resolution calling for support of the performing arts, which the 1965 convention referred to the Executive Council. The council set up a subcommittee of Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Herman Kenin to implement it. Kenin is chairman of the AFL-CIO public relations committee.

The subcommittee quickly discovered that no inventory had ever been made of arts activity by unions. So last week, letters went out to all national and international unions and state central bodies in search of the facts about current and recent arts projects. The letters offered the following as a partial list of possibilities:

- Sponsorship of concerts, plays, recitals and other performances, professional or amateur.
- Contributions to cultural undertakings—the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, the "Save Carnegie Hall" drive, etc.
- Sponsorship of exhibitions of painting and sculpture, by members or others.
- Gifts to schools and libraries.
- Creation or support of adult education in the arts and humanities.
- Organization or support of planned travel (trips to Europe, etc.) that offers cultural as well as recreational opportunities.

Also awaiting the results with interest is the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, a foundation which, in a study of the arts a year ago, suggested that "labor has especially dramatic possibilities" to increase appreciation for the arts. These "limitless possibilities," the fund said, are "all but unexplored."

The survey is designed to explore them.

"Sorry about the raise, Potter, and I'll see that you get this $10 back promptly."

Shriver Hails Gains In War on Poverty

The national war on poverty is moving forward on a wide front and is being won, declared Sargent Shriver, Director of the U.S. Office of Economic Opportunity.

Shriver, in an article in the April issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist, said economic conditions have never been better for helping people move out of poverty. He warned, however, that the complete eradication of poverty may take perhaps 20 years and added:

"Considering the magnitude of poverty in our society, one might say we have 'only scratched the surface.'

"But we feel we have taken that first giant stride that is the most important step of the journey."

Shriver's article, titled "The War on Poverty—A 'Giant Stride' Forward," is part of an entire edition devoted to the problem of poverty. While Shriver describes the government's anti-poverty programs, other articles deal with the growth potential of the poverty population and what organized labor is doing locally and nationally.

Shriver said 2.2 million people moved out of the poverty class in 1965, but there remain the "shocking" total of 32 million people still in dire poverty.

He said the war on poverty, as waged by OEO and other government agencies and programs, has had a real impact on many poor people in the past 18 months, citing these gains:

- It has reached over 3 million poor people directly with jobs and other services they did not have before.
- It has involved over 5,000 residents of areas served by poverty programs on community action boards.
- It has enrolled over 600,000 pre-school children in Head Start classes in less than a year.
- It provided jobs for more than half a million teenagers through the Neighborhood Youth Corps.
- It approved over 5,000 separate money grants for Community Action Projects, covering every state, more than one-third of all counties and over one-half of the 182 poorest counties.

"The Community Action Program," Shriver said, "has been and will continue to be the main attack in this war on poverty."

He said CAP consumes over half of OEO's funds and is operational in some 656 cities and towns. Asserting that CAP can only succeed through cordinated public and private efforts, Shriver added:

"Effective local anti-poverty action needs the help of the churches, the established welfare agencies, employment offices, settlement houses, schools, youth groups, veterans organizations, labor unions—representatives of all the moving forces in the whole community and, of course, the poor themselves. For the poor should assist in determining what priorities are placed on their needs, which programs will work best and what techniques are most likely to bring the desired results."

Shriver stressed that "participation of the poor themselves is one thread that runs through the Community Action plans."

He said 21,000 poor people are now employed directly in Community Action agencies. Some 45,000 will be employed in the 1966 Summer Head Start programs. By the end of 1967, he added, it is expected that over 100,000 poor people will be employed as teacher's aides. child supervisors, clerks and in other sub-professional jobs which can lead to careers outside the poverty program.

Shriver said the requirements of the war in South Viet Nam have forced Pres. Johnson to increase the war on poverty more slowly than he might have otherwise.

The OEO has asked Congress for $1.75 billion, compared to $1.45 billion in the current year, Shriver said, permitting some expansion of going programs. The war will be "noisy, visible, often dirty, uncomfortable and sometimes politically unpopular," but it will be won, he concluded.

W. V. Dameron Dies; Former IAM Editor

Germantown, Md.—William V. Dameron, retired Machinists' grand lodge representative and former editor of the Machinists' Monthly Journal, died unexpectedly at his home here. He was 65.

In a 28-year union career Dameron served as an organizer, local union president, and IAM representative in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, Elected editor of the Journal in 1955, he served until the publication was discontinued in 1957. Dameron retired in 1964.

GOOD SHOPPING practices are studied in a consumer information course sponsored by the Chicago AFL-CIO's community services committee and the Chicago Committee on Urban Opportunity, local anti-poverty agency. Shown with some of the 80 community representatives taking part in the class sessions are Dir. Price Patton (standing left) of Family Financial Counseling Service and Project Dir. Joseph Rovai, former Insurance Workers staff representative.

Chicago Labor, Anti-Poverty Agency Train Consumer Advisers For Poor

Chicago—Helping the poor stretch their meager funds is the aim of a pilot program conducted by the Community Services Health & Welfare Committee of the Chicago AFL-CIO and the Chicago Committee on Urban Opportunity (CCUO), the local anti-poverty office.

Eighty community representatives at the South Parkway Urban Progress Center, an outpost of the CCUO on the city's South Side, attended eight weekly sessions of two hours each.

Subjects covered were sources of credit and planning for major purchases, credit purchases and the law, buying and selling practices, protection of legal rights, family financial counselling, landlord-tenant relations and home purchases, insurance and money management.

The idea is to arm the community representatives, who go from door to door seeking out the poor and telling them where to go to solve their problems, with the information the poor need to protect themselves against loan sharks and high-pressure salesmen.

Evaluation of the pilot project is under way by the sponsoring groups. Here's what could happen:

- The program could halt after graduation of the first 80 students.
- Similar pilot programs could be conducted in all seven of the city's urban progress centers.
- The CCUO could take over the program and train members of its staff to teach the course.
- The local central body could become a war on poverty agency and carry on the program. In this case the federation would advance 10 percent of the cost, with the federal Office of Economic Opportunity providing the rest.

Director of the pilot project was Joseph Rovai, former staff representative of the Insurance workers.

Guest speakers and resource personnel included Charles Schumacher, Illinois Credit Union League; Lawrence Levin, vice president, Amalgamated Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago; Price Patton, director, Family Counselling Service; Fred Newman, president, Insurance Workers Local 22; Jerome Schur, assistant corporation counsel working on consumer credit cases; Edward Marsalek, director, Consumer Fraud Bureau, Illinois attorney general's office; and John Nolen and Aaron Briggs, Chicago Commission on Human Relations.

Classes were divided into two groups of 40, each meeting on a different day. Speakers presented subjects for 30 to 60 minutes, with at least one hour for questions and discussion. Individual help was made available on request.

The course was patterned after the Chicago AFL-CIO consumer counseling program, which was launched in the fall of 1960, after the AFL-CIO Community Services Dept. outlined a basic program for local unions and central bodies. Community Services staff representatives here adapted the basic outline to the needs of local unions. About 125 union members participated in the first course in 1960.

Last week both the pilot program conducted for the Chicago war on poverty office and the labor Community Services consumer programs presented completion certificates to the graduates. The trade union program was conducted for 25 members from Auto Workers Locals 457 and 1011 and Textile Workers Union of America, Local 958.

Insurance Union Wins 1st Vote After 'Freeze'

The Insurance Workers, prevented from taking part in representation elections for Metropolitan Life Insurance agents for nearly a year by a "freeze" imposed by the National Labor Relations Board, won bargaining rights for the firm's agents at Dubuque, Ia., by a vote of 20-0.

The election was the first one for Metropolitan since the Supreme Court turned down the company's challenge to board election procedures.

IWIU Pres. William A. Gillen announced the Dubuque vote. Organization Dir. Robert J. Nicholson said dates have been set for additional elections in Gary, Ind., and Flint, Mich. and eight others are in the processing stage.

The union had won a series of 31 elections in Metropolitan units before the embargo on further elections—10 had been petitioned for but not acted on, Gillen related.

After each of the 31 union victories, Metropolitan management refused to bargain on the ground that a city-wide or district-wide unit was too small. In almost every case the board rejected the company argument and found management guilty of refusing to bargain.

Metropolitan won a favorable ruling in one of four appeals courts and the NLRB carried that case, involving the "Met" office in Woonsocket, R.I.—to the Supreme Court. On Apr. 5, 1965, the high court vacated the decision of the 1st U.S. Circuit Court in Boston, but returned the case to the board for "lack of articulated reasons." Two months ago the NLRB reaffirmed its ruling in a decision that spelled out its reasons for believing a city-wide unit was appropriate.

The union organizing drive in Metropolitan had been slowed down by the legal battling but was resumed after the high court ruling. When bargaining resumes with Met officials May 10, the union will have representatives present from the 31 units where bargaining must still be conducted, it said.

Labor Opposes Plan to Shift Federal Jobs

The AFL-CIO reiterated its opposition to excluding all employes of the State Dept., the Agency for Intl. Development and the U.S. Information Agency from the federal civil service system.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller asked a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee to reject provisions of a House-passed bill which would put all civil service positions in the three agencies in the foreign service.

He said in a letter to Subcommittee Chairman Albert Gore (D-Tenn.) that this would take away from employes job safeguards and appeals rights of the civil service system and the Veterans Preference Act.

At the same time, Biemiller endorsed another provision of the House bill which would provide extra benefits to foreign service employes in "hazardous" areas.

STATE, COUNTY & MUNICIPAL EMPLOYES convention hears Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey declare that a strong economy and social progress at home are essential to the nation's leadership role in the world. The 1,300 delegates represented nearly 300,000 AFSCME members.

Membership Up 40,000:

State, County Votes To Hike Per Capita

Pres. Kennedy and reaffirmed by Pres. Johnson, "means as much to public employes as the Wagner Act means to workers in private industry."

Wurf, who was elected to his first term as president two years ago by a slim 21 votes out of 2,879 cast, was returned to office unopposed, along with the AFSCME's veteran secretary-treasurer, Gordon Chapman.

Under a new constitution adopted at a special convention last year, vice presidents for the first time were elected by delegates from the districts they represent. Eight of the 16 positions were contested with elections under way as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

The convention approved, by overwhelming voice vote, a two-step raise in per capita for locals now paying 65 cents a month per member. The rate will go to 85 cents in July and to $1 next January. Locals chartered since 1960 are presently paying the $1.

A dramatic episode in the convention hall demonstrated the intensity of the delegates' feeling that collective bargaining will lead public employment out of what Wurf termed the "depression psychology" of the 1930's.

The speaker was Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey. He was warmly applauded throughout his address. But the convention hall erupted when the vice president declared: "You have a sympathetic Administration, one that recognizes your rights in collective bargaining."

At the words "collective bargaining," the delegates rose from their seats, cheering and applauding for minutes before allowing Humphrey to continue with his speech.

Somewhat startled, the vice president commented: "I hope that every union in America is as enthusiastic about collective bargaining as this one is."

Humphrey told the delegates that the United States must set an example at home of social progress and justice in order for its words to carry weight in the world.

"We have taken a big first step in the war on poverty. . . . We are going to have to try many approaches, and we are going to make some mistakes. . . . We are going to have to persist until we find the answer."

He also urged the delegates, while in Washington, to call on their congressmen and "zero in on some of the legislative programs" now before Congress.

The convention schedule anticipated the vice president's request. A series of regional breakfast meetings with members of Congress was on the agenda.

The union, which made its first national political endorsement just two years ago, heard Al Barkan, director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, urge that political action be put "at the top of your agenda."

"Nothing," he told the delegates, "is more important to you this year than the outcome of the elections." Right-wing groups, he warned, are preparing "for another assult on the labor movement" if they can come to power.

In a series of reports to the convention, the union's leaders recited progress in meeting internal problems while stepping up the pace of new organization.

The executive board reported that sale of the union's building had produced funds to pay off a series of debts to other unions and that a controversial housing program was being phased out.

All but two of the "special arrangements" the union had for financial administration of councils have been ended and a functioning judicial panel has had jurisdiction over internal union appeals, the board said.

Wurf, in his keynote address, noted that he had come into office "with a very small margin of votes" and added:

"Those who supported me did not make demands that would have made the victory hollow, and those who opposed me worked like the devil to make sure that I had a successful term of office. I am very grateful for the unity."

In choosing to pay off its debts rather than "keep money in the bank", Wurf said, "we have just decided we are going to be a self-sufficient, self-administered union capable of carrying its responsibilities.

In working for the rights of public employes, he noted, the AFL-CIO and its Executive Council "have been on our side every inch of the way."

Teen-Age Employment Seen Continuing Spurt

The radical improvement in job prospects for teen-agers during the past year will continue into the summer months, the Labor Dept. predicted on the basis of a study by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

In the year ending in January teen-age employment soared by 1.1 million—more than in the entire preceding 15 years, the BLS said in an article by Thomas E. Swanstrom of its Division of Labor Force Studies in its publication, Employment and Earnings.

"Employment of teen-agers will rise substantially between February and May, while the number who will be unemployed will not change markedly from the 700,000 level of February if the usual seasonal labor force patterns prevail," the article predicted.

"Between May and June, however, both employment and unemployment will rise very sharply as young persons finish the school year and enter the labor market. Even with continued expansion of business activity, unemployment of teen-agers in June may total about 1.7 million, about 100,000 fewer than in June 1965.

"However, their unemployment rate would be substantially lower than a year earlier because of the greatly increased number of teen-agers in the labor force this year."

The study notes that only about 1 million more young people 14 to 19 were employed in January 1965 than in January 1950. The increase of 1.1 million in the following year, however, boosted total teen-age employment to 5.7 million, and accounted for about half of the total increase in jobs, it adds.

However, the year-long spurt failed to make any noticeable dent in unemployment rates for non-white teen-age boys and girls. In the three months ending in January, the article points out, jobless rates were 24 percent for non-white boys and 31 percent for girls. The rates for white boys and girls both were 10 percent, down from 12.5 percent in January 1965.

The BLS attributed the improved employment picture to a gradual tightening in the job market "as an increasing demand for labor has run into a limited supply, while the reserve of experienced workers has gradually dwindled." As the reservoir of idle experienced workers was drained, it noted, employers found it "more and more necessary" to hire less efficient and less trained members of the labor force.

The BLS also said the special programs geared to the training or employment of young men and women constituted an additional factor in the employment increase.

Machinists Settle A 'Border Dispute'

Derby Line, Vt. — The American half of a plant on the U.S.-Canada border is back at work after a two-month strike.

Members of Machinists Local 1829 voted to accept contract terms offered by the Union Twist Drill Co. which were considerably better, the IAM said, than the company's first offer. They included a wage hike of 10 cents an hour, dues checkoff and maintenance of union membership, a half-day holiday on Vermont's town meeting day, and upgrading of 57 low-rated workers.

Members of IAM Local 1896, on the Quebec province side, were held to a cooling-off period under Canada's labor laws and did not strike, IAM Rep. Robert Day reported.

Senior Council Hails Pledge By Johnson

Pres. Johnson has proclaimed May as Senior Citizens Month and the National Council of Senior Citizens called on its 2 million members to kickoff a new drive for federal programs aimed at the needs of the elderly.

"The most hopeful note for older Americans" has been the President's pledge to seek a further increase in basic social security benefits next year said Council Pres. John W. Edelman.

"Last year's benefit increase of 7 percent was scandalously inadequate," he said, urging labor, church, social and business groups to work for a doubling of present social security cash benefits "if our social insurance system is to have any future value."

Federal agencies promoting Senior Citizens Month noted that nearly 18.5 million Americans are 65 and over. Daily, more than 3,800 U.S. residents reach the 65-year-old mark, they said.

Kaiser Sharing Plan Sets Benefit Mark

Fontana, Calif. — Kaiser Steel Corp. employes will share in a record $574,000 pot under the long range sharing plan established by the company and the Steelworkers.

The March gain is equal to 69 cents for each hour worked. Of this, 32 cents per hour worked will be distributed to employes in cash.

Baltimore Unions Back New Group Medical Plan

Baltimore, Md.—The labor-backed East Point Medical Center, a low-cost group practice operation designed to supplement Blue Cross-Blue Shield type coverage, has opened for business and is seeking to enroll members from trade union ranks.

The center is the first prepaid group health plan in Maryland. It was chartered as a non-profit organization by the state and has been licensed by the Maryland Insurance Dept.

The Auto Workers, active in setting it up, have started a drive among their 10,000 members in the Baltimore area. Other unions also are expected to participate.

Membership is open to those with Blue Cross-Blue Shield coverage or commercial insurance which yields benefits comparable to those provided in UAW agreements with major employers in the area.

Leonard Lesser, general counsel for the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and president of the medical center, said that subscribers will pay a flat fee, usually $6 to $7 a month depending on the type of Blue Cross-Blue Shield coverage they carry.

"Between their Blue Cross-Blue Shield or other insurance coverage and their prepaid health care at East Point," he said, "persons or families who enroll will have just about all the health care protection they will require."

Both doctors and laymen are represented on the board of directors. The doctors provide service under contracts, with associated specialists to give clients broad health service.

The directors, in addition to Lesser, include Assistant Dir. B. W. Bothe of UAW Region 8 as secretary; Pres. Ellison Stockton of UAW Local 239, treasurer; Pres. John J. Bianco of UAW Local 678 and Pres. Carl Sigmon of UAW Local 738. Dr. Oscar M. Camp is medical director.

Meany Assails Curbs on Public Employe Unions

Good labor-management relations in public employment won't come about through "court orders, punitive laws or artificial devices like compulsory arbitration," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared.

Meany sent a message to the State, County & Municipal Employes convention "to emphasize again that the AFL-CIO wholeheartedly supports the efforts of local and state government employes to organize and protect their rights through collective bargaining."

He praised as "a positive approach" the collective bargaining proposal drafted by a panel including union representatives and accepted by New York's Mayor John V. Lindsay.

"It is designed to eliminate—not accentuate—the causes of conflict," Meany said.

It is his "guess," he commented, "that this approach will catch on. I think that the next few years will see more organization among state and local government workers; more and better collective bargaining, and less strife than ever before."

But this forward progress, Meany warned, could be set back if union members don't work to elect "the kind of public servants who share our faith that the future can be better than the past."

Unions can't "build little islands of security and growth in a sea of economic depression and social reaction," he said. A factor in the "remarkable growth" of public employe unionism is the "political change" that labor helped bring about.

In reiterating the labor movement's support of its public employe members, Meany told the convention, "I am also asking for your intensified support for the objectives of the labor movement as a whole."

The message from Meany, who is recuperating from an operation, was read to the convention by his executive assistant, Lane Kirkland.

AFL-CIO Scholarship Awards Mark Program's Eighth Year

The winners can go to any accredited college they select and can study anything they want. The amount of each grant is based on the actual cost involved during the winner's college year and the amount he or his family can provide.

In advising the winners of their selection, Meany expressed confidence that their study "will not only develop your outstanding abilities but will enrich our society as well."

"Since its inception," he continued, "the AFL-CIO has supported the establishment and improvement of our compulsory, free education system. Today, we feel that the multiple challenges of the complicated society we are living in requires the extension of the concept of federally-financed education into the realm of higher education. We believe that public education should be available to all for two years beyond high school."

Meany cited organized labor's advocacy of federally-financed college scholarships and other student aid to qualified high school graduates and added:

"The AFL-CIO looks forward to the day when all young people will have the opportunity to develop the full measure of their capabilities, regardless of their financial status. In this interim period when so many young people are deprived of this opportunity, the AFL-CIO is happy to demonstrate its interest in furthering eduactional opportunities through our scholarship awards."

Sketches of the winners follow:

William K. Tomhave, 18, Austin, Minn., graduates high in a class of 521 students at Austin High School and plans to enter Luther College (Decora, Iowa) to major in mathematics and choral music, looking forward to a career as a high school teacher. His father, William C. Tomhave, has been an active member of Packinghouse Workers Local 9 for the past 18 years and is a checker for the Hormel Co. in Austin. His mother doubles as homemaker and part-time cashier for the Northwest National Life Insurance Co. In high school his interests center on the school chorus in which he doubles as a conductor, and on athletics. He enjoys football, wrestles, and excels in the discus and shotput. He is active in the school's Latin Club.

Ivy L. Thomas, 17, Flint, Mich., finished close to the top in a class of 551 members at Flint Southwestern High School. She plans to enter Wellesley College to concentrate on psychology, with an eye to a future career as a child psychologist. Her mother, Mrs. Ivory Thomas, teaches retarded children and is a member of Local 435 of the American Federation of Teachers. Her father has a heart condition which keeps him from working. She has written poetry for the school magazine and is a member of the Writers' Club. She plays the piano, the French horn and the trumpet and is vice president of the Jazz Club, secretary of the French Club and a vice president of a national sorority, Xinos.

William W. Boyd, 18, Mobile, Ala., who will graduate from W. P. Davidson High School in Mobile, heads the list in scholastic achievement in a class of 366 students. He plans to enter Harvard University to concentrate on physics and mathematics, looking forward to a career in teaching physics at the college level. His father, Bill Morgan Boyd, is a brakeman on the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway and is a member of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Lodge 1128. Young Boyd works after school hours from 4 to 9 p.m., seven days a week, at a drive-in. He received a scholarship to the Alabama American Legion Boys' State last year, and had the highest score of 565 participants. He is an avid coin collector and enjoys golf, tennis, swimming and music. He is a member of the National Honor Society, Spanish Club and the Key Club at his school. He earned varsity letters in football, basketball, baseball and track before starting work at the drive-in.

Belinda Y. Wong, 17, Aiea, Hawaii, will graduate from St. Andrew's Priory High School in Honolulu, finishing third in her class. She has chosen Stanford University and plans to major in European history with a view toward a career in government service. Her father, Alfred En Chong Wong, was an active member of Iron Workers Local 742 before entering the U.S. Navy 25 years ago. Her mother worked for some years in an organized bakery to help both her two daughters go on to college. Miss Wong is interested in a wide range of subjects including languages and English literature as well as history. She is a sports enthusiast and is a member of the Student Council, the Camera Club and the National Honor Society.

Julia G. Webb, 16, Jackson, Miss., graduates from the William B. Murrah High School in Jackson, ninth in a class of 530 students. She plans to attend Vanderbilt University and major in languages with a view to a teaching career. Her father is deceased and her mother, Mrs. Imogene Lyon Webb, works as a cashier and a homemaker for her two children. Miss Webb is an enthusiastic reader, especially enjoying historical novels, poetry and books on the Civil War. She is copy editor of the school yearbook and worked in the high school office for the past three years. Her hobby is sewing and she has designed and made many of her own clothes for the last seven years. She likes all music, but is especially fond of folk music.

William E. Wainer, 18, Brunswick, Me., graduates from Brunswick High School third in a class of 288 students. He plans to enter Bowdoin College where he expects to major in history, which he hopes later to teach. His father, Edward W. Wainer, works as a produce manager and has an insurance agency in addition. His mother is a homemaker for their family, which includes four children. He has been editor-in-chief of the high school paper and during the past spring spent much time researching the state of labor-management relations in preparation for a debate on the subject.

CITATIONS for outstanding service were presented to three union leaders at the New York City AFL-CIO's annual community services and rehabilitation institute. While 800 delegates applauded, citations were given by the council itself to Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers (right) and by the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped to Chairman Michael Sampson (left) of the council's community services committee, and Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr. The Greater New York Fund was institute co-sponsor.

Truth in Labeling Urged For 'Canned' Editorials

Congress should give "serious consideration" to requiring publications to identify the real source of "canned" editorials, Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.) declared.

Thompson urged his colleagues in the House to read an article by Ray Deninson in the March issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist which revealed how "right-to-work" lobbyists had paid self-described news service to distribute editorial material opposing repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Identical editorials and supposed news items appeared in hundreds of newspapers from coast to coast—with no clue to the reader "that the views being presented had been paid for by an organization with a direct personal stake in the issue."

Thompson also put into the Congressional Record an editorial from Publishers' Auxiliary, a newspaper trade publication, which termed the use of unlabeled canned editorials a "betrayal" of the reader. He insterted also a sales brochure from an editorial service which distributes promotional material from clients tailored as news and feature stories.

Thompson commented: "I am not so naive as to think we can eliminate the use of canned editorials, but I do think serious consideration should be given to a requirement that they be labeled as such, and that those who have bought and paid for the editorial space be identified."

By coincidence, as Thompson was warning the House of the growing use of "canned" opinion in newspapers, the National Association of Manufacturers was reporting to its members on its success in influencing weekly newspapers.

The NAM bulletin said more than 3,500 weekly editors receive its Industrial Press Service, which in-

The conservative business organization reported: "The pick-up is phenomenal—space you couldn't buy."

It added that its press service "has constantly reminded the weekly newspaper that Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act should be retained."

Clothing Workers' Fund To Open Child Centers

Baltimore, Md.—The Health & Welfare Fund of the Clothing Workers Baltimore Regional Joint Board will open three pre-school child care centers for the children of working mothers.

The centers, believed the first supported as joint labor- management projects, will be located in Baltimore, Chambersburg, Pa., and a third community to be selected. The joint board represents some 16,000 ACWA members in Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and Pennsylvania.

Sam Nocella, joint board manager, said the centers will care for tots two to six years old, and that the union expects them "to serve as models for similar facilities throughout the nation."

The Health & Welfare Fund is supported by management and labor and will be expanded to handle the child care program, Nocella said.

Hot Races Shape Up In Six More States

The political picture came into sharper focus in several states as major candidates filed or indicated they would file for governor or senator.

Rep. Carlton R. Sickles, serving his second term as congressman at large from Maryland, entered the race for the Democratic nomination for governor. A former labor attorney, Sickles is expected to campaign strongly as spokesman for younger urban and suburban voters seeking to wrest power from the old-line rural Democratic organization.

Sickles, who has won two previous statewide races by healthy majorities, faces major opposition from State Atty. Gen. Thomas B. Finan. The Republican nominee for governor is expected to be a Baltimore County GOP leader, Spiro T. Agnew.

Former Rep. Brooks Hays resigned as a consultant to Pres. Johnson to enter the Arkansas Democratic primary for governor. His opponents will include Dale Alford, who ran successfully against him as a segregationist "independent" in 1950 and served two House terms; recently resigned State Supreme Court Justice Jim Johnson and State Rep. Kenneth S. Sulcer. Incumbent Gov. Orval E. Faubus, elected to six successive terms, announced last month he would not seek the office again.

A onetime Faubus ally, James T. Karam, stated publicly that he was shifting to the Republican Party. Indications were that he might run against Winthrop Rockefeller for the GOP nomination for governor.

In Montana, Gov. Tim Babcock, a leader of the Goldwater wing of the Republicans in 1964, announced he would run for the Senate against incumbent Democratic Sen. Lee Metcalf next November.

Democratic Sen. James O. Eastland, Judiciary Committee chairman, filed for a fifth successive term from Mississippi. In the past an automatic winner, he faces wholesale defections of conservative Democrats to a rising state Republican Party and may be seriously challenged by GOP Rep. Prentiss Walker, elected in 1964 when Barry Goldwater swept the state.

In Georgia, the way was apparently being cleared for a parallel effort of Goldwater Republicans to challenge the long-established Democratic organization by running Rep. Howard H. Calloway, also elected in 1964, for governor. Stephen Pace, Jr., son of a onetime Democratic member of Congress, announced a shift to the GOP amid speculation he would file for Calloway's House seat.

In New York, incumbent Republican Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller was conceded renomination for a third term after a period in which he faced a possible challenge from Sen. Jacob K. Javits. Rockefeller accepted, with some chilliness, an offer of aid from former Rep. William E. Miller, Goldwater's running-mate for the vice presidency two years ago.

V. O. Gardner Dies, Headed Rail Union

St. Louis—Vernon O. Gardner, president of the Railway Telegraphers from 1939 to 1946, was buried here after services attended by top officers of his union, now the Transportation-Communication Employes. Aged 89 at his death, Gardner started work as a telegrapher in 1902 and became a union officer in 1924.

In a message of sympathy, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler said Gardner "served his fellow workers" and the labor movement "well and faithfully."

Withholding Change Effective May 1

The amount of federal income tax withheld from paychecks will change after May 1—to a bigger deduction for higher-paid workers and a lower deduction for low-paid workers.

The change neither increases nor decreases the amount of tax actually due. Its purpose is to bring the amount withheld closer to the tax owed at the end of the year.

Labor Urges More Funds:

Pressing Need Cited For School Aid Hike

Organized labor urged Congress to continue and expand federal aid to elementary and secondary education, particularly by increasing appropriations.

Andrew J. Biemiller, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, told the education subcommittee of the Senate Labor Committee that the "great educational strides" of the 89th Congress need to be carried further.

"More remains to be accomplished, and it would be a grave disservice to America's future to curtail the programs enacted thus far or even to freeze them at their present levels," he said. "The AFL-CIO does not for one moment accept the argument that anything in the present international situation necessitates lower expenditures at home for the health, education and well-being of our people."

What is "most needed," Biemiller testified, is an increase in federal funds for local school districts from "considerably less than 10 percent of all such outlays to about 25 percent. He noted that spokesmen for large cities, for suburban communities and for rural areas have each called for added support to meet their special problems.

"All of these arguments are convincing," he commented.

The AFL-CIO spokesman warmly supported a proposed rise in the basis for fund distribution from the present standard—the number of children in families with $2,000 or less income—to a $3,000 income figure. He recalled that the latter had been the labor movement's original recommendation.

However, Biemiller opposed a parallel provision to eliminate incentive grants to school districts which increase their budgets. He acknowledged that problems had arisen in the actual operation of the incentive program, but expressed the hope that "Congress will try to work out the problems rather than discard the program."

He also called for four-year authorization for all programs begun under the Elementary & Secondary School Act of 1965, on the grounds that "school districts must be able to make reasonably long-range plans . . . to better fulfill the purposes of the legislation."

Biemiller vigorously defended the impacted aid program, which helps school districts where there are large concentrations of federal military and civilian personnel. He opposed Administration plans to cut back the program and called instead for expansion of the impact approach to problems of rapid growth or of economic decline; to school segregation, whether by court order or voluntarily undertaken, and to rural areas.

"We are confident that this Congress, having set forth on a major program of federal support for elementary and secondary education, will share our view that programs now in existence should be strengthened and improved, rather than being curtailed and phased out," he said.

Biemiller expressed concern about another bill before the subcommittee, which would place full responsibility for federally-assisted adult education programs in the public schools. He said the public schools' adult education people had often proved ineffective in reaching adults who are most in need of basic education, and that those in the South "simply do not have any mechanism for dealing with the eductional needs for adult Negroes, particularly in the rural areas." He suggested "additional consideration" by the subcommittee of the bill's proposals.

In a related area Biemiller sent a letter thanking Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.) for the effort he has led "to restore to meaningful levels the appropriations for the school milk and school lunch programs. "Both these programs have had the full support of the AFL-CIO since their inception," he said.

Biemiller said the AFL-CIO favors Administration proposals to provide pre-school breakfasts and summer lunches for the neediest pupils but doesn't believe the money should be taken from existing programs.

"Good nutrition is a basic need of all children," he said, "and we fully support your efforts to restore funds for this purpose."

Peace Corps Issues Appeal For Craftsmen

The Peace Corps is looking for skilled building trades craftsmen for programs in 46 nations in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Dir. Jack Vaughn said training programs for volunteers are scheduled for this summer. The corps is particularly interested in applicants "with solid journeyman experience" and there is no upper age limit.

Plumbers for Iran and carpenters for Somalia are examples of projects for which volunteers are being recruited.

The volunteers will teach by demonstration, showing workers in their host countries skills they need to help build their nations.

EXPANDED FEDERAL AID to schools was urged by the AFL-CIO at Senate hearings. Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), chairman of the subcommittee on education, welcomes AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin.

CHARTER OF AFFILIATION with AFL-CIO is presented by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler to the federation's 129th affiliate, the National Association of Post Office & General Services Maintenance Employes. Left to right, union Pres. William D. Dolphus; Legislative Rep. Ross A. Messer; Schnitzler, and Sec.-Treas. James D. Burke. Founded 27 years ago, the union represents maintenance employes in many cities. Dolphus is stationed in St. Louis, other top officers in Washington, D. C.

House Votes To Strengthen Job Bias Law

ly one-sided floor debate by four other members of the committee —Democrats Augustus F. Hawkins (Calif.), sponsor of the measure, and John H. Dent (Pa.), along with Republicans Alphonzo Bell (Calif.) and Ogden R. Reid (N.Y.).

The bill also mandates the commission to conduct a continuing survey of apprenticeship and on-the-job training programs, where Powell charged "outrageous discrimination" can be found.

The House rejected an amendment by Rep. Charles E. Goodell (R-N.Y.) which would have separated the investigative and judicial functions of the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission. Goodell cited as a precedent the division of NLRB functions between the general counsel and the board.

On the eve of the vote, the House Republican Policy Committee issued a statement criticizing consideration of the bill "at this time" and complaining that hearings were not "adequate." Most GOP members, nevertheless, voted for the bill. The sharpest criticism in debate came from a southern Republican, Rep. Glenn Andrews (D-Ala.), who termed it "totalitarian." But Andrews noted that he does not agree with any fair employment legislation.

The bill now goes to the Senate and there appeared to be a possibility that its provisions might be considered along with White House legislative recommendations on other areas of civil rights.

Frank Sheehan, TWU Leader, Dies

New York — Funeral services were held here for Frank Sheehan, an international vice president of the Transport Workers, who died on Apr. 26.

Sheehan, 55, was described by the union's officers as "a dedicated trade unionist who forever fought for the dignity of working people." TWU Utility Local 101 issued a statement praising him as a founder of the local who helped end "sweatshop conditions."

He is survived by his wife, Frances, and a son.

Sheehan was one of five TWU officials jailed with the late Michael J. Quill during the New York transit strike early this year.

Funds For Rent Plan Approved by Senate

McKinley Dirksen to curtail another new program awaiting funds to get under way—the Teachers Corps.

As authorized by Congress last year, the federal government would pay 90 percent of the salaries of teaching teams sent into poverty areas at the request of local authorities, with the local school districts paying the remaining 10 percent. Dirksen sought to change this to a 50-50 ratio. His amendment was rejected, 64-22.

In other areas, Democrats and Republicans joined to boost funds for several popular programs above the amount recommended by the President.

The House passed a $6.9 billion agricultural appropriation by a 366-23 vote which rejected White House cuts in the school milk and school lunch programs. School milk money was boosted from a budget request of $21 million to $103 million and school lunch subsidies raised from a budgeted $138 million to $197 million. The higher amounts were strongly supported by the AFL-CIO.

On this bill, Republicans refrained from offering the across-the-board 5 percent cut the GOP has sought in all appropriations.

A package of education bills took a big step forward with approval by the House Education & Labor Committee. These include:

- A five-year extension of the federal program of construction and operating subsidies to public libraries, with spending authority sharply increased. The AFL-CIO had testified in strong support of the measure, which is sponsored by Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D-Ill.). It includes new programs for exchange of books and resources by libraries and special services for schools for the handicapped.
- Authorization for a new summer school lunch program.
- A three-year extension of the college aid program with grants for undergraduate facilities construction rising from $453 million in fiscal 1967 to $900 million in fiscal 1969. Grants for graduate facilities would rise over the same period from $60 million to $120 million.

The committee also rejected the Administration proposal to phase out the student loan program under the National Defense Education Act and substitute guarantees for private loans.

- Authorization for a new three-year program for college international study projects which had been sought by the President and endorsed by the AFL-CIO in testimony.

The committee expects to complete action shortly on an extension of the elementary and secondary school program.

Labor Backs Health Plans Building Aid

Federal mortgage insurance and loans for group medical and dental facilities will help "lower the cost and raise the quality of medical and dental care," the AFL-CIO said.

The federation filed a statement with the Senate Banking & Currency Committee strongly supporting the Administration's Group Practice Facilities bill.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said in an accompanying letter to the committee that non-profit, consumer-sponsored group health programs "have made an outstanding record of providing quality health services at a reasonable cost."

He noted that profit-making group practices can obtain financing through the Small Business Administration as well as private sources. But non-profit health plans cannot obtain small business loans "and private financing has been all but impossible," Biemiller said.

The AFL-CIO statement pointed out that group health programs make available to the patient the many specialist skills of modern medicine.

White House Aide Cautions Business

The rise in profits in the first three months of 1966 "substantially exceeds" the rise in wages and salaries, the Administration declared.

A further rise in the share of profits in the national income, the top White House economist said, would raise the question of whether "it is in the interest either of the health of the nation's economy or in the interest of business itself."

The profits situation was laid out in a speech by Gardner Ackley, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, to the 54th annual meeting of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in Washington.

Ackley told the assembled businessmen that profits after taxes in the fourth quarter of 1965 were up more than 88 percent over the level of early 1961 and "were providing the highest sustained rate of return on owners' equity in our modern history."

Wages Static

Citing Wall Street Journal figures for the first quarter of 1966 showing a 12 percent rise over the same quarter a year earlier, he drew the comparison with weekly spendable income of the average factory worker in March 1966—unchanged from a year earlier in terms of constant dollars—and said:

Does anyone imagine that labor will continue to show moderation in its wage demands when price and profit margins are continually rising?"

On prices and profits, Ackley noted that "earnings figures make it clear that, on the average, the margin over costs has been advancing. Either prices have been raised more than costs, or prices have not been reduced where costs have fallen."

The largest part of recent increases in consumer prices, the White House economist declared,

Powell Shift Stalls Vote On Site Bill

A last-minute switch by House Labor Committee Chairman Adam C. Powell (D-N. Y.) upset plans to bring the on-site picketing bill to an immediate vote in the House.

The legislation, which would give building trades unions the right to picket at a multi-employer construction site, is a top priority goal of the AFL-CIO. It has Administration endorsement, a long history of bipartisan support, approval from the House Labor Committee and clearance from the Rules Committee.

A day before the bill was scheduled for House floor action, Speaker John W. McCormack told newsmen that Powell had suddenly switched signals.

He quoted from a letter Powell sent him in which the Labor Committee chairman said he was now "unalterably opposed" to the bill and would not call it up in the House. Powell also complained that the Senate had not started action on the bill and said there was "doubt" it would pass.

After 10 Years:

Unionism Returns To O'Sullivan Plant

Winchester, Va.—Workers at the plant of the O'Sullivan Rubber Corp. here—the site of a classic union-busting effort under the Taft-Hartley Act in the 1950s—voted to be represented by a labor union for the first time in nearly a decade.

The vote, in an election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board among 505 eligible employes, was 325 for the Auto Workers, 137 against, with six votes challenged.

Only a handful remained in the O'Sullivan workforce of the hundreds who struck the plant during a contract dispute 10 years ago. Others who stayed out while the labor movement conducted a nationwide boycott against the struck plant's products were not on hand to enjoy the victory.

All but 37 of the eligible workers voted in the election. The UAW polled 64 percent of the eligible vote, 70.5 percent of the valid votes cast.

The organizing campaign was brief and vigorous. An AFL-CIO staff member, in town for a campaign at a nearby plant, passed out union leaflets at the gates and was contacted by workers who said they were tired of their non-union status.

Time Was Right

Regional Dir. Oliver Singleton of the AFL-CIO's Baltimore office assigned staff members and met with a 30-member in-plant committee which reported the time was right for a union organizing campaign.

Cards were signed by a majority, an NLRB election petition was filed and a date set after a three-week campaign. The UAW was the only union on the ballot, the Rubber

House Passes Expanded Aid For Colleges

With rare unanimity, the House approved a stepped-up three-year extension of federal aid to colleges with spending authority going up each year.

The $3 billion authorization bill was passed by unanimous voice vote, with Democrats and Republicans vieing in its praise. There was not an echo of the fierce controversy which had surrounded the issue until the breakthrough legislation was passed in 1963.

Labor Backs Foreign Aid Extension

The AFL-CIO urged Congress to approve a five-year foreign-aid program, warning that "the Communist enemy can never be defeated by military means alone."

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told the House Foreign Affairs Committee that American labor is prepared to support expenditures "well above" the budget requests to overcome political instability and poverty in developing nations.

"One of the lessons of Viet Nam," Biemiller said, "is that lags in social and economic development produce political instability, poverty and frustrations which invite Communist aggression."

He pointed out that the $2.46 billion sought for economic aid during the coming year and $900 million for military aid represents less than one-half of 1 percent of the nation's national product — contrasted with the 1 percent goal suggested in a United Nations resolution which the U.S. supported.

"We recognize that aid totals must depend on availability of sound projects and on existence of suitable political conditions in the recipient countries," Biemiller noted. "Nevertheless, it seems clear that one-half of 1 percent of our wealth is not enough for a program which offers so much hope for

Alabama Voting Shows Moderates Fragmented

Mrs. Lurleen Wallace, wife of segregationist Gov. George C. Wallace, walked away with the Alabama Democratic nomination to succeed her husband, getting an absolute majority over nine opponents in the May 3 primary.

Wallace ran his wife for the nomination because the state constitution prohibited him from seeking a second consecutive term for himself. He and Mrs. Wallace made it clear in the campaign that she was seeking the nomination, in essence, as a stand-in and that her husband intended to continue to direct the state's affairs.

The November general election, however, shapes up as less of a certainty for Democratic candidates than in the past. Republican Rep. James D. Martin, elected in 1964 as a backer of Barry Goldwater, has announced he will seek nomination for governor at the GOP state convention next month.

Martin came within 8,000 votes of defeating veteran Democratic Sen. Lister Hill when he made his first try for office in 1962 and is considered a formidable campaigner. The Democratic Party in the state is in turmoil, with veteran Democratic organization figures shifting openly to the GOP.

The anti-Wallace elements among

DIFFERING VIEWS on strikes by public employes were voiced at the State, County & Municipal Employes convention by Pres. Jerry Wurf (left) and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz. But both stressed the key role of collective bargaining in settling disputes in public as well as private employment.

Defiant Notice Brings Crackdown by NLRB

A company president who posted his own defiant notice alongside a National Labor Relations Board settlement agreement has been ordered to sign and post a new notice, free of any threats or scornful attitudes.

The wording of the second notice to employes, posted by Pres. H. D. "Breezy" Wynn of the Southern Athletic Co., Inc., on a bulletin board at the Knoxville, Tenn., clothing plant, was a "clear expression" of Wynn's "personal disdain" for a board-approved settlement of unfair labor practice charges lodged by the Clothing Workers against the company, and of employe rights, the board said.

Pledge Required

Since Wynn was the "sole perpetrator" of the unfair practices which the firm agreed to discontinue, and because he was "personally identified" with the company's unlawful conduct, the NLRB said Wynn, must make this pledge:

"We will not post any notice that would modify, alter or vitiate this notice."

Last Nov. 22 an NLRB trial examiner ruled that Wynn violated his own company's agreement not to interfere with or threaten employes when he posted this notice alongside an agreement of settlement signed by another company official:

"The NOTICE appearing beside this one DOES NOT reflect a change in the attitude of 'Breezy' Wynn. It would be unwise and dangerous for anyone to believe they can let up on their work and . . . otherwise deliberately hurt this company without losing their jobs.

"The Union is not running this plant. 'Breezy' Wynn is running it! If you don't believe it, ask those people who were laid off back in August of last year that the union tried to get back wages for!

"You don't need a union here to be treated right. Those few employes who keep on being involved with the union had better do some serious thinking about that!"

Upholding the examiner, the board agreed that management broke the law by threatening to fire an employe for union activity, by stating it would "never sign a contract with a union" and by other acts, including the notice by Wynn.

The "coercive impact" of Wynn's notice is even more apparent, the NLRB said, when read along with the other notice containing employer assurances that such threats would not be made.

The settlement was set aside by the board and Wynn was ordered to sign a new notice.

Powell Switch Delays Action On Situs Bill

McCormack, who has been a strong supporter of the legislation, replied tartly to Powell that the bill had been scheduled for floor action at Powell's own request.

"You asked me to schedule the bill and I did so," McCormack wrote. "You also assured me personally you will call the bill up when reached."

On this bill, as on the 14(b) repeal bill last year, Powell has attached various conditions for moving the legislation ahead—including prior action on the fair employment bill which recently passed the House. But, as a New York Times account noted, his conditions "have continually shifted."

The sidetracking of the legislation came as members of 30 employers groups, banded together as the National Action Committee, were on their way to Washington to mobilize a last-ditch fight against the site picketing bill.

Key to Effective Bargaining:

State, County Union Affirms Insistence on Right to Strike

By David L. Perlman

Public employes—with few exceptions—must have the right to strike in order for collective, bargaining to function effectively, the State, County & Municipal Employes declared.

Delegates to the union's 16th convention unanimously reaffirmed the AFSCME's strike policy in a resolution which came to the floor after a lively, friendly and unscheduled debate.

The participants: Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and AFSCME Pres. Jerry Wurf.

Wirtz, in his speech to the convention, agreed with the union's opposition to punitive anti-strike laws for public employes—with a qualification. He criticized the "unfairness, absurdity and ineffectiveness" of outlawing strikes by public employes without providing "alternative" procedures for settling disputes such as fact-finding, mediation and arbitration.

Furthermore, Wirtz said, he couldn't go along with the union's distinction that law enforcement officers shouldn't strike but that other groups of public workers should have the right to do so. "Every government function is essential," Wirtz said, "or the government shouldn't be doing it."

Wurf, in reply, stressed that the union "does not want the right to strike for the sake of striking."

Easy Out

He told Wirtz, however, that when there is no possibility of a strike agency heads find it "much easier to tell us no than to have the guts to tell the city council that it has to raise taxes to pay employes decently."

Nor can the union agree that a strike of "park employes in Brooklyn" is in the same category as a strike of policemen.

"Every repressive law that has ever been passed to prevent us from striking generally led to a strike," Wurf declared, "and generally made it almost impossible to settle the strike quickly because we had to find a way around this unreasonable statute."

Other major resolutions passed by the convention:

- Opposed the "unrealistic and unworkable" wage guidelines of the Council of Economic Advisers.
- Gave "wholehearted" support to COPE.
- Urged "passage of anti-lie-detector legislation on the local, state and federal levels," terming polygraph tests "unreliable" and an "infringement of personal liberty."
- Called for passage of the wage-hour bill pending in the House, praised the "breakthrough" inclusion of hospital workers and urged future amendment of the law to include Panamanians working for the Canal Zone government.
- Endorsed home rule for the District of Columbia.

The convention also called for state review boards to ferret out and eliminate "discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex or national origin" in all public employment.

Earlier the delegates gave an ovation to civil rights leader Bayard Rustin who told them the alliance between unions and civil rights groups isn't based on "love and affection. . . . Alliances are made amongst people who have a mutual interest and must rely upon one another."

"If you will look at what the poor need and what the Negro most grieviously needs . . . it begins to sound exactly like the legislative program of the AFL-CIO, only we want a little more," Rustin declared.

"The Negroes have to fight to repeal 14(b), not because George Meany is a nice man, but because in every state where they have it, wages are lowest for us.

"You have got to have a $2 minimum wage. . . . It would bring a hundred times more into the coffers of the Negro and white working poor than the war on poverty would do in the next 20 years.

"We need extended coverage for millions more workers, and that is not because the AFL-CIO has got it written in its program, but because when you look at those who are not covered, they end up being Puerto Ricans, poor black people and poor white people."

The convention also heard Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers praise the two-way cooperation between the unions, ranging from SIU support on the picket lines of striking New York City welfare workers to AFSCME backing of the Seafarers in Chicago. The union presented Hall a plaque citing his "fraternity and friendship."

The convention, which had returned Wurf and Sec.-Treas. Gordon Chapman to office unanimously, raised the president's salary to $27,500 and that of the secretary-treasurer to $22,500. It also elected 16 vice presidents to an enlarged executive board. Elections, for the first time, were by regional caucuses.

Officers Named

Incumbents re-elected were N. B. Crippen, Northwestern District; Ruby Wicker, Western; Rev. Albert Blatz, North Central; Don McCullar, Southwestern; Steve Clark, Wisconsin; Harry Gray, New York, and James A. Broyer, Northern New England.

New board members chosen were George Hammond, Rocky Mountain District; Arthur Hamm, Midwestern; Charles Hungate, Central; William J. Charron, Michigan; Ethelrie Harper, Mideastern; Lee Tafel, Southeastern; William J. McEntee, Eastern; William Czuckrey, Southern New England, and Santurnin G. Mauge, a Panamanian, for the Caribbean area, consisting of Puerto Rico and the Panama Canal Zone.

Coast Seminar Explores Bargaining with Navy

The techniques of negotiating better contracts for employes of naval shipyards in the West were explored in depth at a Collective Bargaining Seminar in Santa Rosa, Calif., sponsored by the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept.

The session was the second in a series, the first having been held for East Coast shipyards in Washington.

Participating were 40 international union representatives and members of collective bargaining committees in naval yards at San Diego, Long Beach, San Francisco and Mare Island, Calif.; Bremerton, Wash., and Pearl Harbor, H.I.

The students attempted to determine what union contracts with the federal government have in common with contracts in private industry, and how they differ. They also studied the craft of bargaining, how to deal with management psychologically, and how to express a contract demand in the language of a contract clause. Sample clauses were drafted in small workshop sessions, then discussed in general meetings.

Represented were members of the Boiler Makers, Carpenters, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Operating Engineers, Laborers, Machinists, Painters, Pattern Makers, Sheet Metal Workers and Technical Engineers.

The seminar was opened with addresses of welcome by MTD Pres. B. A. Gritta and AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Daniel V. Flanagan. The faculty was headed by Assistant Dir. Otto Pragan of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education and included MTD Research Dir. Paul R. Hutchings; William Kuhl, research and education director of the Boiler Makers, and Henry T. Wilson, director of the Laborers Federal Employes Dept.

CONTRACT CLAUSES were debated in and out of classes during the Collective Bargaining Seminar conducted by the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. for West Coast naval shipyard union representatives. Presiding over his al fresco session were MTD Research Dir. Paul R. Hutchings (right) and AFL-CIO Assistant Education Dir. Otto Pragan (in white shirt). Pragan directed the school, which was held in the Marine Cooks & Stewards Center in Santa Rosa, Calif.

CWA Contract Goals Reject Wage Guide

The collective bargaining policy committee of the Communications Workers instructed union negotiators to seek "substantial" increases in contract benefits this year for 400,000 telephone and allied workers "even though they may exceed the 3.2 percent guideline" set by the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

In a resolution adopted at a three-day Washington conference the 64-member committee of rank-and-file workers and CWA leaders charged that the guideline is largely responsible for a "wrong-way" distribution between the income of workers and profits in recent years.

Members set bargaining goals for 1966 after hearing CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne report: "We are not going to have our lives tied to a decimal point in a guideline that is also an absolute ceiling."

Three-year contracts covering most CWA members employed by the Bell Telephone System will expire between September 1966 and February 1967. To replace them the union will seek:

- A "substantial wage increase," the amount not specified.
- Further narrowing of wage differentials between towns and areas, with rates measured by a key city and job classification from which to rank all other city and job classifications.
- Inclusion of all work locations in the same labor market area in the same wage band, with no more than six wage bands for the country and no more than $4 between bands.
- Elimination of all social security deductions from pension calculations; increasing all minimum pensions to $125 a month; reducing the years of service needed to retire on pension; introducing survivors' rights where they do not already exist under pension plans.

The committee called for sweeping job structure changes, many of them geared to the creation of higher-paying job classifications for work on new types of automated equipment.

Job upgradings will be asked for clerical workers, particularly those involved in computer operations. Increased pay differentials will be sought for service assistants. The committee also asked elimination of "oppressive overtime" work.

Bell Deductions

At one time, the committee said, the Bell system deducted all social security payments from the pensions of retired workers. CWA has reduced these deductions to one-third and now seeks to eliminate the deduction entirely, it said.

Life and health insurance, fully paid by the company, will be sought along with vacation improvements, reduction in the workday of telephone operators, and provisions for more stable labor-management relations.

The union announced it will also ask for standardized work practices for blue-collar and white-collar employes of Western Electric Co., Bell's manufacturing arm. This includes elimination of time clocks, and putting all workers on a salaried basis.

For operators the union will ask a seven-hour work day, including two 15-minute relief periods.

For directory advertising workers, the CWA seeks higher commissions and other job improvements.

The committee, citing the high number—62 percent—of grievances won by the union, noted that many disputes apparently are being processed to higher levels when they could be settled by first-line supervision and local CWA officers.

The committee's final resolution was that "collective bargaining will become a 365-day per year function of each individual CWA member."

Scholarship to Spur Rehabilitation Career

New York — Patricia Spirn, daughter of Harold Spirn, a member of Clothing Workers Local 10, has been named winner of the 1966 Rehabilitation Careers Scholarship Award of the National Institutes on Rehabilitation & Health Services.

WELCOME to New Orleans is given AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, center, by Pres. Victor Bussie, left, of the Louisiana AFL-CIO, and Pres. A. P. "Pat" Stoddard of the New Orleans central body at annual meeting of the New Orleans United Fund. As president of the United Community Funds & Councils of America, Beirne saluted labor and other groups for surpassing the 1966 fund goal despite "mammoth demands" for aid to victims of Hurricane Betsy. Beirne is Communications Workers president.

GM Discount Curb Held Trade Restraint

The General Motors Corp. violated the anti-trust laws by engaging in a "classic conspiracy in restraint of trade" to block sales of its cars by discount dealers in the Los Angeles area, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled.
